THE THIRD VOLUME AND TENTH BOOK,

Beginning with the Reign of QUEEN MARY.

The PREFACE to the READER.

FOr asmuch as we are come now to the time of Q. Mary, when as so many were put to death for the cause, especially of the Mass, and the Sacrament of the Altar (as they call it;) I thought it convenient, upon the occasion given, in the ingress of this foresaid story, first to prefix before, by the way of Preface, some declaration collected out of divers Writers and Authors, whereby to set forth to the Reader the great absurdity, wicked abuse, and perillous Idolatry of the Popish Mass, declaring how and by whom it came in, and how it is clouted and patched up of divers additions, to the intent that the Reader seeing the vain institution thereof, and weighing the true causes why it is to be exploded out of all Churches, may the better thereby judge of their death which gave their lives for the testimony and the word of truth.

First, Concerning the origine of this word Missa, whether it came of Missath in Hebrew, Deut. 16. or Mincha, Levit. 6. which signifieth Oblation; or whether it came of sending away the Catechumini, and persons unworthy out of place of ministration, as certain Writers suppose; or else Ex missis donariis & symbolis quæ in offertorio proponebantur, that is, of Gifts and Oblations wont to be offered before the Communion; or whether Missa is derived of Remissa, which in the former Writers was used pro remissione: or whether Missa, pro licentia dimittendi populum, is taken of sending away the Congregation by the words of the Deacon, Ite missa est: or whether Missa hath its denomination of that the Grecians call ἄφεσιν τῦ λάυ, dismission of the People, alluding to the story of the Hebrews, licensed of Pharaoh to depart out of captivity after the eating of the Paschal Lamb, as I read in an old Popish Book intituled, De Sacramentis Sacerdotalibus; or what term soever it be else, either Latin, Syrian, Dutch or French; or howsoever else it taketh its appellation, as there is no certainty amongst themselves that most magnifie the Mass, so is it no matter to us that stand against it. To my judgment and conjecture this later exposition of the word seemeth more probable, both for that it is joyned with the word Ite, which signifieth departing; and also the time and order in speaking the same agreeth well thereunto. For as the old Hebrews, after the Supper of the Lamb, and not before, were set at liberty straightway to depart out of captivity: so, belike, to declare our mystical deliverance by Christ offered and slain for us, first goeth before the action of the holy Supper: that done, then the Priest or Deacon saith, Ite missa est, meaning thereby the deliverance and liberty which is spiritually wrought in us, after that the Body of Christ hath been offered for us. Or else, if Missa otherwise should signifie the celebration or the action of the Supper, it would not be said Ite, but Venite, missa est, &c. Moreover, besides other Arguments, there be certain places in Cassianus which seem to declare that Missa signifieth the dismission of the Congregation: as where he writeth of him which cometh not in time to the hours of Prayer, saying it not to be lawful for him to enter into the Oratory, Sed stantem præ foribus congregationis usque ad missam præstolari debere, i.e. that he ought, standing without the doors, to wait for the miss of the Congregation.

Cassianus de Canonicis orationibus lib 3. ca. 7.

And again in the next Chapter following he inferreth the same vocable Missa in like sense: Contenti, inquit, somno qui nobis post vigiliarum missam usque ad lucis indulgetur adventum: i. Contented, saith he, with so much sleep as serveth us for the miss, or breaking up of the night Vigil, unto the coming of the day, &c.

But to let pass these Conjectures, this by the way I give the Reader to note and understand, that as the word Missa never yet entred into the Church nor usage among the Greeks; so it is to be observed among our Latin Interpretors, such as have translated of old time the ancient Greek Authors, as Eusebius, and the Tripartite history and others, that were the Greek Writers, have these terms συναγωγη, συναξεις ποιειν, and ἑορταζειν, that is, to call the Congregation, to convent Assemblies, and to frequent together. The old Translator of Epiphanius, and other translate upon the same Missas facere, collectas agere, missas celebrare, &c. whereby it is not obscure to be seen, that this word Mass in the old time was not only and peculiarly applied to the action of Consecration, but as well to all Christian Assemblies collected, or Congregations convented, according as in the Dutch Language this name (Messe) signifieth any solemn frequency, or panagery, or gathering together of the People. But of the Name enough and too much.

Vigils were called in the old time the Assemblie of the Congregation in the night, in common Prayer and Fasting. Socra. Eccles. hist. lib. 2. cap. 13. Epiph. trip. hist. l. 4. c. 13. Sozom. l. 2. c. 32. Epiph. trip. hist. l. 4. c. 11. Socrat. l. 3. c. 9. Epiph. trip. hist. l. 6. c. 23. Socr. l. 5. c. 15. ἐν καθ' ἑαυτὸς συναγωγὰς ἑορταζειν. Epiph. trip. hist. l. 7. c. 13. & apud semetipsos missarum celebrare solemnia, &c. Item collectas agunt. &c. quod Socrat. Græce lib. 5. c. 22. inquit, περὶ δὲ συναξεων & συναξεις ποιῶσιν, &c. The Mass a double enemy against Christ. The Mass injurious to the Priesthood of Christ.

To express now the absurdity of the said Mass, and the irreligious application thereof, unseemly and perillous for Christians to use, I will bring two or three reasons of the worthy Servant and Martyr of God, John Bradford, to which many more may be also added out of others.

First the Mass, saith he, is a most subtile and pernicious Enemy against Christ, and that two ways: namely against his Priesthood, and against his Sacrifice; which he proveth by this way: For the Priesthood of Christ, saith he, is an everlasting Priesthood, and such an one as cannot go to another. But the Mass utterly putteth him out of place, as though he was dead for ever, and so God were a liar, which said, that Christ should be a Priest for ever; which briefly cometh unto this Argument.

Fes- That thing is not perpetual, nor standeth alone, which admitteth succession of other to do the same thing that was done before.

ti- But the Mass Priests succeed after Christ, doing the same sacrifice (as they say) which he did before.

no. Ergo, The Mass Priests make Christs Priesthood not to be perpetual.

Another Argument.

Ba- All Priests either be after the order of Aaron, or after the order of Melchisedech, or after the order of the Apostles; or after that spiritual sort whereof it is written, Vos estis spirituale sacerdotium, &c. Major.

ro- But our Mass Priests neither be after the order of Aaron, for that is to resume that which Christ hath abolished; neither after the order of Melchisedech, for that is peculiar only to Christ; neither after the order of the Apostles, for then should they be Ministers not Masters, not Priests but Preachers, and which of the Apostles was ever named by the title of a Priest? Again, neither are they after the gene- Minor.

ral sort of the spiritual Priesthood. For after that Prerogative every true Christian is a spiritual Priest as well as they, offering up spiritual, not bodily sacrifice, as Prayers, Thanksgiving, Obedience, Mortification of the Body framed to the obedience of his Commandments.

Conclusio. co. Ergo, Our Mass-Priests are no Priests, unless it be after the order of the Priests of Baal.

The Mass injurious to the sacrifice or death of Christ. Major. Secondly, Concerning the Sacrifice of Christ abovementioned he reasoneth in like manner; which we have reduced in the way of Argument as followeth:

Da- To reiterate a thing once done, for the attaining or accomplishing of the end wherefore it was begun, declareth the Imperfection of the same thing before.

Minor. ri- The Mass Priests do reiterate the sacrifice of Christ once done for the end wherefore it was begun, that is, for Propitiation and Remission à pœna & culpa pro vivis, & pro defunctis.

Conclusio. i. Ergo, Mass Priests make the sacrifice of Christ to be unperfect, and so are they injurious to the Sacrifice of Christ.

For confirmation of the premisses, mark here, Reader, I beseech thee, the Rubrick here following written before the Mass of the 5. Wounds in the Mass Book.

BOniface Bishop of Rome lay sick, and was like to die, to whom our Lord sent the Arch-Angel Raphael with the office of the Mass of the five Wounds, saying; Rise and write this office, and say it five times, and thou shalt be restored to thy health immediately: and what Priest soever shall say this office for himself, or for any other that is sick five times, the person for whom it is said shall obtain health and grace, and in the world to come, if he continue in vertue, life everlasting. And in whatsoever tribulation a man shall be in this life, if he procure this Office to be said five times for him of a Priest, without doubt he shall be delivered. And if it be said for the Soul of the dead, anon as it shall be said and ended five times, his Soul shall be rid from pains. This hearing the Bishop, he did erect himself up in his Bed, conjuring the Angel by the Name of Almighty God, to tell him what he was, and wherefore he came, and that he should depart without doing him harm: who answered, That he was Raphael the Archangel, sent unto him of God; and that all the Premisses were undoubtedly true. Then the said Boniface confirmed the said Office of the five Wounds by the Apostolick Authority.

The Mass is an hinderance to the true service of God, and to the godly life of men. Another Argument against the Mass is, for that it is an hindrance to the true service of God, and to the godly life of Men: the declaration whereof is more at large by the said Author set out; but briefly in form of Argument it may thus be contracted.

Another Argument.

Major. Da- Whatsoever causeth or occasioneth a man to rest in outward serving of God, whose service should be all inward in spirit and verity, that hindreth the true service of God.

Minor. ti- The Mass occasioneth a man to rest in outward serving, as in hearing, seeing, and saying Mass, which be but outward senses of a man, and is (as they say) meritorious ex opere operato, etiam sine bono motu intentionis.

Conclusio. si. Ergo, The Mass hindreth the right and true service of God.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass hindreth good life.

Major. Di- Upon the Mass riseth false hope; and false remedy is promised to wicked livers. For evil men hearing Mass in the morning, upon hope thereof take more security in doing all day what they list. And such as have in hibbing, bauling, taverning, swearing, whoring, dicing, carding, committed wickedness, to them the Mass is set up, promising sufficient propitiation, sacrifice, remedy of Body and Soul, for Man and Beast, à pœna & culpa, pro vivis & mortuis. Though they never heard preaching, never used praying, never repented, or how wicked soever they have been; yet if they come to the Church, take holy Bread and holy Water, and hear a Mass, or find a Soul-Priest upon the remedy thereof, then they think themselves discharged, and good Catholick Men.

The Mass hindereth good life. Minor. sa- Upon what cause soever riseth false hope, and false remedy is promised to wicked livers, that hindreth good life.

Conclusio. mis. Ergo, The Mass hindereth good life.

Another Argument.

Major. Da- Where one thing is sufficient and serveth alone, there all other helps be needless thereunto wherein it serveth.

Minor. ti- The Mass, as they say, hath all, serveth for all: for by it cometh pardon for sins, by it cometh deliverance from Hell and Purgatory, by it cometh health for Man and Beast: In summa, the Mass is Mare bonorum, &c.

Conclusio. si. Ergo, All other helps else be needless; hearing of Gods Word, Faith, Praying in Spirit, Repenting, Preaching, Piety, and other helps to good life, &c.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass is diverse and contrary from the institution of Christs Supper.

1. Christ ordained his Supper to be a memorial of his death and passion, to be preached until he come. The Mass is no memorial thing of Christ remembred in the Sacrament; but rather they make the Sacrament to be Christ himself offered and sacrified for remission of sins, both for the quick and the dead.

2. Christ ordained his Supper to be celebrate and received of the Congregation. ~~And therefore~~ Paul bidderh the Corinthians to tarry one for another. In the Mass there is no such thing; chuse the People whether they will come or no, Sir John is kin to the tide, he will tarry for no man: if he have a Boy to say Amen, it is enough.

3. Christ received not, but he distributed also the whole in every part. Sir John when he hath received all alone, he sheweth the people the empty Chalice. And if he distribute to the People once a year, it is but in one kind alone.

4. Christ ordained the Supper to be a taking matter, an eating matter, a distributing and a remembring matter: Contrary, our Mass men make it a matter not of taking, but of gazing, peeping, pixing, boxing, carrying, recarrying, worshipping, stooping, kneeling, knocking, with stoop down before, hold up higher, I thank God I see my Maker to day, &c. Christ ordained it a Table matter, we turn it to an Altar matter; he for a memorial, we for a sacrifice; he sate, our men stand; he in his common tongue, we in a forrein tongue. Whereby it is manifest to appear how diverse and repugnant the Mass is to the Institution of the Lords Supper.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass is contrary to Gods Commandments.

The Doctrine of the Mass-Book contrary to Gods Commandments; Major. Item, Where the first Table of Gods blessed and sacred Commandments teacheth men to worship and serve him, and to direct the meditations of their hearts only unto him, and that in all places, at all times, both publickly and privately:

Minor. The Mass Book doth point out service for Saints and for Creatures by name, to be served at the least 300 days and years, as appeareth by the Calendars, Masses, Collects, Martyrologue, &c.

Conclusio. Ergo, The Doctrine and Institution of the Mass-Book, tendeth contrary to Gods holy Commandments.

Another Reason against the Mass.

Item, Where S. Paul in express words willeth all things to be done in an edifying tongue, the Mass is celebrate in a Tongue forrein, strange, and unknown to the People: so that although the matter therein contained were wholsom, and consonant to Scripture (as it is much disagreeing from the same,) yet for the strangeness of the Tongue it giveth but a sound, and worketh no edifying to the ignorant.

Now

Anno 1558

Anno 1553

Now both the tongue being strange to the ears of the people, and the matter also in the Mass contained being repugnant to Gods Word, what defence can the Mass have, but utterly it is to be rejected?

And forsomuch therefore as the Mass so long used in a forrein language hath not hitherto come to the understanding of the simple and vulgar sort, to the intent they may themselves perceive the matter, and be their own judges, I have here set forth the chiefest part thereof, which is the Canon, in English, so as I found it in a certain written Copy, by Master Coverdale translated, adjoyning withal the Rubrick and Circumstance of the same in every point, as it is in the Mass Book contained.

The whole Canon of the Mass, with the Rubrick thereof, as it standeth in the Mass Book, after Salisbury use, translated word by word out of Latin into English.

The Rubrick.

AFter the Sanctus, the Priest immediately joyning his hands together, and lifting up his eyes, beginneth these words, Te igitur clementissime, &c. that is to say, Therefore most gracious Father, thorough Jesus Christ thy Son our Lord, we humbly beseech thee.

Let him bow down his body, while he saith,

And we desire

Here the Priest standing upright must kiss the Altar (a) on the right hand of the Sacrifice, saying:

that thou accept and bless

Here let the Priest make three crosses upon the Chalice and the Bread saying:

these ✠ gifts, these ✠ (b) presents, these ✠ holy and unspotted sacrifices.

When the signs are made upon the Chalice, let him lift up his hands, saying thus;

Which first of all (c) we offer unto thee for thy holy Catholick Church; that thou vouchsafe to pacifie, keep, unite, and govern it throughout the whole World, with thy servant our Pope N. and our Bishop N.

That is (d) his own Bishop only.

and our King N.

And they are expressed by name.

Then let there follow, and all true Believers, and such as have the Catholick and Apostolick Faith in due estimation.

Here let him pray for the living.

Remember Lord thy Servants and Handmaids N. and N.

In which Prayer a rule must be observed for the order of Charity. Five times let the Priest pray; (e) First, for himself, Secondly, for Father and Mother, carnal and spiritual, and for other Parents. Thirdly, for special Friends, Parishoners and others. Fourthly, for all that stand by. Fifthly, for all Christian People. And here may the Priest commend all (f) his Friends to God. But my counsel is, that none make overlong tarrying there, partly for distraction of mind, partly because of immissions which may chance through evil Angels: And all that stand hereby round about, whose faith and devotion unto thee is known and manifest; for whom we offer unto thee, or which themselves offer unto thee, this sacrifice (g) of praise for them and theirs: for the redemption of their Souls, for the hope of their salvation and health, and render their Vows unto the eternal living and true God.

Communicating and worshipping the memorial, first (h) of the glorious and ever Virgin.

Bowing down a little, let him say:

Mary the mother of our God and Lord Jesu Christ, and also of thy blessed Apostles and Martyrs, Peter, Paul, Andrew, James, John, Thomas, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Simon and Thaddeus, Timis, Cletus, Clemens, Sextus, Cornelius, Cyprianus, Laurence, Chrysogonus, John and Paul, Cosme and Damian, and of all thy Saints: By whose (i) merits and prayers, grant thou, that in all things we may be defended with the help of thy protection, through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

Here let the Priest behold the Host (k) with great veneration, saying:

Therefore Lord we beseech thee, that thou being pacified wilt receive this oblation of our bound service, and of all thy household: and order our days in thy peace, and command us to be delivered from eternal damnation, and to be numbred in the flock of thine Elect, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Here again let him (l) hold the Host, saying:

Which Oblation we beseech thee, O Almighty God, in all things to make.

Here let him make (a) three crosses upon both, when he saith, ✠ Blessed; ✠ appointed; ✠ ratified; reasonable and acceptable; that unto us it may be,

Here let him make a cross upon the Bread, saying:

✠ The Body, Here upon the Chalice. And ✠ Blood,

Here with hands joyned together, let him say,

Of thy most dearly beloved Son our Lord Jesu Christ:

Here let the Priest lift up his hands, and join them together, and afterward wipe his fingers, and lift up the Host, saying:

Who (b) the next day afore he suffered took Bread into his holy and reverent hands, and his eyes being lift up into Heaven.

Here let him lift up his eyes.

Unto the God Almighty his Father,

Here let him bow down, and afterward erect himself up a little, saying:

Rendring thanks unto thee, he ✠ blessed, he brake,

Here let him touch the Host, saying:

And gave unto his Disciples, saying, (c) take ye, and (d) eat of this ye all (e) for this is my Body.

And these words must be pronounced with one breath, and under one prolation, without making of any pause between. After these words, let him bow himself to the Host, and afterward lift up above his forehead, that it may be (f) seen of the People, and let him reverently lay it again before the Chalice, in manner of a Cross made with the same, and then let him uncover the Chalice, and hold it between his hands, not putting his thumb and forefinger asunder, save only when he blesseth, saying thus:

Likewise after they had supped, he taking this excellent cup into his holy and reverent hands, rendring thanks also unto thee.

Here let him bow himself, saying:

Blessed, and gave unto his Disciples, saying: Take, and drink of this (g) ye all.

Here let him lift up the Chalice a little, saying thus:

For this is the cup of my Blood, of the new and everlasting Testament (h) the mystery of Faith, which for you and for many shall be shed to the remission of sins.

Here let him lift the Chalice to his breast, or further than his head, saying:

As oft as ye do these things, ye shall do them (i) in remembrance of me.

Here let him set down the Chalice again, and rub his fingers (k) over the Chalice. Then let him lift up his arms, and cover the Chalice. Then let him lift up his arms crosswise, his fingers being joyned together until these words; De tuis donis; that is to say, of thine own rewards.

Wherefore O Lord, we also thy Servants, and thy holy People, being mindful as well of the blessed Passion and Resurrection, as of the glorious Ascension of the same Christ thy Son our Lord God, do offer unto thy excellent Majesty of thy own rewards and gifts.

Here let there be made (l) five crosses, Namely, the three first upon the Host and Cup, saying:

✠ a pure Host; ✠ an holy Host; an undefiled Host,

The fourth upon the (m) Bread only, saying:

The holy ✠ (n) Bread of eternal life,

The fifth upon the Cup, saying:

And ✠ cup of eternal salvation. Vouchsafe thou also with a merciful and pleasant countenance to have respect hereunto, and to accept the same (o), as thou didst vouchsafe to accept the gifts of thy righteous servant Abel, and the sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and the holy sacrifice, the undefiled Host, that the high Priest Melchisedech did offer unto thee.

Here let the Priest with his body bowed down, and his hands holden across, say, Supplices te rogamus, we humbly beseech thee, until these words, Ex hac Altaris participatione, of this partaking of the Altar. And then let him stand up, kissing the Altar on the right side of the sacrifice; and (p) let him make a sign of the Cross upon the Host, and in his own face, when he saith; Omni benedictione cœlesti, with all heavenly benediction.

a And why not on the left hand as well? or why any such kissing at all?

b Precious no doubt and principal; or else are thou too presumptuous, that hast already offered it up for thy sins, and for the salvation of others.

c Who gave you that commission? will you offer Bread and Wine for the Church of Christ, who of very love hath offered up himself for it already? Ephes. 5.

d Charity would pray for others also. So did not the Lord teach his Disciples to pray. Mat. 6. Luke 11.

e And why not his enemies also? Mat. 5.

f Why make ye then a satisfactory sacrifice of it?

g If ye had the Lords matter in hand, ye would do it in remembrance of him.

h Thus the merits and prayers of Christ are defaced.

i And why? for within a little while he looketh to have it his God.

k And why not the Lay people then drink of the Cup also? Be not they the Lords Disciples? Scholars of his heavenly School?

l That must he do with a sower and frowning countenance, if he follow the Cantels of the Mass.

m Yea, three at the least; for this gear must be conjured as well as other things: lest when they think Christ to be naturally present, the Devil be there, and take up the lodging before.

n The Scripture saith, Ecclesiastes, the same night.

o He saith not, Let one of you take and eat it himself alone.

p He saith not, Hang it up, keep it, worship it.

b If it were the true Sacramental Bread of the Body of the Lord, it should be taken and eaten, and not lift up to be gazed upon.

c Why taketh thou it then alone? Or why should not the Lay people then drink of the Cup also? Be not they the Lords Disciples? Scholars of his heavenly School?

d These words, (Mysterium fidei) have ye here added, declaring the Cup to be but a mystical representation of the Blood? How standeth this with the remembrance of Saints, or of the dead, In quorum memoria, &c.

e By these Crums may ye know what Bread was wont to be used.

f And may no fewer Crosses than five serve?

g And why then be ye angry with us?

h The Bread of eternal life, is Christ himself: if this then be he, how dareth thou presume to offer him up unto his Father?

i Have ye the most precious body of Christ in so small estimation, that ye resemble it to the beasts which Abel and Abraham offered?

k If the Host, as thou (ô) be Christ himself, is not he then most blessed already?

We (q) humbly beſeech thee O almighty God, command theſe to be brought by the Hands of thy Holy Angel unto thy high Altar in the preſence of thy Divine Majeſty; that as many of us as,

Here let the Deacon commit the Patten to the Prieſt, kiſſing his Hand; and let the Prieſt (h) kiſs the Patten. Afterward let him put it (i) to his left Eye, and then to the right. After that let him make a Croſs with the Patten (k) above upon his Head, and ſo lay it down again into his place, ſaying:

Give peace graciouſly in our days, that we being helped through the ſuccour of thy Mercy, may both be always free from ſin, and (l) ſafe from all trouble.

(m) Here let him uncover the Chalice, and take the Body doing Reverence, ſhifting it over in the hollow room of the Chalice, holding it between his thumbs and forefingers; and let him break it into three parts: The firſt breaking, while there is ſaid:

Here let him hold two pieces in his left hand, and the third piece in the right hand upon the brink of the Chalice, ſaying this with (n) open voice:

World without end.

Let the Quire anſwer:

Here let him make three Croſſes (o) within the Chalice with the third part of the Hoſt, ſaying:

Let the Quire anſwer:

To ſay Agnus Dei, let the Deacon and Subdeacon approach near unto the Prieſt, both being on the right hand, the Deacon nearer, the Subdeacon farther off. And let them ſay (q) privately:

O Lamb of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the World, have mercy upon us: O Lamb of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the World, have mercy upon us: O Lamb of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the World, grant us Peace.

In Maſſes (r) for the Dead it is ſaid thus:

O Lamb of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the World, give them (ſ) reſt,

With this addition in the third repetition,

Everlaſting.

Here making a Croſs, let him put down the ſaid third part of the Hoſt into the Sacrament of the Blood, ſaying:

This holy mingling together of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt (t) be unto me, and to all that receive it, ſalvation of mind and body: a wholeſome preparation both to deſerve and to receive eternal life, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord.

Afore the Pax be given, let the Prieſt ſay:

O Lord, holy Father, almighty eternal God, grant me ſo worthily to take this holy Body and Blood of thy Son our Lord Jeſu Chriſt, that (a) by this I may (b) merit to receive forgiveneſs of all my ſins, and be repleniſhed with thy holy Spirit, and to have thy Peace: For thou art God alone, (c) neither is there any other without thee, whoſe Glorious Kingdom and Empire endureth continually world without end, Amen.

Here let the Prieſt (d) kiſs the Corporas on the right ſide, and the brink of the Chalice, and afterward let him ſay to the Deacon:

Peace be unto thee, and to the Church of God.

Anſwer.

And with thy Spirit.

On the right hand of the Prieſt let the Deacon receive the Pax of him, and reach it to the Subdeacon. Then to the ſtep of the Quire let the Deacon himſelf bear the Pax unto the Rectors of the Quire; and let them bring it to the Quire, either of them to his own ſide, beginning at the eldeſt. But in Feaſts and Ferial days (e) when the Quire is not governed, the Pax is born from the Deacon unto the Quire by two of the loweſt of the ſecond Form, like as afore.

After the Pax given, let the Prieſt ſay the Prayers following, privately, before the Communicate, holding the Hoſt (f) with both his hands:

O God, Father, thou Fountain and Original of all Goodneſs, who being moved with Mercy, haſt willed thine only begotten Son for our ſake to deſcend into the lower parts of the whole World, and to be Incarnate, whom I (g) unworthy hold in my Hands.

Here let the Prieſt bow (h) himſelf to the Hoſt, ſaying: I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee, I praiſe thee with whole intention of Mind and Heart: And I beſeech thee that thou (i) fail not us thy Servants, but forgive our ſins, ſo as with pure Heart and chaſt Body we may be able to ſerve thee (k) the only living and true God, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord: Amen.

O Lord Jeſu Chriſt, thou Son of the living God, who according to the Will of the Father, the Holy Ghoſt working with, haſt quickned the World through thy death: Deliver me, I beſeech thee, through this thy Holy Body and this thy Blood, from all my Iniquities, and from all Evils. And make me alway obey thy Commandments, and never ſuffer me to be ſeparated from thee for ever-mon, thou Saviour of the World, who with God the Father and the ſame Holy Ghoſt, liveſt and reigneſt God world without end: Amen.

O Lord Jeſu Chriſt, let not the Sacrament of thy Body and Blood which I receive (though unworthy) be to my Judgment and Damnation; but through thy Goodneſs let it profit to the Salvation of my Body and Soul: Amen.

To the Body let him ſay with humiliation before he receive:

f That never was born of our Lady.

Hail for evermore, thou moſt Holy (l) Fleſh of Chriſt; unto me afore all things and above all things the higheſt ſweetneſs. The Body of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt be unto me Sinner the Way and Life, in the ✠ Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: Amen.

in Benedicite & Gods name.

Here let him take the Body, (m) a Croſs being firſt made with the ſame Body afore his Mouth, ſaying:

Hail for evermore, thou Heavenly Drink; unto me before all things and above all things the higheſt ſweetneſs. The Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt profit me Sinner for a Remedy Everlaſting into Life Eternal. Amen. In the ✠ Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: Amen.

Here let him take the Blood, which when it is received, let him bow himſelf, and ſay:

The Prayer.

I render thanks to thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty Eternal God, which haſt refreſhed me out of the moſt Holy Body and Blood of thy Son our Lord Jeſu Chriſt. And I beſeech thee, that this Sacrament of our Salvation, which I unworthy Sinner have received, come not to my Judgment nor Condemnation after my Merits, but to the profit of my Body, and to the ſalvation of my Soul into life Everlaſting: Amen.

g Here be ſuch tricks as St. Peter and Paul never wrote of Which Prayer being ſaid, (n) let the Prieſt go to the right ſide of the Altar, with the Chalice between his hands, his fingers being yet joyned together as afore, and let the Subdeacon approach near, and pour out Wine and Water into the Chalice. And let the Prieſt rinſe his hands (o) leſt any parcels of the Body or Blood be left behind in his Fingers or in the Chalice (p.) But when any Prieſt muſt celebrate twice in one day; then at the firſt Maſs he muſt not receive any Ablution, but put it in the Sacriſty, or in a clean Veſſel, till the end of the other Maſs; and then let both the Ablutions be received.

o A dangerous matter I tell you.

p Magnoconatu magnas nugas agunt.

q De munere temporali Note well theſe words.

After the firſt Ablution, is ſaid this Prayer;

That we have received with Mouth, O Lord, let us take with a pure Mind, and (q) out of a temporal Gift let it be to us a Remedy everlaſting.

r A token that he hath had ſome corrupt matter in hand.

Here let him (r) waſh his Fingers in the hollow room of the Chalice, with Wine being poured in by the Subdeacon: which when it is drunk up, let the Prayer follow:

a What? dare ye call it a communion? Doctor Weſton will be angry then.

Lord let this (a) Communion purge us from ſin, and make us to be Partakers of the Heavenly Remedy.

After the receiving of the Ablutions, let the Prieſt lay the Chalice upon the Patten, that if ought remain behind, it may drop. And afterward bowing himſelf, let him ſay:

b What is it that theſe Idolaters will not worſhip? Very ſigns and tokens will not they ſtick at.

Let us (b) worſhip the Sign of the Croſs, whereby we have received the Sacrament of Salvation.

c He had need I trow that hath dawbed ſuch a muddy wall.

Afterward let him (c) waſh his Hands. In the mean ſeaſon let the Deacon fold up the Corporas. When his Hands are waſhen, and the Prieſt returneth to the right end of the Altar (d) let the Deacon reach the Chalice to the Prieſts Mouth, that if ought of that which was poured in do remain behind, (e) he may receive it. After that, let him ſay (f) the Communion with his Miniſters. Then making a ſign of the Croſs in his own Face, let the Prieſt turn himſelf to the People; and (g) with his Arms ſomewhat lifted up, and his Hands joyned together, let him ſay, Dominus vobiſcum; and, turning him again to the Altar, let him ſay, Oremus, let us pray.

d Is the Prieſt then too proud to take it up himſelf?

e For the poor Deacon is not worthy to receive it.

f By this is meant, theſe few words that are ſpoken next before the laſt Collect.

Then let him ſay (h) the Poſtcommon, according to the number and order of the aforeſaid Prayer. Before the Epiſtle, when the laſt Poſtcommon is ended, and the Prieſt hath made a ſign of the Croſs in his Forehead, let him turn him again to the People, and ſay, Dominus vobiſcum. Then let the Deacon ſay, Benedicamus Domino. At another time is ſaid, Ite Miſſa eſt. As oft as Ite miſſa eſt is ſaid, it is always ſaid in turning to the People. And when Benedicamus Domino, or Requieſcant in pace muſt be ſaid, let it be ſaid in turning to the Altar. When theſe things are ſpoken, let the Prieſt (with his Body bowed down, and his Hands joyned together) in the midſt before the Altar ſay, (i) with a ſtill voice, this Prayer.

g O what a vizor or hypocriſie is here!

h That is, the laſt Collect.

i And why not with a loud voice if it be good? Becauſe it is not the maſſmongers profeſſion to edifie the people.

O Holy Trinity, let the Office of my (k) bond-ſervice pleaſe thee, and grant that this Sacrifice, which I unworthy have offered in the Eyes of thy Majeſty, may be acceptable unto thee: And that unto me and all them for whom I have offered it (l) it may avail to obtain Remiſſion, thou being merciful, who liveſt and reigneſt God, &c.

k Bad ſervice is as fit a name for the Popiſh Maſs, as can be. For not only cuſtom, but evil will alſo doth much, if matter money help not.

Which Prayer being ended, let the Prieſt ſtand upright, (m) croſſing himſelf in his Face, ſaying, In nomine patris, &c. And ſo when obeyſance is made, after the ſame order wherein they came afore to the Altar at the beginning of the Maſs, ſo having on their Apparel with the Cenſer-bearer, and other Miniſters, let them (n) go their way again.

l What? the Maſs, in the devils name? for what intent then died Chriſt?

m That face hath much croſſing.

n Walk as ye came: ye have leave to be trudging.

The End of the CANON.

NOW it remaineth (as we have promiſed before) to intreat of the Parts and Parcels of the Maſs, declaring likewiſe how, and by whom this Popiſh or rather Apiſh Maſs became ſo clampered and patched together with ſo many divers and ſundry Additions; whereby it may the better appear what hath been the continuance of the ſame.

Firſt, in the beginning of this Preface it was declared before, how this word Maſs was never uſed nor known in the old Primitive Church among the firſt Chriſtians, nor among the Grecians. Therefore they that deduce and derive the Origine of the Maſs from St. James, and Baſilius, are far deceived. As I think, that St. James was once Biſhop at Jeruſalem, ſo I think not contrary, but ſometimes he miniſtred at the Communion there in breaking of Bread, and that not without the Lords Prayer, and other Prayers of Thankſgiving, as we now in our Communion uſe like Prayers, and theſe Prayers make not the Communion to be a Maſs. And the like is to be ſaid of S. Peter, who though he did celebrate the Communion at Rome, yet it followeth not that he ſaid Maſs at Rome, as ſome report him to have done.

Neither is it hard to fetch out the Origine, how this Error firſt came up among the People, that St. James ſaid Maſs at Jeruſalem, if a man conſider well Hiſtories and Authors which have written. For in the Hiſtory of Euſebius, Egeſippus thus writeth of St. James, Eum ab Apoſtolis primum conſtitutum fuiſſe Epiſcopum & Liturgum, &c. Upon the which word Liturgus, it is not unlike, and divers ſuppoſe this Error to come, that St. James did firſt ſet and inſtitute the Order of Maſs. For ſo (lightly) the old Tranſlators, whereſoever they find Liturgia, or Collecta, λειτουργία, they tranſlated it Miſſa; whereupon the greateſt occaſion of this Error riſeth, to make the People believe the Maſs to be ſo ancient as to proceed from the Apoſtles, and from St. James. Notwithſtanding that Error as it lightly came up, ſo it may be as lightly exploded. For how could St. James ſay Maſs then at Jeruſalem, or St. Peter at Rome, when as yet neither the Name of Maſs was heard, nor the Parts thereof invented? And although Sigibertus in his Chronicles reports, that in the City of Vaſath, being delivered from the Siege of the Huns, the Paſtor of that Church did celebrate Maſs with Thankſgiving, about the Year 453. yet Sigibert in ſo ſaying is to be taken, as ſpeaking rather after the uſe and manner of his time when he wrote it, than of that time when it was done. For in all the Works of St. Auguſtine, and of Chryſoſtome, and in all that Age the name of Maſs is not found, but it is called either the Supper of the Lord, or the Lords Boord or Communion, Synaxis, Sacrifice, Oblation, Myſtery, celebration of the Sacrament, Euchariſtia, the myſtical Table, Miſtagogia, Cœna myſtica; or with ſome other like term they nominate it. The name of the Maſs was not yet deviſed, nor the Patches thereof compiled. Platina teſtifieth, that before Celeſtinus Pope, only the Epiſtle and Goſpel were read at the Communion, which being done, the Communion ended. And Gregory ſaith, that the Apoſtles afore the Miniſtration niſtration or the Sacrament did uſe only the Lords Prayer, that is, the Pater noſter. Let us hear what Walafridus Strabo writeth of that matter, Lib de rebus Eccleſiaſtic. cap. 22. Quod nunc agimus multiplici orationum, lectionum, cantilenarum, & conſecrationum officio, totum hoc Apoſtoli, & poſt ipſos proximi, (ut creditur) orationibus, & commemoratione paſſionis dominicæ, ſicut ipſe præcepit, agebant ſimpliciter, &c. i. That which now is done in the Church with ſuch a long circumſtance of ſo many Oriſons, Leſſons or Readings, Songs and Conſecrations; all that the Apoſtles, and they that next ſucceeded the Apoſtles (as it is thought) did accompliſh ſimply with Prayer only, and with the Commemoration of the Lords Paſſion, &c. It followeth in the ſame Author; And, as the report is, like as it is in the Roman Church upon Good Friday, where the Communion is wont to be taken without any Maſs; ſo it was in the old time with them, &c.

Now how this Maſs hath grown up and increaſed ſince, let us ſearch out, by the Lords help, out of Authors, ſo much as may be found.

The Introite.

Platina, Sigibertus in vita Sergii. CEleſtinus Pope gave the firſt Introite, as Platina and Sigibertus write.

The Pſalm. Judica me Deus, &c.

And before the Prieſt do prepare himſelf to his Maſs, firſt with the Pſalm, Judica me Deus, & diſcerne cauſam meam, &c. that was ordained by the ſaid Celeſtinus.

Sigibertus. And where they aſcribe to St. Ambroſe the two prayers which he uſed in the preparation to the Maſs, and be added to the Books of Ambroſe, Eraſmus judgeth the ſame to be none of his, and that rightly as it ſeemeth: for therein are contained errors, not elſe to be found in the Books of Ambroſe, both in giving adoration to the Bread of the Sacrament, and making invocation to Saints, namely, to bleſſed Mary; as in the ſecond prayer, where he ſaith, Ut efficax hæc mea ſit deprecatio, beatæ Mariæ virginis ſuffragia peto, &c. i. And that this my prayer may be of efficacy, I deſire the ſuffrage and interceſſion of bleſſed Mary the Virgin, &c. Whereby it may appear learned Ambroſe not to be the Author of ſuch an error.

Chryſ. hom. 11. in Mat. Chryſoſtom in the eleventh Homily upon the Goſpel of Matthew, ſaith, That in his time (and afore his time) the uſe was to ſing whole Pſalms; till they were entred and aſſembled together. And ſo belike Celeſtinus borrowed this cuſtom of the Greeks, and brought it into the Latin Church, as Rupertus writeth.

Rupertus Tuitienſis. l. 2. de divin. offic. cap. 21. Chro Chro. Faſci. temp. Gregory the Great (as ſome write) called a Synod at Rome, about the year of our Lord 594. in which Synod he appointed that the Introite of the Maſs ſhould be taken out of ſome Pſalm.

The Confiteor.

Confiteor brought in by Pope Damaſus. The Confiteor Pope Damaſus brought into the Maſs, as it is written: albeit peradventure not this popiſh Confiteor, which in the later Church hath been uſed, ſtuft full of idolatry and invocation of Saints, againſt the word of God.

The Kyrie Eleyſon.

Greg. Joanni Epiſc. Syracuſ. lib. 7. epiſt. 63. The Kyrie Eleyſon nine times to be repeated in ſuch a tongue, as few Prieſts either underſtand, or do rightly pronounce, Gregory did inſtitute about 600 years after Chriſt, taking it out of the Greeks Church, and yet tranſpoſing it otherwiſe than there it was uſed. For among the Greeks this Kyrie Eleyſon, which they called their Litany, was ſung of all the people: The which Gregory ordained to be ſung only of the Quire, adding thereto alſo Chriſte Eleyſon, which the Grecians uſed not, as Gregory himſelf, writing to the Biſhop of Syracuſe, doth teſtifie.

Walfridus c. 22.

Gloria in Excelſis.

Next followeth Gloria in Excelſis, &c. Which words were ſung of the Angels at the birth of our Saviour. Albeit theſe words alſo were corrupted, as many other things were in the Church. For where the words of the Angels Hymn were Hominibus bona voluntas, i. To men good will; the Maſs ſaid, Hominibus bonæ voluntatis, i. To men of good will, &c. This Hymn was brought into the Maſs by Pope Symmachus (and not by Teleſphorus, as ſome not truly write, that he ordained three Maſſes on Chriſtmas-day; for in his time there was no Maſs, Anno 140.) about the year of our Lord 510. And after, the ſaid Hymn was augmented by Hylarius Pictavienſis, with thoſe words that follow; Laudamuste, &c. ſinging it firſt in his own Church, which was Anno 340. And afterward it was brought into other Churches by Pope Symmachus, Anno 510. as is aforeſaid. Anno 1553. Hugo de S. Victor.

Dominus vobiſcum, with the anſwer Oremus, and the Collects.

Dominus vobiſcum, with the anſwer of the People, although we have no certain Author named by whom it came; yet this is certain, that it was deduced out of the Greek Church into the Latin, as may appear by the Liturgy of Chryſoſtom and Baſilius (if the Liturgy be rightly aſcribed unto them) alſo by Origen, and other ancient Writers; by whom, it may ſeem that the Liturgy or Maſs (as they call it) did firſt begin with Dominus vobiſcum, and then Surſum corda; after that Gratias agamus Domino Deo noſtro, and ſo following upon the ſame, Verè dignum & juſtum eſt, &c. To the which beginning of the Canon other additions after were put by others, as ye ſhall hear, by the Lords grace, hereafter more at large. Ex B. Rhenl. Tertul. de coro. milit.

Hugo de S. Victore. Hugo de S. Victore, writeth that this Prayer was taken out of the ancient Salutation of Booz ſaluting his harveſt-folks. And out of the Book of Paralip. where the Prophet ſaluteth Azan the King with his company about him, ſaying, Dominus voviſcum. Honorius writeth thus, Presbyter cum ſalutatione veteris Teſtamenti, & Epiſcopus cum ſalutatione novi Teſtamenti ſalutat populum, quia dignius eſt novum quàm vetus Teſtamentum: i. As the Prieſt ſaluteth the people with the words of the old Teſtament, Dominus vobiſcum; ſo the Biſhop uſeth the words of the New Teſtament, ſaying, Pax vobiſcum, &c. Concerning the Collects Walafridus writeth, that as they be divers and uncertain, ſo they were made of divers and ſundry Authors, as every of them thought it congrue. Hugo de S. The Gradual, with Alleluia, Tracte, and Sequencies.

The Reſponſory, which is called the Gradual, (being wont to be ſung at the ſteps going up) with Alleluia, Honorius ſaith that Ambroſe made them, but Pope Gregory ordained them to be received. Honorius lib. 2. cap. 11.

Upon Feſtival days the Sequencies, which were wont to be ſung, were chiefly compoſed by an Abbot called Nokerus de S. Gallo, and by Pope Nicholas commanded to be ſung in the Maſs. Abbas Nokerus, autor ſequentiarum.

The Gradual the people were wont to ſing when the Biſhop was about to go up to the Pulpit, or ſome higher ſtanding, where the word of God might be the better and more ſenſibly heard at his mouth, reading the Epiſtle and the Goſpel.

The Epiſtle and the Goſpel.

The reading of the Epiſtle and the Goſpel, although it was not uſed in the Apoſtles times, yet it ſeemeth to be of ancient continuance, as Hugo ſaith, Primis temporibus ab Epiſtola Pauli Miſſa incipiebatur, poſt quam ſequebatur Evangelium, ſicut nunc; i. In former time the Maſs began firſt with the Epiſtle of S. Paul, after which Epiſtle then followed the Goſpel, as alſo now, &c. Hugo de S. Victore.

Walafridus ſaith, It is uncertain who firſt ordered and diſpoſed the ſo to be. Walafrid. Strabo.

Some attribute them to Hierom, ſome to Damaſus, ſome to Teleſphorus aforeſaid. This is certain, that Pope Anaſtaſius ordained to ſtand up at the hearing of the Goſpel read; about the year of our Saviour 406.

Burchardus lib. 5. cap. 31. Ex concil. Matiſcon. cap. 5. Likewiſe Burchardus teſtifieth the ſame, In Synodo Matiſcon. decretum eſt, ut in omnibus dominicis diebus, aliiſque Feſtivitatibus, Oblatio ab omnibus qui ad Miſſam convenerint utriuſque ſexus offeratur in Eccleſia, ſingulas Oblationes offerentes, finita Miſſa Oblationes à Presbytero accipiant; i. In the Synod Matiſcon it was ordained, that every Sunday and Feſtival day, Oblation was made of all the people which came to the Maſs, or Liturgy, both men and women, in the Church, every perſon bringing and offering his own Oblation; the Liturgy being done, they receive the Oblations of the Prieſt, &c.

Panormitan deceived. Furthermore note, good Reader, how this doth agree with the long Canon of St. Ambroſe, lib. 4. de Sacrament. cap. 5. Dicit Sacerdos; fac nobis hanc oblationem adſcriptam, rationalem, acceptabilem, quod eſt figura corporis & ſanguinis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti. He that writeth the Liturgy of Baſilius, aſcribeth it to his name: whether he doth it truly or no, I will not here contend. This is to be noted, that ſeeing in the ſaid Liturgy of Baſilius the ſame particle, Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth: pleni ſunt Cœli & Terra gloria tua, Oſanna in Excelſis, is ſung; therefore it muſt needs follow, that either Leo which was about the year of our Lord 460. borrowed this out of Baſilius's Liturgy, or elſe the ſame is falſly attributed to Baſilius.

Peter Martyr in his Commentaries in Jud. ſaith, that it was brought in by Pope Leo the ſecond, as it is ſaid: and yet he ſuppoſeth the ſame not to be ſo, ſaying, That this was an ancient cuſtome in the Apoſtles time for Chriſtians to ſalute one another with the Kiſs of Peace, &c.

The Diſtribution and Communion.

After this followeth the Communion, wherein our Popiſh Maſs and Miniſters thereof do much alter and degenerate from ancient Antiquity, two manner of ways.

Firſt, In that they make no Communion thereof, receiving only to themſelves, contrary both to their own words, where they ſay after their receiving, Sacramenta quæ ſumpſimus, &c. and alſo to the ancient Examples and Decrees of the Apoſtles and others. And where it is decreed in the Epiſtle of Anacletus; Peracta autem conſecratione omnes communicent, qui noluerint Eccleſiaſticis carere liminibus. Sic enim & Apoſtoli ſtatuerunt, & S. Romana tenet Eccleſia, &c. i. The Conſecration being done, let all communicate together; unleſs they will be thruſt out of the Church doors, &c.

Anaclet ep. 1. De Conſecrat. diſt. 2. ca. peract.

Here note by the way, gentle Reader, how Gratianus the Writer of the Popes Decrees is overſeen, which in his Book De Conſecrat. diſt. 2. referreth this ſaying of Anacletus to Pope Calixtus. And likewiſe alſo Cochleus, writing againſt Muſculus, followeth Gratianus in the ſame error.

Cochleus contra Muſculum de officio Miſſæ. Gratianus & Cochleus taken in an untruth.

Likewiſe in the Canons of the Apoſtles (if the Canons were theirs) we read πάντας τὺς εἰσιόντας πίστους, καὶ παραμένοντας δὲ τῇ προσευχῇ ἢ ἀγίᾳ μεταλήψει, &c. i. All the faithful, which reſort to the Church, and tarry not out the end of the Service, and receive not the holy Communion, be ſuch as bringing in diſorder to the Church, ought to be diſſevered, &c. And again, Si quis Epiſcopus, Preſbyter, aut Diaconus, aut quicunque ex Sacerdotali conſortio, oblatione facta, non communicaverint, cauſam dicito, &c.

Can. Ap. c. 9. Can. Ap. c. 8.

Micrologus de Eccleſiaſt. ſer. For how can that be called a Communion, which is not common, but private to one? as Micrologus writeth, Nec enim propriè communio dici poteſt, niſi plures de eodem Sacrificio participent, &c. It cannot be called a Communion, except more than one do participate of one Sacrifice, &c.

Gul. Durand. in ration. l. 4. c. 53. And Durandus, In primitiva Eccleſia omnes qui celebrationi Miſſarum intererant ſingulis diebus communicare ſolebant, eo quod Apoſtoli omnes de Calice biberunt, &c. i. In the Primitive time all that were preſent at the miniſtration were wont every day to communicate, becauſe that the Apoſtles did altogether drink of the Cup, &c.

Secondly, They alter and degenerate therein from ancient Antiquity, in that when they communicate alſo with the people, yet they deprive them of the holy Cup: which deprivation was not in the Church before the Counſel of Conſtance, about the year of our Lord 1414. For, before it was ſo authentickly received, that it was counted a Sacriledge to receive the one without the other, as appeareth by the words of Pope Gelaſius; Comperimus quod quidam ſumpta tantummodo corporis ſacri portione, &c. The whole in Engliſh is this; We underſtand that there be ſome, which receiving the one part only of the holy Body, abſtain from the Cup of the ſacred Blood: who becauſe they be taught ſo to do (by what ſuperſtition I cannot tell) either let them receive the Sacrament whole together, or let them abſtain from the whole Sacrament altogether, becauſe the diviſion of that one and whole Sacrament cannot be without great ſacrilege, &c.

Gelaſ. Joan. & Majoſica Epiſc. De Conſecrat. diſt. 1. cap. Comperimus.

Hitherto alſo pertaineth the teſtimony of S. Auſtin in theſe words; Et ibi vos eſtis in Menſa, & in Calice nobiſcum vos eſtis. Simul enim hoc ſumimus, ſimul bibimus, quia ſimul vivimus, &c. i. There be you at the Table, and at the Cup there alſo be you with us: for together we receive, and together we drink, becauſe we live together.

Aug. ſerm. feriæ, 2. Paſch.

As alſo out of the Book of Gregory it is manifeſt, that not only the people received them in both kinds; but alſo the words were preſcribed to the Miniſter, that he ſhould ſay in giving the Cup; Item Sacerdos Calicem dando dicat; Sanguis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti cuſtodiat te ad vitam æternam; i. Let the Prieſt ſay in giving the Cup; The blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt keep thee to everlaſting life, Amen.

Ex libro Sacramentorum Gregorij.

Further, In rendring the cauſe why it ſhould ſo be done, Thomas Aquine writeth, Nam hoc valet ad repræſentandam paſſionem Chriſti, in qua ſeorſim fuit Sanguis à Corpore ſeparatus, &c. Secundò, hoc eſt conveniens uſui hujus Sacramenti, ut ſeorſim exhibeatur Corpus Chriſti fidelibus in cibum, & Sanguis in potum; i. For that ſerveth to repreſent the Paſſion of Chriſt, wherein his Blood was parted ſeverally from the Body, &c. Secondly, For that it is convenient to the uſe of the Sacrament, that the Body ſhould ſeverally be given to the faithful for meat, and the Blood for drink.

Thomas 3. part. quæſt. 76. art. 2.

And therefore ſerved the Office of the Deacons as we read, Ut oblata à populo ſuper altare conſecranda diſponant, & perfectis myſteriis Calicem ſacroſancti Sanguinis Domini fidelibus propinent; i. To lay the Offerings of the people upon the Altar to be hallowed, and when the Myſteries be conſecrated, to diſtribute the Cup of the Sacred Blood of the Lord to the faithful, &c.

Amb. lib. de omnibus divin. officiis.

But among all other teſtimonies to prove that the Sacrament ought to be common to all people in both kinds, there is none more evident than that of Hierom: Cæterum Dominica cœna omnibus debet eſſe communis, quia ille omnibus Diſcipulis ſuis qui aderant æqualiter tradidit Sacramenta; i. The Supper of the Lord ought to be indifferently common to all his Diſciples there preſent, &c.

Hieron. in epiſt. 1 Cor. 11. Convenientibus.

And thus have ye heard the Canon deſcribed, which otherwiſe is called Secretum, i. the Secret of the Maſs, being ſo termed, becauſe the Prieſt was wont to read it in ſecret or in ſilence. The reaſon thereof Pope Innocentius the third declareth in his third Book, for that the holy words, ſaith he, of the Canon ſhould not grow in contempt with the people, by the daily uſe and hearing thereof. And he bringeth in an Example concerning the ſame of certain Shepherds, which in the fields uſing the ſame words of the Canon upon their Bread and Wine, the matter was turned, ſaith he, into Fleſh and Blood, and they plagued therefore from Heaven; but with ſuch Popiſh Tales the Church hath been long repleniſhed.

The Poſtcommon.

After the Canon and Communion then followeth the Poſtcommon, with the Collects, which the Maſs-book requireth always to be uſed in an odd number, ſometime teaching to uſe but one, as in the Sundays in Lent; and ſometime three, as in certain Maſſes from Low-ſunday till the Aſcenſion; but never to paſs the number of ſeven.

Ite miſſa eſt.

Laſt of all cometh Ite miſſa eſt, whereby the Miniſter dimitteth and ſendeth away all the congregation there preſent to their buſineſs: for, as you heard before, it was decreed in ancient time, that it was not lawful to depart from the congregation in the time of holy miniſtration, before the end of the whole Communion. And therefore all things being accompliſhed, the Miniſter turning to the aſſembly pronounceth, Ite miſſa eſt.

Albes and Corporaſſes.

Contrary to the which Councel Pope Gregory the third, about the year of our Lord, 732. calling a Councel at Rome, did not only ſtabliſh the Images before condemned, but condemned the gainſayers for hereticks, as is aforeſaid.

Hallowing of altars.

By Sixtus the third it was ordained, that no Liturgy ſhould be done ſave only upon altars hallowed, about the year of our Lord, 260. as ſome ſuppoſe. But as I ſee no firm probation upon the ſame; ſo have I probable conjecture the ſame not to be true.

Veſtments and Albes.

Chalices of gold.

After this came in golden chalices, and a true Proverb withal, That once they had wooden Chalices and golden Prieſts, now they have golden Chalices and wooden Prieſts.

Vitalianus the playing on the Organs.

Memento for the dead. Inceſſe. Theoffering.

Pelagius deviſed the Memento for the dead.

Leo brought in the Incenſe.

Eutichianus, as other ſay, brought in the Offertory, which was then after a manner far otherwiſe than it is, or hath been uſed now a great while. For what time as many of the Heathen being greatly accuſtomed with offerings, were converted unto Chriſt, and could not be well brought from their old long uſe of offerings, the Pope thought to bear ſomewhat with the weak, and permitted them to bring meats into the Congregation or Church, that when the Biſhop had bleſſed them, they that brought them might diſtribute them to the poor or take them to their own uſe. But afterward did Pope Gregory ſo help with this ſentence, Non apparebis in conſpectu Dei tui vacuus, &c. Thou ſhalt not appear in the ſight of thy God empty, &c. that as he willed the people to lay their offerings upon the altar; ſo they did, and have not yet forgotten to do ſo ſtill.

Soul-Maſſes.

Soul Maſſes, and Maſſes applied for the dead, came in partly by Gregory, partly by Pelagius, which brought in the Memento, as is ſaid.

Application of Maſſes for the dead.

Wherein note (good Reader) and mark how theſe two ſtand together, that which our Saviour ſaith in his Evangeliſt, Hoc facite in mei commemorationem, Do this in remembrance of me; and that which we ſay, In quorum memoria corpus Chriſti ſumitur, &c. i. In whoſe commemoration the body of Chriſt is taken, &c. Chriſt would it to be done in his remembrance: and the Pope will have it done in remembrance of the dead, &c. What can be more contrary?

Reſervation of the Sacrament.

Auricular confeſſion.

A policy for unity of popery.

Innocentius the third ordained that the Sacrament ſhould be reſerved in the Church. The ſame brought alſo in auricular confeſſion as a law, about the year of our Lord, 1215. he did alſo conſtitute that no Archbiſhop ſhould enjoy the pall, unleſs he were of his own religion; and therefore no great marvel if there be ſuch unity in Popery.

The firſt Latin Maſs ſung at Conſtantinople.

A Conjecture probable that the Roman Maſs is of no great antiquity.

Vigilius ordained that the Prieſt ſhould ſay Maſs having his face toward the Eaſt.

Platina writeth how the firſt Latine Maſs was ſung in the ſixth Councel of Conſtantinople, which was about the year of our Lord, 680. ſo that the ſaid Maſs was there and then firſt allowed and not before. And yet they (I mean the Greek Church) ſhould have known as ſoon the Maſs if it had proceeded from James or Baſilius, as the Latine Church did know it.

The feaſt of all ſouls.

The opinion to think the Maſs to help Souls in Purgatory, was confirmed by Pope Joannes the 19. by reaſon of a dream, wherein he dreamed that he heard and ſaw the voices of Devils lamenting and bewailing, that Souls were delivered from them by the ſaying of Maſſes and Diriges. And therefore he did approve and ratifie the feaſt of all Souls, brought in by Odilo; Moreover he adjoyned alſo to the ſame the feaſt of Alhallows, about the year of our Lord, 1003.

The feaſt of Alhallows.

Lent faſt.

Concerning Lent faſt, ſome think that Teleſphorus, about the year of our Lord, 140. was the Author thereof. But that peradventure may be as true, as that which they alſo attribute to him, that he ordained three Maſſes of one Prieſt to be ſaid on Chriſtmas-day. Or if he did ordain that faſt, yet he did ordain it but freely to be kept: for ſo I find among the decrees, that Lent was commanded firſt to be faſted but only of the Clergy or Churchmen.

The breaking of the hoſt in three parts.

Ex Rom. ordine de officio Miſſæ.

As concerning the breaking of the body in three parts, we read alſo mention to be made in the ſame book of order, but no certain Author thereof to be named. The words of the book be theſe; Tripliciter, inquit, corpus Domini intelligitur. Vnum quod reſurrexit à mortuis, quod ſignificat particula in ſanguinem miſſa; Aliud quod adhuc vivit in terra ſignificatum per particulam à Sacerdote conſumptam; Tertium, quod jam requieſcit in Chriſto, quod etiam à tertia particula in altari reſervata aptè figuratur, &c. i. Three ways is the body of the Lord underſtood; One which roſe again from the dead, being ſignified by that part which is let fall to the blood in the chalice; The other is that which yet is living in the earth, which the part of the Prieſt eaten doth ſignifie; The third is that now reſteth in Chriſt, which alſo is figured by that particle that is reſerved upon the altar.

Dedication of Churches.

Dedication of Churches came in by Felix the third; and that Churches might not be hallowed but by a Biſhop, Anno 492.

The Canticle, Gloria, laus, &c. in the proceſſion before the Maſs on Palm-ſunday, was inſtituted by Theodulphus, Biſhop of Aurelia as Sigebertus writeth, about the year of our Lord, 483.

Honor in Gemma lib. 1. ca. 66. Guliel. Durand. in Ration. lib. 4. ca. 55.

Giving of holy bread came in by this occaſion, as it is to be gathered, partly out of Honorius, partly out of Durandus, and others. The manner was in ancient time, that the Miniſters were wont to receive certain meal of every houſe or family, wherewith a great loaf was made, called Panis dominicus, able to ſerve in the Communion, and to be diſtributed unto the people, which then was wont every day to be preſent and to receive, eſpecially they that offered the meal: For whom it was wont therefore to be ſaid in the Canon, Omnium circumſtantium, qui tibi hoc ſacrificium laudis offerunt, &c, But afterward the number of the people increaſing, and piety decreaſing, as Durandus writeth, it was then ordained to communicate but only upon Sundays.

At length followed the third conſtitution, that thrice a year, at leaſt at Eaſter, every man ſhould communi- cate, it being thus provided, that in stead of the daily Communion before used the Pax did serve. And in stead of receiving upon the Sunday, bread was hallowed and suddenly given and distributed unto the people, which also was called Eulogia; the constitution whereof seemeth to proceed from Pope Pius. For so we read in the decrees of the said Pope Pius. Ut de oblationibus quæ offeruntur à populo, & consecrationibus superfunt, vel de panibus quos deferunt fideles ad Ecclesiam, vel certè de suis Presbyter convenienter partes incisas habeat in vase nitido & convenienti, & post missarum solennia qui communicare non fuerint parati Eulogias omni die Dominica, & in diebus festis, exinde accipiant. That is, That the Minister shall take of the oblations offered of the people, remaining of the consecration, or else of the bread which the faithful bring unto the Church, or else to take of their own bread and cut it conveniently in portions in a clean and a convenient vessel; so that after the solemnity of the ministration being done, they that were not prepared and ready to communicate, may receive every Sunday or Festival day Eulogies, or Benedictions with the same. Hæc ille.

Holy bread. Ex sanctionibus Ecclesiasticis, Clasf. 3. decreta Pii Papæ.

As concerning holy water which they used to sprinkle at the Church door upon them that entred in, I will not say that it sprung from the idolatrous use of the Gentiles.

Zozom. li. 6. ca. 6. Theodor. lib. 3. cap. 6.

This I say as I find in historia Zozomeni. Erat autem Romanis vetusta consuetudo, ut quum limen Templi transeundum esset, Sacerdos secundum morem Ethnicum madidos quosdam Olivæ ramusculos manu tenens ingredientes aspergebat, &c. i. It was an old custom among the Romans, that at the entring in at the Church door the Priest after the usual manner of the Ethnicks, having in his hand moist branches of Olive, did sprinkle with the same such as entred in, &c.

To the which custom this our manner of giving of holy water is so like, that it seemeth to proceed out of the same.

In the book of the Popes decrees, and in the distinctions of Gratianus, there is a certain decree fathered upon Alexander the first, about the year of our Lord, 121. Which decree may well seem to be a bastard decree, neither agreeing to such a father, nor such a time, concerning the conjuring of holy water. The words of the decree be these, Aquam sale conspersam in populis benedimus, ut ea cuncti aspersi sanctificentur, & purificentur, quod omnibus Sacerdotibus faciendum esse mandamus: Nam si cinis Vitulæ asperſus populum sanctificabat, atque mundabat, multò magis aqua sale aspersa, divinisque precibus sacrata, populum sanctificat atque mundat. Et si sale aspersa per Helisæum Prophetam sterilitas aquæ sanata est; quantò magis divinis precibus sacratus sal sterilitatem rerum aufert humanarum, & coinquinatos sanctificat & purgat, & cætera bona multiplicat, & insidias Diaboli avertit, & à phantasmatis versutijs homines defendit? That is, We bless water sprinkled with salt among the people, that all such as be sprinkled with the same, may be sanctified and purified; which thing we charge and command all Priests to do: For if the ashes of the Cow, in the old Law, being sprinkled among the people, did sanctifie and cleanse them, much more water sprinkled with salt, and hallowed with godly prayers, sanctifieth and cleanseth the people. And if that Helisæus the Prophet by the sprinkling of salt did heal and help the barrenness of the water; how much more doth the salt, being hallowed by godly prayers, take away the barrenness of humane things, and sanctifie and purge them that be defiled; also multiply other things that be good, and turn away the snares of the devil, and defend men from the deceptions of phantasie, &c.

Ex lib. concil. De consecrat. dist. 3. c. Aquam.

Thus ye have heard the author and father of holy water, which some also ascribe to Pope Sixtus which succeeded Alexander. But as the Papist do not agree in the first author or institutor of this hallowing of elements, so I think the same untruly to be ascribed to either: but leaving the probation of this to further pleasure, let us now hear in our own tongue their own words, which they use in this their conjuration.

The form and words used of the Priest in conjuring Salt.

Salt conjured.

I conjure thee thou creature of salt by the ✠ living God, by the ✠ true God, by the holy God, &c. That thou maist be made a conjured salt, to the Salvation of them that believe; and that unto all such as receive thee thou maist be health of Soul and Body; and that from out of the place wherin thou shalt be sprinkled, may flie away and depart all phantasie, wickedness, or craftiness of the devils subtilty, and every foul spirit, &c. Anno 1553

The form of conjuring water.

Water conjured.

I conjure thee thou creature of water, in the name of ✠ God the Father almighty, and in the name of ✠ Jesu Christ his Son, our Lord, and in the vertue ✠ of the Holy Ghost, that thou become a conjured water to expel all powor of the enemy, &c.

Who seeth not in these words blasphemy intolerable, how that which is only due to the blood of Christ, and promised to faith only in him, is transferred to earthly and insensate creatures, to be salvation both to Body and Spirit, inwardly to give remission of sins, to give health and remedy against evils and devils, against all phantasies, wickedness, and all foul Spirits, and to expel the power of the enemy, &c. If this be true, whereto serveth the blood of Christ, and the vertue of Christian faith?

Therefore judge thy self, gentle Reader, whether thou think this trumpery rightly to be fathered upon those ancient Fathers aforenamed, or else whether it may seem more like truth that John Sleydan writeth, whose words in his second book de Monarchijs are these; Horum decreta sunt in libris inserta conciliorum, sed ex his pleraque tam sunt levicula, tam nugatoria, tam aliena prorsus à sacris literis, ut credibile sit ab alijs longo post tempore fuisse conficta, &c. That is, The decrees of these foresaid Bishops and Martyrs be inserted in the book of Councels, but of these decrees many be so childish, so trifling, and so far disagreeing from the holy Scripture, that it is very like that the same were fained and counterfeited of others long after their time, &c. Thus much saith Sleydan with more words in that place. Unto whose testimony if I might be so bold also to add my conjecture, I would suppose the conjuration of this foresaid water and salt to spring out of the same fountain, from whence proceeded the conjuring of flowers and branches, because I see the order and manner of them both to be so like and uniform as may appear.

Joan. Sleid. lib. 2. de 4. Monarch.

Many decrees falsly imputed to the old Fathers which were none of theirs.

The manner of hallowing flowers and branches.

Flowers and branches hallowed.

I conjure thee thou creature of flowers and branches, in the name of ✠ God the Father almighty, & in the name ✠ of Jesu Christ his Son, our Lord; and in the vertue of the holy ✠ Ghost. Therefore be thou rooted out and displanted from this creature of flowers and branches, all thou strength of the adversary, all thou host of the devil, and all the power of the enemy, even every assault of the devils, &c.

And thus much concerning the antiquity of holy bread and holy water; whereby thou mayest partly conjecture the same not to be so old as Steven Gardner, in his letter against Master Ridley above mentioned, would have, being both deceived himself, and also going about to seduce other.

Ex actis Rom. Pontif. in vita Greg. 3.

Furthermore, as touching the reserving of reliques and the memorial of Saints brought into the Mass, Grégory the third is the author thereof, who also added to the Canon thereof this clause, Quorum solemnitates hodie in conspectu divinæ majestatis tuæ celebrantur, &c.

Finally it were too long to recite every thing in order, devised and brought in particularly to the Mass, and to the Church. For after that mans brain was once set on devising, it never could make an end of heaping rite upon rite, and ceremony upon ceremony, till all Religion was turned welnigh to superstition. Thereof cometh oyl and cream brought in by Pope Sylvester, not wont to be hallowed but by a Bishop. That the Corporas should not be of silk, but only of fine linnen cloth. That the Psalms should be sung on sides, the one side of the Quire singing one verse, the other another, with Gloria patri, &c. That Baptism should be ministred at no other time in the year but only at Easter and Whitsontide (save to Infants, and such as were in extream infirmity) and that it should be required 40 days before; so determined by Pope Siricius: and therefore was it that Fonts were hallowed only at these two seasons, the which hallowing they kept yet still, but the ordinance they have rejected. Item, that Bels also were christned. Item, No Priest should wear a beard, or have long hair; so appointed by Pope Martin the first. Item, that auricular confession should be made, that the book of decrees and decretals should be stablished, and transubstantiation confirmed, in which three acts Pope Innocentius the third was the chiefest doer, about the year of our Lord, 1215.

And thus have ye in sum the gatherings of the Mass, with the Canon and all the appurtenance of the same: which, not much unlike to the Crow of Esop, being patched with the feathers of so many birds, was so long a gathering, that the Temple of Solomon was not so long in building, as the Popes Mass was in making. Whereby judge now thy self, good Reader, whether this Mass did proceed from James and other Apostles, or no. And yet this was one of the principal causes for which so much turmoile was made in the Church, with the blood-shed of so many Godly men, suffering in so many quarters of this Realm; some consumed by fire, some pined away with hunger, some hanged, some slain, some racked, some tormented one way, some another, and that only or chiefly for the cause of this aforesaid Popish Mass; as by the reading of this story following, by the grace of Christ our Lord, shall appear more at large. In whom I wish thee to continue in health, and to persevere in the truth.

The first entring of Queen MARY to the Crown, with the alteration of Religion, and other Perturbations hapning the same time in this Realm of ENGLAND.

Anno 1553. The reign of Q. Mary.

WHat time King Edward by long sickness began to appear more feeble and weak, in the mean while during the time of this his sickness, a certain marriage was provided, concluded, and shortly also upon the same solemnized in the month of May, between the Lord Gilford son to the Duke of Northumberland, and the Lady Jane the Duke of Suffolks daughter; whose mother being then alive, was daughter to Mary, King Henries second sister, who first was married to the French King, and afterward to Charles Duke of Suffolk. But to make no long tarriance hereupon, the marriage being ended, and the King waxing every day more sick than other, whereas indeed there seemed in him no hope of recovery, it was brought to pass by the consent not only of the Nobility, but also of the chief Lawyers of the Realm, that the King by his Testament did appoint the foresaid Lady Jane, daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, to be inheretrix unto the Crown of England, passing over his two sisters, Mary and Elizabeth.

Marriage between the Lord Gilford and the Lady Jane.

To this order subscribed all the Kings Councel, and the chief of the Nobility, the Mayor and City of London, and almost all the Judges and chief Lawyers of this Realm, saving only Justice Hales of Kent, a man both favouring true Religion, and also an upright Judge, as any hath been noted in this Realm, who, giving his consent unto Lady Mary, would in no case subscribe to Lady Jane. Of this man (God willing) you shall hear more in the sequel of this story. The causes laid against Lady Mary, were as well for that it was feared she would Marry with a Stranger, and thereby intangle the Crown; as also that she would clean alter Religion, used both in King Henry her father, and also in King Edward her Brothers days, and so bring in the Pope, to the utter destruction of the Realm, which indeed afterward came to pass, as by the course and sequel of this story may well appear.

Sir James Hales standeth with Q. Mary.

Two things feared in Q. Mary.

Much probable matter they had thus to conjecture of her, by reason of her great stubbornness shewed and declared in her brothers days, as in the letters before mentioned, passing between her and King Edward, and the Councel, may appear. The matter being thus concluded, and after confirmed by every mans hand, King Edward an Imp of so great hope, not long after this departed by the vehemency of his sickness, when he was sixteen years of age; with whom also decayed in a manner the whole flourishing estate and honour of the English Nation.

Queen Jane proclaimed at London.

When King Edward was dead, this Jane was established in the Kingdom by the Nobles consent, and was forthwith published Queen by Proclamation at London, and in other Cities where was any great resort, and was there so taken and named. Between this young damsel and King Edward there was little difference in age, though in learning and knowledge of the tongues she was not only equal, but also superior unto him, being instructed of a master right nobly learned. If her fortune had been as good as her bringing up, joyned with fineness of wit, undoubtedly she might have seemed comparable not only to the house of Vespasians, Sempronians, and mother of the Gracchies, yea, to any other woman beside, that deserved high praise for their singular learning; but also to the University-men, which have taken many degrees of the Schools.

Comparison between young King Edward and young Lady Jane.

This instructor of the Lady Jane, was Mast. Elmar.

In the mean time while these things were a working at London, Mary, which had knowledge of her brothers death, writeth to the Lords of the Councel in form as followeth.

A letter of the Lady Mary, sent to the Lords of the Councel, wherein she claimeth the Crown after the decease of King Edward.

Lady Mary her letter sent to the Councel, wherein she claimeth the Crown.

MY Lords, we greet you well, and have received sure advertisement, that our dearest brother the King, our late Sovereign Lord, is departed to Gods mercy, which news how woful they be unto our heart, he only knoweth, to whose will and pleasure we must, and do humbly submit us and our wills. But in this so lamentable a case, that is to wit, now after his Majesties departure and death, concerning the Crown and Governance of this Realm of England, with the title of France, and all things thereto belonging, what hath been provided by Act of Parliament, and the Testament and last Will of our dearest Father, besides other circumstances advancing our right, you know, the Realm, and the whole world knoweth, the Rols and Records appear by the authority of the King our said Father, and the King our said Brother, and the Subjects of this Realm; so that we verily trust that there is no good true Subject, that is, can, or would pretend to be ignorant thereof: and of our part we have of our selves caused, and, as God shall aid and strengthen us, shall cause our right and title in this behalf to be published and proclaimed accordingly. And albeit this so weighty a matter seemeth strange, that our said Brother dying upon Thursday night last past, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof, yet we consider your wisdoms and prudence to be such, that having eftsoons amongst you debated, pondered, and well weighed this present case with our Estate, with your own Estate, the Common-wealth and all our Honours, we shall and may conceive great hope and trust, with much assurance in your Loyalty and Service, and therefore for the time interpret and take things not to the worst; and that ye will, like Noblemen, work the best. Nevertheless, we are not ignorant of your Consultations, to undo the provisi- ons made for our Preferment, nor of the great Bands and Proviſions forcible, wherewith ye be aſſembled and prepared, by whom, and to what end, God and you know, and Nature cannot but fear ſome Evil. But be it that ſome conſideration Politick, or whatſoever thing elſe hath moved you thereto, yet doubt you not, my Lords, but we can take all theſe your doings in gracious part, being alſo right ready to remit and fully pardon the ſame, and that freely to eſchew Blood-ſhed and Vengeance, againſt all thoſe that can or will intend the ſame, truſting alſo aſſuredly you will take and accept this grace and vertue in good part as appertaineth, and that we ſhall not be inforced to uſe the ſervice of other our true ſubjects and friends, which in this our juſt and right cauſe, God, in whom our whole affiance is, ſhall ſend us. Wherefore my Lords, we require you and charge you, and every of you, that of your allegeance which you owe to God and us, and to none other, for our honour and the ſurety of our perſon only imploy your ſelves, and forthwith upon receit hereof, cauſe our right and title to the Crown and Government of this Realm to be proclaimed in our City of London and other places, as to your wiſdom ſhall ſeem good, and as to this caſe appertaineth, not failing hereof as our very truſt is in you. And this our Letter, ſigned with our hand, ſhall be your ſufficient warrant in this behalf.

Given under our Signet, at our Manor of Kening-hall, the ninth of July, 1553.

To this Letter of the Lady Mary, the Lords of the Councel make anſwer again, as followeth.

Anſwer of the Lords unto the Lady Mary's letter.

A letter of the Councel anſwering again to the Lady Mary. Lady Jane inveſted in poſſeſſion of the Crown by King Edwards will and aſſent of the whole Councel.

MAdam, we have received your Letters, the ninth of this Inſtant, declaring your ſuppoſed Title, which you judge your ſelf to have to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and all the Dominions thereunto belonging. For anſwer whereof, this is to advertiſe you, that foraſmuch as our Soveraign Lady Queen Jane is, after the death of our Soveraign Lord Edward the ſixth, a Prince of moſt noble memory, inveſted and poſſeſſed with the juſt and right title in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, not only by good order of old ancient Laws of this Realm, but alſo by our late Soveraign Lords Letters Patents ſigned with his own hand, and ſealed with the great Seal of England in preſence of the moſt part of the Nobles, Councellors, Judges, with divers other [illegible] and ſage perſonages, aſſenting and ſubſcribing to the ſame: We muſt therefore, as of moſt bound duty and allegeance, aſſent unto her ſaid Grace, and to none other, except we ſhould (which faithful ſubjects cannot) fall into grievous and unſpeakable enormities. Wherefore we can no leſs do, but for the quiet both of the Realm and you alſo, to advertiſe you, that foraſmuch as the divorce, made between the King of famous memory, King Henry the eighth, and the Lady Katharine your mother, was neceſſary to be had both by the everlaſting Laws of God, and alſo by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and by the moſt part of the noble and learned Univerſities of Chriſtendom, and confirmed alſo by the ſundry Acts of Parliaments remaining yet in their force, and thereby you juſtly made illegitimate and unheritable to the Crown Imperial of this Realm, and the rules, and dominions, and poſſeſſions of the ſame, you will upon juſt conſideration hereof, and of divers other cauſes lawful to be alledged for the ſame, and for the juſt inheritance of the right line and godly order taken by the late King our Soveraign Lord King Edward the ſixth, and agreed upon by the Nobles and great Perſonages aforeſaid, ſurceaſe by any pretence to vex and moleſt any of our Soveraign Lady Queen Jane her Subjects from their true faith and allegeance due unto her Grace. Aſſuring you, that if you will for reſpect ſhew your ſelf quiet and obedient (as you ought) you ſhall find us all and ſeveral ready to do you any ſervice that we with duty may, and glad with your quietneſs to preſerve the common State of this Realm, wherein you may be otherwiſe grievous unto us, to your ſelf, and to them. And thus we bid you moſt heartily well to fare. From the Tower of London, in this ninth of July, 1553. Anno 1553.

Your Ladiſhips friends, ſhewing your ſelf an obedient Subject.

¶ All theſe aforeſaid, except only the Duke of Northumberland, and Sr. John Gates, afterward were either by ſpecial favour, or ſpecial or general pardon diſcharged.

Lady Mary recounted illegitimate

After this anſwer received, and the minds of the Lords perceived, Lady Mary ſpeedeth herſelf ſecretly away far off from the City, hoping chiefly upon the good will of the Commons, and yet perchance not deſtitute altogether of the ſecret advertiſements of ſome of the Nobles. When the Councel heard of her ſudden departure and perceived her ſtoutneſs, and that all came not to paſs as they ſuppoſed, they gathered ſpeedily a power of men together, appointing an army, and firſt aſſigned that the Duke of Suffolk ſhould take that enterpriſe in hand, and ſo have the leading of the band. But afterward altering their minds, they thought it beſt to ſend forth the Duke of Northumberland, with certain other Lords and Gentlemen, and that the Duke of Suffolk ſhould keep the Tower, where the Lord Gilford and the Lady Jane the ſame time were lodged.

Lady Mary keepeth her ſelf from the City of London.

The Duke of Northumberland ſent forth againſt Lady Mary.

In the which expedition the Guard alſo, albeit they were much unwilling at the firſt thereunto, yet notwithſtanding, through the vehement perſwaſion of the Lord Treaſurer, Maſter Chomley, and other, they were induced to aſſiſt the Duke, and to ſet forward with him.

Theſe things thus agreed upon, and the Duke now being ſet forward after the beſt array out of London, having notwithſtanding his times preſcribed, and his journey appointed by the Councel, to the intent he might not ſeem to do any thing but upon warrant. Mary in the mean while toſſed with much travel up and down, to work the ſureſt way for her beſt advantage, withdrew her ſelf into the quarters of Northfolk and Suffolk, where ſhe underſtood the Dukes name to be had in much hatred for the ſervice that had been done there of late under King Edward, in ſubduing the rebels, and there gathering to her ſuch aid of the Commons on every ſide as ſhe might, keeping her ſelf cloſe for a ſpace within Fremingham Caſtle. To whom firſt of all reſorted the Suffolk men; who being always forward in promoting the proceedings of the Goſpel, promiſed her their aid and help, ſo that ſhe would not attempt the alteration of the Religion, which her brother King Edward had before eſtabliſhed by laws and orders publickly enacted, and received by the conſent of the whole Realm in that behalf.

Policy of Lady Mary.

The Lady Mary taketh Fremingham Caſtle.

The Suffolke men gather to the Lady Maries ſide.

To make the matter ſhort, unto this condition ſhe eſtſoons agreed, with ſuch promiſe made unto them that no innovation ſhould be made of Religion, as that no man would or could then have miſdoubted her. Which promiſe, if ſhe had as conſtantly kept, as they did willingly preſerve her with their bodies and weapons, ſhe had done a deed both worthy her blood, and had alſo made her Reign more ſtable to her ſelf through future tranquility. For though a man be never ſo puiſſant of power, yet breach of promiſe is an evil upholder of quietneſs, fear is worſe, but cruelty is the worſt of all.

The Lady Mary promiſeth faithfully that ſhe would not alter Religion.

Breach of promiſe in Queen Mary.

Thus Mary being guarded with the power of the Goſpellers, did vanquiſh the Duke, and all thoſe that came with her. In conſideration whereof it was (methinks) an heavy word that ſhe anſwered to the Suffolk men afterwards,

which did make ſupplication to her Grace to peform her promiſe: Forſomuch (ſaith ſhe) as you being but Members deſire to rule your Head; you ſhall one day well perceive, that Members muſt obey their Head, and not look to bear rule over the ſame. And not only that, but alſo to cauſe the more terror unto other, a certain Gentleman named Mr. Dobbe, dwelling about Wyndam ſide, for the ſame cauſe, that is, for advertiſing her by humble requeſt of her promiſe, was puniſhed, being three ſundry times ſet on the Pillory to be a gazing ſtock unto all men. Divers other delivered her books and ſupplications made out of the Scripture, to exhort her to continue, in the true Doctrine then eſtabliſhed; and for their good will were ſent to Priſon. But ſuch is the condition of mans nature (as here you ſee) that we are for the moſt part more ready always to ſeek friendſhip when we ſtand in need of help, than ready to requite a benefit once paſt and received. Howbeit againſt all this one ſhoot-anker we have, which may be a ſure comfort to all miſerable Creatures, that equity and fidelity are ever perfect and certainly found with the Lord above, though the ſame, being ſhut out of the doors in this World, be not to be found here among men. But ſeeing our intent is to write a ſtory, not to treat of Office, let us lay Suffolk men aſide for a while, whoſe deſerts, for their readineſs and diligence with the Queen, I will not here ſtand upon. What ſhe performed on her part, the thing it ſelf, and the whole ſtory of this Perſecution doth teſtifie, as hereafter more plainly will appear.

Queen Mary anſwer to the Suffolk men.

Mr. Dobbe puniſhed.

Perfect fidelity ſhut out of the doors, yet it is to be found in Heaven.

On the contrary ſide, the Duke of Northumberland having his Warrant under the Broad Seal, with all Furniture in readineſs, as he took his Voyage, and was now forward in his way; what ado there was, what ſtirring on every ſide, what ſending, what riding and poſting, what Letters, Meſſages, and Inſtructions went to and fro, what talking among the Souldiers, what Heart-burning among the People, what fair pretences outwardly, inwardly what privy practices there were, what ſpeeding of Ordinance daily and hourly out of the Tower, what rumours and coming down of Souldiers from all quarters there was; a World it was to ſee, and a proceſs to declare, enough to make a whole Ilias. The greateſt help that made for the Lady Mary was the ſhort journeys of the Duke, which by comiſſion were aſſigned to him before, as is above mentioned. For the longer the Duke lingred in his Voyage, the Lady Mary the more increaſed in puiſſance, the hearts of the people being mightily bent unto her. Which after the Councel at London perceived, and underſtood how the common multitude did withdraw their hearts from them to ſtand with her, and that certain Noble men began to go the other way, they turned their ſong, and proclaimed for Queen the Lady Mary, eldeſt daughter to King Henry the eighth, and appointed by Parliament to ſucceed King Edward dying without Iſſue.

Queen Mary proclaimed at London.

The Duke of Northumberland overthrown.

And ſo the Duke of Northumberland, being by Counſel and Advice ſent forth againſt her, was left deſtitute, and forſaken alone at Cambridge with ſome of his Sons, and a few other, among whom the Earl of Huntington was one, who there were arreſted and brought to the Tower of London, as Traitors to the Crown, notwithſtanding that he had there proclaimed her Queen before.

The Duke of Northumberland brought to the Tower as a Traitor.

Thus have ye Mary now made a Queen, and the ſword of Authority put into her hand, which how ſhe afterward did uſe, we may ſee in the ſequel of this Book. Therefore (as I ſay) when ſhe had been thus advanced by the Goſpellers, and ſaw all in quiet by means that her enemies were conquered, ſending the Duke Captive to the Tower before (which was the 25. of July) ſhe followed not long after, being brought up the third day of Auguſt to London, with the great rejoycing of many men, but with a greater fear of moe, and yet with flattery, peradventure moſt great, of fained hearts.

Queen Mary cometh up to London.

Thus coming up to London, her firſt lodging ſhe took at the Tower, whereas the foreſaid Lady Jane with her Husband the Lord Gilford, a little before her coming, were impriſoned; where they remained waiting her pleaſure almoſt five Months. But the Duke, within a month after his coming to the Tower, being adjudged to death, was brought forth to the Scaffold, and there beheaded. After it he having a promiſe, and being put in hope of Pardon (yea, though his Head were upon the Block) if he would recant and hear Maſs, conſented thereto, and denyed in words that true Religion, which before time, as well in King Henry the eighths days, as in King Edwards, he had oft evidently declared himſelf both to favour and further: exhorting alſo the people to return to the Catholick Faith, as he termed it. Whoſe recantation the Papiſts did forthwith publiſh and ſet abroad rejoycing not a little at his converſion, or rather ſubverſion, as then appeared.

The Lady Jane and the Lord Gilford priſoners in the Tower.

The Duke of Northumberland condemned to dye.

The Duke of Northumberland revoketh his Religion.

Thus the Duke of Northumberland, with Sir John Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, (which Palmer on the other ſide confeſſed his Faith that he had learned in the Goſpel; and lamented that he had not lived more Goſpel-like) being put to death; In the mean time Queen Mary entring thus her Reign with the Blood of theſe men, beſides hearing Maſs her ſelf in the Tower, gave a heavy ſhew and ſignification hereby; but eſpecially by the ſudden delivering of Steven Gardiner out of the Tower; that ſhe was not minded to ſtand to that which ſhe ſo deeply had promiſed to the Suffolk men before; concerning the not ſubverting or altering the ſtate of Religion, as in very deed the ſurmiſe of the People was therein nothing deceived.

The Duke of Northumberland beheaded.

Sir Jo. Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer, confeſſing their Faith, were beheaded.

Beſides the premiſes, other things alſo followed, which every day more and more diſcomforted the people, declaring the Queen to bear no good will to the preſent ſtate of Religion; as not only the releaſing of Gardiner, being then made Lord Chancellor of England and Biſhop of Wincheſter; Doctor Poynet being put out; but alſo that Boner was reſtored to his Biſhoprick again; and Doctor Ridley diſplaced. Item, Doctor Day to the Biſhoprick of Chicheſter; J. Scory being put out. Item Doctor Tonſtall to the Biſhoprick of Dureſme. Item, Doctor Heath to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, and J. Hooper committed to the Fleet. Item, Doctor Veſie to Exceter; and Miles Coverdale put out. Theſe things being marked and perceived, great heavineſs and diſcomfort grew more and more to all good mens hearts; but contrary, to the wicked, great rejoycing. In which diſcord of minds, and diverſity of affections, was now to bee ſeen a miſerable face of things in the whole Common-wealth of England. They that could diſſemble took no great care how the matter went. But ſuch, whoſe Conſciences were joyned with the Truth, perceived already coals to be kindled, which after ſhould be the deſtruction of many a true Chriſtian man; as indeed it came to paſs. In the mean while Queen Mary after theſe beginnings, removed from the Tower to Hampton Court, cauſed a Parliament to be ſummoned againſt October 10. next enſuing, whereof more is to be ſaid hereafter.

The true preaching Biſhops diſplaced.

A Parliament ſummoned.

Ye heard before how divers Biſhops were removed, and other placed in their rooms: amongſt whom was Doctor Ridley Biſhop of London, a worthy man both of fame and learning. This Doctor Ridley in the time of Queen Jane had made a Sermon at Pauls-Croſs, ſo commended by the Councel; declaring there his mind to the people as touching the Lady Mary, and diſſwading them, alledging there the incommodities and inconveniencies which might riſe by receiving her to be their Queen, prophecying as it were before that which after came to paſs, that ſhe would bring in Forreign Power to Reign over them; beſides the ſubverting alſo of all Chriſtian Religion then already eſtabliſhed; ſhewing moreover that the ſame Mary being in his Dioceſs, he according to his duty, being then her Ordinary, had travailed much with her to reduce her to this Religion, & notwithſtanding in all other points of civility, ſhe ſhewed her ſelf gentle and tractable, yet in matters that concerned true Faith and Doctrine, ſhe ſhewed her ſelf ſo ſtiff and obſtinate, that there was no other hope of her to be conceived, but to diſturb and overturn all that which with ſo great labours had been confirmed and planted by her Brother afore. Shortly after this Sermon, Queen Mary was proclaimed; whereupon he ſpeedily repairing to Fremingham to ſalute the Queen, had ſuch cold welcom there, that being ſpoiled of all his Dignity, he was ſent back upon a lame halting horſe to the Tower.

Biſhop Ridley preacheth in Queen Maries time.

After him preached alſo Mr. Rogers the next Sunday, intreating very learnedly upon the Goſpel of the ſame day.

Mr. Rogers Preacheth.

This ſo done, Q. Mary ſeeing all things yet not going ſo after her mind as ſhe deſired, deviſed with her Councel to bring to paſs that thing by other means, which as yet by open Law ſhe could not well accompliſh; directing forth an Inhibition by Proclamation, that no man ſhould preach or read openly in Churches the Word of God, beſides other things alſo in the ſame Proclamation inhibited, the copy whereof here followeth.

An Inhibition of the Queen, for Preaching, Printing, &c.

Auguſt 18. THe Queens Highneſs well remembring what great inconveniencies and dangers have grown to this her Highneſs Realm in times paſt, through the diverſity of opinions in queſtion of Religon, and hearing alſo that now of late, ſince the beginning of her moſt gracious Reign, the ſame contentions be again much revived, through certain falſe and untrue reports and rumours ſpread by ſome light and evil diſpoſed perſons, hath thought good to do to underſtand, to all her Highneſs moſt loving ſubjects, her moſt gracious pleaſure in manner following:

An Inhibition of the Queen for preaching and printing.

Firſt, her Majeſty, being preſently by the only goodneſs of God ſetled in her juſt poſſeſſion of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and other Dominions thereunto belonging, cannot now hide that Religion which God and the World knoweth ſhe hath ever profeſſed from her infancy hitherto. Which as her Majeſty is minded to obſerve and maintain for her ſelf by Gods Grace, during her time, ſo doth her Highneſs much deſire, and would be glad the ſame were of all her Subjects quietly and charitably embraced.

Queen Mary beginneth to ſet forth her Popiſh Religion. Religion here grounded upon the Queens good will.

And yet ſhe doth ſignifie unto all her Majeſties loving Subjects, that of her moſt gracious diſpoſition and clemency; her Highneſs mindeth not to compel any her ſaid Subjects thereunto, untill ſuch time as further order by common aſſent may be taken therein: forbidding nevertheleſs all her Subjects of all degrees, at their perils, to move ſeditions, or ſtir unquietneſs in her people by interpreting the Laws of this Realm after their brains and fantaſies, but quietly to continue for the time, till (as before is ſaid) further order may be taken, and therefore willeth and ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all her ſaid good loving Subjects to live together in quiet ſort and Chriſtian Charity, leaving thoſe new found deviliſh terms of Papiſt or Heretick, and ſuch like, and applying their whole care, ſtudy, and travel to live in the fear of God, exerciſing their converſations in ſuch charitable and godly doing, as their lives may indeed expreſs that great hunger and thirſt of Gods glory and holy Word, which by raſh talk and words many have pretended: and in ſo doing they ſhall beſt pleaſe God, and live without danger of the Laws, and maintain the tranquility of the Realm. Whereof as her Highneſs ſhall be moſt glad, ſo if any man ſhall raſhly preſume to make any aſſemblies of people, or at any publick aſſemblies, or otherwiſe ſhall go about to ſtir the people to diſorder or diſquiet, ſhe mindeth according to her duty, to ſee the ſame moſt ſeverely reformed and puniſhed according to her Highneſs Laws.

Terms of Papiſt and Hererick forbidden.

And furthermore, foraſmuch as it is alſo well known, that ſedition and falſe rumours have been nouriſhed and maintained in this Realm, by the ſubtilty and malice of ſome evil diſpoſed perſons, which take upon them without ſufficient authority to preach and to interpret the Word of God after their own brain in Churches, and other places both publick and private, and alſo by playing of enterludes, and printing of falſe found books, ballads, rhimes, and other lewd treatiſes in the Engliſh tongue, concerning Doctrine, in matters now in queſtion and controverſie, touching the high points and Myſteries of Chriſtian Religion; which books, ballads, rhimes, and treatiſes, are chiefly by the Printers and Stationers ſet out to ſale to her Graces Subjects, of an evil zeal, for lucre and covetouſneſs of vile gain: Her Highneſs therefore ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all and every of her ſaid Subjects, of whatſoever ſtate, condition, or degree they be, that none of them preſume from henceforth to preach, or by way of reading in Churches, or other publick or private places, except in Schools of the Univerſity, to interpret or teach any Scriptures, or any manner of points of Doctrine concerning Religion, neither alſo to print any books, matter, ballade, rhime, enterlude, proceſſe or treatiſe, nor to play any enterlude, except they have her Graces ſpecial licence in writing for the ſame, upon pain to incur her Highneſs indignation and diſpleaſure.

Falſe ſurmiſes againſt true Preachers, Printers, and Players.

Here was the head of Winchester.

Preaching, Printing, Reading, and playing of Enterludes, reſtrained.

And her Highneſs alſo further chargeth and commandeth all and every her ſaid Subjects, that none of them of their own authority do preſume to puniſh, and to riſe againſt any offender in the cauſes aboveſaid, or any other offender in words or deeds in the late rebellion committed or done by the Duke of Northumberland, or his complices, or to ſeize any of their goods, or violently to uſe any ſuch offender by ſtriking, or impriſoning, or threatning the ſame, but wholy to refer the puniſhment of all ſuch offenders unto her Highneſs and Publick Authority, whereof her Majeſty mindeth to ſee due puniſhment according to the order of her Highneſs Laws. Anno 1553.

Nevertheleſs, as her Highneſs mindeth not hereby to reſtrain and diſcourage any of her loving Subjects, to give from time to time true information againſt any ſuch offenders in the cauſes aboveſaid, unto her Grace or her Councel, for the puniſhment of every ſuch offender, according to the effect of her Highneſs Laws provided in that part: So her ſaid Highneſs exhorteth and ſtraitly chargeth her ſaid Subjects to obſerve her commandment and pleaſure in every part aforeſaid, as they will avoid her Highneſs ſaid indignation and moſt grievous diſpleaſure. The ſeverity and rigour whereof as her Highneſs ſhall be moſt ſorry to have cauſe to put in execution: ſo doth ſhe utterly determine not to permit ſuch unlawful and rebellious doings of her Subjects, whereof may enſue the danger of her royal eſtate, to remain unpuniſhed, but to ſee her ſaid Laws touching theſe points to be throughly executed: which extremities ſhe truſteth all her ſaid Subjects will foreſee, dread, and avoid accordingly: her ſaid Highneſs ſtraitly charging and commanding all Majors, Sheriffs, Juſtices of Peace, Bayliffs, Conſtables, and all other publick Officers and Miniſters, diligently to ſee to the obſerving and executing of her ſaid commandments and pleaſure, and to apprehend all ſuch as ſhall wilfully offend in this part, committing the ſame to the next Goal, there to remain without bail or mainprize, till upon certificate made to her Highneſs, or her Privy Councel, of their names and doings; and upon examination had of their offences, ſome further order ſhall be taken for their puniſhment to the example of others, according to the effect and tenor of the Laws aforeſaid. Given at our Manor of Richmond, the 18. day of Auguſt in the firſt year of our moſt proſperous Reign.

Mr. Bourn preaching at Pauls-Croſs.

M. Bourns Sermon at Pauls-Croſs, Auguſt 13. No marvel if Boner were ſo foul fallen away in ſuch a vile dungeon in the Marſhalſey.

ABout this time, or not long before, Boner Biſhop of London, being reſtored, appointed Mr. Bourn a Canon of Pauls to preach at the Croſs, who afterward was Biſhop of Bath; he taking occaſion of the Goſpel of that day to ſpeak ſomething largely in juſtifying of Boner being then preſent; which Boner, ſaid he, upon the ſame Text in that place, that day four years had preached before, and was upon the ſame moſt cruelly and unjuſtly caſt into the moſt vile dungeon of the Marſhalſey, and there kept during the time of King Edward. His words ſounded ſo evil in the ears of the hearers, that they could not keep ſilence, and began to murmur and to ſtir in ſuch ſort, that the Mayor and Aldermen with other eſtates then preſent, feared much an uproar. But the truth is, that one hurled a dagger at the Preacher, but who it was it could not then be proved; albeit afterward it was known.

In fine the ſtir was ſuch, that the Preacher pluckt in his head, and durſt no more appear in that place. The matter of his Sermon tended much to the derogation and diſpraiſe of King Edward, which thing the people in no caſe could abide: Then Mr. Bradford at the requeſt of the Preachers Brother, and other, then being in the Pulpit, ſtood forth and ſpake ſo mildly, chriſtianly, and effectually, that with few words he appeaſed all: and afterward he and Mr. Rogers conducted the Preacher betwixt them from the Pulpit to the Grammer-School door, where they left him ſafe, as further in the ſtory of Mr. Bradford is declared. But ſhortly after they were both rewarded with long impriſonment, and laſt of all with fire in Smithfield.

Mr. John Bradford appeaſeth the people. Bradford and Rogers guarded the Preacher.

By reaſon of this tumult at Pauls-Croſs, an order was taken by the Lords of the Councel with the Mayor and Aldermen of London, that they, calling the next day following a Common Councel of the City, ſhould thereby charge every Houſholder to cauſe their children, apprentiſes, and other ſervants to keep their own Pariſh Churches upon upon the holy days and not to ſuffer them to attempt any thing to the violating of the common peace. Willing them alſo to ſignifie to the ſaid aſſembly the Queens determination uttered unto them by her highneſs the 12. of Auguſt in the Tower. Which was, albeit her Graces conſcience is ſtayed in the matters of Religion; yet ſhe graciouſly meant not to compel or ſtrain other mens conſciences otherwiſe than God ſhall (as ſhe truſted) put in their hearts a perſwaſion of the truth that ſhe is in, through the opening of his word unto them, by godly, vertuous, and learned Preachers, &c.

Alſo it was then ordered, that every Alderman in his Ward ſhould forthwith ſend for the Curates of every Pariſh within their liberties, and warn them not only to forbear to preach themſelves, but alſo not to ſuffer any other to preach, or make any open or ſolemn reading of Scripture in their Churches, unleſs the ſaid Preachers were ſeverally licenced by the Queen.

After this Sermon at Pauls-Croſs aforenamed, the next day after it followed that the Queens Guard was at the Croſs with their weapons to guard the Preacher. And when men withdrew themſelves from the Sermon, order was taken by the Major, that the ancients of all companies ſhould be preſent, leaſt the Preacher ſhould be diſcouraged by his ſmall Auditory.

The 4. of September a Letter was directed from the Councel to Mr. Hugh Latimer for his appearance before them.

About the 5. day of September the ſame year, Peter Martyr came to London from Oxford, where for a time he had been commanded to keep his houſe, and found there the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who offered to defend the doctrine of the book of Common Prayer, both by Scriptures and Doctors, aſſiſted by Peter Martyr and a few other, as hereafter ye ſhall hear. But whileſt they were in hope to come to diſputations, the Archbiſhop and other were impriſoned, but Peter Martyr was ſuffered to return whence he came.

October 1553.

October 1. Queen Mary crowned. The firſt day of October Queen Mary was Crowned at Weſtminſter, and the tenth day of the ſame Month of October then following began the Parliament with the ſolemn Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, after the Popiſh manner, celebrated with great pomp in the Palace of Weſtminſter. To the which Maſs among the other Lords, according to the manner, ſhould come the Biſhops, which yet remained undepoſed, which were the Arch-Biſhop of York, Doctor Taylor Biſhop of Lincoln, John Harley Biſhop of Hereford. Of the Biſhops, Doctor Taylor, and Mr. Harley preſenting themſelves according to their duty, and taking their place amongſt the Lords, after they ſaw the Maſs begin, not abiding the ſight thereof, withdrew themſelves from the company: for the which cauſe the Biſhop of Lincoln being examined, and proteſting his faith, was upon the ſame commanded to attend; who not long after at Ankerwike by ſickneſs departed. Mr. Harley, becauſe he was married, was excluded both from the Parliament and from his Biſhoprick.

October 10. The Parliament beginneth with a Maſs.

Two Biſhops withdrew themſelves from the ſight of the Maſs.

M. Harley Biſhop of Hereford put out of his Biſhoprick.

Maſs being done, the Queen accompanied with the Eſtates of the Realm was brought into the Parliament houſe; there according to the manner to enter and begin the conſultation: At which Conſultation or Parliament were repealed all Statutes made in the time of King Henry the eighth for Premunire, and Statutes made in King Edward the ſixth time for adminſtration of Common Prayer and the Sacrament in the Engliſh tongue: And further the attainder of the Duke of Northumberland was by this Parliament confirmed. In this mean while many men were forward in erecting of Altars and Maſſes in Churches. And ſuch as would ſtick to the Laws made in King Edwards time, till other ſhould be eſtabliſhed, ſome of them were marked, and ſome preſently apprehended. Among whom Sir James Hales, a Knight of Kent, and Juſtice of the Common Pleas, was one; who notwithſtanding he had ventured his life in Queen Maries cauſe, in that he would not ſubſcribe to the uninheriting of her by the Kings will, yet for that he did at a Quarter Seſſions give charge upon the Statutes made in the time of King Henry the eighth, and Edward the ſixth, for the Supremacy and Religion, he was impriſoned in the Marſhalſey, Counter, and Fleet, and ſo cruelly handled and put in fear by talk that the Warden of the Fleet uſed to have in his hearing, of ſuch torments as were in preparing for Hereticks (or for what other cauſe God knoweth) that he ſought to rid himſelf out of this life by wounding himſelf with a knife; and afterward was contented to ſay as they willed him: Whereupon he was diſcharged; but after that he never reſted till he had drowned himſelf in a River, half a mile from his houſe in Kent. Of whom more is to be ſeen when you come to his ſtory.

The trouble of Judge Hales. A ſubtle policy.

During the time of this Parliament, the Clergy likewiſe after their wonted manner had a Convocation, with a diſputation alſo, appointed by the Queens commandment, at Pauls Church in London the ſame time, which was about the 18. of October. In the which Convocation, firſt Mr. John Harpsfield, Batchelor of Divinity, made a Sermon ad Clerum, the 16. of October. After the Sermon done, it was aſſigned by the Biſhops, that they of the Clergy-houſe, for avoiding confuſion of words, ſhould chuſe them a Prolocutor. To the which room and office by common aſſent was named Doctor Weſton Dean of Weſtminſter, and preſented to the Biſhops with an Oration of Mr. Pie Dean of Chicheſter, and alſo of Mr. Wimbiſley Archdeacon of London. Which Doctor Weſton being choſen and brought unto the Biſhops, made his gratulatory Oration to the Houſe, with the anſwer again of Biſhop Boner.

The Convocation begun.

Oration of M. Pie and Mr. Wimbiſley of Doctor Weſton and of Biſhop Boner in the Convocation Houſe.

After theſe things thus ſped in the Convocation Houſe, they proceeded next to the Diſputation appointed, as is aboveſaid, by the Queens Commandment, about the matter of the Sacrament. Which Diſputation continued ſix days. Wherein Doctor Weſton was chief on the Popes part; who behaved himſelf outragiouſly in taunting and checking. In concluſion, ſuch as diſputed on the contrary part were driven ſome to flee, ſome to deny, and ſome to dye, though to the moſt Mens Judgements that heard the Diſputation they had the upper hand, as here may appear by the report of the ſaid Diſputation, the Copy whereof we thought fit here to annex, as followeth.

The true report of the Diſputation had and begun in the Convocation Houſe at London, the 18. of Oct. An. 1553.

A diſputation of Religion in Pauls Church in London the 18 of Oct.

WHereas divers and uncertain rumours be ſpread abroad of the Diſputation had in the Convocation Houſe; to the intent that all men may know the certainty of all things therein done and ſaid, as much as the memory of him that was preſent thereat can bear away, he hath thought good, at requeſt, throughly to deſcribe what was ſaid therein on both parties of the matters argued and had in queſtion, and of the entrance thereof.

Act of the firſt day.

Oct. 18. Doctor Weſton, Prolocutor, againſt the Book of Catechiſm ſet forth in King Edwards time.

FIrſt upon Wedneſday, being the 18. of October, at Afternoon, Mr. Weſton the Prolocutor certified the Houſe, that it was the Queens pleaſure, that the company of the ſame Houſe, being learned men aſſembled, ſhould debate of matters of Religion, and conſtitute Laws thereof, which her Grace and the Parliament would ratifie. And for that (ſaid he) there is a Book of late ſet forth, called the Catechiſm (which he ſhewed forth) bearing the name of this honourable Synod, and yet put forth without your conſents as I have learned, being a Book very peſtiferous, and full of Hereſies, and likewiſe a Book of Common Prayer very abominable (as it pleaſed him to term it) I thought it therefore beſt, firſt to begin with the Articles of the Catechiſm, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, to confirm the Natural Preſence of Chriſt in the ſame, and alſo Tranſubſtantiation. Wherefore (ſaid he) It ſhall be lawful on Friday next enſuing for all men freely to ſpeak their conſcience in theſe matters, that all doubts may be removed, and they fully ſatisfied therein.

Act of the ſecond day.

Octob. 20. The Friday coming, being the twentieth of October, when men had thought they ſhould have entred diſputations of the queſtions propoſed, the Prolocutor exhibited two ſeveral Bils unto the Houſe; the one for the Natural Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar; the other concerning the Catechiſm, that it was not of that Houſes agreement ſet forth, and that they did not agree thereunto: Requiring all them to ſubſcribe to the ſame, as he himſelf had done. Whereunto the whole Houſe did immediately aſſent, except ſix, which were the Dean of Rocheſter, the Dean of Exceter, the Archdeacon of Wincheſter, the Archdeacon of Hereford, the Archdeacon of Stow, and one other. And whilſt the reſt were about to ſubſcribe theſe two Articles, John Philpot ſtood up and ſpake firſt concerning the Articles of the Catechiſm, that he thought they were deceived in the Title of the Catechiſm, in that it beareth the Title of the Synod of London laſt before this, although many of them which then were preſent were never made privy thereof in ſetting it forth; for that this Houſe had granted the Authority to make Eccleſiaſtical Laws unto certain Perſons to be appointed by the Kings Majeſty; and whatſoever Eccleſiaſtical Laws they or the moſt part of them did ſet forth, according to a Statute in that behalf provided, it might be well ſaid to be done in the Synod of London, although ſuch as be of this Houſe now, had no notice thereof, before the promulgation. And in this point he thought the ſetter forth thereof nothing to have ſlandered the Houſe, as they by their ſubſcription went about to perſwade the World, ſince they had our Synodal authority unto them committed to make ſuch Spiritual Laws as they thought convenient and neceſſary.

Two Bils exhibited in the Convocation Houſe by the Prolocutor.

M. Philips, M. Haddon, M. Philpot, M. Cheyney, M. Elmar, and one other refuſed to ſubſcribe to the Bils.

The book of the Catechiſm defended by Mr John Philpot.

And moreover he ſaid, as concerning the Article of the Natural Preſence in the Sacrament, that it was againſt reaſon and order of learning, and alſo very prejudicial to the Truth, that men ſhould be moved to ſubſcribe before the matter were throughly examined and diſcuſſed. But when he ſaw that allegation might take no place, being as a man aſtoniſhed at the multitude of ſo many learned men, as there were of purpoſe gathered together to maintain old Traditions more than the Truth of Gods holy Word, he made this requeſt unto the Prolocutor: That whereas there were ſo many ancient learned Men preſent on that ſide, as in the Realm the like again were not to be found in ſuch number; and that on the other ſide of them that had not ſubſcribed were not paſt five or ſix, both in age and learning far inferiour unto them: Therefore, that equality might be had in this Diſputation, he deſired that the Prolocutor would be a mean unto the Lords, that ſome of thoſe that were learned, and ſetters forth of the ſame Catechiſm, might be brought into the Houſe to ſhew their learning that moved them to ſet forth the ſame, and that Doctor Ridley and Mr. Rogers, with two or three more, might be licenced to be preſent at this Diſputation, and to be aſſociate with them.

Againſt the Article of Natural Preſence.

M. Philpots requeſt to the Prolocutor.

Requeſt to have D. Ridley and M. Rogers at the diſputation.

This requeſt was thought reaſonable, and was propoſed unto the Biſhops, who made this anſwer; that it was not in them to call ſuch perſons unto our Houſe, ſince ſome of them were priſoners. But they ſaid, they would be Petitioners in this behalf unto the Councel, and in caſe any were abſent that ought to be of the Houſe, they willed them to be taken in unto them if they liſted. After this, they minding to have entred into Diſputation, there came a Gentleman as Meſſenger from the Lord great Maſter, ſignifying unto the Prolocutor, that the Lord great Mr. and the Earl of Devonſhire would be preſent at the Diſputations, and therefore he deferred the ſame unto Monday, at one of the clock at Afternoon.

Anſwer of the Biſhops unto the requeſt.

The Act of the third day.

The third Seſſion October 23.

Upon Monday the 23. of October, at the time appointed, in the preſence of many Earls, Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and divers other of the Court and of the City alſo, the Prolocutor made a Proteſtation, that they of the Houſe had appointed this Diſputation, not to call the Truth into doubts, to the which they had already all ſubſcribed, ſaving five or ſix, but that thoſe gain-ſayers might be reſolved of their Arguments in the which thy ſtood, as it ſhall appear unto you, not doubting but they will alſo condeſcend unto us.

Then he demanded of Mr. Haddon, whether we would reaſonreaſon againſt the queſtions propoſed, or no. To whom he made anſwer, that he had certified him before in writing, that he would not, ſince the requeſt of ſuch learned men, as were demanded to be aſſiſtant with them, would not be granted. Mr. Elmar likewiſe was asked, who made the Prolocutor the like anſwer; adding moreover this, that they had done too much prejudice already to the Truth, to ſubſcribe before the matter was diſcuſſed: and little or nothing it might avail to reaſon for the truth, ſince all they were now determined to the contrary. After this he demanded of Mr. Cheyney, who, the Prolocutor ſaid, allowed the Preſence with them (but he denied the Tranſubſtantiation by the means of certain Authorities upon the which he ſtandeth, and deſireth to be reſolved, as you ſhall hear) whether he will propoſe his doubts concerning Tranſubſtantiation, or no. Yea, quoth he, I would gladly my doubts to be reſolved, which move me not to believe Tranſubſtantiation.

The firſt is out of S. Paul to the Corinthians, who ſpeaking of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, calleth it oft times Bread after the Conſecration.

The ſecond is out of Origen, who, ſpeaking of this Sacrament, ſaith, That the material part thereof goeth down to the Excrements.

The third is out of Theodoretus, who, making mention of the Sacramental Bread and Wine after the Conſecration, ſaith, That they go not out of their former ſubſtance, form, and ſhape. Theſe be ſome of my doubts, among many other, wherein I require to be anſwered.

Then the Prolocutor aſſigned Doctor Moreman to anſwer him, who, to S. Paul, anſwered him thus; That the Sacrament is called by him Bread indeed: but it is thus to be underſtood, That it is the Sacrament of Bread, that is, the Form of Bread.

Then Mr. Cheyney inferred and alledged, that Heſychius called the Sacrament both Bread and Fleſh.

Yea, quoth Moreman, Heſychius calleth it Bread, becauſe it was Bread, and not becauſe it is ſo. And paſſing over Origen, he came to Theodoretus, and ſaid, That men miſtook his Authority, by interpreting a general into a ſpecial, as Peter Martyr hath done in the place of Theodoret, interpreting οὐσία, for ſubſtance, which is a ſpecial ſignification of the word; whereas οὐσία is a general word, as well to Accidents as to Subſtance; and therefore I anſwer thus unto Theodoret, That the Sacramental Bread and Wine do not go out of their former Subſtance, form, and ſhape, that is to ſay, not out of their accidental Subſtance and ſhape.

After this Mr. Cheyney ſate him down, and by and by Mr. Elmar ſtood up as one that could not abide to hear ſo fond an Anſwer to ſo grave an Authority, and reaſoned upon the Authority of Theodoret alledged before by Mr. Cheyney, and declared, That Moreman's anſwer to Theodoret was no juſt nor ſufficient anſwer, but an illuſion and ſubtile evaſion, contrary to Theodoret's meaning. For, ſaid he, if οὐσία ſhould ſignifie an Accident in the place alledged, as it it is anſwered by Mr. Moreman, then were it a word ſuperfluous ſet in Theodoret there, where do follow two other words which ſufficiently do expound the Accidents of the Bread, that is, εἶδος καὶ σχῆμα, which ſignifie in Engliſh, ſhape and form; and ſo he proved out of the ſame Author by divers Allegations, That οὐσία in Greek could not be ſo generally taken in that place, as Moreman for a ſhift would have it. But Moreman, as a man having no other ſalve for that ſore, affirmeth ſtill, That οὐσία, which ſignifieth Subſtance, muſt needs ſignifie an Accidental Subſtance properly. To whoſe importunity, ſince he could have no other anſwer, Elmar, as a man wearied with his importunity, gave place.

After this ſtood up John Philpot, and ſaid, That he could prove, that by the matter that Theodoret intreateth of in the place above alledged, and by the Similitude which he maketh to prove his purpoſe, by no means Mr. Moremans interpretation of οὐσία might be taken for an Accidental Subſtance, as he for a ſhift would interpret it to be. For the matter which Theodoret intreateth of in that place, is againſt Eutiches an Heretick, which denied two Natures of Subſtance to remain in Chriſt, being one Perſon, and that his Humanity after the accompliſhment of the myſtery of our Salvation, aſcending into Heaven, and being joyned unto the Divinity, was abſorpt, or ſwallowed up of the ſame, ſo that Chriſt ſhould be no more but of one Divine Subſtance only by his opinion. Againſt which opinion Theodoret writeth, and by the Similitude of the Sacrament proveth the contrary againſt the Heretick: That like as in the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, after the conſecration, there is the Subſtance of Chriſts Humanity, with the Subſtance of Bread remaining as it was before, not being abſorpt by the Humanity of Chriſt, but joyned by the Divine operation thereunto; even ſo in the Perſon of Chriſt, being now in Heaven, of whom this Sacrament is a repreſentation, there be two ſeveral Subſtances, that is, his Divinity and Humanity united in one Hypoſtaſie or Perſon, which is Chriſt, the Humanity not being abſorpt by the conjunction of the Divinity, but remaining in his former Subſtance.

The Argument of Theodoret, & Similitude.

And this Similitude, quoth Philpot, brought in of Theodoret to confound Eutiches, ſhould prove nothing at all, if the very Subſtance of the Sacramental Bread did not remain as it did before. But if Dr. Moreman's interpretation might take place for Tranſubſtantiation, then ſhould the Heretick have there by a ſtrong Argument by Theodoret's Authority ſo taken, to maintain his Hereſie, and to prove himſelf a good Chriſtian man; and he might well ſay thus unto Theodoret: Like as thou, Theodoret, if thou wert of Dr. Moreman's mind, doſt ſay, That after the Conſecration in the Sacrament, the Subſtance of the Bread is abſorpt or tranſubſtantiate into the Human Body of Chriſt coming thereunto, ſo that in the Sacrament is now but one Subſtance of the Humanity alone, and not the Subſtance of Bread as it was before: Even ſo likewiſe may I affirm, and conclude by thine own Similitude, That the Humanity aſcending up by the Power of God into Heaven, and adjoyned unto the Deity, was by the might thereof abſorpt and turned into one Subſtance with the Deity; ſo that now there remaineth but one Divine Subſtance in Chriſt, no more than in the Sacramental Signs of the Lords Supper, after the Conſecration, doth remain any more than one Subſtance, according to your belief and conſtruction.

The place of Theodoret, falſly taken of the Papiſts.

The falſe expoſition of Dr. Moreman upon Theodoretus overthrown.

In anſwering to this, Dr. Moreman ſtaggered, whoſe defect Philpot perceiving, ſpake on this wiſe, Well, Maſter Moreman, if you have no anſwer at this preſent ready, I pray you deviſe one, if you can conveniently, againſt our next meeting here again.

With that his ſaying the Prolocutor was grievouſly offended, telling him that he ſhould not brag there, but that he ſhould be fully anſwered. Then ſaid Philpot, It is the thing that I only deſire, to be anſwered directly in this behalf; and I deſire of you, and of all the Houſe at this preſent, that I may be ſufficiently anſwered, which I am ſure you are not able to do, ſaving Theodoretus's Authority and Similitude upright, as he ought to be taken. None other anſwer, then, was made to Philpot's reaſon, but that he was commanded to ſilence.

Weſton is offended.

Philpots replication anſwered by commanding him to ſilence.

Then ſtood up the Dean of Rocheſter, offering himſelf to reaſon in the firſt queſtion againſt the natural Preſence, wiſhing that the Scripture, and the ancient Doctors, in this point might be weighed, believed, and followed. And againſt this Natural Preſence, he thought the ſaying of Chriſt in S. Matthew to make ſufficient enough, if men would credit and follow Scripture; Who ſaid there of himſelf, That Poor men we ſhould have alway with us, but Him we ſhould not have always: which was ſpoken, quoth he, concerning the Natural Preſence of Chriſts Body, therefore we ought to believe as he hath taught, That Chriſt is not naturally preſent on Earth in the Sacrament of the Altar.

This man, called Mr. Philpot, continued Dead of Rocheſter all Q. Mary's time, and yet ſtill remaineth.

To this was anſwered by the Prolocutor, That we ſhould not have Chriſt preſent always to exerciſe Alms Deeds upon Him, but upon the Poor.

Weſtons anſwer to the Dean.

But the Dean proſecuted his Argument, and ſhewed it out of S. Auguſtine further, That the ſame interpretation of the Scripture alledged, was no ſufficient anſwer, who writeth in the 50. Treatiſe of S. John on this wiſe, on the ſame Sentence; When as he ſaid (ſaith S. Auguſtine) Me ſhall ye not have always with you, he ſpake of the preſence of his Body. For by his Majeſty, by his Providence, by his unſpeakable and inviſible Grace, that is fulfilled which is ſaid of him; Behold I am with you until the conſummation of the world. But in the Fleſh which the Word took upon him, in that which was born of the Virgin, in that which was apprehended of the Jews, which was crucified on the Croſs, which was let down from the Croſs, which was wrapped in Clouts, which was hid in the Sepulchre, which was manifeſted in the Reſurrection, You ſhall not have me always with you. And why? For after a bodily preſence he was converſant with his Diſciples forty days, and they accompanying him, ſeeing and not following him, he aſcended and is not here; for there he ſitteth at the right hand of the Father; and yet here he is, becauſe he is not departed in the preſence of his Majeſty. After another manner we have Chriſt always by the preſence of his Majeſty, but after the preſence of his fleſh it is rightly ſaid, You ſhall not verily have me always with you. For the Church had him in the preſence of his fleſh a few days, and now by faith it apprehendeth him, and ſeeth him not with eyes.

Watſons anſwer to S. Auguſtine. Aug in Joan. tract. 70.

To this Authority Doctoor Watſon took upon him to anſwer, and ſaid, He would anſwer St. Auguſtine by St. Auguſtine; and having a certain Book in his hand of Notes, he alledged out of the 70 Treatiſe upon St. John, that after that mortal condition and manner we have not now Chriſt on earth, as he was heretofore before his Paſſion.

Philpot againſt Watſon.

Againſt whoſe anſwer John Philpot replyed, and ſaid, That Mr. Watſon had not fully anſwered St. Auguſtine by St. Auguſtine, as he would ſeem to have done, for that in the place above mentioned by Mr. Deane of Rocheſter, he doth not only teach the mortal ſtate of Chriſts Body before his Paſſion, but alſo the immortal condition of the ſame after his Reſurrection: in the which mortal Body St. Auguſtine ſeemeth plainly to affirm, That Chriſt is not preſent upon the earth, neither in form viſibly, neither in corporal ſubſtance inviſibly, as in few lines after the place above alledged, St. Auguſtine doth more plainly declare by theſe words, ſaying, Now theſe two manners of Chriſts preſence declared, which is by his Majeſty, Providence, and Grace now preſent in the World, which before his Aſcenſion was preſent in fleſh; and being now placed at the right hand of the Father, is abſent in the ſame from the world, I think (ſaith S. Auguſtine) that there remaineth no other queſtion in this matter.

Now, quoth Philpot, if St. Auguſtine acknowledged no more preſence of Chriſt to be now on earth, but only his Divine Preſence, and touching his Humanity to be in heaven, we ought to confeſs and believe the ſame. But if we put a third preſence of Chriſt, that is corporally to be preſent always in the Sacrament of the Altar inviſibly according to your ſuppoſitions, whereof St. Auguſtine maketh no mention at all in all his Works; you ſhall ſeem to judge that which St. Auguſtine did never comprehend.

Watſon. Why, quoth Watſon, S. Auguſtine in the place by me alledged, maketh he no mention how St. Steven, being in this world, ſaw Chriſt after his Aſcenſion?

Philpot. It is true, ſaid Philpot; but he ſaw Chriſt, as the Scripture telleth, in the heavens being open, ſtanding at the right hand of God the Father. Further to this Watſon anſwered not.

D. Wiſton. Then the Prolocutor went about to furniſh up an anſwer to St. Auguſtine, ſaying, That he is not now in the world after the manner of bodily preſence, but yet preſent for all that in his body.

Philpot replyeth to Wiſton. To whom Philpot anſwered, That the Prolocutor did grate much upon this word ſecundum in St. Auguſtine, which ſignifieth after the manner, or in form: but he doth not anſwer to id quod, which is that thing or ſubſtance of Chriſt, in the which Chriſt ſuffered, aroſe, and aſcended into heaven, in the which thing and ſubſtance he is in Heaven, and not in Earth, as St. Auguſtine in the place ſpecified moſt clearly doth define.

The Dean of Rocheſter. To this nothing elſe being anſwered, the Dean of Rocheſter proceeded in the maintenance of his Argument, and read out of a Book of Annotations ſundry Authorities for the confirmation thereof. To the which Moreman, who was appointed to anſwer him, made no direct anſwer, but bade him make an Argument, ſaying, That Mr. Deane had recited many words of Doctors, but he made not one Argument.

Moreman. Then ſaid the Dean, The Authorities of the Doctors by me rehearſed, be ſufficient Arguments to prove mine intent, to the which my deſire is to be anſwered of you. But ſtill Moreman cried, make an Argument, to ſhift off the Authority which he could not anſwer unto. After this the Dean made this Argument out of the Inſtitution of the Sacrament; Do this in remembrance of me: and thus ye ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death until he come. Anno 1553.

Argument. The Sacrament is the remembrance of Chriſt: Ergo, the Sacrament is not very Chriſt; for yet he is not come. For theſe words, Until he come, do plainly ſignifie the abſence of Chriſts Body. Then the Prolocutor went about to ſhew that theſe words, Until he come, did not import any abſence of Chriſt on the Earth, by other places of Scripture, where Donec, Until, was uſed in like ſenſe; but directly to the purpoſe he anſwered nothing. In concluſion, the Dean fell to queſtioning with Moreman, whether Chriſt did eat the Paſchal Lamb with his Diſciples, or not? He anſwered, Yea. Further, he demanded whether he did eat likewiſe the Sacrament with them, as he did inſtitute it? Moreman anſwered, Yea. Then he aſked what he did eat, and whether he did eat his own natural Body, as they imagine it to be, or no? Which when Moreman had affirmed; then ſaid the Dean, It is a great Abſurdity by you granted; and ſo he ſate down.

Weſton ſweareth to the Argument. Donec in Scripture. M. Dean's queſtions. Moreman affirmeth that Chriſt did eat his own body.

Philpot. Againſt this Abſurdity Philpot ſtood up and argued, ſaying, He could prove it by good reaſon deduced out of the Scripture, that Chriſt eat not his own natural Body at the inſtitution of the Sacrament; and the reaſon is this:

Argument.

Ba- Receiving of Chriſts Body hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins with it annexed.

ro- Chriſt eating the Sacrament, had no promiſe of remiſſion of ſin.

co. Ergo, Chriſt in the Sacrament did not eat his own Body.

Moreman denieth the Sacrament to have a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins annexed to it. To this reaſon Moreman anſwered, denying the former part of the Argument, that the Sacrament had a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins annexed unto it.

Philpot. Then Philpot ſhewed this to be the promiſe in the Sacrament; Which is given for you, which is ſhed for you, for the remiſſion of ſins. But Moreman would not acknowledge that to be any promiſe, ſo that he drave Philpot to the ſixth of St. John, to vouch his ſaying with theſe words; The bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

Harpsfield affirmeth that which his fellow denied. Moreman anſwering nothing directly to this Argument, Harpsfield ſtarted up to ſupply that which wanted in his behalf; and thinking to have anſwered Philpot, confirmed more ſtrongly his Argument, ſaying, Ye miſtake the promiſe which is annexed to the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament: for it pertained not to Chriſt, but to his Diſciples, to whom Chriſt ſaid, This is my body which is given for you, and not for Chriſt himſelf.

Philpot. You have ſaid well for me, quoth Philpot, for that is mine Argument. The promiſe of the body of Chriſt took no effect in Chriſt: Ergo, Chriſt eat not his own body.

Weſton alſo is contrary to Moreman. Then the Prolocutor, to ſhoulder out the matter, ſaid, the Argument was naught. For by the like Argument he might go about to prove, that Chriſt was not baptized, becauſe the remiſſion of ſin, which is annexed unto Baptiſm, took no effect in Chriſt. To the which Philpot replyed, That like as Chriſt was baptized, ſo he eat the Sacrament; but he took on him Baptiſm, not that he had any need thereof, or that it took any effect in him, but as our Maſter to give the Church an example to follow him in the miniſtration of the Sacrament, and thereby to exhibit unto us himſelf, and not to give himſelf to himſelf.

Mr. Philpots Argument not ſolved. No more was ſaid in this. But afterward the Prolocutor demanded of Philpot, whether he would argue againſt the natural preſence, or no? To whom he anſwered, Yea, if he would hear his Argument without interruption, and aſſign one to anſwer him, and not many, which is a confuſion to the Opponent, and ſpecially for him that was of an ill memory. By this time the night was come on; wherefore the Prolocutor brake up the Diſputation for that time, and appointed Philpot to be the firſt that ſhould begin the Diſputation the next day after, concerning the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

The Convocation continued to the next day.

The Act of the fourth day.

Mr. Philpot not ſuffered by the Prolocutor to make his declaration. ON Wedneſday the 25th of October, John Philpot, as it was before appointed, was ready to have entred the Diſputation, minding firſt to have made a certain Oration, and a true declaration in Latin of the matter of Chriſts preſence which was then in queſtion. Which thing the Prolocutor perceiving, by and by he forbade Philpot to make

make any oration or declaration of any matter, commanding him alſo that he ſhould make no argument in Latin, but to conclude on his argument in Engliſh.

Then ſaid Philpot, this is contrary to your order taken at the beginning of this diſputation. For then you appointed that all the arguments ſhould be made in Latin, and thereupon I have drawn and deviſed all mine arguments in Latin. And becauſe you Maſter Prolocutor have ſaid heretofore openly in this houſe that I had no learning, I had thought to have ſhewed ſuch learning as I have, in a brief Oration, and ſhort declaration of the queſtions now in controverſie, thinking it ſo moſt convenient alſo, that in caſe I ſhould ſpeak otherwiſe in my declaration than ſhould ſtand with learning, or than I were able to warrant, and juſtifie by Gods Word, it might the better be reformed by ſuch as were learned of the houſe, ſo that the unlearned ſort being preſent, might take the leſs offence thereat. But this allegation prevailed nothing with the prolocutor, who bad him ſtill form an argument in Engliſh, or elſe to hold his peace.

Then ſaid Philpot, You have ſore diſappointed me, thus ſuddenly to go from your former order: But I will accompliſh your commandment, leaving mine oration apart; and I will come to my arguments, the which aſwell as ſo ſudden a warning will ſerve, I will make in Engliſh. But before I bring forth any argument, I will in one word declare what manner of preſence I diſallow in the Sacrament, to the intent the hearers may the better underſtand to what end and effect mine arguments ſhall tend; not to deny utterly the preſence of Chriſt in his Sacrament, truly miniſtred according to his inſtitution, but only to deny that groſs and carnal preſence, which you of this houſe have already ſubſcribed unto, to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, contrary to the true and manifeſt meaning of the Scriptures: That by tranſubſtantiation of the Sacramental bread and wine, Chriſts natural body ſhould, by the vertue of the words pronounced by the prieſt, be contained and included under the forms or accidents of bread and wine. This kind of preſence imagined by men I do deny, quoth Philpot, and againſt this I will reaſon. But before he could make an end of that he would have ſaid, he was interrupted of the Prolocutor, and commanded to deſcend to his argument. At whoſe unjuſt importunity Philpot being offended, and thinking to purchaſe him a remedy therefore, he fell down upon his knees before the Earls and Lords which were there preſent, being a great number; whereof ſome were of the Queens Councel, beſeeching them that he might have liberty to proſecute his arguments, without interruption of any man; the which was gently granted him of the Lords. But the Prolocutor, putting in ure a point of the practiſe of Prelates, would not condeſcend thereunto, but ſtill cryed, Hold your peace, or elſe make a ſhort argument. I am about it, quoth Philpot, if you will let me alone. But firſt, I muſt needs ask a queſtion of my Reſpondent (who was Doctor Chedſey) concerning a word or twain of your ſuppoſition, that is, of the Sacrament of the Altar, what he meaneth thereby, and whether he taketh it, as ſome of the ancient Writers do, terming the Lords ſupper the Sacrament of the altar; partly becauſe it is a Sacrament of that lively ſacrifice which Chriſt offered for our ſins upon the altar of the Croſs, and partly becauſe that Chriſts body, crucified for us, was that bloody Sacrifice, which the blood-ſhedding of all the beaſts offered upon the altar in the old Law, did prefigurate and ſignifie unto us: In ſignification whereof the old Writers ſometime do call the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, among other names which they aſcribe thereunto, the Sacrament of the Altar; or whether you take it otherwiſe; as for the Sacrament of the Altar, which is made of lime and ſtone, over the which the Sacrament hangeth, and to be all one with the Sacrament of the Maſs, as it is at this preſent in many places. This done, I will direct mine arguments according as your anſwer ſhall give me occaſion.

The preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament diſtinguiſhed.

The true preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament not denied.

The groſs preſence of the Papiſts denied.

Philpot craveth of the Lords to proſecute his arguments without interruption.

Philpot again interrupted by the Prolocutor.

Altar diverſly taken.

Chedſey.

Then made Doctor Chedſey this anſwer, that in their ſuppoſition they took the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Sacrament of the Maſs, to be all one.

Then, quoth Philpot, I will ſpeak plain Engliſh as Mr. Prolocutor willeth me, and make a ſhort reſolution thereof; that the Sacrament of the altar, which ye reckon to be all one with the Maſs, once juſtly aboliſhed, and now put in full uſe again, is no Sacrament at all, neither is Chriſt in any wiſe preſent in it; and this his ſaying he offered to prove before the whole houſe, if they liſted to call him thereunto: And likewiſe he offered to vouch the ſame before the Queens Grace, and her moſt honourable Councel, before the face of ſix of the beſt learned men of the houſe of the contrary opinion, and refuſed none. And if I ſhall not be able, quoth he, to maintain by Gods word that I have ſaid, and confound thoſe ſix which ſhall take upon them to withſtand me in this point, let me be burdned with as many fagots as be in London, before the Court gates. This he uttered with great vehemency of ſpirit.

Philpot offer in the Convocation houſe.

At this the Prolocutor with divers other were very much offended, demanding of him whether he wiſt what he ſaid, or no? Yea, quoth Philpot, I wot well what I ſay, deſiring no man to be offended with his ſaying, for that he ſpake no more than by Gods word he was able to prove. And praiſed be God, quoth he, that the Queens Grace hath granted us of this houſe (as our Prolocutor hath informed us) that we may freely utter our conſciences in theſe matters of controverſie in Religion: and therefore I will ſpeak here my conſcience freely, grounded upon Gods holy word, for the truth, albeit ſome of you here preſent miſlike the ſame.

The Prolocutor threatneth Philpot. Argumentum à loco topico carceris.

Then divers of the houſe, beſide the Prolocutor, taunted and reprehended him for ſpeaking ſo unſaringly againſt the Sacrament of the Maſs: and the Prolocutor ſaid he was made, and threatned him, that he would ſend him to priſon, if he would not ceaſe his ſpeaking.

Philpot ſeeing himſelf thus abuſed, and not permitted with free liberty to declare his mind, fell into an exclamation, caſting his eyes up towards the Heaven, and ſaid, O Lord, what a world is this, that the truth of thy holy word may not be ſpoken and abidden by? And for very ſorrow and heavineſs the tears trickled out of his eyes.

Philpot permitted to make a brief argument.

After this, the Prolocutor being moved by ſome that were about him, was content that he ſhould make an argument, ſo that he would be brief therein. I will be as brief, quoth Philpot, as I may conveniently be in uttering all that I have to ſay. And firſt, I will begin to ground my argument upon the authority of Scriptures, whereupon all the building of our faith ought to be grounded; and after I ſhall confirm the ſame by ancient Doctors of the Church. And I take the occaſion of the firſt argument out of the 28. of Matthew, of the ſaying of the Angel to the three Maries ſeeing Chriſt at the Sepulchre, ſaying; He is riſen, he is not here: and in St. Luke in the 23. Chapter, the Angel asketh them, why they ſought him that liveth among the dead. Likewiſe the Scripture teſtifieth, that Chriſt is riſen, aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of the Father: all the which is ſpoken of his natural body: Ergo, it is not on earth included in the Sacrament.

Luke 24.

Argument of M. Philpot.

I will confirm this yet more effectually, by the ſaying of Chriſt in the 16. of St. John; I came (ſaith Chriſt) From my Father into the World, and now I leave the World and go away to my Father. The which coming and going he meant of his natural body. Therefore we may affirm thereby, that it is not found in the world.

John 16.

The blind diſtinction of the Papiſts of viſibly and invisibly.

But I look here, quoth he, to be anſwered with a blind diſtinction of viſibly and inviſibly, that he is viſibly departed in his humanity, but inviſibly he remaineth notwithſtanding in the Sacrament. But that anſwer I prevent my ſelf, that with more expedition I may deſcend to the pith of mine arguments, whereof I have a dozen to propoſe, and will prove that no ſuch diſtinction ought to take away the force of that argument, by the anſwer which Chriſts diſciples gaue unto him, ſpeaking theſe words: Now thou ſpeakeſt plainly and uttereſt forth no proverb. Which words Saint Cyril interpreting, ſaith; That Chriſt ſpeak without any manner of ambiguity and obſcure ſpeech. And therefore I conclude hereby thus, that if Chriſt ſpeak plainly, and without parable, ſaying; I leave the World now and go away to my Father, then that obſcure dark and inperceptible preſence of Chriſts natural body to remain in the Sacrament upon Earth inviſibly, contrary to the plain words of Chriſt, ought not to be allowed. For nothing can be more uncertain or mote parabolical and unſenſible, than ſo to ſay. Here now will I attend

what

what you will anſwer, and ſo deſcend to the confirmation of all that I have ſaid by ancient Writers.

Chedſeys anſwer to Philpot.

Then Doctor Chedſey reciting his argument in ſuch order as it was made, took upon him to anſwer ſeverally to every part thereof on this wiſe. Firſt, to the ſaying of the Angel, That Chriſt is not here; And, why ſeek ye the living among the dead? He anſwered, that theſe ſayings pertained nothing to the preſence of Chriſts natural body in the Sacrament, but that they were ſpoken of Chriſts body being in the Sepulchre, when the three Maries thought him to have been in the grave ſtill. And therefore the Angel ſaid: Why do ye ſeek him that liveth among the dead? And to the authority of the 8. of John, where Chriſt ſaith, Now I leave the World and go to my father, he meant that of his aſcenſion. And ſo likewiſe did Cyril, interpreting the ſaying of the Diſciples that knew plainly that Chriſt would viſibly aſcend into Heaven, but that doth not exclude the inviſible preſence of his natural body in the Sacrament. For S. Chryſoſtom writing to the people of Antioch, doth affirm the ſame, comparing Helias and Chriſt together, and Helias cloak and Chriſts fleſh: Helias (quoth he) when he was taken up in the fiery chariot, left his cloak behind him unto his diſciple Heliſæus. But Chriſt, aſcending into Heaven took his fleſh with him, and left alſo his fleſh behind him. Whereby we may right well gather, that Chriſts fleſh is viſibly aſcended into Heaven, and inviſibly abideth ſtill in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Chryſoſt. ad Pop. Antioc.

To this Philpot replyed, and ſaid, You have not directly anſwered to the ſaying of the Angel, Chriſt is riſen, and is not here, becauſe you have omitted that which was the chiefeſt point of all. For (ſaid he) I proceed further, as thus; He is riſen, aſcended, and ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father: Ergo, he is not remaining on the earth. Neither is your anſwer to Cyril by me alledged, ſufficient. But by and by I will return to your interpretation of Cyril, and more plainly declare the ſame, after that. I have firſt refelled the authority of Chryſoſtom, which is one of your chief principles that you alledged, to make for your groſs carnal preſence in the Sacrament; which being well weighed and underſtood, pertaineth nothing thereunto.

Philpots anſwer to Chedſey.

At that the Prolocutor ſtartled, that one of the chief pillars in this point ſhould be overthrown; and therefore recited the ſaid authority in Latin firſt, and afterward Engliſhed the ſame, willing all that were preſent to note that ſaying of Chryſoſtom, which be thought invincible on their ſide. But I will make it appear (quoth Philpot) by and by, that it doth make little for your purpoſe. And as he was about to declare his mind in that behalf, the Prolocutor did interrupt him, as he did almoſt continually. Wherewith Philpot not being content, ſaid; Mr. Prolocutor thinketh that he is in a Sophiſtry School, where he knoweth right well the manner is, that when the Reſpondent perceiveth, that he is like to be inforced with an argument, to the which he is not able to anſwer, thus he doth what he can with cavillation and interruption to drive him from the ſame. This ſaying of Philpot was ill taken of the Prolocutor and his adherents; and the Prolocutor ſaid, that Philpot could bring nothing to avoid that authority, but his own vain imagination. Hear, quoth Philpot, and afterward judge. For I will do in this, as in all other authorities, wherewith you ſhall charge me in refelling any of my arguments that I have to proſecute, anſwering either unto the ſame by ſufficient authorities of Scripture, or elſe by ſome other teſtimony of like authority of yours, and not of mine own imagination; the which if I do, I will it to be of no credit. And concerning the ſaying of Chryſoſtom, I have two ways to beat him from your purpoſe; the one out of Scripture, the other of out Chryſoſtom himſelf in the place here by you alledged.

Philpot again interrupted by the Prolocutor.

The place of Chryſoſtom, of Chriſt taking up his fleſh, and leaving his fleſh, anſwered to by Philpot. How Chriſt left his fleſh behind him.

Firſt, where he ſeemeth to ſay, that Chriſt aſcending took his fleſh with him, and left alſo his fleſh behind him, truth it is: for we all do confeſs and believe that Chriſt took on him our humane nature in the Virgin Maries womb, and through his paſſion in the ſame hath united us to his fleſh, and thereby are we become one fleſh with him, ſo that Chryſoſtom might therefore right well ſay, that Chriſt aſcending took his fleſh, which he received of the Virgin Mary, away with him; and alſo left his fleſh behind him, which are We that be his elect in this world, which are the Members of Chriſt, and fleſh of his fleſh; as very aptly St. Paul to the Epheſians in the fifth Chapter doth teſtifie, ſaying; We are fleſh of his fleſh and bone of his bones. And if perchaſe any man will reply, that he intreateth there of the Sacrament, ſo that this interpretation cannot ſo aptly be applyed unto him in that place, then will I yet interpret Chryſoſtom another way by himſelf. For in that place, a few lines before thoſe words which were here now lately read, are theſe words; that Chriſt, after he aſcended into Heaven, left unto us, indued with his Sacraments, his fleſh in myſteries, that is, Sacramentally. And that myſtical fleſh Chriſt leaveth as well to his Church in the Sacrament of Baptiſm, as in the Sacramental bread and wine. And that St. Paul juſtly doth witneſs, ſaying; As many of us as are Baptiſed in Chriſt have put upon us Chriſt, And thus you may underſtand that S. Chryſoſtom maketh nothing for your carnal and groſs preſence in the Sacrament, as you wrongfully take him.

Galat. 3.

Now in this mean while Mr. Pie rounded the Prolocutor in the ear to put Philpot to ſilence, and to appoint ſome other, miſtruſting leſt he would ſhrewdly ſhake their carnal preſence in concluſion, if he held on long, ſeeing in the beginning he gave one of their chief foundations ſuch a pluck. Then the Prolocutor ſaid to Philpot, that he had reaſoned ſufficiently enough, and that ſome other ſhould now ſupply his room. Wherewith he was not well content, ſaying: Why Sir, I have a dozen arguments concerning this matter to be propoſed, and I have yet ſcarce overgone my firſt argument; for I have not brought in any confirmation thereof out of any ancient Writer (whereof I have for the ſame purpoſe many) being hitherto ſtill letted by your oft interrupting of me.

Weſton.

A good ſolution for all his Argument.

Well, quoth the Prolocutor, you ſhall ſpake no more now, and I command you to hold your peace. You perceive, quoth Philpot, that I have ſtuff enough for you, and am able to withſtand your falſe ſuppoſition, and therefore you command me to ſilence. If you will not give place, quoth the Prolocutor, I will ſend you to priſon. This is not, quoth Philpot, according to your promiſe made in this houſe, nor yet according to your brag made at Pauls-Croſs, that men ſhould be anſwered in this diſputation to whatſoever they can ſay, ſince you will not ſuffer me, of a dozen arguments, to proſecute one.

Then M. Pie took upon him to promiſe that he ſhould be anſwered another day. Philpot ſeeing he might not proceed in his purpoſe, being therewith juſtly offended, ended, ſaying thus: A ſort of you here, which hitherto have lurked in corners, and diſſembled with God and the World, are now gathered together to ſuppreſs the ſincere truth of Gods holy Word, and to ſet forth every falſe device, which by the Catholick Doctrine of the Scripture ye are not able to maintain.

Then ſtepped forth Mr. Elmar Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk, whom Mr. Moreman took upon him to anſwer: Againſt whom Mr. Elmar objected divers and ſundry Authorities for the confirming of the Argument he took the day before in hand, to prove that ὁσία in the ſentence of Theodoret, brought in by Mr. Cheyney, muſt needs ſignifie Subſtance, and not Accidents. Whoſe reaſons and probations, becauſe they were all grounded and brought out of the Greek, I do paſs over, for that they want their Grace in Engliſh, and alſo their proper underſtanding. But his allegations ſo incumbred M. Moreman, that he deſired a day to overview them, for at that inſtant he was without a convenient anſwer.

Maſter Elmar again ſteppeth forth, Ουσία.

Moreman deſireth a day to imagine ſome crafty ſhift.

Then did the Prolocutor call Mr. Haddon Dean of Exceter, and Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk, who proſecuted Theodorets authority in confirming Mr. Elmars argument. To whom Doctor Watſon took upon him to give anſwer; who after long talk was ſo confounded, that he was not able to anſwer to the word Myſterium. But foraſmuch as he ſeemed to doubt therein, Mr. Haddon took out of his boſom a Latin Author to confirm his ſaying, and ſhewed the ſame to Mr. Watſon, asking him whether he thought that tranſlation to be true, or that the Printer were in any fault. There may be a fault in the Printer, quoth Watſon, for I am not remembred of this word. Then did Mr. Haddon take out of his boſom a Greek book, wherein he ſhewed forth with his finger the ſame words, which Mr. Watſon could not deny. His arguments further I omit to further I omit to declare at large, becauſe they were for the moſt part in Greek, about the boulting of the true ſignification of οὐσία.

Mr. Perne againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Then ſtept forth Mr. Perne, and in Argument made declaration of his mind againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and confirmed the Sayings and Authorities alledged by Mr. Elmar and Mr. Haddon. To whom the Prolocutor anſwered, ſaying, I much marvel Mr. Perne, that you will ſay thus, for ſo much as on Friday laſt you ſubſcribed to the contrary. Which his ſaying Mr. Elmar did miſlike, ſaying to the Prolocutor, That he was to blame ſo to reprehend any man, partly for that this Houſe, quoth he, is an Houſe of free liberty for every man to ſpeak his Conſcience, and partly for that you promiſed yeſterday, That notwithſtanding any man had ſubſcribed, yet he ſhould have free liberty to ſpeak his mind. And for that the night did approach, and the time was ſpent, the Prolocutor, giving them praiſes for their learning, did yet notwithſtanding conclude, that all reaſoning ſet apart, the order of the holy Church muſt be received, and all things muſt be ordered thereby.

Dr. Weſton praiſeth their learning to flatter them but he anſwereth not their Arguments.

The Act of the fifth Day.

Octob. 27.

ON Friday the 27th of October, Dr. Weſton the Prolocutor did firſt propound the matter, ſhewing that the Convocation hath ſpent two days in diſputation already about one only Doctor, which was Theodoret, and about one only word, which was οὐσία. Yet were they come the third day to anſwer all things that could be objected, ſo that they would ſhortly put their Arguments.

Mr. Haddon Dean of Exeter diſputeth againſt Mr. Watſon, Morgan, and Harpſfield.

So Mr. Haddon Dean of Exeter, deſired leave to oppoſe Mr. Watſon, which with two other more, that is, Morgan and Harpsfield, was appointed to anſwer: Mr. Haddon demanded this of him, Whether any Subſtance of Bread or Wine did remain after the Conſecration. Then Mr. Watſon asked of him again, Whether he thought there to be a Real Preſence of Chriſts Body or no? Mr. Haddon ſaid, It was not meet nor order-like that he which was appointed to be Reſpondent ſhould be Opponent, and he whoſe duty was to object ſhould anſwer. Yet Mr. Watſon a long while would not agree to anſwer, but that thing firſt being granted him, at laſt an order was ſet, and Mr. Haddon had leave to go forward with his Argument.

The words of Theodoret alledged. A Popiſh diſtinction between Subſtance and Eſſence.

Then he proved by Theodorets words a Subſtance of Bread and Wine to remain. For theſe are his words; The ſame they were before the Sanctification, which they are after. Mr. Watſon ſaid, That Theodoret meant not the ſame Subſtance, but the ſame Eſſence. Whereupon they were driven again unto the diſcuſſing of the Greek word οὐσία; and Mr. Haddon proved it to mean a Subſtance, both by the Etymology of the word, and by the words of the Doctor. For οὐσία, quoth he, cometh to the Particle ὄν, which deſcendeth to the Verb εἰμὶ, and ſo cometh the Noun οὐσία, which ſignifieth Subſtance.

Then Mr. Watſon anſwered that it had not that ſignification only. But Mr. Haddon proved that it muſt need ſo ſignifie in that place. Then he asked Watſon, when the Bread and Wine became Symbols? Whereunto he anſwered, after the Conſecration, and not before. Then gathered Mr. Haddon this reaſon out of his Author.

Argument of Mr. Haddon.

Da- The ſame thing, ſaith Theodoret, that the Bread and Wine were before they were Symbols, the ſame they remain ſtill in Nature and Subſtance, after they are Symbols.

ti- Bread and Wine they were before.

ſi. Therefore Bread and Wine they are after.

Watſon is driven to a ſhameful ſhift, to deny the Author when he cannot anſwer. Mr. Cheyney.

Then Mr. Watſon fell to the denial of the Author, and ſaid he was a Neſtorian; and he deſired that he might anſwer to Mr. Cheyney which ſtood by, for that he was more meet to diſpute in the matter, becauſe he had granted and ſubſcribed unto the Real Preſence. Mr. Cheyney deſired patience of the honourable men to hear him, truſting that he ſhould ſo open the matter, that the verity ſhould appear: Proteſting furthermore, that he was no obſtinate nor ſtubborn man, but would be conformable to all reaſon: and if they by their learning, which he acknowledged to be much more than his, could anſwer his reaſons, then he would be ruled by them, and ſay as they ſaid; for he would be no Author of Schiſm, nor hold any thing contrary to the holy Mother the Church, which is Chriſts Spouſe. Dr. Weſton liked this well, and commended him highly, ſaying that he was a well-learned and ſober man, and well exerciſed in all good learning, and in the Doctors; and finally, a man meet for his knowledge to diſpute in that place; I pray you hear him, quoth he. Then Mr. Cheyney deſired ſuch as there were preſent to pray two words with him unto God, and to ſay, Vincat veritas, Let the verity take place, and have the victory; and all that were preſent cried with a loud voice, Vincat veritas, Vincat veritas.

Mr. Cheyney's Prayer.

Then ſaid Dr. Weſton to him, that it was hypocritical. Men may better ſay, quoth he, Vicit veritas, Truth hath gotten the victory. Mr. Cheyney ſaid again, If he would give him leave, he would bring it to that point, that he might well ſay ſo.

Weſton.

Then he began with Mr. Watſon after this ſort: You ſaid that Mr. Haddon was unmeet to diſpute, becauſe he granteth not the Natural and Real Preſence; but I ſay you are much more unmeet to anſwer, becauſe you take away the Subſtance of the Sacrament.

Mr. Cheyney and Watſon diſpute.

Mr. Haddon challenged for ſubſcribing to the Real Preſence.

Mr. Watſon ſaid, He had ſubſcribed to the Real Preſence, and ſhould not go away from that: So ſaid Weſton alſo, and the reſt of the Prieſts; inſomuch that for a great while he could have no leave to ſay any more, till the Lords ſpake, and willed that he ſhould be heard.

Then he told them what he meant by his ſubſcribing to the Real Preſence, far otherwiſe than they ſuppoſed. So then he went forward, and proſecuted Mr. Haddons Argument, in proving that οὐσία was a Subſtance, uſing the ſame reaſon that Mr. Haddon did before him, and when he had received the ſame anſwer alſo that was made to Mr. Haddon, he ſaid it was but a lewd refuge, when they could not anſwer, to deny the Author, and proved the Author to be a Catholick Doctor; and that being proved, he confirmed that which was ſaid of the Nature and Subſtance further. The Similitude of Theodoret is this, quoth he; As the tokens of Chriſts Body and Blood, after the Invocation of the Prieſt, do change their names, and yet continue the ſame Subſtance; ſo the Body of Chriſt, after his Aſcenſion, changed his name, and was called Immortal, yet had it his former Faſhion, Figure, and Circumſcription; and to ſpeak at one word, the ſame Subſtance of his Body. Therefore ſaid Mr. Cheyney, If in the former part of the Similitude you deny the ſame Subſtance to continue, then in the latter part of the Similitude, which agreeth with it, I will deny the Body of Chriſt, after his Aſcenſion, to have the former Nature and Subſtance. But that were a great Hereſie; therefore it is alſo a great Hereſie to take away the Subſtance of Blood and Wine after the Sanctification.

The Argument of Theodoret renewed by Mr. Cheyney.

Then was Mr. Watſon inforced to ſay, That the Subſtance of the Body, in the former part of the Similitude brought in by him, did ſignifie Quantity, and other Accidents of the Sacramental Tokens which be ſeen, and not the very Subſtance of the ſame; and therefore Theodoret ſaith, Quæ videntur, &c. that is, thoſe things which be ſeen. For according to Philoſophy, the Accidents of things be ſeen, and not the Subſtances.

Then Mr. Cheyney appealed to the Honourable men, and deſired that they ſhould give no credit to them in ſo ſaying: for if they ſhould ſo think as they would teach, after their Lordſhips had ridden 40 miles on horſback (as their buſineſs doth ſometime require) they ſhould not be able to ſay at night, that they ſaw their Horſes all the day, but only the colour of their Horſes; and by this reaſon Chriſt muſt go to School, and learn of Ariſtotle to ſpeak. For when he ſaw Nathaniel under the Fig-tree, if Ariſtotle had ſtood by, he would have ſaid, No, Chriſt, thou ſaweſt not him, but the colour of him. After this, Watſon ſaid, What if it were granted that Theodoret was on the other ſide? Whereas they had one of that opinion, there were an hundred on the other.

Mr. Cheyney appealed to the Lords.

Morgan is called for to help at a pinch.

Then the Prolocutor called for Mr. Morgan to help, and ſaid, That Theodoret did no more than he might lawfully do. For firſt, He granted the truth, and then, for fear of ſuch as were not fully inſtructed in the Faith, he ſpake αἰνιγματικῶς, that is, covertly, and in a myſtery; and this was lawful for him to do: for firſt he granted the truth, and called them the Body of Chriſt, and Blood of Chriſt.

Chriſt. Then afterwards he ſeemed to give ſomewhat to the ſenſes, and to reaſon: but that Theodoret is of the ſame mind that they were of, the words following, quoth he, do declare. For that which followeth is a cauſe of that which went before; and therefore he ſaith, The Immortality, &c. Whereby it doth appear, that he meant the Divine Nature, and not the Humane. Then was Morgan taken with miſſalleging of the Text: For the Book had not this word (for). For the Greek word did rather ſignifie (truly) and not (for,) ſo that it might manifeſtly appear, that it was the beginning of a new matter, and not a ſentence rendring a cauſe of that he had ſaid before.

Morgan is taken with falſe alledging of the Text.

Then it was ſaid by Watſon again; Suppoſe that Theodoret be with you, which is one that we never heard of printed, but two or three years ago; yet is he but one, and what is one againſt the whole conſent of the Church? After this Mr. Cheyney inferred, That not only Theodoret was of that mind, that the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine do remain, but divers other alſo, and ſpecially Ireneus, who, making mention of this Sacrament, ſaith thus; When the Cup which is mingled with Wine, and the Bread that is broken, do receive the word of God, it is made the Euchariſt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, by the which the ſubſtance of our fleſh is nouriſhed, and doth conſiſt. If the thankſgiving do nouriſh our body, then there is ſome ſubſtance beſides Chriſts Body.

Iren. lib. 5. contra Valent.

To the which reaſon both Watſon and Morgan anſwered, that Ex quibus, By the which, in the ſentence of Ireneus, was referred to the next Antecedent, that is, to the Body and Blood of Chriſt; and not to the Wine which is in the Cup, and the Bread that is broken.

Watſon.

Mr. Cheyney replyed, That it was not the Body of Chriſt which nouriſhed our bodies. And let it be that Chriſts fleſh nouriſheth to immortality, yet it doth not anſwer to that Argument, although it be true, no more than that anſwer which was made to my Allegation out of St. Paul, The bread which we break, &c. with certain other like: whereunto you anſwered, That Bread was not taken there in his proper ſignification; but for that it had been; no more than the Rod of Auron was taken for the Serpent, becauſe it had been a Serpent. After this Mr. Cheyney brought in Heſychius, and uſed the ſame reaſon that he did of burning of Symboles; and he asked them what was burnt. Mr. Watſon ſaid, We muſt not enquire nor ask, but if there were any fault, impute it to Chriſt. Then ſaid Mr. Cheyney, whereof came thoſe aſhes? not of ſubſtance? or can any Subſtance ariſe of Accidents?

Mr. Cheyney.

Harpsfield called in to help Watſon.

Then was Mr. Harpsfield called in to ſee what he could ſay in the matter. Who told a fair Tale of the Omnipotency of God, and of the imbecillity and weakneſs of mans reaſon, not able to attain to godly things. And he ſaid, That it was convenient whatſoever we ſaw, felt, or taſted, not to truſt our ſenſes. And he told a Tale out of S. Cyprian, how a woman ſaw the Sacrament burning in her Coffer, and that which burned there, quoth Harpsfield, burneth here, and becometh aſhes. But what that was that burnt he could not tell. But Mr. Cheyney continued ſtill, and forced them with this queſtion, What it was that was burnt? It was either, ſaid he, the ſubſtance of Bread, or elſe the ſubſtance of the Body of Chriſt, which were too much abſurdity to grant. At length they anſwered, That it was a Miracle; whereat Mr. Cheyney ſmiled, and ſaid, That he could then ſay no more.

Here is good ſtuff, as if it were out of the Legend of Lies.

Weſton would know whether they were ſufficiently anſwered when he and his had anſwered no Argument.

Then Dr. Weſton asked of the Company there, Whether thoſe men were ſufficiently anſwered, or no: Certain Prieſts cried, Yea, but they were not heard at all for the great multitude which cried, No, No. Which cry was heard and noiſed almoſt to the end of Pauls. Whereat Dr. Weſton being much moved, anſwered bitterly, That he asked not the judgment of the rude Multitude, and unlearned People, but of them which were of the Houſe. Then asked he of Mr. Haddon and his Fellows, whether they would anſwer them other three days? Haddon, Cheyney, and Elmar ſaid, No. But the Archdeacon of Wincheſter ſtood up and ſaid, that they ſhould not ſay, but they ſhould be anſwered; and though all others did refuſe to anſwer, yet he would not, but offered to anſwer them all one after another: with whoſe proffer the Prolocutor was not contented, but railed on him, and ſaid, That he ſhould go to Bedlam: To whom the Archdeacon ſoberly made this anſwer, That he was more worthy to be ſent thither, who uſed himſelf ſo ragingly in that Diſputation, without any indifferent equality. Then roſe Dr. Weſton up, and ſaid:

Mr. Philpot.

Mark Weſtons impudency.

All the Company have ſubſcribed to our Article, ſaving only theſe men which you ſee. What their reaſons are, you have heard. We have anſwered them three days, upon promiſe (as it pleaſed him to deſcant, without truth, for no ſuch promiſe was made) that they ſhould anſwer us again as long, as the order of diſputation doth require, and if they be able to defend their Doctrine, let them ſo do.

A ſtrong Argument of Weſton, where he is not able to anſwer, he would outface.

Then Mr. Elmar ſtood up, and proved how vain a man Weſton was; for he affirmed that they never promiſed to diſpute, but only to open and teſtifie to the world their Conſciences. For when they were required to ſubſcribe, they refuſed, and ſaid that they would ſhew good reaſons which moved them, that they could not with their Conſciences ſubſcribe, as they had partly already done, and were able to do more ſufficiently: Therefore, quoth he, it hath been ill called a Diſputation, and they were worthy to be blamed that were the Authors of that name. For we meant not to diſpute, nor now mean to anſwer, before our Arguments, quoth he, which we have to propound, be ſoluted, according as it was appointed. For by anſwering we ſhould but incumber our ſelves, and profit nothing, ſince the matter is already decreed upon and determined, whatſoever we ſhall prove, or diſpute to the contrary.

Mr. Elmars reaſon why they would not anſwer.

The Act of the ſixth Day.

The ſixth Act or Seſſion.

ON Monday following, being the 30th of October, the Prolocutor demanded of John Philpot, Archdeacon of Wincheſter, whether he would anſwer in the queſtions before propounded to their objections, or no? To whom he made this anſwer, That he would willingly ſo do, if according to their former determination, they would firſt anſwer ſufficiently to ſome of his Arguments, as they had promiſed to do, whereof he had a dozen, not half of the firſt being yet decided: And if they would anſwer fully and ſufficiently but to one of his Arguments, he promiſed that he would anſwer to all the objections that they ſhould bring.

Then the Prolocutor bade him propound his Argument, and it ſhould be reſolutely anſwered by one of them; whereunto Mr. Morgan was appointed. Upon Wedneſday laſt, quoth he, I was inforced to ſilence before I had proſecuted half mine Argument; the ſum whereof was this (as was gathered by the juſt context of the Scripture) that the human Body of Chriſt was aſcended into Heaven, and placed on the right hand of God the Father: wherefore it could not be ſituate upon Earth in the Sacrament of the Altar, inviſible after the imagination of man. The Argument was denied by Morgan. For the proof whereof, Philpot ſaid, that this was it wherewith he had to confirm his firſt Argument, if they would have ſuffered him the other day, as now he truſted they would.

Philpot.

Argument.

Fe- One ſelf and ſame nature, quoth he, receiveth not in it ſelf any thing that is contrary to it ſelf.
ri- But the Body of Chriſt is an human Nature, diſtinct from the Deity, and is a proper Nature of it ſelf.
o. Ergo, It cannot receive any thing that is contrary to that Nature, and that varieth from it ſelf.

But bodily to be preſent, and bodily to be abſent, to be on Earth, and to be in Heaven, and all at one preſent time, be things contrary to the nature of an human Body: Ergo, It cannot be ſaid of the human Body of Chriſt, that the ſelf ſame Body is both in Heaven, and alſo in Earth at one Inſtant, either viſibly or inviſibly.

Morgan.

Morgan denied the Major, that is, the firſt part of the Argument. The which Philpot vouched out of Vigilius an ancient Writer. But Morgan cavilled that it was no Scripture, and bade him prove the ſame out of Scripture.

Here is a new evaſion invented by Morgan, who dare not plainly deny Vigilius his authority, but under a colour.

Philpot ſaid, he could alſo ſo do, and right well deduce the ſame out of S. Paul, who ſaith, that Chriſt is like unto us in all points, except ſin: and therefore, like as one of our bodies cannot receive in it ſelf any thing contrary to the nature of a Body, as to be in Pauls Church, and at Weſtminſter at one inſtant, or to be at London viſibly, and at Lincoln inviſibly at one time; for that is contrary to the nature of a Body, and of all Creatures (as Didimus and Baſilius affirm) that an inviſible Creature, as an Angel, cannot

One body cannot be at once in divers places.

cannot be at one time in divers places: wherefore he concluded that the Body of Christ might not be in more places than in one, which is in Heaven, and so consequently not to be contained in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Weston. To this the Prolocutor took upon him to answer, saying, That it was not true that Christ was like unto us in all points, as Philpot took it, except sin. For that Christ was not conceived by the Seed of man, as we be.

Christ, after his Incarnation was in all points like man, sin only except.

Whereunto Philpot again replied, That Christs conception was prophesied before by the Angel to be supernatural, but after he had received our Nature by the operation of the Holy Ghost in the Virgins Womb, he became in all points like unto us, except sin.

Morgan. Philpot. Then Morgan inferred that this saying of Paul did not plainly prove his purpose. Well, quoth Philpot, I perceive that you do answer but by cavillation, yet am I not destitute of other Scriptures to confirm my first Argument, although you refuse the probation of so Ancient and Catholick a Doctor as Vigilius is. S. Peter in the Sermon that he made in the third of the Acts, making mention of Christ, saith these words, Whom Heaven must receive, until the consummation of all things, &c. Which words are spoken of his Humanity. If Heaven must hold Christ, then can he not be here on Earth, in the Sacrament, as is pretended.

Acts 3.

Harpsfield stepeth in. Then Morgan laughing at this, and giving no direct answer at all, Harpsfield stood up, being one of the Bishop of London's Chaplains, and took upon him to answer to the saying of S. Peter, and demanded of Philpot, Whether he would, ex necessitate, that is, of necessity force Christ to any place, or no.

Philpot. Philpot said, That he would no otherwise force Christ of necessity to any place, than he is taught by the words of the Holy Ghost, which sound thus; that Christ's human Body must abide in Heaven until the day of Judgment, as I rehearsed out of the Chapter before mentioned.

Harpsfield. Why, quoth Harpsfield, do ye not know that God is God Omnipotent? Yes, said Philpot, I know that right well, neither doubt I any thing at all of his Omnipotency. But of Christs Omnipotency what he may do, is not our question, but rather what he doth. I know he may make a stone in the wall a man, if he list, and also that he may make more worlds, but doth he therefore so? It were no good consequent so to conclude; he may do this or that, therefore he doth it.

Ba- Only so much is to be believed of Gods Omnipotency, as is in the word expressed.
ro- That Christs Body is both in Heaven, and here also really in the Sacrament, is not expressed in the word.
co. Ergo, It is not to be believed, that the Body of Christ, being in Heaven, is here also really in the Sacrament.

If Weston charge them for prisoning Christ in Heaven, how may they charge the Papists for prisoning Christ in a box.

Why, quoth the Prolocutor, then you will put Christ in Prison in Heaven. To the which Philpot answered, do you reckon Heaven to be a Prison? God grant us all to come to that Prison.

After this, Harpsfield inferred that this word Oportet in S. Peter, which signifieth in English must, did not import so much as I would infer, of necessity, as by other places of Scripture it may appear, as in the first to Timothy, where Paul saith, Oportet Episcopum esse unius uxoris virum, A Bishop must be the Husband of one Wife. Here, quoth he, Oportet doth not import such a necessity, but that he that never was married may be a Bishop.

Mr. Philpot. To this Philpot said again, That the places were not like which he went about to compare, and that in comparing of the Scriptures we must not consider the naked words, but the meaning rather of the Scriptures, for that in the place by him alledged, S. Paul doth declare of what quality a Bishop ought to be. But in the other, S. Peter teacheth us the place where Christ must necessarily be until the end of the World: which we ought to believe to be true. And this comparison of this word Oportet doth no more answer mine Argument, than if I should say of you now being here, Oportet te hic esse, You must needs be here, which importeth such a necessity for the time, that you can no otherwise be but here, and yet you would go about in words to avoid this necessity with another Oportet in another sense, as this, Oportet te esse virum bonum, You must be a good man, where Oportet doth not in very deed conclude any such necessity, but that you may be an evil man. Thus you may see that your Answer is not sufficient, and as it were no Answer to my Argument.

Oportet, how it is taken diversly in Scripture.

Weston: Then the Prolocutor brought in another Oportet, to help this matter (if it might be) saying, what say you to this, Oportet hæreses esse; must Heresies needs be therefore because of this word Oportet?

Philpot: Yea, truly, quoth Philpot, it cannot otherwise be, if you will add that which followeth immediately upon these words of Paul, that is, Ut qui electi sunt manifestentur; that is, That such as be the elect of God may be manifested and known.

Weston. Philpot. Why, quoth the Prolocutor, the time hath been that no Heresies were. I know no such time, quoth Philpot. For since the time of Abel and Cain Heresies have been, and then began they. Weston. Then said the Prolocutor, Will you now answer Morgan an Argument or two? I will, quoth Philpot, if I may first be answered to my Arguments any thing according to truth and learning. What, quoth the Prolocutor, you will never be answered. How I am answered, quoth Philpot, let all men that are here present judge, and especially such as be Learned, and with what cavillations you have dallied with me.

Philpot:

First, To the ancient Authority of Vigilius you have answered nothing at all, but only denying it to be Scripture that he saith. Secondly, To the saying of S. Peter in the Acts, ye have answered thus, demanding of me whether I would keep Christ in Prison, or no: Let men now judge if this be a sufficient Answer, or no.

Morgan. Then stood Morgan up again, and asked Philpot whether he would be ruled by the Universal Church, or no?

Philpot: Yes, quoth he, if it be the true Catholick Church. And sith you speak so much of the Church, I would fain that you would declare what the Church is.

Morgan: Philpot. The Church, quoth Morgan, is diffused and dispersed throughout the whole World. That is a diffuse definition, quoth Philpot, for I am yet as uncertain as I was before, what you mean by the Church: but I acknowledge no Church, but that which is grounded and founded on Gods Word, as S. Paul saith, Upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, and upon the Scriptures of God.

Moreman: Whether the Church was before the Scripture.

What, quoth Moreman, was the Scripture before the Church? Yea, quoth Philpot. But I will prove nay, quoth Moreman, and I will begin at Christs time. The Church of Christ was before any Scripture written. For Matthew was the first that wrote the Gospel, about a dozen years after Christ: Ergo, The Church was before the Scripture.

Scripture consisteth not only in Letters, but is that which is inspired in the hearts of good men by the Holy Ghost.

To whom Philpot answering, denied his Argument. Which when Moreman could not prove, Philpot shewed that his Argument was Elenchus, or a fallacy, that is, a deceivable Argument. For he took the Scripture only to be that, which is written by men in Letters, whereas in very deed, all Prophesie uttered by the Spirit of God, was counted to be Scripture before it was written in Paper and Ink, for that it was written in the hearts, and graven in the minds, yea, and inspired in the mouths of good men, and of Christs Apostles by the Spirit of Christ: As the Salutation of the Angel was the Scripture of Christ, and the Word of God before it was written. At that Moreman cried, Fie, fie, wondring that the Scripture of God should be counted Scripture before it was written, and affirmed; That he had no knowledge that said so.

Philpot: To whom Philpot answered, That concerning knowledge in this behalf, for the trial of the truth about the questions in controversie, he would wish himself no worse matched than with Moreman.

Weston: At the which saying the Prolocutor was grievously offended, saying, That it was arrogantly spoken of him, that would compare with such a worshipful learned man as Morgan was, being himself a man unlearned, yea, a mad man, meeter to be sent to Bethlehem, than to be among such a sort of learned and grave men as there were, and a man that never would be answered, and one that troubled the whole house: and therefore he did command him that he should come no more into the house, demanding of the house, whether they would agree thereupon, or no. To whom a great Company anſwered Yea. Then ſaid Philpot again, That he might think himſelf happy that was out of that Company.

Weston rateth against Philpot to be a mad man.

Philpot commanded to come in a long Gown and a Tippet, or elſe to come no more to the Convocation.

After this Morgan roſe of, and rounded the Prolocutor in the ear. And then again the Prolocutor ſpake to Philpot, and ſaid, Leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſlander the Houſe, and ſay that we will not ſuffer you to declare your mind, we are content you ſhall come into the Houſe as you have done before, ſo that you be apparelled with a long Gown and a Tippet, as we be, and that you ſhall not ſpeak, but when I command you. Then, quoth Philpot, I had rather be abſent altogether.

Decemb. 13. Thus they reaſoning to and fro, at length about the 13th of December, Q. Mary, to take up the matter, ſendeth her Commandment to Boner Biſhop of London, that he ſhould diſſolve and break up the Convocation. The Copy of which Commandment here followeth.

The Precept of the Queen to Boner, Biſhop of London, for the diſſolving of the foreſaid Convocation.

Q. Mary breaketh up the Convocation.

During the time of this Diſputation, the Twentieth day of November, the Mayor of Coventry ſent up unto the Lords of the Councel Baldwin Clarke, J. Careleſſe, Thomas Wilcocks, and Richard Eſtelin, for their behaviour upon Allhallow-day laſt before. Whereupon Careleſſe and Wilcocks were committed to the Gatehouſe, and Clarke and Aſtelin to the Marſhalſey.

The ſame day there was a Letter directed to Sir Chriſtopher Heydon, and Sir William Farmer Knights, for the apprehenſion of John Huntington Preacher, for making a Rhime againſt Dr. Stokes and the Sacrament. Who appearing before the Councel the Third of December next after, was, upon his humble Submiſſion and Promiſe to amend as well in Doctrine as in Living, again ſuffered to depart.

In the days of King Henry, and alſo King Edward reigning after him, divers Noble men, Biſhops, and other, were caſt into the Tower, ſome charged with Treaſon, as Lord Courtney, and the Duke of Norfolk (whoſe Son Lord Henry, Earl of Surrey, had been the ſame time beheaded, a worthy and ingenuous Gentleman, for what cauſe, or by whom, I have not here to deal: This is certain, that not many years after his death followed the beheading of both the Lord Seymors, and at laſt of the Duke of Northumberland alſo) ſome for the Popes Supremacy, and ſuſpicious Letters tending to Sedition, as Tonſtall Biſhop of Durham, and other, for other things, all which continued there Priſoners till Queen Maries coming in. Unto whom the ſaid Queen eftſoons granted their Pardon, and reſtored them to their former Dignities. Amongſt whom alſo was Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, whom ſhe not only freed out of Captivity, but alſo advanced him to be High Chancellor of England. Furthermore, To the Lord Courtney ſhe ſhewed ſuch favour, that ſhe made him Earl of Devonſhire, inſomuch that there was a ſuſpicion amongſt many that ſhe would marry him, but that proved otherwiſe.

This Lord Courtney was Son to the Marqueſs of Exeter.

Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter made Lord Chancellor of England.

The Lord Courtney made Earl of Devonſhire.

The ſame time Boner alſo had been Priſoner in the Marſhalſey; whom likewiſe Queen Mary delivered, and reſtored to the Biſhoprick of London again, diſplacing Dr. Ridley, with divers other good Biſhops more, as is above mentioned: as Cranmer from Canterbury, the Archbiſhop of York likewiſe, Poynet from Wincheſter, John Hooper from Worceſter, Barlow from Bathe, Harley from Hereford, Taylor from Lincoln, Ferrar from St. Davids, Coverdale from Exceter, Scorie from Chicheſter, &c. with a great number of Archdeacons, Deans, and briefly all ſuch Beneficed men, which either were married, or would conſtantly adhere to their Profeſſion. All which were removed from their Livings, and other of the contrary Sect ſet in the ſame, as Cardinal Pool, (who was then ſent for) Gardiner, Heath, White, Day, Troublefield, &c.

Anno 1553.

Popiſh Prelates intruded by Q. Mary.

And as touching Cranmer, of whom mention was made before, forſomuch as there was Rumour ſpread of him the ſame time in London, that he had Recanted, and cauſed Maſs to be ſaid at Canterbury, for purging of himſelf he publiſhed abroad a Declaration of his Truth and Conſtancy in that behalf, proteſting that he neither had ſo done, nor minded ſo to do. Adding moreover, That if it would ſo pleaſe the Queen, he, with Peter Martyr, and certain other whom he would chuſe, would in open Diſputation ſuſtain the Cauſe of the Doctrine, taught and ſet forth before in the time of King Edward, againſt all Perſons whomſoever. But while he was in expectation to have this Diſputation obtained, he, with other Biſhops, were laid faſt in the Tower, and Peter Martyr permitted to depart the Realm, and ſo went he to Argentine.

False report.

Cranmer ſo with Peter Martyr, and others, offered to defend the Cauſe of their Doctrine againſt all men.

After this, in the Month of November, the Archbiſhop Cranmer, notwithſtanding he had earneſtly refuſed to Subſcribe to the Kings Will in diſinheriting his Siſter Mary, alledging many grave and pithy Reaſons for her Legitimation, was in Guildhall of London Arraigned and Attainted of Treaſon, with the Lady Jane, and three of the Duke of Northumberlands Sons, which at the intreaty of certain Perſons, were had again to the Tower, and there kept for a time. All which notwithſtanding, Cranmer being pardoned of Treaſon, ſtood only in the Action and Caſe of Doctrine, which they called Hereſie, whereof he was right glad and joyful.

Dr. Cranmer, with Lady Jane, Arraigned of Treaſon in Guildhall.

Archbiſhop Cranmer quit of Treaſon.

This being done in November, the People, and eſpecially the Church-men, perceiving the Queen ſo eagerly ſet upon her old Religion, they likewiſe for their parts, to ſhew themſelves no leſs forward to ſerve the Queens Appetite (as the manner is of the multitude, commonly to frame themſelves after the humour of the Prince and time preſent) began in their Quires to ſet up the Pageant of St. Katharine, and of St. Nicholas, and of their Proceſſions in Latin, after all their old Solemnity with their gay Gardeviance, and gray Amices.

Going about of S. Katherines and S. Nicholas.

And when the Month of December was come, the Parliament brake up, but firſt of all ſuch Statutes were repealed which were made either of Præmunire, or touched any Alteration of Religion and Adminiſtration of Sacraments under King Edward. In the which Parliament alſo Communication was moved of the Queens Marriage with King Philip the Emperors Son.

In this mean while Cardinal Pool being ſent for by Q. Mary, was by the Emperour requeſted to ſtay with him, to the intent (as ſome think) that his preſence in England ſhould not be a let to the Marriage which he intended between Philip his Son and Queen Mary. For the making whereof he ſent a moſt ample Ambaſſade, with full power to make up the Marriage betwixt them; which took ſuch ſucceſs, that after they had communed of the mattets a few days, they knit up the Knot.

Cardinal Pool ſent for.

Marriage between Philip and Mary concluded.

Anno 1554.

Anno 1554.

The 13th of January, 1554. Dr. Crome, for his preaching upon Chriſtmas-day without Licence, was committed to the Fleet.

The 21th of January, Mr. Thomas Wootton Eſquire, was for matters of Religion committed to the Fleet cloſe Priſoner.

This mention of Marriage was about the beginning of January, and was very evil taken of the People, and of many of the Nobility, who for this, and for Religion, conſpiring among themſelves, made a Rebellion, whereof Sir Thomas Wyat Kt. was one of the chief beginners: who being in Kent, ſaid, (as many elſe perceived) That the Queen and the Councel would by Foreign Marriage riage bring upon this Realm moſt miſerable Servitude, and eſtabliſh Popiſh Religion. About the 25. of January news came to London of this Stir in Kent, and ſhortly after of the Duke of Suffolk, who was fled into Warwickſhire and Leiceſterſtire, there to gather a Power. The Queen therefore cauſed them both, with the Carews of Devonſhire, to be proclaimed Traitors; and ſent into Kent againſt Wyat, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, who being about Rochester-bridge forſaken of them that went with him, returned ſafe to London without any more harm done to him, and without bloodſhed on either party.

The Duke of Norfolk ſent againſt Wyat.

The Duke of Suffolk apprehended.

Furthermore, to apprehend the Duke of Suffolk, being fled into Warwickſhire, was ſent the Earl of Huntingdon in Poſt, who entring the City of Coventry before the Duke, diſappointed him of his purpoſe. Wherefore the Duke in great Diſtreſs, committed himſelf to the keeping of a Servant of his named Underwood in Aſtley Park, who like a Falſe Traitor, betrayed him. And ſo he was brought up to the Tower of London.

In the mean while Sir Peter Carew hearing of that was done, fled into France, but the other were taken, and Wyat came towards London in the beginning of February. The Queen hearing of Wyats coming, came into the City to the Guildhal, where ſhe made a vehement Oration againſt Wyat; the Contents, at leaſt the Effect, whereof here followeth, as near as out of her own Mouth could be penned.

Q. Mary cometh to the Guildhal.

The Oration of Queen Mary in the Guildhal.

Q. Maries Oration to the Londoners.

I Am come unto you in mine own Perſon, to tell you that which already you ſee and know, that is, how Traiterouſly and Rebelliouſly a number of Kentiſhmen have aſſembled themſelves againſt both us and you. Their pretence (as they ſaid at the firſt) was for a Marriage determined for us: To the which, and to all the Articles thereof ye have been made privy. But ſince we have cauſed certain of our Privy Councel to go again unto them, and to demand the Cauſe of this their Rebellion, and it appeared then unto our ſaid Councel, that the matter of the Marriage ſeemed to be but a Spaniſh Cloak to cover their pretended purpoſe againſt our Religion, for that they arrogantly and traiterouſly demanded to have the Governance of our Perſon, the keeping of the Tower, and the placing of our Councellors.

Demands pretended to be ſent from Maſter Wyat and his company to Q. Mary.

Now, loving Subjects, what I am, ye right well know. I am your Queen, to whom at my Coronation, when I was wedded to the Realm, and Laws of the ſame (the Spouſal Ring whereof I have on my Finger, which never hitherto was, nor hereafter ſhall be left off) you promiſed your Allegiance and Obedience unto me. And that I am the right and true Inheritor of the Crown of this Realm of England, I take all Chriſtendom to witneſs. My Father, as ye all know, poſſeſſed the ſame Regal State, which now rightly is deſcended unto me: And to him always ye ſhewed your ſelves moſt faithful and loving Subjects, and therefore I doubt not, but ye will ſhew your ſelves likewiſe to me, and that ye will not ſuffer a vile Traitor to have the Order and Governance of our Perſon, and to occupy our Eſtate, eſpecially being ſo vile a Traitor as Wyat is: Who moſt certainly, as he hath abuſed mine ignorant Subjects which be on his Side, ſo doth he intend and purpoſe the deſtruction of you, and ſpoil of your Goods. And I ſay to you in the word of a Prince, I cannot tell how naturally the Mother loveth the Child, for I was never the Mother of any; but certainly, if a Prince and Governour may as naturally and earneſtly love her Subjects, as the Mother doth love the Child, then aſſure your ſelves, that I, being your Lady and Miſtris, do as earneſtly and tenderly love and favour you. And I thus loving you, cannot but think that ye as heartily and faithfully love me, and then I doubt not, but we ſhall give theſe Rebels a ſhort and ſpeedy overthrow.

How he intended the ſpoil of their Goods, it appeareth in that he coming to Southwark, did hurt neither man, woman nor child, neither in body, nor in a penny of their goods.

As concerning the Marriage, ye ſhall underſtand, that I enterprized not the doing thereof without Advice, and that by the Advice of all our Privy Councel, who ſo conſidered and weighed the great Commodities that might enſue thereof, that they not only thought it very Honourable, but alſo Expedient, both for the Wealth of the Realm, and alſo of you our Subjects. And as touching my ſelf, I aſſure you, I am not ſo bent to my Will, neither ſo preciſe nor affectionate, that either for mine own Pleaſure I would chuſe where I luſt, or that I am ſo deſirous, as needs I would have one. For God, I thank him, to whom be the Praiſe therefore, I have hitherto lived a Virgin, and doubt nothing, but with Gods Grace, I am able ſo to live ſtill. But if, as my Progenitors have done before, it may pleaſe God that I might leave ſome Fruit of my Body behind me, to be your Governour, I truſt, you would not only rejoice thereat, but alſo, I know, it would be to your great Comfort. And certainly, if I either did think or know, that this Marriage were to the hurt of any of you my Commons, or to the Impeachment of any part or parcel of the Royal State of this Realm of England, I would never conſent thereunto, neither would I ever marry while I lived. And in the Word of a Queen, I promiſe you, that if it ſhall not probably appear to all the Nobility and Commons in the High Court of Parliament, that this Marriage ſhall be for the high Benefit and Commodity of the whole Realm, then will I abſtain from Marriage while I live.

The promiſe of Q. Mary touching her Marriage.

And now good Subjects, pluck up your Hearts, and like true Men, ſtand faſt againſt theſe Rebels, both our Enemies and yours, and fear them not; for I aſſure you, I fear them nothing at all. And I will leave with you my Lord Howard, and my Lord Treaſurer, who ſhall be Aſſiſtants with the Mayor for your Defence.

Q. Mary excuſeth her Marriage.

Here is to be noted, that at the coming of Q. Mary to the Guildhal, it being bruited before, that ſhe was coming with Harneſſed men, ſuch a Fear came among them, that a number of the Londoners, fearing leſt they ſhould be there intrapped and put to death, made out of the Gate before her entring in. Furthermore note, that when ſhe had ended her Oration (which ſhe ſeemed to have perfectly conned without Book) Wincheſter ſtanding by her, when the Oration was done, with great admiration cried to the People; O how happy are we, to whom God hath given ſuch a wife and learned Prince, &c.

February 3. Mr. Wyat in Southwark.

Two days after, which was the 3. of February, the Lord Cobham was committed to the Tower, and Mr. Wyat entred into Southwark: Who, foraſmuch as he could not enter that way into London, returning another way by Kingſton with his Army, came up through the Streets to Ludgate, and returning thence, he was reſiſted at Temple-Bar, and there yielded himſelf to Sir Clement Perſon, and ſo was brought by him to the Court, and with him the reſidue of his Army (for before, Sir George Harpar and almoſt half of his men ran away from him at Kingſton-Bridge) were alſo taken, and about an hundred killed, and they that were taken were had to Priſon, and a great many of them were hanged, and he himſelf afterward executed at the Tower Hill, and then quartered; whoſe Head after being ſet up upon Hay-hill, was thence ſtoln away, and great ſearch made for the ſame. Of which Story ye ſhall hear more (the Lord willing) hereafter.

Mr. Wyat came to Ludgate.

Mr. Wyat apprehended at Temple-Bar.

Mr. Wyat executed.

February 12.

The 12. day of February was beheaded the Lady Jane, to whom was ſent Mr. Fecknam, alias Howman, from the Queen two days before her death, to commune with her, and to reduce her from the Doctrine of Chriſt to Q. Maries Religion. The Effect of which communication here followeth.

The Communication had between the Lady Jane and Fecknam.

Talk between the Lady Jane & Feckenam.

Fecknam. Madam, I lament your Heavy Caſe, and yet I doubt not, but that you bear out this Sorrow of yours with a conſtant and patient Mind.

Jane. You are welcom unto me, Sir, if your coming be to give Chriſtian Exhortation. And as for my heavy caſe, (I thank God) I do ſo little lament it, that rather I account the ſame for a more manifeſt declaration of Gods Favour toward me, than ever he ſhewed me at any time before. And therefore there is no cauſe why either you, or other which bear me good Will, ſhould lament or be grieved with this my Caſe, being a thing ſo profitable for my Souls Health.

Lady Jane comfortably taketh her Trouble.

Feck. I am here come to you at this preſent ſent from the Queen and her Councel, to inſtruct you in the true Doctrine of the right Faith: Although I have ſo great confidence in you, that I ſhall have, I truſt, little need to travel with you much therein.

Jane. Forſooth, I heartily thank the Queens Highneſs, which is not unmindful of her humble Subject: And I hope likewiſe that you no leſs will do your Duty therein both truly and faithfully, according to that you were ſent for.

Fec. What is then required of a Chriſtian Man?

Jane That he ſhould believe in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, three Perſons and one God.

Feck. What? Is there nothing elſe to be required or looked for in a Chriſtian, but to believe in him?

Jane. Yes, we muſt love him with all our Heart, with all our Soul, and with all our Mind, and our Neighbour as our ſelf.

Feck. Why? Then Faith juſtifieth not, nor ſaveth not.

Faith only juſtifieth.

Jane. Yes verily, Faith (as Paul ſaith) only juſtifieth.

Feck. Why? S. Paul ſaith, If I have all Faith without Love, it is nothing.

Jane. True it is; for how can I love him whom I truſt not? or how can I truſt him whom I love not? Faith and Love go both together, and yet Love is comprehended in Faith.

Feck. How ſhall we love our Neighbour?

Jane. To love our Neighbour is to feed the hungry, to cloath the naked, and give drink to the thirſty, and to do to him as we would do to our ſelves.

Feck. Why? then it is neceſſary unto Salvation to do good works alſo, and it is not ſufficient only to believe.

Good works neceſſary in a Chriſtian, yet do they not profit to Salvation.

Jane. I deny that, and I affirm that Faith only ſaveth: but it is meet for a Chriſtian, in token that he followeth his Maſter Chriſt, to do good works, yet may we not ſay that they profit to our Salvation. For when we have done all, yet we be unprofitable Servants, and Faith only in Chriſts Blood ſaveth us.

Feck. How many Sacraments are there?

Two Sacraments.

Jane. Two. The one the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the other the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Feck. No, there are ſeven.

Jane. By what Scripture find you that?

Feck. Well, we will talk of that hereafter. But what is ſignified by your two Sacraments?

The Sacrament of Baptiſm what it ſignifieth. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper what it ſignifieth.

Jane. By the Sacrament of Baptiſm I am waſhed with Water and regenerated by the Spirit, and that waſhing is a token to me that I am the Child of God. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper offered unto me, is a ſure Seal & Teſtimony that I am, by the Blood of Chriſt, which he ſhed for me on the Croſs, made partaker of the everlaſting Kingdom.

Feck. Why? what do you receive in that Sacrament? Do you not receive the very Body and Blood of Chriſt?

Jane. No ſurely, I do not ſo believe. I think that at the Supper I neither receive Fleſh nor Blood, but Bread and Wine: which Bread when it is broken, and the Wine when it is drunken, putteth me in remembrance how that for my Sins the Body of Chriſt was broken, and his Blood ſhed on the Croſs, and with that Bread and Wine I receive the Benefits that come by the breaking of his Body, and ſhedding of his Blood for our Sins on the Croſs.

What we receive with the Sacrament.

Feck. Why? Doth not Chriſt ſpeak theſe words, Take, Eat, this is my Body? Require you any plainer words? Doth he not ſay it is his Body?

Jane. I grant he ſaith ſo; and ſo he ſaith, I am the Vine, I am the Door, but he is never the more the Door nor the Vine. Doth not S. Paul ſay, He calleth things that are not as though they were? God forbid that I ſhould ſay, that I eat the very natural Body and Blood of Chriſt: for then either I ſhould pluck away my redemption, or elſe there were two Bodies, or two Chriſts. One Body was tormented on the Croſs, and if they did eat another Body, then had he two Bodies: or if his Body were eaten, then was it not broken upon the Croſs, or if it were broken upon the Croſs, it was not eaten of his Diſciples.

Rom. 4.

Feck. Why? is it not as poſſible that Chriſt by his power could make his Body both to be eaten and broken, and to be born of a Woman without Seed of Man, as to walk upon the Sea, having a Body, and other ſuch like Miracles as he wrought by his Power only?

Chriſt had power to turn bread into his body, but that is no argument that he did ſo.

Jane. Yes verily, if God would have done at his Supper any Miracle, he might have done ſo: but I ſay, that then he minded no Work nor Miracle, but only to break his Body, and ſhed his Blood on the Croſs for our Sins. But I pray you to anſwer me to this one queſtion: Where was Chriſt, when he ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body? Was he not at the Table when he ſaid ſo? he was at that time alive, and ſuffered not till the next day. What took he, but Bread, what brake he, but Bread? And what gave he, but Bread? Look, what he took, he brake: and look, what he brake, he gave: and look, what he gave, they did eat: and yet all this while he himſelf was alive, and at Supper before his Diſciples, or elſe they were deceived.

Anno 1554.

Feck. You ground your Faith upon ſuch Authors as ſay and unſay both in a breath, and not upon the Church, to whom ye ought to give Credit.

Fecknam goeth from the Word to the Church. Faith to be grounded upon the Word, and not upon the Church.

Jane. No, I ground my Faith on Gods Word, and not upon the Church. For if the Church be a good Church, the Faith of the Church muſt be tried by Gods Word, and not Gods Word by the Church, either yet my Faith. Shall I believe the Church becauſe of Antiquity? or ſhall I give credit to the Church that taketh away from me the half part of the Lords Supper, and will not let any Man receive it in both kinds? Which things, if they deny to us, then deny they to us part of our Salvation. And I ſay, that it is an evil Church, and not the Spouſe of Chriſt, but the Spouſe of the Devil, that altereth the Lords Supper, and both taketh from it, and addeth to it. To that Church (ſay I) God will add Plagues, and from that Church will he take their part out of the Book of Life: Do they learn that of S. Paul when he miniſtred to the Corinthians in both kinds? ſhall I believe this Church? God forbid.

A note of the falſe Church.

Feck. That was done for a good intent of the Church, to avoid an Hereſie that ſprang on it.

Jane. Why? ſhall the Church alter Gods Will and Ordinance for good Intent? How did King Saul? The Lord God defend.

Gods Word not to be altered for good intent

With theſe and ſuch like Perſwaſions he would have had her lean to the Church, but it would not be. There were many more things whereof they reaſoned, but theſe were the chiefeſt.

After this, Fecknam took his leave, ſaying, that he was ſorry for her: For I am ſure, quoth he, that we two ſhall never meet.

Jane. True it is (ſaid ſhe) that we ſhall never meet, except God turn your Heart. For I am aſſured, unleſs you repent and turn to God, you are in an evil caſe: And I pray God, in the bowels of his Mercy, to ſend you his Holy Spirit: For he hath given you his great gift of Utterance, if it pleaſed him alſo to open the eyes of your Heart.

The words were ſpoken openly.

Lady Janes Letter ſent to her Father.

FAther, although it hath pleaſed God to haſten my death by you, by whom my life ſhould rather have been lengthened: yet can I ſo patiently take it, as I yield God more hearty thanks for ſhortning my woful days, than if all the world had been given unto my Poſſeſſions with life lengthened at my own will. And albeit I am well aſſured of your impatient dolors, redoubled manifold ways, both in bewailing your own woe, and eſpecially (as I hear) my unfortunate ſtate, yet, my dear Father (If I may without Offence rejoyce in my own Miſhaps) me ſeems in this I may account my ſelf bleſſed, that waſhing my Hands with the Innocency of my Fact, my guiltleſs Blood may cry before the Lord, Mercy to the Innocent. And yet, though I muſt needs acknowledge, that being conſtrained, and, as you wot well enough, continually aſſayed, in taking upon me I ſeemed to conſent, and therein grievouſly offended the Queen and her Laws: yet do I aſſuredly truſt, that this my offence towards God is ſo much the leſs, in that, being in ſo royal Eſtate as I was, mine inforced honour, blended never with mine Innocent Heart. And thus, good Father, I have opened unto you the State wherein I at preſent ſtand. Whoſe death at hand, although to you perhaps it may ſeem right woful, to me there is nothing that can be more welcom, than from this Vale of miſery to aſpire to that Heavenly Throne of all joy and pleaſure with Chriſt our Saviour. In whoſe ſtedfaſt Faith (if it may be lawful for the Daughter ſo to write to the Father) the Lord that hitherto hath ſtrengthened you, ſo continue you, that at the laſt we may meet in Heaven with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

This Parentheſis includeth with a Prayer, a privy Admonition to her Father, that he fall not from his Religion.

At what time her Father was flouriſhing in freedom and proſperity in the time of K. Edward, there belonged unto him a certain learned Man, Student and Graduate of the Univerſity of Oxford; who then being Chaplain to the ſaid Duke, and a ſincere Preacher (as he appeared) of the Goſpel according to the Doctrine of that time ſet forth and received, ſhortly after that the State of Religion began Anno 1554. February. began to alter by Queen Mary, altered alſo in his Profeſſion with the Time, and of a Proteſtant became a Friend and Defender of the Popes Proceedings. At whoſe ſudden mutation and unconſtant mutability, this Chriſtian Lady being not a little agrieved, and moſt of all lamenting the dangerous State of his Soul, in ſliding ſo away for fear from the way of Truth, writeth her mind unto him in a ſharp and vehement Letter: which (as it appeareth to proceed of an earneſt and zealous Heart, ſo) would God it might take ſuch effect with him, as to reduce him to repentance, and to take better hold again for the health & wealth of his own Soul. The copy of the Letter is this as followeth.

Another Letter of the Lady Jane to Mr. Harding, late Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk her Father, and then fallen from the Truth of Gods moſt Holy Word.

Luke 9. A ſharp Letter or exhortation of the L. Jane to Mr. Harding.

SO oft as I call to mind the dreadful and fearful ſaying of God, That he which layeth hold upon the plough & looketh back, is not meet for the Kingdom of Heaven: And on the other ſide, the comfortable words of our Saviour Chriſt to all thoſe that forſaking themſelues, do follow him: I cannot but marvel at thee, and lament thy caſe, which ſeemed ſometime to be the lively Member of Chriſt, but now the deformed Imp of the Devil; ſometime the beautiful Temple of God, but now the ſtinking and filthy Kenel of Satan; ſometime the unſpotted Spouſe of Chriſt, but now the unſhamefaſt Paramour of Antichriſt; ſometime my faithful Brother, but now a Stranger and Apoſtate; ſometime a ſtout Chriſtian Souldier, but now a cowardly Runaway. Yea, when I conſider theſe things, I cannot but ſpeak to thee, and cry out upon thee, thou ſeed of Satan, and not of Judah, whom the Devil hath deceived, the World hath beguiled, and the deſire of Life ſubverted, and made thee of a Chriſtian an Infidel. Wherefore haſt thou taken the Teſtament of the Lord in thy Mouth? Wherefore haſt thou preached the Law and the Will of God to others? Wherefore haſt thou inſtructed others to be ſtrong in Chriſt, when thou thy ſelf doeſt now ſo ſhamefully ſhrink, and ſo horribly abuſe the Teſtament and law of the Lord? when thou thy ſelf preacheſt, not to ſteal, yet moſt abominably ſtealeſt, not from Men, but from God, and committing moſt hainous Sacriledge, robbeſt Chriſt thy Lord of his right Members, thy Body and Soul, and chooſeſt rather to live miſerably with ſhame in the World, than to die, and glorioufly with Honour reign with Chriſt, in whom even in death is life? Why doeſt thou now ſhew thy ſelf moſt weak, when indeed thou oughteſt to be moſt ſtrong? The ſtrength of a Fort is unknown before the Aſſault, but thou yieldeſt thy Hold before any Battery be made. O wretched and unhappy man, what art thou but duſt and aſhes? and wilt thou reſiſt thy Maker that faſhioned thee and framed thee? Wilt thou now forſake him that called thee from the cuſtom gathering among the Romiſh Antichriſtians, to be an Ambaſſadour and Meſſenger of his eternal Word? He that firſt framed thee, and ſince thy firſt creation and birth preſerved thee, nouriſhed and kept thee, yea, and inſpired thee with the ſpirit of knowledge (I connot ſay of grace) ſhall he not now poſſeſs thee? Dareſt thou deliver up thy ſelf to another, being not thine own, but his? How canſt thou, having knowledge, or how dareſt thou neglect the Law of the Lord, and follow the vain traditions of Men: And whereas thou haſt been a publick Profeſſor of his Name, become now a defacer of his Glory? Wilt thou refuſe the true God, and worſhip the Invention of Man, the golden Calf, the Whore of Babylon, the Romiſh Religion, the abominable Idol, the moſt wicked Maſs? Wilt thou torment again, rent, and tear the moſt precious Body of our Saviour Chriſt, with thy bodily and fleſhly teeth? Wilt thou take upon thee to offer up any Sacrifice unto God for our Sins, conſidering that Chriſt offered up him ſelf (as Paul ſaith) upon the Croſs a lively Sacrifice once for all? Can neither the Puniſhment of the Iſraelites, (which for their Idolatry they ſo oft received) nor the terrible Threatnings of the Prophets, nor the Curſes of Gods own Mouth, fear thee to honour any other God than him? Doeſt thou ſo regard him that ſpared not his dear and only Son for thee, ſo diminiſhing, yea, utterly extinguiſhing his Glory, that thou wilt attribute the praiſe and honour due unto him to the Idols, which have Mouths and ſpeak not, Eyes and ſee not, Ears and hear not; which ſhall periſh with them that made them?

This man a little before King Edward died, was heard openly in his Sermons in London to exhort the people with great vehemency after this ſort: that if trouble came, they ſhould never ſhrink from the true doctrine of the Goſpel which they had received, but ſhould take it rather for a trial of God to prove them, whether they would abide by it or no. All which to be true they can teſtifie that heard him, and be yet alive: who alſo foreſeing the plague to come, were then much confirmed by his words. February.

What ſaith the Prophet Baruch, where he recited the Epiſtle of Jeremy written to the Captive Jews? Did he not forwarn them that in Babylon they ſhould ſee gods of Gold, Silver, Wood, and Stone born upon mens ſhoulders, to caſt a fear before the Heathen? But be not ye afraid of them (ſaith Jeremy) nor do as other do. But when you ſee other worſhip them, ſay you in your hearts, It is thou (O Lord) that oughteſt only to be worſhipped: for as for thoſe gods, the Carpenter framed them and poliſhed them, yea, gilded be they, and laid over with Silver and vain things, and cannot ſpeak. He ſheweth moreover the abuſe of their dealings, how the Prieſts took off their Ornaments, and apparelled their Women withal: how one holdeth a Scepter, another a Sword in his hand, and yet can they judge in no matter, nor defend themſelves, much leſs any other, from either Battel or Murther, nor yet from gnawing of Worms, nor any other evil thing. Theſe and ſuch like words ſpeaketh Jeremy unto them, whereby he proveth them to be but vain things, and no gods. And at laſt he concludeth thus, Confounded be all they that worſhip them. They were warned by Jeremy, and thou as Jeremy haſt warned other, and art warned thy ſelf by many Scriptures in many places. God ſaith, he is a jealous God, which will have all Honour, Glory, and Worſhip given to him only. And Chriſt ſaith in the 4*th.* of Luke to Satan which tempted him, even to the ſame Belzebub, the ſame Devil, which hath prevailed againſt thee: It is written (ſaith he) thou ſhalt honour the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

Matth. 4.

Theſe and ſuch like do prohibit thee and all Chriſtians to worſhip any other God than which was before all worlds, and laid the Foundations both of Heaven and Earth: And wilt thou honour a deteſtable Idol, invented by Romiſh Popes, and the abominable Colledge of crafty Cardinals? Chriſt offered himſelf up once for all, and wilt thou offer him up again daily at thy Pleaſure? But thou wilt ſay, thou doeſt it for a good Intent. Oh ſink of Sin! Oh Child of Perdition! Doeſt thou dream therein of a good Intent, where thy Conſcience beareth thee witneſs of Gods threatned Wrath againſt thee? How did Saul? who for that he diſobeyed the Word of the Lord for a good Intent, was thrown from his Worldly and Temporal Kingdom. Shalt thou then that doeſt deface Gods Honour, and rob him of his Right, inherit the eternal and heavenly Kingdom? Wilt thou for a good Intent diſhonour God, offend thy Brother, and danger thy Soul, wherefore Chriſt hath ſhed his moſt precious Blood? Wilt thou for a good intent pluck Chriſt out of Heaven, and make his death void, and deface the triumph of his Croſs by offering him up daily? Wilt thou either for fear of death or hope of life, deny and refuſe thy God, who enriched thy poverty, healed thy Infirmity, and yielded to thee his Victory, if thou couldeſt have kept it? Doeſt thou not conſider that the thread of thy life hangeth upon him that made thee, who can (as his will is) either twine it harder to laſt the longer, or untwine it again to break the ſooner? Doeſt thou not then remember the ſaying of David a notable King to teach thee a miſerable wretch, in his 104. Pſalm, where he ſaith thus: When thou takeſt away thy Spirit (O Lord) from men, they die and are turned again to their duſt, but when thou letteſt thy breath go forth, they ſhall be made, and thou ſhalt renew the face of the Earth. Remember the ſaying of Chriſt in his Goſpel: Whoſoever ſeeketh to ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: but whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. And in the ſame place, Whoſoever loveth Father or Mother above me, is not meet for me. He that will follow me, let him forſake himſelf, and take up his Croſs, and follow me. What Croſs? the Croſs of Infamy and Shame, of Miſery and Poverty, of Affliction and Perſecution for his Names ſake. Let the oft falling of thoſe heavenly Showers pierce thy Stony Heart. Let the two-edged Sword of Gods Holy Word ſheer aſunder the Sinews of worldly reſpects, even to the very Marrow of thy Carnal Heart, that thou mayeſt once again forſake thy ſelf and embrace Chriſt. And like as good Subjects will not refuſe to hazard all in the defence of their Earthly and Temporal Governour, ſo fly not like a white-livered Milkſop from the ſtanding wherein thy Chief Captain Chriſt hath ſet thee in Array of this Life. Viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, ſuſtine Dominum. Fight manfully, come life, come death: the quarrel is Gods, and undoubtedly the Victory is ours.

Good Intent.

Pſalm 26.

But thou wilt say; I will not break Unity. What? not the Unity of Satan and his members? nor the unity of darkneſs, the agreement of Antichriſt and his Adherents? Nay, thou deceiveſt thy ſelf with a fond imagination of ſuch an unity as is among the enemies of Chriſt. Were not the falſe Prophets in an unity? Were not Joſephs Brethren and Jacobs Sons in an unity? Were not the Heathen, as the Amalekites, the Perizites and Jebuſites in an unity? Were not the Scribes and Phariſees in an unity? Doth not King David teſtifie, Convenerunt in unum adverſus Dominum? Yea, thieves, murderers, conſpirators have their unity. But what unity? Tully ſaith of Amity: Amicitia non eſt, niſi inter bonos. But mark, my Friend, yea, friend, if thou be not Gods enemy: there is no unity but where Chriſt knitteth the knot among ſuch as be his. Yea, be well aſſured, that where his truth is reſident, there it is verified that he himſelf ſaith: Non veni mittere pacem in terram, ſed gladium, &c. but to ſet one againſt another, the Son againſt the father; and the daughter againſt the mother in law. Deceive not thy ſelf therefore with the glittering and glorious name of Unity; for Antichriſt hath his unity, yet not indeed, but in name. The agreement of ill men is not an Unity, but a Conſpiracy. Thou haſt heard ſome threatnings, ſome curſings, and ſome admonitions out of the Scripture to thoſe that love themſelves above Chriſt. Thou haſt heard alſo the ſharp and biting words to thoſe that deny him for love of life: Saith he not, He that denieth me before men, I will deny him before my Father in heaven? And to the ſame effect writeth Paul, Heb. 6. It is impoſſible (ſaith he) that they which were once lightened, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and were partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and have taſted of the good Word of God, if they fall and ſlide away, crucifying to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and making of him a mocking-ſtock, ſhould be renewed again by repentance. And again, ſaith he, If we ſhall willingly ſin after we have received the knowledge of his truth, there is no oblation left for ſin, but the terrible expectation of Judgment, and fire which ſhall devour the adverſaries. Thus S. Paul writeth, and this thou readeſt, and doſt thou not quake and tremble?

Antichriſt alſo hath his unity, which is not to be kept.

The agreement of evil Men is no Unity, but a Conſpiracy.

Well, if theſe terrible and thundring threatnings cannot ſtir thee to cleave unto Chriſt, and forſake the world: yet let the ſweet conſolations and promiſes of the Scriptures, let the example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, holy Martyrs and Confeſſors encourage thee to take faſter hold of Chriſt. Hearken what he ſaith: Bleſſed are you when men revile you, and perſecute you for my ſake: rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven; for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you. Hear what Eſay the Prophet ſaith: Fear not the curſe of men, be not afraid of their blaſphemies, for worms and moths ſhall eat them up like cloth and wool, but my righteouſneſs ſhall endure for ever, and my ſaving health from generation to generation. What art thou then (ſaith he) that feareſt a mortal man, the child of man, which fadeth away like the flower, and forgetteſt the Lord that made thee, that ſpread out the heavens, and laid the foundation of the earth? I am the Lord thy God, that make the Sea to rage, and be ſtill, whoſe name is the Lord of Hoſts: I ſhall put my word in thy mouth, and defend thee with the turning of an hand. And our Saviour Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples: They ſhall accuſe you, and bring you before Princes and Rulers for my names ſake, and ſome of you they ſhall perſecute and kill; but fear you not (ſaith he) nor care you what you ſhall ſay: for it is the ſpirit of your Father that ſpeaketh within you. Even the very hairs of your head are all numbred. Lay up treaſure for your ſelves (ſaith he) where no thief cometh, nor moth corrupteth. Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul; but fear him that hath power to deſtroy both ſoul and body. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Let theſe and ſuch like Conſolations taken out of the Scriptures, ſtrengthen you to Godward: Let not the Examples of Holy Men and Women go out of your Mind, as Daniel and the reſt of the Prophets, of the three Children, of Eleazarus that conſtant Father, of the ſeven of the Macchabees Children, of Peter, Paul, Stephen, and other Apoſtles and Holy Martyrs in the beginning of the Church. As of good Simeon Archbiſhop of Soloma, and Zetrapione, with infinite other under Sapores the King of the Perſians and Indians, who condemned all Torments deviſed by the Tyrants for their Saviours ſake. Return, return again into Chriſts War, and as becometh a Faithful Warriour, put on that Armour that St. Paul teacheth to be moſt neceſſary for a Chriſtian Man. And above all things take to you the Shield of Faith, and be you provoked by Chriſts own Example to withſtand the Devil, to forſake the World, and to become a true and faithful Member of his Myſtical Body, who ſpared not his own Body for our Sins.

Ephe. 6.

Throw down your ſelf with the fear of his threatned Vengeance for this ſo great and hainous an Offence of Apoſtaſie: And comfort your ſelf on the other part with the Mercy, Blood, and Promiſe of him that is ready to turn unto you whenſoever you turn unto him. Diſdain not to come again with the loſt Son, ſeeing you have ſo wandred with him. Be not aſhamed to turn again with him, from the ſwill of Strangers, to the delicates of your moſt benign and loving Father, acknowledging that you have ſinned againſt Heaven and Earth: Againſt Heaven, by ſtaining the glorious Name of God, and cauſing his moſt ſincere and pure Word to be evil ſpoken of through you. Againſt Earth, by offending ſo many of your weak Brethren, to whom you have been a ſtumbling block through your ſudden ſliding. Be not abaſhed to come home again with Mary, and weep bitterly with Peter, not only with ſhedding the tears of your bodily eyes, but alſo pouring out the ſtreams of your heart, to waſh away out of the ſight of God the filth and mire of your offenſive fall. Be not abaſhed to ſay with the Publican, Lord be merciful unto me a ſinner. Remember the horrible hiſtory of Julian of old, and the lamentable caſe of Spira of late, whoſe caſe (methinks) ſhould be yet ſo green in your remembrance, that being a thing of our time, you ſhould fear the like inconvenience, ſeeing you are fallen into the like offence.

Luke 18.

Laſt of all, let the lively remembrance of the laſt Day be always before your eyes, remembring the terror that ſuch ſhall be in at that time, with the runagates and fugitives from Chriſt, which ſetting more by the World than by Heaven, more by their life, than by him that gave them life, did ſhrink, yea did clean fall away from him that forſook not them: and contrariwiſe, the ineſtimable Joys prepared for them, that fearing no peril, nor dreading death, have manfully fought, and victoriouſly triumphed over all power of Darkneſs, over Hell, Death, and Damnation, through their moſt redoubted Captain Chriſt, who now ſtretcheth out his arms to receive you, ready to fall upon your neck and kiſs you, and laſt of all to feaſt you with the dainties and delicates of his own precious Blood: which undoubtedly, if it might ſtand with his determinate purpoſe, he would not let to ſhed again, rather than you ſhould be loſt. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour, praiſe, and glory everlaſting. Amen.

Be conſtant, be conſtant, fear not for any pain.
Chriſt hath redeemed thee, and Heaven is thy gain.

A Letter written by the Lady Jane in the end of the New Teſtament in Greek, the which ſhe ſent unto her Siſter the Lady Katherine, the Night before ſhe ſuffered.

A Faithful Exhortation of the Lady Jane to the Lady Katherine her Siſter, to read Gods Word.

I Have here ſent you (good Siſter Katherine) a Book, which although it be not outwardly trimmed with Gold, yet inwardly it is more worth than precious Stones. It is the Book (dear Siſter) of the Law of the Lord. It is his Teſtament and laſt Will which he bequeathed unto us Wretches: which ſhall lead you to the path of eternal Joy, and if you with a good mind read it, and with an earneſt mind do purpoſe to follow it, it ſhall bring you to an immortal and everlaſting life. It ſhall teach you to live, and learn you to dye. It ſhall win you more than you ſhould have gained by the poſſeſſion of your woful Fathers Lands. For as, if God had proſpered him, you ſhould have inherited his Lands; ſo if you apply diligently this Book, ſeeking to direct your life after it, you ſhall be an inheritor of ſuch Riches, as neither the covetous ſhall withdraw from you, neither thief ſhall ſteal, neither yet the moths corrupt. Deſire with David, good Siſter, to underſtand the Law of the Lord God. Live ſtill to dye, that you by death may purchaſe eternal life. And truſt not that ſternderneſs of your age ſhall lengthen your life; for as ſoon (if God call) goeth the young as the old, and labour always to learn to die. Defie the World, deny the Devil, and deſpiſe the Fleſh, and delight your ſelf only in the Lord. Be penitent for your Sins, and yet deſpair not: Be ſtrong in Faith, and yet preſume not; and deſire with St. Paul to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt, with whom even death there is life. Be like the good Servant, and even at midnight be waking, leſt when death cometh and ſtealeth upon you as a Thief in the Night, you be, with the evil Servant, found ſleeping, and leſt for lack of Oil, you be found like the five fooliſh Women, and like him that had not on the Wedding Garment, and then ye be caſt out from the Marriage. Rejoyce in Chriſt, as I do. Follow the ſteps of your Maſter Chriſt, and take up your Croſs: lay your Sins on his Back, and always embrace him. And as touching my Death, rejoyce as I do, (good Siſter) that I ſhall be delivered of this Corruption, and put on Incorruption. For I am aſſured, that I ſhall for looſing of a mortal life, win an immortal life, the which I pray God grant you, and ſend you of his Grace to live in his Fear, and to die in the True Chriſtian Faith, from the which (in Gods Name) I exhort you, that you never ſwerve, neither for hope of life, nor for fear of death. For if you will deny his Truth for to lengthen your Life, God will deny you, and yet ſhorten your days. And if you will cleave unto him, he will prolong your days to your Comfort and his Glory: To the which Glory God bring me now, and you hereafter, when it pleaſeth him to call you. Fare you well, good Siſter, and put your only Truſt in God, who only muſt help you.

So live to dye, that by death you may live.

Here followeth a certain Effectual Prayer, made by the Lady Jane in the time of her Trouble.

A Prayer of the Lady Jane.

O Lord, thou God and Father of my Life, hear me poor and deſolate Woman, which flyeth unto thee only, in all Troubles and Miſeries. Thou, O Lord, art the only Defender and Deliverer of thoſe that put their Truſt in thee: And therefore, I being defiled with ſin, encumbred with affliction, unquieted with troubles, wrapped in cares, overwhelmed with miſeries, vexed with temptations, and grievouſly tormented with the long impriſonment of this vile maſſe of Clay my ſinful Body, do come unto thee (O merciful Saviour) craving thy mercy and help, without the which ſo little hope of deliverance is left, that I may utterly deſpair of any Liberty. Albeit it is expedient, that ſeeing our life ſtandeth upon trying, we ſhould be viſited ſometime with ſome adverſity, whereby we might both be tried whether we be of thy Flock or no, and alſo know thee and our ſelves the better: Yet thou that ſaidſt thou wouldeſt not ſuffer us to be tempted above our power, be merciful unto me now a miſerable wretch I beſeech thee; which, with Solomon, do cry unto thee, humbly deſiring thee, that I may neither be too much puffed up with Proſperity, neither too much preſſed down with Adverſity, leſt I being too full, ſhould deny thee my God, or being too low brought, ſhould deſpair, and blaſpheme thee my Lord and Saviour. O merciful God, conſider my miſery beſt known unto thee; and be thou now unto me a ſtrong Tower of Defence, I humbly require thee. Suffer me not to be tempted above my Power, but either be thou a Deliverer unto me out of this great miſery, or elſe give me grace patiently to bear thy heavy Hand and ſharp Correction. It was thy right Hand that delivered the People of Iſrael out of the hands of Pharaoh, which for the ſpace of four hundred Years did oppreſs them, and keep them in Bondage. Let it therefore likewiſe ſeem good to thy Fatherly Goodneſs, to deliver me ſorrowful Wretch (for whom thy Son Chriſt ſhed his precious Blood on the Croſs) out of this miſerable Captivity and Bondage, wherein I am now. How long wilt thou be abſent? for ever? Oh Lord, haſt thou forgotten to be gracious, and haſt thou ſhut up thy loving kindneſs in diſpleaſure? Wilt thou be no more intreated? Is thy Mercy clear gone for ever, and thy Promiſe come utterly to an end for evermore? Why doeſt thou make ſo long tarrying? Shall I deſpair of thy Mercy, O God? far be that from me. I am thy Workmanſhip created in Chriſt Jeſus; Give me Grace therefore to tarry thy leiſure, and patiently to bear thy works, aſſuredly knowing, that as thou canſt, ſo thou wilt deliver me, when it ſhall pleaſe thee, nothing doubting or miſtruſting thy Goodneſs towards me; for thou knoweſt better what is good for me than I do: therefore do with me in all things what thou wilt, and plague me what way thou wilt. Only in the mean time arm me, I beſeech thee, with thy Armour, that I may ſtand faſt, my Loins being girded about with Verity, having on the Breaſtplate of Righteouſneſs, and ſhod with the Shooes prepared by the Goſpel of Peace; above all things taking to me the Shield of Faith, wherewith I may be able to quench all the fiery Darts of the Wicked, and taking the Helmet of Salvation, and the Sword of the Spirit, which is thy moſt Holy Word, Praying always with all manner of Prayer and Supplication, that I may refer my ſelf wholly to thy Will, abiding thy Pleaſure, and comforting my ſelf in thoſe Troubles that it ſhall pleaſe thee to ſend me: Seeing ſuch Troubles be profitable for me, and ſeeing I am aſſuredly perſwaded that it cannot be but well all that thou doeſt. Hear me, O merciful Father, for his ſake, who thou wouldeſt ſhould be a Sacrifice for my Sins: To whom with thee and the Holy Ghoſt, be all Honour and Glory: Amen.

Ephes. 6.

After theſe things thus declared, it remaineth now, coming to the end of this Vertuous Lady, next to infer the manner of her Execution, with the Words and Behaviour of her at the time of her Death.

Theſe are the Words that the Lady Jane ſpake upon the Scaffold at the Hour of her Death.

The words and behaviour of the Lady Jane upon the Scaffold.

FIrſt when ſhe mounted upon the Scaffold, ſhe ſaid to the People ſtanding thereabout; Good People, I am come hither to die, and by a Law I am condemned to the ſame. The Fact againſt the Queens Highneſs was unlawful, and the conſenting thereunto by me: But touching the procurement and deſire thereof by me or on my behalf, I do waſh my hands thereof in Innocency before God, and the Face of you, good Chriſtian People, this day: And therewith ſhe wrung her hands, wherein ſhe had her Book. Then ſaid ſhe, I pray you all good Chriſtian People, to bear me witneſs that I die a true Chriſtian Woman, and that I do look to be ſaved by no other mean, but only by the Mercy of God in the Blood of his only Son Jeſus Chriſt: And I confeſs, that when I did know the Word of God, I neglected the ſame, loved my ſelf and the World, and therefore this Plague and Puniſhment is happily and worthily happened unto me for my Sins: And yet I thank God, that of his Goodneſs he hath thus given me a time and reſpite to repent: And now, good People, while I am alive, I pray you aſſiſt me with your Prayers. And then kneeling down, ſhe turned her to Feckenam, ſaying: Shall I ſay this Pſalm? And he ſaid, Yea. Then ſaid ſhe the Pſalm of Miſerere mei Deus in Engliſh, in moſt devout manner throughout to the End, and then ſhe ſtood up, and gave her Maiden Miſtreſs Ellen her Gloves and Handkerchief, and her Book to Maſter Bruges, and then ſhe untied her Gown, and the Hangman preſſed upon her to help her off with it, but ſhe deſiring him to let her alone, turned towards her two Gentlewomen, who helped her off therewith, and alſo with her Frowes, Paaſt and Neckerchief, giving to her a fair Handkerchief to knit about her Eyes.

Then the Hangman kneeled down and asked her Forgiveneſs, whom ſhe forgave moſt willingly. Then he willed her to ſtand upon the Straw; which doing, ſhe ſaw the Block. Then ſhe ſaid, I pray you diſpatch me quickly. Then ſhe kneeled down, ſaying: Will you take it off before I lay me down? And the Hangman ſaid, No Madam. Then tied ſhe the Handkerchief about her Eyes, and feeling for the Block, ſhe ſaid: What ſhall I do? Where is it? Where is it? One of the Standers by guiding her thereunto, ſhe laid her head down upon the Block, and then ſtretched forth her Body, and ſaid: Lord, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit, and ſo finiſhed her Life, in the Year of our Lord God, 1554. the 12. Day of February.

February 12. Lady Jane and Lord Gilford Dudley beheaded

Thus the twelfth day of February (as I ſaid) was beheaded the Lady Jane, and with her alſo the Lord Gilford her Husband, one of the Duke of Northumberlands Sons, two Innocents in compariſon of them that ſate upon them. For they did but ignorantly accept that which the others had willingly deviſed, and by open Proclamation conſented to take from others, and give to them.

A wonderful example upon Morgan the Judge, who gave ſentence againſt Lady Jane.

Touching the Condemnation of this Lady Jane, here is to be noted, that the Judge Morgan, who gave the Sentence of Condemnation againſt her, ſhortly after he had condemned her, fell Mad, and in his raving cried out continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and ſo ended his Life.

February 31 Henry Duke of Suffolk her Father beheaded.

And not long after the death of the Lady Jane upon the 21 of the ſame Month, was Henry Duke of Suffolk alſo beheaded at the Tower-Hill, the fourth day after his Condemnation: About which time alſo were condemned for this Conſpiracy many Gentlemen and Yeomen, whereof ſome were executed at London, and ſome in the Country. In the number of whom was alſo the Lord Thomas Gray, Brother to the ſaid Duke, being apprehended not long after in Northwales, and executed for the ſame. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton very hardly eſcaped, as ye ſhall hear (the Lord willing) in another place.

Lord Thomas Gray apprehended and executed.

A Letter of Q. Mary to B. Boner. Cauſes declared. March 3.

RIght Reverend Father in God, Right Truſty and well Beloved, we greet you well. And where as heretofore in the time of the late Reign of our moſt dearеſt Brother King Edward the ſixth, whoſe Soul God pardon, divers notable Crimes, Exceſſes and Faults, with ſundry kinds of Hereſies, Simony, Adultery, and other Enormities have been committed within this our Realm, and other our Dominions, the ſame continuing yet hitherto in like diſorder ſince the beginning of our Reign, without any Correction or Reformation at all, and the People both of the Laity and alſo of the Clergy, and chiefly of the Clergy, have been given to much Inſolency, and ungodly Rule, greatly to the diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and very much to our regret and evil contentation, and to no little ſlander of other Chriſtian Realms, and in a manner to the ſubverſion and clean defacing of this our Realm; and remembring our Duty to Almighty God, to be to foreſee (as much as in us may be) that all Vertue and Godly Living ſhould be embraced, flouriſh, and increaſe; and therewith alſo, that all Vice and ungodly Behaviour ſhould be baniſhed and put away, or at the leaſtwiſe (ſo nigh as might be) ſo bridled and kept under, that Godlineſs and Honeſty might have the upper hand; underſtanding by very credible Report and publick Fame, to our no ſmall heavineſs and diſcomfort, that within your Dioceſs, as well in not exempt-

For theſe Cauſes and other moſt juſt Conſiderations us moving, we ſend unto you certain Articles of ſuch ſpecial Matters, as among other things be moſt neceſſary now to be put in Execution by you and your Officers, extending to the end by us deſired, and the Reformation aforeſaid: Wherein ye ſhall be charged with our Special Commandment, by theſe our Letters, to the intent you and your Officers may the more earneſtly and boldly proceed thereunto, without fear of any Preſumption to be noted on your part, or danger to be incurred of any ſuch our Laws, as by our doing of that is in the ſaid Articles contained, might any wiſe grieve you, whatſoever be threatned in any ſuch caſe. And therefore we ſtraitly charge and command you, and your ſaid Officers, to proceed to the Execution of the ſaid Articles, without all tract and delay, as ye will anſwer to the contrary. Given under our Signet, at our Palace of Weſtminſter, the third day of March, the firſt year of our Reign.

March 4.

A like Preſcript alſo with Articles, was ſent from the ſaid Queen Mary to the Lord Mayor of London, the fourth day of March, in the year aboveſaid, which Lord Mayor upon the ſame directed his commandment to the Aldermen, every one ſeverally in his Ward, containing as followeth:

By

By the Lord Mayor.

A Preſcript of the Lord Mayor to the Aldermen.

ON the Queen our moſt gracious and moſt benign Soveraign Ladies behalf, we moſt ſtraitly charge and command you, that ye the ſaid Aldermen, fail not perſonally to call before your own perſon in ſuch place within your ſaid Ward, as to you ſhall ſeem moſt convenient and meet, upon Wedneſday next coming, which ſhall be the 7th day of this preſent Month, at 7 of the Clock in the morning of the ſame day, all and every the houſholders both poor and rich of your ſaid Ward, and then and there openly and plainly for your own diſcharge, and for the eſchewing the perils that to you might otherwiſe be juſtly imputed and laid, do not only ſtreightly admoniſh, charge, and command, in the Queen our ſaid Soveraign Ladies name and behalf, all and every the ſaid houſholders, that both in their own perſons, and alſo their Wives, Children, and Servants, being of the age of xii. years and upwards, and every of them, do at all and every time and times from henceforth, and namely at the holy time of Eaſter, now approaching, honeſtly, quietly, obediently, and catholickly, uſe and behave themſelves like good and faithful Chriſtian people, in all and every thing and things touching and concerning the true Faith, Profeſſion, and Religion of his Catholick Church, both according to the Laws and Precepts of Almighty God, and alſo their bounden duty of obedience towards our Soveraign Lady the Queen, her Laws and Statutes, and her Highneſs moſt good example and gracious proceeding according to the ſame, and according alſo to the right, wholſom, charitable, and godly admonition, charge and exhortation, late ſet forth and given by the right Reverend Father in God, the Biſhop of London, our Dioceſan and Ordinary, to all the Parſons, Vicars and Curates, within his Dioceſs: but alſo that they and every of them do truly, without delay, advertize you of the Names and Surnames of all and every perſon and perſons, that they or any of them, can or may at any time hereafter know, perceive or underſtand to tranſgreſs or offend in any point or Article concerning the premiſſes, at their utmoſt perils. That ye immediately after ſuch notice thereof to you given, do forthwith advertize us thereof. Fail ye not thus to do with all circumſpection and diligence, as ye will anſwer to our ſaid moſt dread Soveraign Lady the Queen for the contrary at your like peril. Given at the Guild-Hall of the City of London, the fifth day of March in the firſt year of the Reign of our ſaid Soveraign Lady and Queen.

Blackwell.

And likewiſe do you give to every of the ſaid houſholders ſtraitly in commandement, that they or their wives depart not out of the ſaid City, until this holy time of Eaſter be paſt.

ABout the ſame year and time, when Doctor Boner ſet forth this Preſcript or Monitory, there came from the Queen another Proclamation againſt Strangers and Forreiners within this Realm. The purpoſe and intent of which Proclamation, becauſe it chiefly and moſt ſpecially concerned Religion and Doctrine, and the true Profeſſors thereof, I thought here to annex the tenor and manner of the ſame.

A Copy of the Queens Proclamation for the driving out of the Realm Strangers and Forrainers.

Q. Maries Proclamation for driving out of Strangers.

THE Queen our Soveraign Lady, underſtanding that a multitude of evil diſpoſed perſons, being born out of her Highneſs Dominions in other ſundry Nations, flying from the obeyſance of the Princes and Rulers under whom they be born, (ſome for Hereſie, ſome for Murther, Treaſon, Robbery, and ſome for other horrible Crimes,) be reſorted into this her Majeſties Realm, and here have made their demurrer, and yet be commorant and lingring, partly to eſchew ſuch condign puniſhment as their ſaid horrible Crimes deſerve, and partly to dilate, plant, and ſow the ſeeds of their malicious Doctrine and lewd Converſation among the good Subjects of this her ſaid Realm, on purpoſe to infect her good Subjects with the like, inſomuch as (beſides innumerable Hereſies, which divers of the ſame being Hereticks have preached and taught within her Highneſs ſaid Realm) it is aſſuredly known unto her Majeſty, that not only their ſecret practices have not failed to ſtir, comfort and aid divers her Highneſs Subjects to this moſt unnatural Rebellion againſt God and her Grace, but alſo ſome other of them deſiſt not ſtill to practiſe with her people eſtſoons to rebel: her Majeſty, therefore having (as afore is ſaid) knowledge and intelligence hereof, hath for remedy herein determined, and moſt ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth, that all and every ſuch perſon or perſons born out of her Highneſs Dominions, now commorant or reſident within this Realm, of whatſoever Nation or Country, being either Preacher, Printer, Bookſeller, or other Artificer, or of whatſoever Calling elſe, not being Denizen or Merchant known uſing the trade of Merchandize, or Servant to ſuch Ambaſſadors as be Liegers here from the Princes and States joyned in League with her Grace, ſhall within 24. days of this Proclamation, avoid the Realm upon pain of moſt grievous puniſhment by impriſonment, and forfeiture and confiſcation of all their goods and moveables, and alſo to be delivered unto their natural Princes or Rulers, againſt whoſe perſons or laws they have offended. Giving to all Majors, Sheriffs, Bayliffs, Conſtables, and all other her Miniſters, Officers, and good Subjects ſtraitly alſo in charge, if they know any ſuch perſon, not born in the Queens Highneſs Dominions (except before excepted) that ſhall, after the time and day limited in the Proclamation, tarry within this Realm, that they ſhall apprehend the ſame perſon or perſons, and commit him or them to Ward, there to remain without bail or mainprize, till her Graces pleaſure or her Councils be ſignified unto them, for the further ordering of the ſaid perſon or perſons. And that if any of her ſaid Officers, after the ſaid 24. days, apprehend, take, or know of any ſuch, they ſhall with all diligence immediately certifie her ſaid Council thereof, to the intent order may be forthwith given for their puniſhment according.

Anno 1554.

Cauſes laid againſt Strangers.

¶ In the mean while, upon the Proclamation before-mentioned, not only the Strangers in King Edwards time received into the Realm for Religion, among whom was Peter Martyr, and John Alaſco Uncle to the King of Poland, but many Engliſh-men fled, ſome to Freizland, ſome to Cleveland, ſome to High Germany, where they were diverſly ſcattered into divers Companies and Congregations, at Weſel, at Frankford, Embden, Markpurgh, Transborough, Baſil, Arow, Zurich, Geneva, and other places: where by the Providence of God they were all ſuſtained, and there entertained with greater favour amongſt Strangers abroad, than they could be in their own Country at home, well near to the number of 800 perſons, Students and others together.

Peter Martyr and Johannes Alaſco baniſhed the Realm.

Engliſh-men fled out of the Realm for Religion.

The number of Engliſh Exiles well near 800 Perſons.

In the ſaid month of March, the Lord Courtney Earl of Devonſhire, whom the Queen at her firſt entring delivered out of the Tower, and Lady Elizabeth alſo the Queens Siſter, were both in ſuſpicion to have conſented to Wyats Conſpiracy, and for the ſame, this March, were apprehended and committed to the Tower.

March 15. Lady Elizabeth and L. Courtney upon ſuſpicion of Sir Thomas Wyats Riſing committed to the Tower.

Touching the impriſonment of which Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, thou ſhalt note here for thy learning (good Reader) a politick Point of practice in Steven Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, not unworthy to be conſidered. This Gardiner being always a capital Enemy to the Lady Elizabeth, and thinking now by the occaſion of Maſter Wyat, to pick out ſome matter againſt the Lord Courtney, and ſo in the end to entangle the Lady Elizabeth, deviſed a peſtilent practice of conveyance, as in the ſtory here following may appear.

A point of practice of Stephen Gardiner againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

The ſtory is this. The ſame day that Sir Thomas Wyat died, he deſired the Lieutenant to bring him to the preſence of the Lord Courtney. Who there before the Lieutenant and the Sheriffs kneeling down upon his knees, beſought the L. Courtney to forgive him, for that he had falſly accuſed both the Lady Elizabeth and him, and ſo being brought from thence unto the Scaffold to ſuffer there openly in the hearing of all the people, cleared the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lord Courtney, to be free and innocent from all ſuſpicion of that Commotion. At which Confeſſion Doctor Weſton there ſtanding by, cried to the people, Anno 1554. perſwade, ſaying: Believe him not good People, for he confeſſed a truth before unto the Council.

Dr. Weſton talketh of the Lady Elizabeth.

After the Execution done of Sir Thomas Wyat, which was the 11. day of April, word was brought immediately unto the Lord Mayor Sir Thomas White, a little before dinner, how Maiſter Wyat had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and Lord Courtney, and the words alſo which Doctor Weſton ſpake unto the People; whereunto the Lord Mayor anſwering: Is this true, quoth he? ſaid Weſton ſo? In ſooth, I never took him otherwiſe but for a Knave. Upon this the Lord Mayor ſitting down to dinner (who dined the ſame day at the Bridghouſe) cometh in Sir Martin Bowes with the Recorder, newly come from the Parliament-Houſe, who hearing of the Mayor and Sheriffs this report of Wyats Confeſſion, both upon the Scaffold and alſo in the Tower, marvelled thereat, declaring how there was another Tale contrary to this, told the ſame day in the Parliament-Houſe, which was, That Sir Thomas Wyat ſhould deſire the Lord Courtney to confeſs the truth, ſo as he had done before.

Cut, Prentice in London brought before Stephen Gardiner.

Upon this it followed not long after, that a certain Prentice dwelling in Saint Laurence Lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denham a Plaiſterer, being one of Queen Maries Servants, amongſt other talk made mention how Sir Thomas Wyat had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, to be no conſenters to his riſing. Which words being brought to Gardiner (by what means I know not) incontinent upon the ſame, Sir Andrew Judd was ſent by the ſaid Biſhop unto the Lord Mayor, commanding him to bring the ſaid Prentice to the Star-Chamber, which was accuſed of theſe words, that he ſhould ſay, That Wyat was conſtrained by the Council to accuſe the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney. Which Fellow when he was come to the Star-Chamber, the aforeſaid Gardiner, letting paſs other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole Multitude, how miraculouſly Almighty God had brought the Queens Majeſty to the Crown, the whole Realm in a manner being againſt her, and that he had brought this to paſs for this ſingular intent and purpoſe, that this Realm being overwhelmed with Hereſies, ſhe might reduce again the ſame unto the true Catholick Faith. And where ſhe took the Lady Elizabeth into her favour, and loved her ſo tenderly, and alſo the Lord Courtney, who had long time been detained in priſon, and by her was ſet at liberty, and received great benefits at her hands, and notwithſtanding all this they had conſpired moſt unnaturally and traiterouſly againſt her, with that heinous Traytor Wyat, as by the Confeſſion of Wyat (ſaid he) and the Letters ſent to and fro may plainly appear: Yet there were ſome in the City of London which reported, That Wyat was conſtrained by the Council to accuſe the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, and yet you, my Lord Mayor, quoth he, have not ſeen the ſame puniſhed.

Stephen Gardiners Tale in the Star-chamber againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

The Party is here, ſaid the Lord Mayor. Take him with you ſaid Gardiner, and puniſh him according to his deſert; and ſaid further, My Lord, take heed to your charge, the City of London is a Whirl-pool and ſink of all evil Rumors, where they be bred, and from thence ſpread into all parts of this Realm.

The Lord Shandois talke report in the Star-Chamber againſt Lady Elizabeth and L. Courtney.

There ſtood by the ſame time the Lord Shandois, who being then Lieutenant of the Tower, and now hearing the Biſhop thus ſpeak, to ſooth his Tale, came in with theſe words as followeth:

My Lords (quoth he) this is a truth that I ſhall tell you, being Lieutenant of the Tower when Wyat ſuffered, he deſired me to bring him to the Lord Courtney; which when I had done, he fell down upon his knees before him in my preſence, and deſired him to confeſs the truth of himſelf, as he had done before, and to ſubmit himſelf unto the Queens Majeſties mercy.

And thus much I thought of this matter to declare, to the intent that the Reader perceiving the proceedings of the Biſhops in the premiſſes, and comparing the ſame with the true teſtimony of Wyat himſelf, and with the teſtimony of the Sheriffs, which were preſent the ſame time when Sir Thomas Wyat asked the Lord Courtney forgiveneſs, may the better judge of the whole caſe and matter for which the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lord Courtney were ſo long in trouble. Of which her Graces trouble, hereafter (God willing) more ſhall be ſaid in the ſtory of her life. In the mean time to let this matter ſtay, let us now paſs further in our Hiſtory.

Q. Mary not favouring the Londoners.

NOt long after this, Queen Mary partly fearing the Londoners by occaſion of Wyat's Conſpiracy, partly perceiving moſt of the City for Religions ſake not greatly to favour her Proceedings, to their diſpleaſure and hinderance ſummoned a Parliament to be holden at Oxford: as it were to gratifie that City, where both the Univerſity, Town, and Country had ſhewed themſelves very obedient and forward, eſpecially in reſtoring Popiſh Religion. For this purpoſe great proviſion was made, as well by the Queens Officers, as by the Townſmen and Inhabitants of Oxford, and the Country about.

A Parliament holden pretended to be kept at Oxford.

A Parliament holden at Weſtminſter.

But the Queens mind in ſhort ſpace changed, and the ſame Parliament was holden at Weſtminſter in April following. Then the Queen, beſide other things, propoſed concerning her Marriage to King Philip, and reſtoring of the Popes Supremacy: as touching her Marriage, it was agreed upon; but the other could not as then be obtained.

Mention of the Queens marriage in the Parliament.

Boner made Vicegerent and Preſident in this Convocation.

The ſame time when this Parliament was ſummoned, ſhe alſo ſummoned a Convocation of Biſhops, and of the Clergy, writing unto Boner (whom ſhe had made Vicegerent in the ſtead of Cranmer, being then in the Tower) after the tenor and form of a new ſtile, differing from the old ſtile of King Henry, and King Edward, as followeth.

The ſtile of Queen Mary altered, writing to Boner for the ſummoning of a Convocation.

MAria Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regina, fidei defenſor, Reverendo in Chriſto patri Edmundo London. Epiſc. ſalutem. Licet nuper quibuſdam arduis & urgentibus negotiis nos ſecuritatem & defenſionem Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ, ac pacem & tranquillitatem, &c.

Supremum caput in the Queens ſtile taken away.

Where note, good Reader, concerning the altering and changing the Queens ſtile, the latter part thereof to be left out of her ſtile, which is: Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ & Hiberniæ ſupremum caput, becauſe in this preſent Parliament the Supremacy being given away from the Crown of England to the Pope, thereupon this parcel of the Title was alſo taken away. Likewiſe the ſaid Boner giving his Certificate upon the ſame, leaves out Autoritate Illuſtriſſimæ, &c. legitimè ſuffultus: which parcel alſo in the ſame Parliament was repealed and taken away the ſame time.

Legitimè ſuffultus in the Biſhops title taken away.

The Dignity of Prieſts extolled by Biſhop Boner.

Boner ſpeaketh for the honour of Prieſthood.

IN this aforeſaid Convocation, Boner Biſhop of London being Vicegerent and Preſident, as is ſaid, made a certain Exhortation or Oration to the Clergy (which was in this Convocation, or much about the ſaid time) wherein he ſeemeth to ſhew a great piece of profound and deep Learning, in ſetting forth the moſt incomparable and ſuper-angelical order of Prieſthood, as may appear by this parcel or fragment of his foreſaid Oration, being collected and gathered by ſome that ſtood by: which as it came to our hands, ſo I thought to impart it to the Reader, both for that the Author of ſo worthy a work ſhould not paſs unknown, and partly alſo, for that the eſtimation of this bleſſed Order ſhould loſe nothing of its preheminence, but might be known in moſt ample perfection, ſo as it ſtandeth above Angels and Kings, if it be true that Boner ſaith.

¶ A piece or fragment of the Exhortation made by Boner Biſhop of London, to them of the Convocation-Houſe, copied out by them that ſtood by and heard him.

Boners Oration in praiſe of Prieſthood.

The proſound exhortation of B. Boner in the Convocation.

WHerefore it is to be known, that Prieſts and Elders be worthy of all men to be worſhipped for the Dignity ſake which they have of God, as in Matthew 16. Whatſoever ye ſhall looſe upon earth, &c. And what-

whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. For a Priest by some means is like Mary the Virgin, and is shewed by three points; As the blessed Virgin by five words did conceive Christ, as it is said: Luke 1. Fiat mihi secundum verbum tuum: that is to say, Be it unto me according to thy word: so the Priest by five words doth make the very Body of Christ. Even as immediately after the consent of Mary, Christ was all whole in her womb: so immediately after the speaking of the words of Consecration; the Bread is substantiated into the very Body of Christ. Secondly, As the Virgin carried Christ in her arms, and laid him in an Ox-stall after his birth; even so the Priest after the Consecration, doth lift up the Body of Christ, and placeth it, and carrieth it, and handleth it with his hands. Thirdly, As the blessed Virgin was sanctified before she had conceived; so the Priest being ordained and anointed before he doth consecrate, because without Orders he could consecrate nothing: therefore the Lay-man cannot do that thing, although he be never so holy, and do speak the self-same words of consecration. Therefore here is to be known, that the Dignity of Priests by some means passeth the Dignity of Angels, because there is no power given to any of the Angels to make the Body of Christ. Whereby the least Priest may do in Earth, that which the greatest and highest Angel in Heaven cannot do, as Saint Bernard saith, O worshipful Dignity of Priests, in whose hands the Son of God is, as in the womb of the Virgin he was incarnate. St. Augustine saith, That Angels in the consecration of the Sacred Host do serve him, and the Lord of Heaven descendeth to him. Whereupon S. Ambrose upon Saint Luke saith, Doubt thou not the Angels to be where Christ is present upon the Altar. Wherefore Priests are to be honoured before all Kings of the Earth, Princes, and Nobles. For a Priest is higher than a King, happier than an Angel, maker of his Creator. Wherefore, &c.

Priests compared to the Virgin Mary in three points.

Priesthood compared & preferred before the state of Angels.

Blasphemy.

It was declared a little before, how Doctor Ridley was had from Fremingham to the Tower; where being in durance, and invited to the Lieutenants Table, he had certain talk or conference with Secretary Bourne, Master Fecknam, and other, concerning the Controversies in Religion: the sum whereof, as it was penned with his own hand, hereafter ensueth,

Here followeth the sum and effect of the Communication between Doctor Ridley and Secretary Bourne, with others, at the Lieutenants Table in the Tower.

Sir Thomas of Bridges.

MAster Thomas of Bridges said at his Brother Master Lieutenants Board, I pray you Master Doctors, for my Learning, tell me what an Heretick is. Master Secretary Bourne said, I will tell you who is an Heretick; whoso stubbornly and stiffly maintaineth an Untruth, he is an Heretick. You mean Sir, said I, an Untruth in matters of Religion, and concerning our Faith. Yea, that is true said he; and in this we are soon agreed. Then said Master Fecknam, whom they called Master Dean of Pauls, sitting at the upper end of the Table, I will tell you by Saint Augustine who is an Heretick; Qui adulandi principibus vel lucri gratia falsas opiniones gignit vel sequitur, hæreticus est, saith S. Augustine. And then he Englished the same. Sir, said I, I ween S. Augustine addeth the third number, which is, vel vanæ gloriæ causa. You say even true, Master Doctor, said he, and thus far we did agree all three.

Who is an Heretick.

An Heretick defined by S. Augustine.

Master Fecknam began again to say, Whoso doth not believe what the Scripture affirmeth, but will obstinately maintain the contrary, he is Hæreticus: As in the Sacrament of the Altar Matthew doth affirm there to be Christs Body, Mark doth affirm it, Luke affirmeth it, Paul affirmeth it, and none denieth it: therefore to hold the contrary is Heresie. It is the same Body and Flesh that was born of the Virgin; and this is confirmed by Unity, Antiquity, and Universality. For none before Berengarius did ever doubt of this, and he was an Heretick, as Master Doctor there knoweth full well; I do take to witness his own Conscience, said he.

Fecknam provoking Mr. Ridley.

Unity, Antiquity, Universality.

Marry Sir, said Master Secretary, Master Fecknam hath spoken well. These be great matters, Unity, Antiquity, and Universality. Do you not think so Master Doctor, said he to me?

Here, while I strained courtesie, and pretended no willingness to talk; said one of the Commissioners, Peradventure Master Ridley doth agree with Master Fecknam, and then there needs not much debating of the matter.

Sir, said I, in some things I do and shall agree with him, and in some things which he hath spoken, to be plain, I do not agree with him at all. Masters, said I, ye be (as I understand) the Queens Commissioners here, and if ye have commission to examine me in these matters, I shall declare unto you plainly my Faith; if ye have not, then I shall pray you either to give me leave to speak my mind freely, or else to hold my peace.

There is none here, said Master Secretary, that doth not favour you: and then every man shewed what favour they bear towards me, and how glad they would be of an agreement.

But as I strained to have licence of them in plain words to speak my mind, some thought they granted me it for vix or ægrè. Well, at the last I was content to take it for licensed, and so began to talk.

To Master Fecknam's Arguments of the manifold affirmation where no denyal was, I answered; Where is a multitude of Affirmations in Scripture, and where is one Affirmation, all is one concernig the truth of the matter: for that which any one of the Evangelists spake, inspired by the Holy Ghost, was as true as that which is spoken of them all. It is as true that John saith of Christ, Ego sum ostium ovium, i. I am the door of the Sheep, as if all had said it. For it is not in Scripture as in witness of men, where the number is credited more than one, because it is uncertain with what spirit he doth speak. And where Master Fecknam spake of so many, affirming without any Negation, &c. Sir, said I, all they do affirm the thing which they meant. Now if ye take their words, to leave their meaning, then do they affirm what ye take, but not what they meant. Sir, said I, if in talk with you, I should so utter my mind in words, that ye by the same do, and may plainly perceive my meaning, and could, if you would be captious, cavil at my words, and writh them to another sense, I would think ye were no gentle Companions to talk with, except ye would take my words as ye did perceive I did mean.

Bishop Ridley answering to Fecknam.

Truth in Scripture goeth not by number of affirmation, where one is sufficient.

Words in Scripture must be taken with their meaning.

Marry, quoth Master Secretary, we should else do you plain injury and wrong.

Master Fecknam perceiving whereunto my talk went: Why, quoth he, what circumstances can ye shew me that shall move to think of any other sense, than as the words plainly say, Hoc est corpus meum, quod pro vobis tradetur, i. This is my Body which shall be betrayed for you?

Sir, said I, even the next Sentence that followeth, viz. Hoc facite in meam commemorationem, i. Do this in my remembrance. And also by what reason ye say the Bread is turned into Christs carnal Body, by the same I may say, that it is turned into his mystical Body. For as that saith of it, Hoc est corpus, quod pro vobis tradetur: so Paul which spake by Christs Spirit, saith, Unus panis & unum corpus multi sumus omnes, qui de uno pane participamus, i. We being many are all but one Bread and one Body, inasmuch as we are partakers of one Bread.

Hoc est corpus meum expounded.

Reasons why these words ought to be taken not literally.

Here he calleth one Bread, one Loaf, said Master Secretary.

Yea, said I, one Loaf, one Bread, all is one with me.

But what say ye, quoth Master Secretary, of the Universality, Antiquity, and Unity, that Master Fecknam did speak of?

I ensure you, said I, I think them matters weighty, and to be considered well. As for Unity, the truth is before God, I do believe it, and embrace it, so it be with Verity, and joyned to our Head Christ, and such an one as Paul speaketh of, saying; Una Fides, unus Deus, unum Baptisma, i. One Faith, one God, One Baptism. And for Antiquity, I am also perswaded that to be true which Irenæus saith, Quod primum verum, i. That which is first is true. In our Religion Christs Faith was first truly taught by Christ himself, by his Apostles, and by many good Men, that from the beginning did succeed next unto them; and for this controversie of the Sacrament, I am perswaded that those old Writers, which wrote before the controversie and the usurping of the See of Rome, Unity with Verity to be allowed.

Antiquity.

Anno 1554.

Rome, do all agree, if they be well underſtood in this Truth.

I am glad to hear, ſaid Mr. Secretary, that you do ſo well eſteem the Doctors of the Church.

Univerſality, ach a double underſtanding.

Now as for Univerſality, it may have two meanings; one to underſtand that to be Univerſal, which from the beginning in all Ages hath been allowed; another to underſtand Univerſality for the multitude of our Age, or of any other ſingular Age.

No, no, ſaith Mr. Secretary, theſe three do always agree, and where there is one, there is all the reſt: And here he and I changed many words. And finally, to be ſhort, in this matter we did not agree.

There was none, quoth Mr. Fecknam, before Berengarius, Wickliffe, and Hus, and now in our days Caroloſtadius and Oecolampadius, Caroloſtadius ſaith, Chriſt pointed to his own Body, and not to the Sacrament, and ſaid, Hoc eſt corpus meum. And Melanchthon writeth to one Miconius (Miconius ſaid I) theſe or the like words; Nullam ſatis gravem rationem invenire poſſum, propter quam à fide majorum in hac materia diſſentiam, i. I can find no grounded reaſon to cauſe me to diſſent from the believe of our fore-Elders.

Melanchthon ad Miconium.

Thus when he had ſpoken at length, with many other words mo; Sir, ſaid I, it is certain that other before theſe have written of this matter: Not by the way only, and obiter, as do for the moſt all the old Writers, but even ex profeſſo; and their whole Books intreat of it alone, as Bertram.

The doctrine of the Sacrament not new.

Bertram, ſaid the Secretary, what man was he? and who was he? and how do you know, &c. with many Queſtions.

Sir, quoth I, I have read his Book; He propoundeth the ſame which is now in controverſie, and anſwereth ſo directly, that no man may doubt but that he affirmeth, That the Subſtance of Bread remaineth ſtill in the Sacrament, and he wrote unto Carolus Magnus.

Marry, quoth he, mark, for there is a matter. He wrote, quoth he, ad Henricum, and not ad Carolum; for no Author maketh any ſuch mention of Bertramus.

Yes, quoth I, Trithemius in Catalogo illuſtrium Scriptorum, ſpeaketh of him. Trithemius was but of late time; but he ſpeaketh, quoth I, of them that were of Antiquity. Here, after much talk of Bertram, What Authors have ye, quoth Mr. Secretary, to make of the Sacrament a Figure?

Doctors that make the Sacrament but a Figure. Tertullianus, Gelaſius, Origen.

Sir, quoth I, ye know (I think) that Tertullian in plain words ſpeaketh thus; Hoc eſt corpus meum, id eſt, figura corporis mei. i. This is my Body, that is to ſay, a figure of my Body. And Gelaſius ſaith plainly, That Subſtantia panis manet, i. The Subſtance of Bread remaineth. And Origen ſaith likewiſe, Quod ſanctificatur ſecundum materiam, ingreditur ſtomachum, & vadit in ſeceſſum, i. That which is ſanctified as touching the Matter or Subſtance, paſſeth away into the draught. This when I had Engliſhed, Mr. Secretary ſaid to me, You know very well as any man, &c. And here, if I would I might have been ſet in a fooliſh Paradiſe of his commendation of my Learning, and quod eſſem vir multæ lectionis, i. A man of much Reading. But this I would not take at his hand. He ſet me not up ſo high, but I brought my ſelf as low again; and here was much ado.

As for Melanchthon (quoth I) whom Mr. Fecknam ſpake of, I marvel that ye will alledge him, for we are more nigh an agreement here in England, than the Opinion of Melanchthon is to you: for in this point we all agree here, that there is in the Sacrament but one material Subſtance; and Melanchthon, as I ween, ſaith there are two.

Ye ſay truth, quoth Mr. Secretary; Melanchthons Opinion is ſo. But I pray you, ye have heard that the Sacrament was in old time ſo reverenced, that many were then forbidden to be preſent at the miniſtration thereof; Catechumini, quoth he, and many mo.

Catechumeni add others went out at the Miniſtration.

Truth Sir, quoth I, there were ſome called Audientes, ſome Pœnitentes, ſome Catechumeni, and ſome Energumeni, which were commanded to depart.

The Book of Catechiſm.

Now, quoth he, then; And how can ye then make but a figure or a ſign of the Sacrament, as that Book doth which is ſet forth in my Lord of Canterbury's name? I wiſs, ye can tell who made it, Did not ye make it? and here was much murmuring of the reſt, as though they would have given me the glory of the writing of that Book; which yet was ſaid of ſome there to contain the moſt hainous Hereſie that ever was.

Maſter Secretary, quoth I, that Book was made of a great Learned Man, and him which is able to do the like again: as for me, I enſure you (be not deceived in me) I was never able to do or write any ſuch like thing; he paſſeth me no leſs than the Learned Maſter his young Scholar.

Now, here every man would have his ſaying, which I paſs over, not much material for to tell. But Sir, quoth I, methinks it is not charitably done, to bear the People in hand that any man doth ſo lightly eſteem the Sacrament, as to make of it a figure. For that (but) maketh is a bare figure without any more profit, which that Book doth often deny, as appeareth to the Reader moſt plainly.

Yes, quoth he, that they do.

Sir, no quoth I, of a truth, and as for me, I enſure you I make no leſs of the Sacrament than thus: I ſay, whoſoever receiveth the Sacrament, he receiveth therewith either life or death.

No, quoth Mr. Secretary, Scripture ſaith not ſo.

Sir, quoth I, although not in the ſame ſound of words, yet it doth in the ſame ſenſe, and St. Auguſtine ſaith, in the ſound of words alſo: for Paul ſaith, The Bread which we break, is it not the partaking or fellowſhip of the Body of Chriſt? And St. Auguſtine, Manduca vitam, Bibe vitam, i. Eat life, Drink life.

Then ſaid Mr. Pope, what can ye make of it, when ye ſay, There is not the real Body of Chriſt, which I do believe, &c. and I pray God I may never believe other. How can it bring (as ye ſay) either Life or Death, when Chriſts Body is not there?

Sir, quoth I, when you hear Gods Word truly preached, if you do believe it, and abide in it, ye ſhall and do receive life withal; and if ye do not believe it, it doth bring unto you death: and yet Chriſts Body is ſtill in Heaven, and not carnal in every Preachers mouth.

The Sacrament may bring life without Tranſubſtantiation.

I pray you tell me, quoth he, how can you anſwer to this, Quod pro vobis tradetur, Which ſhall be given for you. Was the figure of Chriſts Body given for us?

No Sir, quoth I, but the very Body it ſelf, whereof the Sacrament is a Sacramental figure.

How ſay you then, quoth he, to Quod pro vobis tradetur, Which ſhall be given for you?

Tertullianus.

Forſooth, quoth I, Tertullians Expoſition maketh it plain, for he ſaith, Corpus eſt figura corporis, i. The Body is a figure of the Body. Now put to Quod pro vobis tradetur, Which ſhall be given for you, and it agreeth exceeding well.

In faith, quoth he, I would give forty pound that ye were of a good Opinion. For I enſure you, I have heard you, and had an affection to you.

I thank you Mr. Pope for your heart and mind, and ye know, quoth I, I were a very Fool if I would in this matter diſſent from you, if that in my Conſcience the truth did not inforce me ſo to do. For I wiſs (as ye do perceive I trow) it is ſomewhat out of my way, if I would eſteem Worldly gain.

Gypriani.

What ſay ye, quoth he, to Cyprian? Doth he not ſay plainly, Panis quem dedit Dominus non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus eſt caro, i. The Bread which the Lord did deliver being changed, not according to the form, but according to the nature thereof, by the Omnipotent Word is made Fleſh.

Doctor Ridley falſly reported of, for a Sermon of his at Pauls.

True Sir, ſo he doth ſay, and I anſwer even the ſame which once by chance I preached at Pauls-Croſs in a Sermon, for the which I have been as unjuſtly and as untruly reported of, as any poor man hath been. For there I ſpeaking of the Sacrament, and inveighing againſt them that eſteemed it no better than a piece of Bread: told even the ſame thing of Pœnitentes, Andientes, Catechumeni, Energumeni, that I ſpake of before: and I bad them depart as unworthy to hear the myſtery; and then I ſaid to thoſe that be Sancti, Cyprian the Martyr ſhall tell you how it is that Chriſt calleth it, ſaying, Panis eſt corpus, cibus, potus, caro, &c. i. Bread is the Body, Meat, Drink, Fleſh, becauſe that unto this material Subſtance is given the property of the thing whereof it beareth the name: and this place then took I to utter as the time would then ſuffer, that the material Subſtance of Bread doth remain. Mr. Fecknam (which, as is reported to me, did bely me openly in the ſame matter at Pauls Croſs) heard all this my talk, as red as Scarlet in his Face, and herein anſwered me not a word.

You do well, quoth Mr. Secretary, that Origen and Tertullian were not Catholick, but erred.

None of all the Doctors holden in all points.

Sir, quoth I, there is none of all the Doctors that are holden in all points, but are thought to have erred in ſome things. But yet I never heard that it was either laid to Origens charge or to Tertullian, that ever they were thought to have erred in this matter of the Sacrament.

What, quoth Mr. Cholmley late Chief Juſtice, doth not Chriſt plainly ſay, that it is his very Fleſh, and his very Blood, and we muſt needs eat him, or elſe we can have no life? Sir, quoth I, if you will hear how St. Auguſtine expoundeth that place, you ſhall perceive that you are in a wrong Box. And then I began to tell St. Auguſtine's mind in his Book De Doctrina Chriſtiana; Yea, yea, quoth Mr. Secretary, that is true, St. Auguſtine doth it figuratively indeed.

S. Auguſtine taketh the words of the Sacrament figuratively by Bonners own Confeſſion.

Forty years ago, quoth Mr. Fecknam, all were of one Opinion in this matter.

Forty years ago, quoth I, all held that the Biſhop of Rome was Supream Head of the Univerſal Church.

What then? was Mr. Fecknam beginning to ſay, &c. but Mr. Secretary took the tale, and ſaid, that was but a poſitive Law.

A poſitive Law? quoth I; No Sir, he would not have it ſo: for it is in his Decrees, that he challenged it by Chriſts own word. For his Decree ſaith: Nullis Synodicis conſtitutis, neque conciliis, ſed viva voce Domini prælata eſt Eccleſia Romana omnibus Eccleſiis in toto mundo; dicente Domino Petro, tu es Petrus, &c. The Church of Rome was advanced above all other Churches in the World, not by any Synodical Conſtitutions, nor any Councils, but by the lively voice of the Lord, according as the Lord ſaid to Peter, Thou art Peter, &c. And in another place he intreateth, Tu es Cephas, ideſt, Caput. i. Thou art Cephas, that is to ſay, the Head.

Diſt. 22. Quamvis.

Tuſh, It was not counted an Article (quoth Mr. Secretary) of our Faith.

Yes, ſaid I, if ye call that an Article of our Faith, which is believed under pain of damnation. For he ſaith; Omnino definimus, declaramus, pronunciamus, omnem Creaturam ſubeſſe Romano Pontifici, de neceſſitate ſalutis, i. We do abſolutely determine, declare, and pronounce, that every Creature is ſubject to the obedience of the Biſhop of Rome upon neceſſity of Salvation.

And here when we ſpake of Laws and Decrees, Mr. Roger Cholmley thought himſelf much wronged, that he could not be ſuffered to ſpeak, the reſt were ſo ready to interrupt him: and then he up and told a long Tale, what Laws were of Kings in England made againſt the Biſhop of Rome, and was vehement to tell how they alway of the Clergy did fly to him. And here, becauſe he ſeemed to ſpeak of many things beſide our purpoſe, whereof we ſpake before, he was anſwered of his own Fellows, and I let them talk.

Finally, We departed in peace, and Mr. Secretary promiſed in the end, that of their talk there ſhould come to me no harm. And after I had made my moan for lack of my Books, he ſaid, they were all once given him: but ſith I know (ſaid he) who hath them now, write me the Names of ſuch as you would have, and I will ſpeak for you the beſt I can.

Doctor Ridley's Books given away.

Upon the Articles above-mentioned, and Inquiſition made upon the ſame, divers Miniſters were divorced from their Wives. Amongſt whom was one John Draper, and Joan Gold his Wife, in the Dioceſs of London, troubled and vexed for the ſame by Boner Biſhop of London, who ſent forth a Comiſſion with a Proceſs to ſequeſter and ſeparate them, enjoyning alſo penance to the poor Woman.

Miniſters divorced from their Wives.

Beſides this John Draper, divers others alſo were divorced the ſame time againſt their wills; und ſome were contented of their own unconſtant accord, to be ſeparated from their Wives: as of Chicheſter one, (who, becauſe he ſoon recovered again, ſhall be here nameleſs) another named Edmund Alſtone, another Alexander Bull, amongſt whom alſo was Dr. Standiſh, with many other; whoſe Names together in the end of this ſtory of Queen Mary, we may peradventure by Gods Grace in a general Catalogue together comprehend.

March 1554.

The 10*th* of March a Letter was ſent to the Lieutenant of the Tower to deliver the bodies of Mr. Doctor Cranmer the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Mr. Doctor Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, to Sir John Williams, to be conveyed by him unto Oxford.

The 26*th* of March there was a Letter directed to Sir Henry Doell, and one Foſter, to attach the bodies of Doctor Taylor Parſon of Hadley, and of Henry Askew, and to ſend them up to the Council.

How Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop, Biſhop Ridley, and Maſter Latimer, were ſent down to Oxford to diſpute, with the order and manner, and all other circumſtances unto the ſaid Diſputation, and alſo to their Condemnation appertaining.

April 10. Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, ſent down to Oxford to diſpute.

ABout the 10*th* of April, Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Ridley Biſhop of London, and Hugh Latimer Biſhop alſo ſometime of Worceſter, were conveyed as Priſoners from the Tower to Windſor; and after from thence to the Univerſity of Oxford, there to Diſpute with the Divines and Learned Men of both the Univerſities, Oxford and Cambridge, about the Preſence, Subſtance, and Sacrifice of the Sacrament. The Names of the Univerſity Doctors and Graduates appointed to Diſpute againſt them, were theſe; of Oxford, Doctor Weſton Prolocutor, Doctor Treſham, Doctor Cole, Doctor Oglethorpe, Doctor Pie, Maſter Harpsfield, Maſter Fecknam. Of Cambridge, Doctor Young Vice-Chancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Seaton, Doctor Watſon, Doctor Sedgewick, Doctor Atkinſon, &c. The Articles or Queſtions whereupon they ſhould Diſpute were theſe:

The Univerſity Doctors appointed to diſpute againſt the Archbiſhop and his Fellows.

Three Queſtions.

1. Whether the Natural Body of Chriſt be really in the Sacrament, after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, or no?
2. Whether in the Sacrament, after the words of Conſecration, any other Subſtance do remain, than the Subſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt?
3. Whether in the Maß be a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the Sins of the quick and the Dead?

Touching the order and manner of all which things there done, with the Notes, Arguments, and all Circumſtances thereunto pertaining, to deduce the matter from the beginning, leaving out nothing (as near as we may) that ſhall ſeem neceſſary to be added: Firſt, Here is to be underſtood, that upon Saturday the 7*th* day of April, the Heads of the Colledges in Cambridge being congregate together, Letters coming down from Stephen Gardiner Lord Chancellor, were read with Articles therewith annexed, that ſhould be diſputed upon at Oxford: the contents of which three Articles are ſufficiently expreſſed before. Whereupon in the ſaid Congregation of the aforeſaid Univerſity of Cambridge, there was granted firſt a Grace in this Form, propoſed by the Senior Proctor; Placet vobis ut inſtrumentum fiat, quod horum jam prælectorum Articulorum doctrina ſana ſit & Catholica, atque cum veritate Orthodoxæ fidei conſentiens, & veſtro conſenſu, & ſuffragiis comprobetur? that is, May it pleaſe you to have an Inſtrument made, that the Doctrine of theſe foreſaid Articles is ſound and Catholick, and conſonant with the verity of the right meaning Faith, and that the ſame may be approved by your conſent and voices? Secondly, In the ſaid Congregation, another Grace was given and granted, that Doctor Young being Vice-Chancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Atkinſon, Doctor Scot, and Maſter Sedgewick, ſhould go to Oxford to defend the ſaid Articles againſt Canterbury, London, and Latimer: Alſo to have Letters to the Oxford Men, ſealed with their Common Seal. Item, Another Grace granted to Maſter Sedgewick to be actual Doctor, being thereupon immediately admitted. The foreſaid Letters being then drawn out, the third day after (which was the 11*th* day of April) were read in the foreſaid Congregation-Houſe, and there ſealed.

Letters ſent down from Stephen Gardiner to Cambridge.

A Grace for Articles.

A Grace for the Cambridge Doctors to diſpute againſt Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer.

Whereupon the next day after (the 12*th* of the ſaid Month) the foreſaid Doctors, with the full Grace of that Univerſity, ſet forward to Oxford: and coming thither the next day after (being Friday, the 13*th* of April) were lodged all at the Croß-Inne, with one Wakeline, being ſometime Servant to Biſhop Boner.

The coming of the Cambridge Men to Oxford.

Anon

Anno 1554

Their welcoming to Oxford.

Anon after their coming, Dr. Crocke presented them with Wine for their Welcom; and shortly after two of the Beadles came from the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, and presented the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge with a Dish of Apples and a Gallon of Wine. After whom, next came Mr. Pie and Fecknam to welcom them. Then after consultation concerning the delivery of their Letters, and Instrument of Grace (which was in Dr. Seton & Dr. Watsons keeping) they went all to Lincoln Colledge to Dr. Weston the Prolocutor, and to the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Tresham: And there they delivered their Letters and declared what they had done touching the Articles, Letters, and Graces. Half an hour after Eight they returned to their Inn again: but first they concluded of a Procession, Sermon, and Convocation to be had the Morrow following, and that the Doctors of Cambridge should be incorporate in the University of Oxford, and likewise that the Doctors of Oxford should be incorporate in the University of Cambridge. The same Day the fore-named Prisoners were dissevered, as was said afore; Dr. Ridley to Alderman Irishes House, Mr. Latimer to another, and Doctor Cranmer remained still in Bocardo.

The Cambridge Doctors repair to Dr. Weston.

The three Prisoners, Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, dissevered.

On Saturday, being the 14*th* of April, at Eight of the Clock, the foresaid Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge with the other Doctors of the same Universty, repaired to Lincoln Colledge again, and found the Prolocutor above in a Chappel, with a Company of the House singing Requiem Mass, and tarried there until the end. Then they, consulting all together in the Masters lodging, about Nine of the Clock came all to the Universty Church called St. Maries: and there, after a short Consultation in a Chappel, the Vice-Chancellor, the Prolocutor, &c. of Oxford, caused the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, and the rest of the Doctors of that Universty, to send for their Scarlet-Robes, brought from Cambridge, save that Doctor Seaton and Watson borrowed of the Oxford Men. And in this time, the Regents in the Congregation-House had granted all the Cambridge Doctors their Graces, to be incorporate there; and so they went up, and were admitted immediately, Dr. Oglethorpe presenting them, and the Proctor reading the Statute and giving them their Oaths.

Consultation.

The Doctors in their Scarlet Robes.

That done, they came all into the Quire, and there held the Convocation of the Universty. They had Mass of the Holy Ghost solemnly sung in Prick-song by the Quire-men of Christs-Church. But first the Cause of the Convocation was opened in English, partly by the Vice-Chancellor, and partly by the Prolocutor, declaring that they were sent by the Queen, and wherefore they were sent, and caused Mr. Say the Register openly to read the Commission. That done, the Vice-Chancellor read Cambridge Letters openly, and then concluded, that three Notaries, Mr. Say for the Convocation, a Beadle of Cambridge for that Universty, and one Mr. White for Oxford, should testifie of their doing, and then willed the said Notaries to provide Parchment, that the whole Assembly might subscribe to the Articles, save those that had Subscribed before in the Convocation-House at London and Cambridge; and so the Vice-Chancellor began first after him the rest of the Oxford Men, as many as could in the Mass time.

Mass in Fike-sauce, in Prick-song I would say.

The causes of their Assembly declared.

Cambridge Letters read. Three Notaries assigned.

Subscribing to the Articles.

The Mass being done, they went in Procession: First, The Quire in their Surplices followed the Cross; then the first-year Regents and Proctors; then the Doctors of Law, and their Beadles before them; then the Doctors of Divinity of both Universities intermingled, the Divinity and Arts-Beadles going before them, the Vice-Chancelor and Prolocutor going together. After them Batchelors of Divinity, Regentes, & non Regentes, in their array; and last of all, the Batchelors of Law and Art. After whom followed a great company of Scholars and Students not graduate. And thus they proceeded through the Street to Christs-Church, and there the Quire sung a Psalm, and after that a Collect was read. This done, departed the Commissioners, Doctors, and many other to Lincoln Colledge, where they dined with the Mayor of the Town, one Alderman, four Beadles, Mr. Say and the Cambridge Notary. After Dinner they went all again to St. Maries Church; and there after a short consultation in a Chappel, all the Commissioners came into the Quire, and sate all on Seats before the Altar, to the number of 33 Persons: And first they sent to the Mayor, that he should bring in Dr. Cranmer, which within a while was brought to them with a number of rusty Bill-men.

Procession in Oxford. The Array of the solemn Procession.

Another Consultation of the Doctors and Priests.

Thus the Reverend Archbishop, when he was brought before the Commissioners, reverenced them with much humility, and stood with his Staff in his hand, who notwithstanding, having a Stool offered him, refused to sit. Then the Prolocutor sitting in the midst in a Scarlet Gown, began with a short Preface or Oration in praise of Unity, and especially in the Church of Christ; declaring withal his bringing up, and taking Degrees in Cambridge, and also how he was promoted by King Henry, and had been his Counsellor and a Catholick Man, one of the same Unity, and a Member thereof in times past, but of late years did separate and cut off himself from it, by teaching and setting forth of erroneous Doctrine, making every year a new Faith: and therefore it pleased the Queens Grace, to send them of the Convocation and other Learned men, to bring him to this Unity again, if it might be. Then shewed he him how they of the Convocation-House had agreed upon certain Articles, whereunto they willed him to subscribe.

Archbishop Cranmer brought before the Doctors and High-Priests at S. Maries Church. The Reverend humility and behaviour of the Archbishop before them.

The Archbishop answered to the Preface very wittily, modestly, and Learnedly, shewing that he was very glad of an Unity, forasmuch as it was Conservatrix omnium rerum publicarum, tam Ethnicorum quam Christianorum, i. The preserver of all Common-wealths, as well of the Heathen as of the Christians; and so he dilated the matter with one or two Stories of the Romans Commonwealth. Which thing when he had done, he said, That he was very glad to come to an Unity, so that it were in Christ, and agreeable to his holy Word.

The Answer of the Archbishop to Dr. Weston.

When he had thus spoken his full mind, the Prolocutor caused the Articles to be read unto him, and asked if he would grant and subscribe unto them. Then the Bishop of Canterbury did read them over three or four times, and touching the first Article, he asked what they meant by these terms, Verum & Naturale, i. True and Natural. Do you not mean, saith he, Corpus organicum, i. A sensible Body? Some answered, Idem quod natum est ex Virgine, i. The same that was born of the Virgin; and so confusedly, some said one thing, some another. Then the Bishop of Canterbury denied it utterly, and when he had looked upon the other two, he said they were all false, and against Gods holy Word: And therefore he would not agree, he said, in that Unity with them. Which done, the Prolocutor first willing him to write his mind of them that Night, said moreover that he should dispute in them, and caused a Copy of the Articles to be delivered him, assigning him to answer thereunto on Monday next, and so charged the Mayor with him again, to be had to Bocardo, where he was kept before; offering moreover unto him, to name what Books he would occupy, and should have them brought unto him. The Archbishop was greatly commended of every body for his modesty: insomuch, that some Masters of Art were seen to weep for him, which in Judgment were contrary to him.

The Articles denied by the Archbishop.

Scarborough. Warning given to Cranmer to Dispute.

Then was Dr. Ridley brought in, who, hearing the Articles read unto him, answered without any delay, saying, They were all false; and said further, That they sprang out of a bitter and sowr Root. His Answers were sharp, witty, and very earnest. Then did they lay to his charge a Sermon that he made when he was Bishop of Rochester, wherein (they said) he spake with Transubstantiation. He denied it utterly, and asked whether they could bring out any that heard him, which would say and affirm with them the same. They could bring no proof of it at all. After that, he was asked of one whether he desired not my Lord Chancellor that now is, to stick to the Mass, and other things? He said, That my Lord would say no such things or words of him; for if he did he reported not the truth of him.

Dr. Ridley brought in. Answer of Bishop Ridley to the Articles.

B. Ridley falsly reported for his Sermon.

Then he was asked, whether he would Dispute or no? He answered, That as long as God gave him life, he should not only have his Heart, but also his Mouth and Pen to defend his Truth; but he required time and Books. They said he could not, and that he should Dispute on Thursday, and till that time he should have Books. He said it was not reason that he might not have his own Books, and time also to look for his Disputations. Then gave they him the Articles, and bade him write his mind of them that Night, and ſo did they command the Mayor to have him from whence he came.

B. Ridley appointed to Dispute the next day after the Archbishop.

Mr Latimer brought in Laſt of all came in Mr. Latimer in like ſort, with a Kerchief, and two or three Caps on his Head, his Spectacles hanging by a ſtring at his Breaſt, and a Staff in his hand, and was ſet in a Chair; for ſo was he ſuffered by the Prolocutor. And after his denial of the Articles, when he had Wedneſday appointed for Diſputation, he alledged Age, Sickneſs, Diſ-uſe, and lack of Books, ſaying, That he was almoſt as meet to diſpute, as to be a Captain of Calice: but he would, he ſaid, declare his mind either by Writing or Word, and would ſtand to all they could lay upon his back; complaining moreover, That he was permitted to have neither Pen nor Ink, nor yet any Book but only the New Teſtament there in his hand, which he ſaid he had read over ſeven times deliberately, and yet could not find the Maſs in it, neither the Marrow-bones nor Sinnews of the ſame. At which words the Commiſſioners were not a little offended; and Dr. Weſton ſaid, That he would make him grant that it had both Marrow-bones and Sinnews in the New Teſtament. To whom Mr. Latimer ſaid again, That you will never do, Mr. Doctor, and ſo forthwith they put him to ſilence; ſo that where he was deſirous to tell what he meant by thoſe Terms, he could not be ſuffered: there was a very great preſs and throng of People, and one of the Beadles ſwouned by reaſon thereof, and was carried into the Veſtry. After this, bringing home the Prolocutor firſt, the Cambridge Men, viz. Doctor Young Vice-Chancellor, Seton, Glin, Atkinſon, Scot, Watſon, and Sedgewick, went to the Croſs-Inne to Supper. And this was on Saturday being the 14th day of April.

Mr. Latimer could not find the Maſs in all the New Teſtament. What he meaneth by the Marrow-bones of the Maſs, read after in his Proteſtation given in Writing to the Prolocutor.

April 14.

On Sunday after, Mr. Harpsfield preached at St. Maries the Univerſity Church, at Nine of the Clock, where were divers of the Doctors of the Univerſity in their Robes, and placed accordingly. After the Sermon they went all to Dinner to Magdalen Colledge, and there had a great Dinner. They Supped at Lincoln Colledge with the Prolocutor, whether Dr. Cranmer ſent anſwer of his mind upon the Articles in Writing.

April 16.

On Monday, being the 16th of April, Mr. Say, and Mr. White, Notaries, went about in the Morning to the Colledges, to get Subſcriptions to the Articles. And about 8 of the Clock the Prolocutor, with all the Doctors and the Vice-Chancellor, met together at Exeter Colledge, and ſo they went into the Schools, and when the Vice-Chancellor, the Prolocutor and Doctors were placed, and four appointed to be Exceptores Argumentorum, ſet at a Table in the midſt, and four Notaries ſitting with them, Dr. Cranmer came to the Anſwerers place, the Mayor and Aldermen ſitting by him, and ſo the Diſputation began to be ſet a work by the Prolocutor with a ſhort Præludium. Dr. Chedſey began to argue firſt, and e're he left, the Prolocutor divers times. Dr. Treſham, Oglethorp, Marſhal, Vice-Chancellor, Pye, Cole, and Harpesfield did interrupt and preſs him with their Arguments, ſo that every man ſaid ſomewhat, as the Prolocutor would ſuffer, diſorderly, ſometime in Latin, ſometime in Engliſh, ſo that three hours of the time was ſpent e're the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge began; who alſo was interrupted as before. He began with three or four Queſtions ſubtilly. Here the Beadles had provided Drink, and offered the Anſwerer; but he refuſed with Thanks. The Prolocutor offered him, if he would make Water, or otherwiſe eaſe himſelf, he ſhould. Thus the Diſputation continued until almoſt two of the Clock, with this Applauſion Audientium; vicit veritas. Then were all the Arguments written by the Four appointed, delivered into the hand of Mr. Say, Regiſter. And as for the Priſoner, he was had away by the Mayor; And the Doctors Dined together at the Univerſity Colledge.

Cranmer ſet in the Reſpondents place.

Dr. Cranmer cloſed in by the Mayor and Aldermen for running away.

Diſputers againſt the Archbiſhop.

The Archbiſhop offered Drink.

Dr. Cranmer after diſputation returned again to Towerdr.

And thus much concerning the general order and manner of theſe Diſputations, with ſuch Circumſtances as there happened, and things there done, as well before the Diſputation, and in the preparation thereof, as alſo in the time of their Diſputing. Now followeth to infer and declare the Orations, Arguments, and Anſwers, uſed and brought forth in the ſaid Diſputations on both parts.

The Arguments, Reaſons, and Allegations uſed in this Diſputation. Anno 1554.

ON Monday, Doctor Weſton, with all the reſidue of the Viſitors, Cenſors, and Opponents, repairing to the Divinity School, each one enſtalled themſelves in their places. Dr. Cranmer with a rout of Ruſty Bills was brought thither, and ſet in the Anſwerers place, with the Mayor and Aldermen ſitting by him. Where Dr. Weſton Prolocutor, apparelled in a Scarlet-Gown, after the Cuſtom of the Univerſity, began the Diſputation with this Oration. His Words in Latin, as he ſpake them, were theſe. April 16.

Conveniſtis hodie, fratres, profligaturi deteſtandam illam hæreſin de veritate corporis Chriſti in Sacramento, &c. that is, Ye are aſſembled hither, Brethren, this day, to confound the deteſtable Hereſie of the Verity of the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, &c. At which Words thus pronounced of the Prolocutor unawares, divers of the Learned Men there preſent, conſidering and well weighing the words by him uttered, burſt out into a great Laughter, as though, even in the entrance of the Diſputations, he had betrayed himſelf and his Religion, that termed the Opinion of the Verity of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament a deteſtable Hereſie. The reſt of his Oration tended all to this effect, That it was not lawful by Gods Word to call theſe Queſtions into Controverſie: for ſuch as doubted of the words of Chriſt, might well be thought to doubt both of the Truth and Power of God. Whereunto Dr. Cranmer deſiring licenſe, anſwered in this wiſe.

Dr. Weſton ſpeaketh truer than he was.

We are aſſembled (ſaith he) to diſcuſs theſe doubtful Controverſies, and to lay them open before the eyes of the World; whereof ye think it unlawful to diſpute. It is indeed no reaſon (ſaith he) that we ſhould diſpute of that which is determined upon, before the Truth be tried. But if theſe Queſtions be not called into Controverſie, ſurely mine Anſwer then is looked for in vain. This was the ſum and effect of his Anſwer; and this done he prepared himſelf to Diſputation.

Dr. Cranmer's Anſwer to the Preface.

Then Chedſey the firſt Opponent began in this wiſe to Diſpute.

Dr. Chedſey.

Reverend Mr. Doctor, theſe three Concluſions are put forth unto us at preſent to Diſpute upon;

Articles.

1. In the Sacrament of the Altar is the Natural Body of Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and alſo his Blood preſent really under the forms of Bread and Wine, by virtue of Gods Word pronounced by the Prieſt.

2. There remaineth no Subſtance of Bread and Wine after the Conſecration, nor any other Subſtance, but the Subſtance of God and Man.

3. The lively Sacrifice of the Church is in the Maſs Propitiatory, as well for the quick as the dead.

Theſe be the Concluſions propounded, whereupon this our preſent Controverſie doth reſt. Now to the end we might not doubt how you take the ſame, you have already given up unto us your Opinion thereof. I term it your Opinion, in that it diſagreeth from the Catholick. Wherefore I thus argue.

Argument.

Ched. Your Opinion differeth from the Scripture.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Cran. I deny the Antecedent.

Ched. Chriſt when he inſtituted his laſt Supper, ſpake to his Diſciples, Take, eat, this is my Body which ſhall be given for you.

But his true Body was given for us:

Ergo, His true Body is in the Sacrament.

Argument.

The right form of this Argument is thus to be framed.

Da- The ſame which was given for us is in the Sacra-ment.

ri- But his true Body was given for us:

i. Ergo, His true Body is in the Sacrament.

Anſwer. How Chriſts Body is preſent in the Sacrament.

Cran. His true Body is truly preſent to them that truly receive him; but ſpiritually. And ſo it is taken after a Spiritual ſort. For when he ſaid, This is my Body, it is all one as if he had ſaid, This is the breaking of my Body, This is the ſhedding of my Blood. As oft as you ſhall do this, it ſhall put you in remembrance of the breaking of my Body, and the ſhedding of my Blood; that as truly as you receive this Sacrament, ſo truly ſhall you receive the benefit promiſed by receiving the ſame worthily.

Ched.

Anno 1554.

Ched. Your Opinion differeth from the Church, which saith that the true Body is in the Sacrament.

Argument of the Authority of the Church. Answer.

Ergo, Your Opinion therein is false.

Cran. I say and agree with the Church, that the Body of Christ is in the Sacrament effectually, because the Passion of Christ is effectual.

Ched. Christ when he spake these words, This is my Body, spake of the Substance, but not of the effect.

Christs Body effectually, not substantially in the Sacrament.

Cran. I grant he spake of the Substance, and not of the Effect after a sort: and yet it is most true that the Body of Christ is effectually in the Sacrament. But I deny that he is there truly present in Bread, or that under the Bread is his organical Body. And because it should be too tedious (he said) to make discourse of the whole, he delivered up there his Opinion thereof to Doctor Weston written at large, which answers to every one of their three Propositions: which he desired Dr. Weston, sitting there on high, to read openly to the People; which he promised to do. But it was not the first Promise that such Papists have broken.

Papists false of Promise.

The Copy of this Writing although it were not there read, yet the Contents thereof we have drawn out as followeth.

An Explication of Cranmer upon the foresaid Conclusions exhibited in Writing.

The Contents of Cranmer's Explication, given up in Writing.

Cranmer. In the Assertions of the Church and of Religion, trifling and new fangled Novelties of words, so much as may be, are to be eschewed, whereof ariseth nothing but contention and brawling about words, and we must follow, so much as we may, the manner of speaking of the Scripture.

How Christ is really present.

In the first Conclusion, if ye understand by this word (Really) Re ipsa, i. in very deed and effectually, so Christ by the grace and efficacy of his Passion, is in deed and truly present to all his true and holy Members.

Organical, is called that which is a Piece or Body having all the members and parts compleat belonging to the same.

But if ye understand by this word (Really) Corporaliter, i. Corporally; so that by the Body of Christ is understood a Natural Body and Organical; so the first Proposition doth vary, not only from the usual Speech and Phrase of Scripture, but also is clean contrary to the holy Word of God, and Christian Profession: when as both the Scripture doth testifie by these words, and also the Catholick Church hath professed from the beginning, Christ to have left the World, and to sit at the right hand of the Father till he come to Judgment.

Answer to the second Conclusion.

And likewise I answer to the second Question; that is, That it swerveth from the accustomed manner and speech of Scripture.

Answer to the third Conclusion.

The third Conclusion, as it is intricate and wrapped in all doubtful and ambiguous words, and differing also much from the true speech of the Scripture, so as the Words thereof seem to import no open sense, is most contumelious against our only Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus, and a violating of his precious Blood, which upon the Altar of the Cross is the only Sacrifice and Oblation for the Sins of all Mankind.

The third Conclusion contumelious against Christ.

Ched. By this your Interpretation which you have made upon the first Conclusion, this I understand, the Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament only by the way of Participation: insomuch as we communicating thereof, do participate the Grace of Christ, so that you mean hereby only the effect thereof. But our Conclusion standeth upon the Substance, and not the Efficacy only, which shall appear by the testimony both of Scriptures, and of all the Fathers a Thousand years after Christ.

Matth. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22.

And first to begin with the Scripture, let us consider what is written in Matt. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. and 1 Cor. 11. Matthew saith, As they sate at Supper, Jesus took Bread, &c. In Mark there is the same sense, although not the same words, who also for one part of the Sacrament speaketh more plainly, Jesus taking Bread, &c. After the same sense also writeth Luke 22. And when Jesus had taken Bread, &c. In the mouth of two or three Witnesses, saith the Scripture, standeth all Truth. Here we have three Witnesses together, that Christ said that to be his Body which was given for many, and that to be his Blood which should be shed for many; whereby is declared the Substance, and not only the Efficacy alone thereof. Ergo, It is not true that that you say, there to be not the Substance of his Body, but the Efficacy alone thereof.

Substance and Efficacy both granted in the Sacrament.

Cran. Thus you gather upon mine Answer, as though I did mean of the Efficacy, and not of the Substance of the Body; but I mean of them both, as well of the Efficacy as of the Substance. And forsomuch as all things come not readily to memory, to a man that shall speak extempore, therefore for the more ample and fuller Answer in this matter, this Writing here I do exhibit.

An Explication exhibited by Cranmer.

Another Explication for Answer, exhibited in writing by the Archbishop.

OUr Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, at the time of his Maundy, preparing himself to dye for our Cause, that he might redeem us from Eternal death, to forgive us all our Sins, and to cancel out the Hand-writing that was against us; that we through ungrateful Oblivion should not forget his Death, therefore at the time of his Holy Supper did institute a perpetual memory of this his Death, to be celebrated among Christians in Bread and Wine, according as it is said: Do this in remembrance of me. And so often as you eat this Bread and drink this Cup, you shall shew forth the Lords death till he come. And this Remembrance or Sacrament of his holy Passion, that is, of his Body slain, and Blood shed, he would all Christians to frequent and celebrate in Bread and Wine, according as he said, Take eat, and drink ye all of this. Therefore whosoever for mans Tradition denieth the Cup of Christs Blood to Lay men, they manifestly repugn against Christ, forbidding that which Christ commandeth to be done, and be like to those Scribes and Pharisees of whom the Lord spake; Ye hypocrites, ye have rejected the Commandments of God for your Traditions. Well did Esay prophesie of you, saying, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Without cause do they worship me, teaching the Doctrines and Precepts of men. The Sacrament and mystical Bread being broken and distributed after the Institution of Christ, and the mystical Wine being likewise taken and received, be not only Sacraments of the Flesh of Christ wounded for us, and of his Blood-shedding, but also be most certain Sacraments for us, and (as a man would say) Seals of Gods Promises and Gifts, and also of that holy Fellowship which we have with Christ and all his Members. Moreover, they be to us Memorials of that Heavenly food and nourishment, wherewith we are nourished unto Eternal life, and the thirst of our boyling Conscience quenched, and finally, whereby the hearts of the Faithful be replenished with unspeakable Joy, and be corroborated and strengthened unto all works of godliness. We are many (saith St. Paul) one Bread, and one Body, all we which do participate of one Bread, and one Cup. And Christ saith: Eat ye, this is my Body. And, Drink ye, this is my Blood. And, I am the living Bread which came down from Heaven. He that eateth me, shall also live for ever. Not as your Fathers did eat Manna in the Desart, and are dead: He that eateth me, shall also live for ever.

Matth. 26. Luke 6. John 6.

Sacraments Seals of Gods Promises.

1 Cor. 11.

Bread and Wine remain still in the Eucharist, and be Seals to us annexed with Gods Promises.

Thus therefore true Bread and true Wine remain still in the Eucharist, until they be consumed of the Faithful, to be Signs, and as Seals unto us annexed unto Gods Promises, making us certain of Gods Gifts towards us. Also Christ remaineth in them, and they in Christ, which eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, as Christ himself hath promised: They that eat my Flesh, and drink my Blood, abide in me, and I in them. Moreover, he abideth also in them which worthily receive the outward Sacrament, neither doth he depart so soon as the Sacrament is consumed, but continually abideth, feeding and nourishing us so long as we remain Bodies of that Head, and Members of the same. I acknowledg not here the Natural Body of Christ, which is only Spiritual, unintelligible, and Insensible, having no distinction of Members and Parts in it: But that Body only I acknowledge and worship, which was born of the Virgin, which suffered for us, which is visible, palpable, and hath all the Form, and Shape, and Parts of the true Natural Body of Man. Christ spake not these words of any uncertain Substance, but of the certain Substance of Bread, which he then held in his Hands, and shewed his Disciples when he said, Eat ye, this is my Body: And likewise of the Cup, when he said, Drink ye, this is my Blood meaning verily of that Bread which by nature is uſual and common with us, which is taken out of the Fruit of the ground, compacted by the uniting of many Grains together made by Man, and by Mans hand brought to that viſible ſhape, being of round compaſs, and without all ſenſe or life, which nouriſheth the Body, and ſtrengthneth the Heart of Man: Of this ſame Bread (I ſay) and not of any uncertain and wandring Subſtance, the Old Fathers ſay that Chriſt ſpake theſe words, Eat ye, this is my Body. And likewiſe alſo of the Wine, which is the Creature and Fruit of the Vine preſſed out of many Cluſters of Grapes, and maketh Mans Heart merry, of the very ſame Wine (I ſay) Chriſt ſpake, Drink ye, this is my Blood. And ſo the Old Doctors do call this ſpeaking of Chriſt Tropical, Figurative, Anagogical, Allegorical, which they do interpret after this ſort, that although the Subſtance of Bread and Wine do remain, and be received of the Faithful, yet notwithſtanding Chriſt changed the appellation thereof, and called the Bread by the name of his Fleſh, and the Wine by the name of his Blood, Non rei veritate, ſed ſignificante myſterio, i. Not that it is ſo in very deed, but ſignified in a myſtery. So that we ſhould conſider, not what they be in their own nature, but what they import to us and ſignifie, and ſhould underſtand the Sacrament not carnally, but ſpiritually, and ſhould attend not to the Viſible nature of the Sacraments, neither have reſpect only to the outward Bread and Cup, thinking to ſee there with our Eyes no other things but only Bread and Wine, But that lifting up our Minds we ſhould look up to the Blood of Chriſt with our Faith, ſhould touch him with our Mind, and receive him with our Inward man, and that being like Eagles in this life, we ſhould fly up into Heaven in our Hearts, where that Lamb is reſident at the Right hand of his Father, which taketh away the Sins of the World, by whoſe Stripes we are made whole; by whoſe Paſſion we are filled at his Table, and whoſe Blood we receiving out of his holy Side, do live for ever, being made the Gueſts of Chriſt, having him dwelling in us through the Grace of his true Nature, and through the virtue and efficacy of his whole Paſſion, being no leſs aſſured and certified, that we are fed Spiritually unto Eternal life by Chriſts Fleſh crucified, and by his Blood ſhed, the true Food of our Minds, than that our Bodies be fed with Meat and Drink in this life: and hereof this ſaid myſtical Bread on the Table of Chriſt, and the myſtical Wine, being adminiſtred and received after the Inſtitution of Chriſt, be to us a Memorial, a Pledge, a Token, a Sacrament, and a Seal.

Christs words are spoken not of an uncertain Substance, but of a certain Substance of Bread.

How the Doctors do take the Speech of Chriſt. Tropical, Figurative, Anagogical, Allegorical. Bread called by the name of the Body.

In the Sacrament is to be conſidered not what it is in Nature, but what it ſignifieth in Myſtery.

The Sacrament is a Memorial, a Pledge, a Token, a Sacrament, and a Seal.

And thereof it is that Chriſt ſaith not thus; This is my Body, eat ye; but after he had bidden them eat, then he ſaid, This is my Body, which ſhall be given for you. which is to mean, as though he ſhould ſay, In eating of this Bread, conſider you that this Bread is no common thing, but a Myſtical matter; neither do you attend that which is ſet before your bodily Eyes, but what feedeth you within: Conſider and behold my Body crucified for you, that eat and digeſt in your Minds, Chew you upon my Paſſion, be fed with my Death, this is the true Meat, this is the Drink that moiſteneth, wherewith you being truly fed, and inebriate, ſhall live for ever. The Bread and Wine which be ſet before your Eyes are only Declarations of Me, but I my ſelf am the Eternal Food. Wherefore whenſoever at this my Table you ſhall behold the Sacraments, have not regard ſo much to them, as conſider ye what I promiſe to you by them, which is my Self to be Meat for you of Eternal life.

What is meant by eating the Myſtical Bread.

What the Crucified Body of Chriſt doth to our Souls.

The only Oblation of Chriſt (wherewith he offered himſelf to God the Father once to death upon the Altar of the Croſs for our Redemption) was of ſuch Efficacy, that there is no more need of any Sacrifice for the Redemption of the whole World, but all the Sacrifices of the Old Law he took away, performing that in very deed, which they did ſignifie and promiſe. Whoſoever therefore ſhall fix the hope of his Salvation in any other Sacrifice, he falleth from the Grace of Chriſt, and is contumelious againſt the Blood of Chriſt. For He was wounded for our Tranſgreſſions, and was broken for our Iniquities. All we like ſheep have wandred aſtray. Every man hath turned after his own way, and the Lord hath laid all our Iniquities upon him. For he hath entred once for all into the Holy place by the Blood, not of Goats or Calves, but by his own Blood, finding eternal Redemption: And hath entred into Heaven, to appear now in the ſight of God for us, not to offer himſelf often-times (for ſo ſhould he have ſuffered many times) but now hath he appeared once to put away ſin, through his own Oblation. And as it is appointed to all men once to dye, ſo alſo Chriſt once was offered: Who offering up one Oblation for Sins, ſitteth now for ever on the right hand of God. For by one Oblation hath he made perfect for ever thoſe that be ſanctified. For where is remiſſion of Sins, there is now no Oblation for Sin, but this only Sacrifice of Chriſt; whoſoever ſhall ſeek any other Sacrifice Propitiatory for Sin, maketh the Sacrifice of Chriſt of no validity, force, or efficacy. For if it be ſufficient to remit Sins, what need is there of any other? For the neceſſity of another argueth and declareth this to be inſufficient. Almighty God grant that we may truly lean to one Sacrifice of Chriſt, and that we to him again may repay our Sacrifices of Thankſgiving, of Praiſe, of Confeſſing his Name, of true Amendment, of Repentance, of Mercifulneſs towards our Neighbours, and of all other good Works of Charity. For by ſuch Sacrifices we ſhall declare our ſelves neither ingrateful to God, nor altogether unworthy of this holy Sacrifice of Chriſt. And thus you have out of the Teſtimonies of holy Scripture, and of the Ancient Doctors of the Church, the true and ſincere uſe of the Lords holy Supper, and the fruit of the true Sacrifice of Chriſt. Which whoſoever through captious or wreſted Interpretations, or by mens Traditions, ſhall go about, otherwiſe than Chriſt ordained them, to alter or Tranſubſtantiate, he ſhall anſwer to Chriſt in the latter Day, when he ſhall underſtand (but then too late) that he hath no participation with the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but that out of the Supper of Eternal life he hath eaten and drunken eternal Damnation to himſelf.

Anno 15[illegible]

Heb. 9.

Heb. 9. 27.

No Sacrifice now for Sin, but One.

Chriſt ſacrificed once for Sin, we ſacrifice daily by Thankſgiving, and thankful works of Charity.

Weſt. Becauſe we will not conſume and ſpend the time in waſte, this your Writing which you exhibit, hereafter ſhall be read in this place. In the mean ſeaſon let us now fall to the Arguments.

Ched. The Scriptures in many places do affirm, that Chriſt gave his Natural Body, Matth. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22.

Argument.

Ergo, I do conclude that the Natural Body is in the Sacrament.

Cran. To your Argument I anſwer: If you underſtand by the Body Natural (Organicum,) that is, having ſuch proportion and members as he had living here, then I Anſwer Negatively.

Anſwer.

Furthermore, Concerning the Evangeliſts, thus I ſay and grant, that Chriſt took Bread, and called it his Body.

Ched. The Text of the Scripture maketh againſt you, for the Circumſtance thereto annexed doth teach us, not only there to be the Body, but alſo teacheth us what manner of Body it is, and ſaith, The ſame Body which ſhall be given.

Ba. That thing is here contained, that is given for us.

Argument.

ro. But the Subſtance of Bread is not given for us.

co. Ergo, The Subſtance of Bread is not here contained.

Anſwer.

Cran. I underſtand not yet what you mean by this word Contained: If ye mean Really, then I deny your Major.

This word (Contained) diſtinguiſhed. The Body of Chriſt contained not Really, but Sacramentally.

Ched. The Major is the Text of Scripture. He that denieth the Major, denieth the Scripture. For the Scripture ſaith, This is my Body which is given for you.

Cran. I grant he ſaid it was his Body which ſhould be given, but he ſaid it was not his Body which is here contained; but the Body (ſaith he) that ſhall be given for you. As though he ſhould ſay, This Bread is the breaking of my Body, and this Cup is the ſhedding of my Blood. What will ye ſay then? is the Bread the breaking of his Body, and the Cup the ſhedding of his Blood really? if you ſay ſo, I deny it.

Ched. If you ask what is the Thing therein contained; becauſe his Apoſtles ſhould not doubt what Body it was that ſhould be given, he ſaith, This is my Body which ſhall be given for you, and my Blood which ſhall be ſhed for many. Ergo, Here is the ſame Subſtance of the Body, which the day after was given, and the ſame Blood which was ſhed. And here I urge the Scripture, which teacheth that it was no phantaſtical, no feigned, no Spiritual Body, nor Body in Faith, but the Subſtance of the Body.

Chriſt ſaith not, This is my Body which is here contained; but, This is my Body which ſhall be given for you.

Cran.

Luy 53.

Anno 1554.

Cran. You muſt prove that it is contained, but Chriſt ſaid not which is contained. He gave Bread, and called that his Body. I ſtick not in the words of the Scripture, but in your word, which is feigned and imagined of your ſelf.

Ched. When Chriſt took Bread and brake it, what gave he?

Cran. He gave Bread. The Bread Sacramentally, and his Body Spiritually, and the Bread there he called his Body.

Ched. This Anſwer is againſt the Scripture, which ſaith, that he gave his Body.

Cran. It did ſignifie that which he did eat.

Ched. They did not eat the Body as the Capernaites did underſtand it, but the ſelf ſame Body which was given for the Sins of the World. Ergo, It was his Body which ſhould be given, and his Blood which ſhould be ſhed.

In ſome other Copies I find this Argument to be made by Chedſey.

Argument. Ba- The ſame Body is in the Sacrament, which was given for us on the Croſs.

ro- But Bread was not given on the Croſs for us:

co. Ergo, Bread is not given in the Sacrament.

Anſwer. Cran. I deny the Major, which is, that the ſame Natural Body is given in the Sacrament, which was given on the Croſs, except you underſtand it Spiritually. And after he denied alſo the Argument as utterly naught, as he might well do, the Major in the ſecond Figure being not univerſal.

When Mr. Chedſey had put forth his Argument, and proſecuted the ſame, and Dr. Cranmer anſwered as before is ſhewed, Dr. Oglethorpe, one of thoſe Doctors which the Prolocutor called Cenſores (belike to be Arbiters to order the Diſputations) ſaid on this wiſe.

Dr. Oglethorp breaketh Triſtram's head, and ſpeaketh falſe Latin. Cranmer anſwereth to Oglethorpe, Dr. Cranmer might have found fault with this Argument as well as with his Latin, being made in no mood or figure.

D. Ogle. You come in ſtill with one evaſion or ſtarting hole to flee to. He urgeth the Scriptures, ſaying that Chriſt gave his very Body. You ſay, that he gave his Body in Bread. Quomodo prædicatur corpus? qualis eſt corpus? qualis eſt prædicatio? panis eſt corpus.

Cran. You ſhould ſay, Quale corpus. I anſwer to the Queſtion: It is the ſame Body which was born of the Virgin, was crucified, aſcended; but tropically, and by a figure. And ſo I ſay, Panis eſt corpus, is a figurative Speech, ſpeaking Sacramentally, for it is a Sacrament of his Body.

Ogle. This word Body, being prædicatum, doth ſignifie Subſtance.

But Subſtantia is not predicated denominatively.

Ergo, It is an Eſſential predication, and ſo it is his true Body, and not the figure of his Body.

Cran. Subſtantia may be predicated denominatively in an Allegory, or in a Metaphor, or in a Figurative locution.

Ogle. It is not a likely thing that Chriſt hath leſs care for his Spouſe the Church, than a wiſe Houſholder hath for his Family in making his Will or Teſtament.

Your Reaſon is drawn out of the affairs of Men, and not taken out of the holy Scriptures.

Ogle. But no Houſholder maketh his Teſtament after that ſort.

Tropes may be uſed in mens Teſtaments: why not? Cran. Yes, there are many that ſo do. For what matter is it ſo it be underſtood and perceived? I ſay Chriſt did uſe figurative Speech in no place more than in his Sacraments, and ſpecially in this of his Supper.

Ogle. No man of purpoſe doth uſe Tropes in his Teſtament, for if he do, he deceiveth them that he comprehendeth in his Teſtament: therefore Chriſt uſeth none here.

Cran. Yes, He may uſe them well enough. You know not what Tropes are.

Ogle. The good Man of the houſe hath reſpect that his Heirs, after his departure, may live in quiet and without brabling.

But they cannot be in quiet if he do uſe Tropes: Therefore (I ſay) he uſeth no Tropes.

Cran. I deny your Minor.

Auguſtine incarnate Euchariſt. Weſt. Auguſtine in his Book intituled De unitate Eccleſiæ the 10th Chapter, hath theſe words following:

Quid hoc eſt rogo? cum verba noviſſima hominis morientis audiantur ituri ad inferos, nemo eum dicit eſſe mentitum, & illius non judicatur hæres qui forte ea contemſerat. Quomodo ergo effugiemus iram Dei, ſi vel non credentes, vel contemnentes, expulerimus verba noviſſima, & unici filii Dei & Domini noſtri Salvatoris, & ituri in cælum, & inde proſpecturi, quis ea negligat, quis non obſervet, & inde venturi ut de omnibus judicet?

A place of Auguſtine recited by the Prolocutor.

That is to ſay,

What a thing is this I pray you, when the laſt words of one lying upon his Death-bed are heard which is ready to go to his Grave; no man ſaith that he hath made a Lye, and he is not accounted his Heir which regardeth not thoſe Words. How ſhall we then eſcape Gods Wrath, if either not believing or not regarding we ſhall reject the laſt Words both of the only Son of God, and alſo of our Lord and Saviour, both aſcending into Heaven, and beholding from thence, who deſpiſeth, who obſerveth them not; and ſo ſhall come from thence to judge all Men.

The Argument is thus formed:

Argument Bar- Whoſoever ſaith that the Teſtator lyeth, is a wicked Heir, ba- But whoſoever ſaith that Chriſt ſpake by figures, ſaith that he did lye.

ra. Ergo, Whoſoever ſaith that Chriſt here ſpake by Figures, is a wicked Heir.

Anſwer. Cran. I deny the Minor. As who ſay it is neceſſary, that he which uſeth to ſpeak by Tropes and Figures ſhould lye in ſo doing.

Ogle. Your Judgment is diſagreeing with all Churches.

Cran. Nay, I diſagree with the Papiſtical Church.

Ogle. This you do through the ignorance of Logick.

Cran. Nay, this you ſay through the Ignorance of the Doctors.

Weſton. I will go plainly to work by Scriptures. What took he?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. What gave he?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. What brake he?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. What did he eat?

Cran. Bread.

Argument. Weſt. He gave Bread, therefore he gave not his Body. He gave not his Body, therefore it is not his Body verily, and in deed and in truth.

Cran. I deny the Argument.

Diſparata is a School term, meaning diverſe Subſtances, being ſo ſundred in nature, that one can never be ſaid to be the other. Cole. This Argument holdeth, à diſparatis: It is Bread, Ergo, It is not the Body; and it is ſuch an Argument or Reaſon, as cannot be diſſolved.

Cran. The like Argument may be made. He is a Rock, Ergo, He is not Chriſt.

Cole. It is not alike.

Weſt. He gave not his Body indeed: Ergo, It was not his Body indeed.

The Sacrament, ſetting the Figure aſide, formally is not Chriſts Body. Cran. He gave his Death, his Paſſion, and the Sacrament of his Paſſion. And in very deed, ſetting the Figure aſide, formally it is not his Body.

Weſt. Why? then the Scripture is falſe.

Cran. Nay, the Scripture is moſt true.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 61. Weſt. This ſaith Chryſoſtom, Homil. 61. ad Pop. Antioch. Neceſſarium eſt, dilectiſſimi, myſteriorum dicere miraculum quid tandem ſit; & quare ſit datum, & quæ rei utilitas, &c.

That is to ſay,

Needful it is (Dear Friends) to tell you what the miracle of the Myſteries is, and wherefore it is given, and what profit there is of the thing. We are one Body, and Members of his Fleſh and of his Bones. We that be in the Myſtery, let us follow the thing which was ſpoken. Wherefore that we may become this thing, not only by love, but alſo that we may become one with that Fleſh indeed, that is brought to paſs by this food, which he gave unto us, minding to ſhew his great good will that he hath towards us: and therefore he mixed himſelf with us, and united his own Body with us, that we ſhould be made all as one thing together, as a Body joyned and annexed to the Head, for this is a token of moſt ardent and perfect love. And the ſame thing Job alſo inſinuating, ſaid of his Servants, of whom he was deſired above meaſure, inſomuch that they, ſhewing their great deſire toward him, ſaid, who ſhall give unto us to be filled with his Fleſh? Therefore alſo Chriſt did the ſame, who, to induce us into a great love toward him, and to declare his deſire towards us, did not only give himſelf to be ſeen of them that would, but alſo to be handled and eaten, and ſuffered us to faſten our Teeth in his Fleſh, and to be united together, and ſo to fill all our deſire. Like Lions therefore, as breathing fire, let us go from that Table, being made terrible to the Devil, remembring our Head in our mind, and his Charity which he ſhewed unto us. For Parents many times give their Children to other to be fed, but I do not ſo (ſaith he) but feed you with mine own Fleſh, and ſet my ſelf before you, deſiring to make you all jolly People, and pretending to you great hope and expectation to look for things to come, who here give my ſelf to you, but much more in the World to come. I am become your Brother, I took fleſh and blood for you. Again, my Fleſh and Blood, by the which I am made your Kinſman, I deliver unto you.

Thus much out of Chryſoſtom. Out of which words I make this Argument.

Dr. Weſtons Argument without true form or figure.

The ſame Fleſh whereby Chriſt is made our Brother and Kinſman, is given of Chriſt to us to be eaten.

Chriſt is made our Brother and Kinſman, by his true, natural, and organical Fleſh.

Ergo, His true, natural, and organical Fleſh, is given to us to be eaten.

Dr. Weſtons Argument denied: we are the true Body of Chriſt: Ergo, we eat it with our Mouth. A figureleſs Argument.

Cran. I grant the conſequence, and the conſequent.

Weſt. Therefore we eat it with our mouth.

Cran. I deny it. We eat it through Faith.

Weſt. He gave us the ſame Fleſh to eat whereby he became our Brother and Kinſman.

But he became our Brother and Kinſman by his true, natural, and organical Fleſh.

Therefore he gave his true, natural, and organical Fleſh to be eaten.

Cran. I grant he took and gave the ſame true, natural, and organical Fleſh wherein he ſuffered, and yet he feedeth us ſpiritually, and that Fleſh is received ſpiritually.

Fallacia dicto ſecundum quid ad ſimpliciter.

Weſt. He gave us the ſame Fleſh which he took of the Virgin.

But he took not the true Fleſh of the Virgin ſpiritually, or in a figure.

Ergo, He gave his true natural Fleſh, not ſpiritually.

Cran. Chriſt gave to us his own natural Fleſh, the ſame wherein he ſuffered, but feedeth us ſpiritually.

Anſwer. Chryſoſtom alledged by Dr. Weſton. Hom. 83. in 26. c. Matth.

Weſt. Chryſoſtom is againſt you, Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Matth. where he ſaith; Veniat tibi in mentem quo ſis honore honoratus, qua menſa fruaris. Ea namque re nos alimur, quam Angeli, &c.

That is to ſay;

Let it come into thy remembrance with what honour thou art honoured, and what Table thou ſitteſt at: for with the ſame thing we are nouriſhed, which the Angels do behold and tremble at: neither are they able to behold it without great fear, for the brightneſs which cometh thereof; and we be brought and compact into one heap or maſs with him, being together one Body of Chriſt, and one Fleſh with him. Who ſhall ſpeak the powers of the Lord, and ſhall declare forth all his Praiſes? What Paſtor hath ever nouriſhed his Sheep with his own Members? Many Mothers have put forth their Infants after their birth to other Nurſes: which he would not do, but feedeth us with his own Body, and conjoyneth and uniteth us to himſelf.

Whereupon I gather this Argument.

Another falſe Argument, wherein the third figure the Minor is a Negative.

Like as Mothers nurſe their Children with Milk, ſo Chriſt nouriſheth us with his Body.

But Mothers do not nouriſh their Infants ſpiritually with their Milk:

Therefore Chriſt doth not nouriſh thoſe that be his ſpiritually with his Blood.

Anſwer. Argument.

Cran. He gave us the Wine for his Blood.

Weſt. If he gave the Wine for his Blood (as you ſay) then he gave leſs than Mothers do give.

But Chryſoſtom affirmeth, that he gave more than Mothers give.

Therefore he gave not the Wine for his Blood.

Cran. You pervert mine Anſwer. He gave Wine, yet the Blood is conſidered therein. As for Example: When he giveth Baptiſm, we conſider not the Water, but the Holy Ghoſt, and Remiſſion of Sins. We receive with the mouth the Sacrament; but the thing and the matter of the Sacrament we receive by Faith.

Weſt. When Chriſt ſaid, Eat ye, whether meant he by the Mouth or by Faith?

Cran. He meant that we ſhould receive the Body by Faith, the Bread by the Mouth.

Weſt. Nay, the Body by the Mouth.

Cran. That I deny.

Weſt. I prove it out of Chryſoſtom, writing upon the 50th Pſalm.

Eruheſcit fieri nutrix, quæ facta eſt mater: Chriſtus autem non ita ipſe nutritor eſt noſter: ideo pro cibo carne propria nos paſcit, & pro potu ſuum ſanguinem nobis propinavit. Item in 26. Matthæi, Homil. 83. Nec enim ſufficit ipſi hominem fieri, flagellis interim cædi: ſed nos ſecum in unam, ut ita dicam, maſſam reducit, neque id fide ſolùm, ſed re ipſa nos corpus ſuum efficit.

That is to ſay;

She that is a Mother, ſhameth ſometime to play the Nurſe. But Chriſt our Nurſe doth not ſo play with us. Therefore inſtead of Meat he feedeth us with his own Fleſh, and inſtead of Drink he feedeth us with his own Blood. Likewiſe, upon the 26th Chapter of Matthew, the 83 Homily, he ſaith: for it ſhall not be enough for him to become Man, and in the mean while to be whipped; but he doth bring us into one maſs or lump with himſelf (as I may ſo call it) and maketh us his Body, not by Faith alone, but alſo in very deed.

Cran. I grant, we make one Nature with Chriſt. But that to be done with Mouth I deny.

Weſt. Chryſoſt. 2 Cor. cap. 13. Hom. 29. hath theſe words, Non vulgarem honorem conſequuntur eſt os noſtrum, accipiens corpus Dominicum, i. No little honour is given to our Mouth, receiving the Body of the Lord.

Cran. This I ſay, that Chriſt entreth into us both by our Ears and by our Eyes. With our Mouth we receive the Body of Chriſt, and tear it with our Teeth, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt. Wherefore I ſay and affirm, that the virtue of the Sacrament is much: and therefore Chryſoſtom many times ſpeaketh of Sacraments no otherwiſe, than of Chriſt himſelf, as I could prove, if I might have liberty to ſpeak, by many places of Chryſoſtom, where he ſpeaketh of the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt.

With which word of the Sacrament of the Body, &c. D. Cole being highly offended, denied it to be the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, ſave only of the Myſtical Body which is the Church.

Cran. And why ſhould we doubt to call it the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, offered upon the Croſs, ſeeing both Chriſt and the Ancient Fathers do ſo call it?

Cole. How gather you that of Chryſoſtom?

Cran. Chryſoſtom declareth himſelf, Lib. 3. de Sacerdotio, cap. 3. O miraculum, O Dei in nos benevolentia, qui ſurſum ſedet ad dextram Patris, ſacrificii tamen tempore hominum manibus continetur, traditurque lambere cupientibus eum! Fit autem id nullis præſtigiis, ſed apertis & circumſpicientibus circumſtantium omnium oculis.

That is to ſay;

O Miracle, O the good Will of God towards us, which ſitteth above at the Right hand of the Father, and is holden in mens hands at the Sacrifices time, and is given to feed upon, to them that are deſirous of him! And that is brought to paſs by no ſubtilty or craft, but with the open and beholding Eyes of all the Standers-by.

Thus you hear Chriſt is ſeen here in Earth every day, is touched, is torn with the Teeth, that our Tongue is red with his Blood; which no Man having any Judgment will ſay or think to be ſpoken without Trope or Figure.

Weſt. What Miracle is it if it be not his Body, and if he ſpake only of the Sacrament, as though it were his Body?

But

Anno 1554.

Chriſt nouriſheth us both with Bread and with his Body: with Bread our Bodies, with his Body our Souls.

A groſs ſaying.

Chryſ. alledged by Dr. Weſton. Chryſ. in Pſal. 50. Item Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Matth.

Chryſoſtom alledged by D. Weſton. Hom. 29. in Epiſt. 2 Cor. cap. 13.

The words of Chryſoſtom expounded.

Dr. Cole denieth the Sacrament to be a Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt but only a Sacrament of the Congregation, that is, of the myſtical Body of Chriſt.

Chryſoſtom alledged by Dr. Cranmer. Chryſ. lib. 3. de Sacerd. cap. 3.

Anno 1554.

But hearken what Chryſoſtom ſaith, Hom. 34. Quod ſummo honore dignum eſt, id tibi in terra oſtendo. Nam quemadmodum in Regiis non parietes, non lectus aureus, ſed regium corpus in throno ſedens omnium præſtantiſſimum eſt: Ita quoque in cœlis Regium corpus, quod hunc in terra proponitur. Non Angelos, non Archangelos, non cœlos cœlorum, ſed ipſum horum omnium Dominum tibi oſtendo. Animadvertis quonam pacto, quod omnium maximum eſt, atque præcipuum in terra, non conſpicaris tantum ſed tangis, neque ſolum tangis, ſed comedis, atque eo accepto domum redis. Abſterge igitur ab omni ſorde animam tuam.

That is to ſay.

Chryſoſtom alledged by Dr. Weſton. Chryſ. hom. 34.

I ſhew forth that thing on the Earth unto thee, which is worthy the greateſt Honour. For like as in the Palace of Kings, neither the Walls, nor the ſumptuous Bed, but the body of Kings ſitting under the cloth of Eſtate, and Royal Seat of Majeſty, is of all things elſe the moſt Excellent: ſo is in like manner the Kings Body in Heaven, which is now ſet before us on Earth. I ſhew thee neither Angels nor Archangels, nor the Heaven of Heavens, but the very Lord and Maſter of all theſe things. Thou perceiveſt after what ſort thou doeſt not only behold, but toucheſt, and not only toucheſt, but eateſt that which on the Earth is the greateſt and chiefeſt thing of all other, and when thou haſt received the ſame, thou goeſt home; wherefore cleanſe thy Soul from all Uncleanneſs.

Upon this, I conclude that the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the Earth.

How the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the Earth.

Cran. What? upon the Earth? no Man ſeeth Chriſt upon the Earth: He is ſeen with the Eyes of our Mind, with Faith and Spirit.

Weſt. I pray you, what is it that ſeemeth worthy higheſt Honour on the Earth? Is it the Sacrament, or elſe the Body of Chriſt?

Cran. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh of the Sacrament, and the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth in the Sacrament.

Weſt. Ergo, Then the Sacrament is worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. I deny the Argument.

Weſt. That thing is ſhewed forth, and is now in the Earth (oſtenditur) & (a) (eſt) which is worthy higheſt Honour.

(a) This word (Eſt) is not in Chryſoſtom. This Argument of Weſton, ſtanding only upon affirmatives in the ſecond figure, hath no perfect form in Logick.

But only the Body of Chriſt is worthy higheſt Honour.

Ergo, The Body of Chriſt is now on the Earth.

Cran. I anſwer, the Body of Chriſt to be on the Earth, but ſo as in the Sacrament, and as the Holy Ghoſt is in the Water of Baptiſm.

Weſt. Chryſoſtom ſaith (oſtendo) I ſhew forth, which noteth a Subſtance to be preſent.

Cran. That is to be underſtood Sacramentally.

Weſt. He ſaith (oſtendo in terra) I ſhew forth on Earth, declaring alſo the place where.

Cran. That is to be underſtood Figuratively,

Cranmer anſwereth to the place of Chryſoſtom, how Chriſt is ſhewed forth on the earth, not bodily, but in a Sacrament, that is, Sacramentally and figuratively.

Weſt. He is ſhewed forth, and is now on the Earth, &c. as before.

Cran. Your Major and Concluſion are all one.

Weſt. But the Major is true: Ergo, the Concluſion alſo is true.

That thing is on the Earth, which is worthy of moſt high Honour.

But no Figure is worthy of higheſt Honour.

Ergo, That which is on the Earth, is no Figure.

Cran. I anſwer, that is true Sacramentally.

Weſton falſifieth the words of Chryſoſtom.

Here Weſton crieth to him, that he ſhould anſwer to one part, bidding him repeat his Words. Which when he went about to do, ſuch was the Noiſe and crying out in the School, that his mild Voice could not be heard. For when he went about to declare to the People how the Prolocutor did not well Engliſh the Words of Chryſoſtom, uſing for oſtenditur in terra, He is ſhewed forth on the Earth, eſt in terra, He is on the Earth, whereas Chryſoſtom hath not (Eſt) nor any ſuch word of being on the Earth, but only of ſhewing, as the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, in Baptiſmo oſtenditur, i. is ſhewed forth in Baptiſm: and oftentimes he did inculcate this word oſtenditur. Then the Prolocutor, ſtretching forth his hand, ſet on the rude People to cry out at him, filling all the School with hiſſing, clapping of hands, and noiſe, calling him indoctum, imperitum, impudentem, i. unlearned, unſkilful, impudent. Which impudent and reproachful words this Reverend Man moſt patiently and meekly did abide, as one that had been inured with the ſuffering of ſuch-like reproaches. And when the Prolocutor, not yet ſatisfied with this rude and unſeemly demeanour, did urge and call upon him to anſwer the Argument: Then he bad the Notary repeat his Words again.

Unreverend words of the ſchool againſt Dr. Cranmer.

Notary. That which is worthy moſt high Honour, here I ſhew forth to thee on Earth.

The Body of Chriſt is worthy higheſt Honour.

Ergo, He ſheweth forth the Body of Chriſt here in Earth.

The Body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth to us here in earth divers ways: as in reading of the Scriptures, ſometimes in hearing Sermons, and alſo in Sacraments, and yet neither the Scriptures, the Sermons, nor Sacraments are to be worſhipped.

Cran. That is ſhewed forth here on the Earth which may be ſeen, which may be touched, and which may be eaten, but theſe things be not true of the Body.

Cole. Why ſhould not theſe things be true of the Body of Chriſt?

Cran. The Major out of Chryſoſtom is true, meaning of the Sacraments. For in the Sacrament the true Body of Chriſt, and not the Figurative Body, is ſet forth.

Weſt. Shew me ſomewhat in Earth worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. I cannot, but in the Sacrament only.

Weſt. Ergo, The Sacrament is worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. So it is.

Judges. Let it be written.

Cran. I pray you let my Anſwer be written likewiſe: I affirm, that the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth unto us. It is our Faith that ſeeth Chriſt.

Weſt. Oſtendo tibi, i. I ſhew it to thee, ſaith Chryſoſtom, not to thy Faith.

Cran. He ſpeaketh Sacramentally.

Weſt. Ergo, Chryſoſtom lieth. For he, ſpeaking of ſhewing, ſaith: Ego Chryſoſtomus oſtendo, i. I Chryſoſtom do ſhew. But he can ſhew nothing Sacramentally.

Ched. By force of Argument we are brought to this Point, That the Body of Chriſt is proved to be on Earth, not only Sacramentally, but in very deed alſo, by this reaſon, that it is worthy higheſt Honour. The reaſon is indiſſoluble.

Cran. I never heard a more vain Argument, and it is moſt vain; alſo it hath mine Anſwer unto it.

Ched. Will you affirm, that it is abſurd which Chriſoſtom ſaith, that the Body of Chriſt is touched?

I touch the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as Thomas touched Chriſt.

Thomas touched Chriſt, and ſaid, Dominus meus, Deus meus, my Lord, my God.

Ergo, That which he touched was the Lord, the God.

The Argument of Chedſey is not formal

¶ This Argument, as I received it out of the Notaries Book, is not formal; but rather he ſhould conclude in the third Figure thus:

Da- As Thomas touched the Body of Chriſt, ſo we touch it in the Sacrament.

ti- Thomas touched the Body of Chriſt Corporally.

ſi. Ergo, We touch the Body of Chriſt Corporally in the Sacrament.

God cannot be touched.

Cran. I deny your Argument. He touched not God, but him which was God. Neither is it found Doctrine to affirm, that God is touched.

Ched. This is becauſe of the Union; ſo that God is ſaid to be touched, when Chriſt, which is both God and Man, is touched.

Tertul. de Reſurrectione carnis. Quod Symbolorum eſt, Rei attribuitur.

Tertullian de carnis Reſurrectione, ſaith, Videamus de propria Chriſtiani hominis forma, quanta huic ſubſtantiæ frivolæ & ſordidæ apud Deum prærogativa ſit. Etſi ſufficeret illi, quòd nulla omnino anima ſalutem poſſet adipiſci niſi, dum eſt in carne, crediderit: adeò caro ſalutis cardo eſt, de qua cum anima Deo alligatur, ipſa eſt quæ efficit ut anima alligari poſſit; ſed & caro abluitur, ut anima emaculetur; caro ungitur, ut anima conſecretur; ſignatur, ut anima muniatur; caro manûs impoſitione adumbratur, ut anima Spiritu illuminetur; caro corpore & ſanguine Chriſti veſcitur, ut anima de Deo ſaginetur.

That is to ſay.

Let us conſider as concerning the proper form of the Chriſtian Man, what great Prerogative this vain and foul ſubſtance of ours hath with God. Although it were ſufficient to it, that no Soul could ever get Salvation, unleſs it believe while it is in the fleſh: ſo much the fleſh availeth to Salvation; by the which fleſh it cometh, that whereas the Soul ſo is linked unto God, it is the ſaid fleſh that cauſeth the Soul to be linked: Yet the Fleſh moreover is waſhed that the the Soul may be cleansed; the Flesh is anointed that the Soul may be consecrated; the Flesh is signed, that the Soul may be defended; the Flesh is shadowed by the Imposition of Hands, that the Soul may be illuminated with the Spirit; the Flesh doth eat the Body and Blood of Christ, that the Soul may be fed of God. Whereupon I gather this Argument.

Argument. The Flesh eateth the Body of Christ.

Ergo, The Body of Christ is eaten with the Mouth.

Phoceus 1 Cor. ca. 11. Item Phoceus 1 ad Cor. cap. 11. upon these words, Reus erit Corporis & Sanguinis, &c.

Phoceus alledged by Chedsey. Ὁ ἔνοχος τοῦ σώματος καὶ τοῦ αἵματος, τοῦτο δηλοῖ, ὅτι καθάπερ παρέδωκε μὲν αὐτὸν ὁ Ἰούδας, παρῴνησαν εἰς αὐτὸν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι. οὕτως ἀτιμάζουσι ἀκαθάρτοις δεχόμενοι, ὡς Ἰουδαῖοι κρατοῦντες αὐτὸν τότε καὶ κατασπάτω προσφέροντες στόματι. Διὰ δὲ τὸ εἰπεῖν πολλάκις τοῦ σώματος καὶ αἵματος τοῦ Κυρίου, δηλεῖ, ὅτι ἄνθρωπος ψιλὸς ὁ θυόμενος, ἀλλὰ αὐτὸς ὁ Κύριος ὁ ποιητὴς πάντων, ὡς δῆθεν διὰ τούτων ἐκφοβῶν αὐτούς, i. Quòd ait, reus corporis & sanguinis, istud declarat, quod sicuti Judas ipsum quidem tradidit, Judæi contumeliosè in ipsum insaniebant: Sic ipsum inhonorant qui sanctissimum ipsius corpus impuris manibus suscipiunt, & tanquam Judæi ipsi tenent & execrabili ore recipiunt. Quòd crebro mentionem facit corporis & sanguinis Domini, manifestat, quòd non sit simplex homo qui sacrificatur, sed ipse Dominus omnium Factor, tanquam per hæc quidem ipsos perterrefaciens.

That is to say.

Whereas he saith, Is guilty of the Body and Blood, this he declareth, that like as Judas betrayed him, and the Jews were fierce and spiteful against him; so do they dishonour him, which receive his Holy Body with their Impure Hands, and as the Jews did hold him then, do now receive him with Impure Mouths. And whereas he often maketh mention of the Body and Blood of the Lord, he declareth, that it is not simply Man that is sacrificed, but even the Lord himself, being the Maker of all things, hereby (as it were) making them afraid.

Ergo, (As it is hereby gathered) the Body of Christ is touched with the Hands.

Cran. You vouch two Authors against me upon sundry things. First, I must answer Tertullian, and then the other.

Ched. They tend both to one Meaning.

Answer to Tertullianus. Cran. Unto Tertullian I answer (because our Disputation is wandring and uncertain) that he calleth that the Flesh which is the Sacrament. For although God work all things in us invisibly beyond Mans reach, yet they are so manifest, that they may be seen, and perceived of every sense. Therefore he setteth forth Baptism, Unction, and last of all the Supper of the Lord unto us, which he gave to signifie his Operation in us. The Flesh liveth by the Bread, but the Soul is inwardly fed by Christ.

D. Weston urgeth him with the words of Tertullian. West. Stick to those words of Tertullian, Corpus vescitur, ut anima saginetur, id est, The Body eateth, that the Soul may be fed.

Ched. The Flesh eateth the Body of Christ, that the Soul may be fed therewith.

West. Here you see two kinds of Food, of the Soul and of the Body.

Ched. He saith, that not only the Soul, but the Flesh is also fed.

Cran. The Soul is fed with the Body of Christ, the Body with the Sacrament.

Ched. Is the Soul fed with the Body of Christ, and not with the Sacrament?

Inwardly we eat the Body, outwardly the Sacrament. Cran. Read that which followeth, and you shall perceive, that by things External, an Operation Internal is understood. Inwardly we eat Christs Body, and outwardly we eat the Sacrament. So one thing is done outwardly, another inwardly. Like as in Baptism the External Element whereby the Body is washed, is one; the Internal thing, whereby the Soul is cleansed, is another.

(a) The form of this Argument which he repeateth, stood better before: for the form of this connexion answereth to none of the three Figures of Syllogisms.

Ched. The Soul is fed by that which the Body eateth.

But the Soul is fed by the Flesh of Christ.

Ergo, The Body eateth the Flesh of Christ.

Cran. We eat not one thing outwardly and inwardly. Inwardly we eat Christs Body: Outwardly we eat the Sacrament.

Ched. I will repeat the Argument.

(a) The Flesh eateth Christs Body, that the Soul may be fed therewith.

The Soul is not fed with the Sacrament, but with Christs Body.

Ergo, The Flesh eateth the Body of Christ.

Cran. The Sacrament is one thing, the Matter of the Sacrament is another. Outwardly we receive the Sacrament; Inwardly we eat the Body of Christ.

Ched. I prove, that we receive that outwardly wherewith the Soul is fed.

The Soul is fed with the Body of Christ.

Ergo, We eat the Body of Christ outwardly. Consequence

The Flesh eateth Christ his Body.

Ergo, The Soul is fed therewith. Consequence

Cran. The Flesh (I say) eateth the Sacrament; it eateth not Christs Body. For Tertullian speaketh of the Sacrament; and the place hath not (inde) thereof, but (de Deo) of God. Answer.

Ched. What say you to Phoceus saying? They which receive the Body with Impure Hands, are guilty of the Lords Blood, as Judas was.

West. That which followeth in Tertullian doth take away your shift, whereas he saith, Non possunt ergo separari in mercede, quos operâ conjungit, i. They cannot be separated in reward, whom one work joyneth together.

But manducation, i. the Work, or Labour; Ergo, &c.

The Form of this Argument may be thus collected.

Da- One work or labour joyneth Body and Soul together.

ri- Manducation is a Work, or Labour.

i. Ergo, One Manducation joyneth together both Body and Soul.

(a) To the major of which Argument, thus it may be answered, expounding the saying of Tertullian, Una opera conjungit, sed non idem operandi modus. Again, opera here in Tertullian may be taken for Temptations and Afflictions.

(a) As the Body and Soul are joyned in the work of Baptism, so are they joyned in the communion of the Lords Supper. For as the Flesh is washed with Water, that the Soul may be purged spiritually; so one body eateth the outward Sacrament, that the soul may be fed of God.

(b) Cran. Your Authority (I suppose) is taken out of the Book, De Resurrectione carnis, i. of the Resurrection of the Flesh: And the meaning thereof is this. Tertullian goeth about there to prove, that the Flesh shall rise again, because it is joyned together in one work with the Soul. Through Baptism in this World the Body is washed, and the Soul is washed: The Body outwardly, the Soul inwardly, the work is one. In this work they are joyned: and he speaketh of Signs.

(b) Answer to Tertullian de resurrect.

West. He speaketh of Eating in a Sign.

Ergo. The Reward is in a Sign.

Cran. They are coupled in one Work, namely, in the Sacrament.

West. There are two Works.

Ergo, There are two Rewards.

If the Work be in a Figure.

Ergo, The Reward is in a Figure.

Cran. He speaketh not of two Works. Two Works are but one Work. And yet he saith not, Quos una opera conjungit, i. Whom one Work joyneth together, but opera, i. A Work: As in Baptism the Soul and Body are joyned in Understanding.

West. The Flesh and Soul shall have one and the self same Reward, because they have one Work.

Cran. Because they be joyned together in one Work,

D. Tresham disputeth. Tres. Forasmuch as the Reverend Doctors here have impugned, and overthrown your Assertion and your Answers sufficiently: I will fall to another matter, not altogether impertinent to the Purpose, and that in few words, against a certain Sequel of your Opinion. The Sequel is this; That between us and Christ there is no further Conjunction, whiles we receive the Eucharist, than a Conjunction of the Mind, or a Spiritual Conjunction, whereby we are united and knit unto Christ through Faith and Love. As for the Presence of Christ concerning the Substance, that you utterly deny. Whereupon in very deed you leave but a Spiritual Union and joyning together of Mind. Howbeit you would seem to think otherwise by your subtil Answers: But I will declare by manifest Testimonies of the Fathers, that this your Sequel, which you account so sure, is far wide from the Truth. And I will begin with S. Hilary, who is both an Ancient and Learned Author. For disputing against the Arrians, Octavo de Trinitate, he saith, that this was their Opinion; That the Father and the Son are conjoyned only through Unity of Will. Whereupon Arrius himself, when Scripture was alledged against him, him, did (as you do now) elude the right meaning of it by his false Interpretations. But the Catholick Church hath always believed and ever maintained, That Christ is one with the Father in Nature, and not by consent of Will only. To the proof whereof, when the Catholicks vouched this Testimony of John, Pater & Ego unum sumus, i. The Father and I are one: The Arrians Answered, that (unum sumus) was to be understood by the assent of their Wills, and agreement of their Minds, not by Unity of their Natures. Thus it happeneth now adays, where Men do doubt of the Sacrament. But Hilary going on, and proving the Natural conjunction between the Father and the Son à fortiori; questioneth with his Adversaries after this manner. I demand of them now which will needs have the Unity of Will only between the Father and the Son, whether Christ be now in us truly by Nature, or only by the agreement of Wills. If (saith he) the word be incarnate in very deed, and we receive at the Lords Table the Word made flesh, how then is he to be thought not to dwell in us naturally, who being born Man, hath both taken the nature of our Flesh upon him that is now inseparable, and hath also mingled that nature of his own Flesh unto the nature of Eternity under the Sacrament of his Flesh, to be communicated unto us? Thus much hath Hilary. Whereupon I ask of you this question; How Christ dwelleth now in us? according to Faith, or according to Nature?

Anno 1554.

Conjunction between Christ and us.

Answer to Hilary.

Cran. I say that Christ dwelleth verily in us Carnally and Naturally, for that he hath taken of the Virgin our Flesh upon him, and because he hath communicated his Nature unto us.

Bucer contra Abrincensem alledged by Tresham.

Tresh. Bucer contra Abrincensem, referreth these words only to the Eucharist, saying, Christ doth exhibit all this unto us in his holy Supper, and according to the holy Fathers (saith he) Christ liveth thereby in us, not only by faith and love, as absent, but naturally, corporally, and carnally. Wherefore he is not absent, neither are we joyned to Christ only by a spiritual Union (as you suppose) but also by a corporal and carnal Union.

Cran. I know that Mr. Bucer was a Learned man. But your Faith is in good case, which leaneth upon Bucer.

Thresh. I do not bring Bucer as a Patron of our Faith, but because he is a man of your sort, and yet bringeth this place of Hilary for that Union which we have by the Sacrament, and confesseth, that by it we are Carnally united to Christ, whereas you think we are joyned by it only through Faith and Love.

Christ communicated and united to us by Birth, by Unity of the Church, by the Communion, by Baptism, by Faith.

Cran. I say that Christ was communicated unto us, not only by Faith, but in very deed also when he was born of the Virgin. We have fellowship with Christ, when we are united in the Unity of the Church, when we are made flesh of his Flesh, and bones of his Bones; and so we are united in the Communion, in Baptism, and in Faith.

Thresh. I pray you what fellowship have we with Christ, in that he is made Man? Are not the Turks and Jews therein joyned with him? For they are Men as we are, and are joyned with him in Mans nature, in that he was born of a Woman. I speak now of a more near Unity. We are made one with Christ by the Communion in a perfect Unity.

We are united to Christ by Communion so as we are by Baptism.

Cran. We are made so, I grant: but we are made so also by Baptism; and the Unity in Baptism is perfect.

Thresh. We are not made one by Baptism in a perfect Unity, as Hilary there speaketh, but by the Communion, by which we are carnally made one, but not likewise by Baptism: wherefore you understand not Hilary. You shall hear his words, which are these: He had now declared afore the Sacrament of his perfect Union, saying; As the living Father sent me, so do I also live by the Father. And he that eateth my Flesh, shall also live through me. And a little after that he writeth thus: This truly is the cause of our Life, that we have Christ dwelling by his Flesh in us that are fleshly, which also by him shall live in such sort as he liveth by his Father. Wherefore of these Words it is manifest, that we obtain this perfect Unity by means of the Sacrament, and that Christ by it is Carnally united unto us.

Objection of Hilary.

Answer to the place of Hilary.

Cran. Nay, Hilary in that same place doth teach, that it is done by Baptism: and that Doctrine is not to be suffered in the Church, which teacheth, that we are not joyned to Christ by Baptism.

West. Repeat the Argument.

Cran. You must first make an Argument.

Thresh. It is made already, but it shall be made again in this form:

Argument.

Da. As Christ liveth by his Father, so they that eat Christs Flesh live by the same flesh.

ti. But Christ liveth by the Father, not only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

fi. Ergo, We live not through the eating of Christs flesh, by Faith and Love only, but Naturally.

Cran. We live by Christ, not only by Faith and Love, but Eternally indeed.

Thresh. Nay, (b) Naturally; I prove it thus:

(b) The Papists by this one word Naturally confound themselves. For if the Natural Body of Christ were eaten, and went naturally into our Bodies, then should it follow, that the nature of his Body being Immaculate, and now also Immortal, our Bodies united in Nature to his pure and Immortal Body, naturally should never sin nor dye. Whereforе it remaineth, that the Natural uniting to Christs Body, cometh not by the bodily eating of the Sacrament, unto our Body, not to our Soul, and so shall redound at length unto our Bodies. If that Union of the Substance of Flesh should be granted unto our Bodies, then should our Bodies never dye, nor see corruption, The same Argument again repeated. Answer.

As Christ liveth by the Father, so live we by his Flesh eaten of us.

But Christ liveth not by his Father, only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

Therefore we do not live by eating of Christs Flesh only by Faith and Love (as you suppose,) but Naturally.

Cran. The Minor is not true.

Thresh. This is the Opinion of Arrius, That Christ is united to his Father by conjunction of Mind, and not Naturally.

Cran. I say not so yet, neither do I think so: But I will tell you what I like not in your Minor. You say, That Christ doth not live by his Father only by Faith and Love: but I say, That Christ liveth not at all by his Faith.

West. Mark and consider well this word (by Faith) lest any occasion of Cavilling be given.

Thresh. Let that word (by Faith) be omitted. Neither did I mean, that Christ liveth by his Father through Faith. Yet the strength of the Argument remaineth in force; for else Hilary doth not confute the Arrians, except there be a greater conjunction between us and Christ, when he is eaten of us, than only a Spiritual conjunction. You do only grant an Union. As for a Carnal or Natural Union of the Substance of Flesh, by which we are joyned more than Spiritually, you do not grant. But our Lord Jesus give you a better Mind, and shew you the light of his Truth, that you may return into the way of Righteousness.

West. We came hither to Dispute, and not to Pray.

Tres. Is it not lawful to pray for them that Err?

West. It is not lawful yet. But proceed.

Tres. Again, I reason thus; As Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner do we live by the eating of his Flesh.

But Christ liveth not by his Father, only in unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo, We do not live when we eat the Flesh of Christ, only by Faith and Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Cran. This is my Faith, and it agreeth with the Scripture, Christ liveth by his Father Naturally, and maketh us to live by himself indeed Naturally, and that not only in the Sacrament of the Eucharist, but also in Baptism. For Infants, when they are baptized, do eat the Flesh of Christ.

West. Answer either to the whole Argument, or to the parts thereof. For this Argument is strong, and cannot be dissolved.

Cran. This is the Argument:

The Archbishop repeateth the Argument.

As Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner do we live by his Flesh, being eaten of us.

But Christ liveth not by his Father only in Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo, We eating his Flesh do not live only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

But the Major is false; namely, That by the same manner we live by Christ, as he liveth by his Father.

West. (a) Hilary saith, After the same manner, upon these words, He that eateth my Flesh shall live by me. Ergo, Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner we shall live by his Flesh. Here you see, that Hilary saith, After the same manner.

(a) Christ not after his Manhood, but after his Divine Nature, liveth naturally by his Father, which Divine Nature of his worketh also in his Manhood an Immortality: So our Spirit and Soul, receiving the Natural body of Christ in the Mysteries, by Faith do receive also the nature of his Body, that is, his Pureness, Justification, and Life: the operation whereof redounding likewise unto our Bodies, doth make the same also capable of the same Glory and Immortality. And thus it is true that as Christ liveth Naturally by his Father, so we live Naturally by the Body of Christ eaten in the Mysteries, having respect both to the Man-hood of him and us. For as the Flesh of Christ in respect of bare Flesh, liveth not Naturally by the Father, but for that it is joyned to his Divinity: So our Flesh liveth not naturally by Christs Body eaten in the Sacrament (for then every wicked Man eating the Sacrament should live Naturally by him) but for that our Flesh is joyned to the Spirit and Soul, which truly eateth the Body of Christ by Faith: and so only the Bodies of the Faithful do live by eating the Body of Christ naturally, in participating the Natural properties of the Body of Christ.

Cran.

Cran. After the ſame manner, doth not ſignifie alike in all things, but indeed and eternally: for ſo do we live by Chriſt, and Chriſt liveth by his Father: For in other reſpects Chriſt liveth otherwiſe by his Father, than we live by Chriſt.

Weſt. He liveth by his Father naturally and eternally.

Ergo, We live by Chriſt naturally and eternally.

Cran. We do not live naturally, but by Grace, if you take Naturally for the manner of Nature; as Chriſt hath Eternal life of his Father, ſo have we of him.

Weſt. I ſtick to this word Naturally.

Cran. I mean it touching the truth of Nature. For Chriſt liveth otherwiſe by his Father, than we live by Chriſt.

Naturally expounded.

Weſt. Hilary in his Eighth Book De Trinitate, denyeth it, when he ſaith: He liveth therefore by his Father, and as he liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner we ſhall live by his Fleſh.

Cran. We ſhall live after the ſame manner, as concerning the Nature of the Fleſh of Chriſt: For as he hath of his Father the Nature of Eternity, ſo ſhall we have of him.

Weſt. Anſwer unto the Parts of the Argument.

The Argument the third time repeated.

As Chriſt liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner ſhall we live by his Fleſh.

But Chriſt doth not live by his Father only in Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo, We eating of his Fleſh, do not live only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

Cran. I grant (as I ſaid) we live by Chriſt naturally: but I never heard that Chriſt liveth with his Father in Unity of Will only.

Weſt. Becauſe it ſeemeth a Marvel unto you, hear what Hilary ſaith: Theſe things are recited of us to this end, becauſe the Hereticks, feigning an Unity of Will only between the Father and the Son, did uſe the Example of our Unity with God, as though we being United to the Son, and by the Son to the Father only by Obedience and Will of Religion, had no propriety of the Natural Communion by the Sacrament of the Body and Blood.

But anſwer to the Argument. Chriſt liveth by his Father Naturally and Eternally: Therefore do we live by Chriſt Naturally and Eternally.

Cran. Cyril and Hilary do ſay, that Chriſt is united to us not only by Will, but alſo by Nature: He doth communicate to us his own Nature, and ſo is Chriſt made one with us Carnally and Corporally, becauſe he took our Nature of the Virgin Mary. And Hilary doth not ſay only that Chriſt is naturally in us, but that we alſo are naturally in him, and in the Father; that is, that we are Partakers of their Nature, which is Eternity, or Everlaſtingneſs. For as the Word, receiving our Nature, did joyn it in Unity of Perſon, and did communicate unto that our Nature, the Nature of his Eternity, that like as he, being the Everlaſting Word of the Father, had everlaſting Life of the Father; even ſo he gave the ſame Nature to his Fleſh. Likewiſe alſo did he communicate with us the ſame Nature of Eternity, which he and the Father have, and that we ſhould be one with them, not only in Will and Love, but that we ſhould be alſo Partakers of the nature of everlaſting Life.

Ex exemplari manu Cranmeri deſcripto.

Naturally expounded, that is, our Bodies to participate the nature and properties of Chriſts Holy Immortal Body.

Weſt. Hilary, where he ſaith, Chriſt communicated to us his Nature, meaneth that not by his Nativity, but by the Sacrament.

Cran. He hath communicated to us his Fleſh by his Nativity.

Weſt. We have communicated to him (b) our Fleſh when he was born.

b Then had Chriſt a ſinfull Fleſh.

Cran. Nay, he communicated to us his Fleſh, when he was born, and that I will ſhew you out of Cyril upon this place, Et homo factus eſt.

Weſt. Ergo, Chriſt being born, gave us his Fleſh.

c That is, made us partakers of the properties, life, innocency, and reſurrection of his Body.

Cran. In his Nativity he made us (c) Partakers of his Fleſh.

Weſt. Write, Sirs.

Cran. Yea, write.

Dr. Chedſey again diſputeth. Hilar. 8. de Trinit.

Ched. This place of Hilary is ſo dark, that you were compelled to falſifie it in your Book, becauſe you could not draw it to confirm your Purpoſe.

If Chriſt have taken verily the Fleſh of our Body, and the Man that was verily born of the Virgin Mary is Chriſt, and alſo we receive under the true Myſtery the Fleſh of his Body, by means whereof we ſhall be one (for the Father is in Chriſt, and Chriſt in us) how ſhall that be called the Unity of Will, when the natural Property, brought to paſs by the Sacrament, is the Sacrament of Unity. We muſt not ſpeak in the ſenſe of Man, or of the World in matters concerning God: Neither muſt we perverſly wreſt any ſtrange or wicked Senſe out of the wholeſome Meaning of the Holy Scripture, through impudent and vile Contention. Let us read thoſe things that are written, and let us underſtand thoſe things that we read, and then we ſhall perform the Duty of perfect Faith. For as touching the Natural and True Being of Chriſt in us, except we learn of him, we ſpeak fooliſhly and ungodly that thing that we do ſpeak. For he ſaith, My Fleſh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed: He that eateth my Fleſh, and drinketh my Blood, abideth in me, and I in him. As touching the Verity of his Fleſh and Blood, there is left no place of doubt: For now, both by the Teſtimony of the Lord, and alſo by our Faith, it is Verily Fleſh, and Verily Blood.

Anno 1554

Here you have falſified Hilary, for you have ſet vero ſub myſterio, for verè ſub myſterio, we receive truly under a Myſtery. Hilary thrice reporteth verè ſub myſterio, and you interpret it twice verè ſub myſterio, but the third time you have vero for verè.

Thus far was their talk in Engliſh. Seing Mr. Cranmer had twice veri, and but once vero, they had no cauſe to be grieved, but that they were diſpoſed to find a knot in a Rush.

Cran. Aſſuredly, I am not guilty of any deceit herein. It may be that the Copy which I followed had ſub vero myſterio, i. under a True Myſtery; although touching the Senſe it differeth little. God I call to witneſs, I have always hated falſifying, and if you had leiſure and luſt to hear falſe Citations, I could recite unto you ſix hundred.

Weſt. Here ſhall be ſhewed you two Copies of Hilary, the one printed at Baſil, the other at Paris.

Cran. I ſuppoſe that Dr. Smiths Book hath vero.

* Weſt. Here is Dr. Smith; let him anſwer for himſelf. Mr. Smith, Mr. Doctor, what ſay you for your ſelf? ſpeak, if you know it.

¶ Here Dr. Smith, either for the Truth in his Book alledged, or elſe aſtoniſhed with Dr. Weſtons haſty calling, ſtaid to anſwer: For he only put off his Cap, and kept ſilence.

Weſt. But your own Book, printed by Wolf your own Printer, hath vero.

Cran. That Book is taken from me, which eaſily might have ended this Controverſie. I am ſure, the Book of Decrees, hath vero.

Cole. Now you admit the Book of Decrees, when it maketh for you.

Here D. Cole begineth to carp.

Cran. Touching the ſenſe of the matter there is little difference. The change of one Letter for another, is but a ſmall matter.

Weſt. No? Yes; Paſtor (as you know) ſignifieth a Biſhop, and Piſtor ſignifieth a Baker. But Paſtor ſhall be Piſtor, a Biſhop ſhall be a Baker by this your change of one Letter, if verè and vero do nothing change the ſenſe.

Cran. Let it be ſo, that in Piſtor and Paſtor one Letter maketh ſome difference: Yet let Piſtor be either a Maker or Baker of Bread, ye ſee here the change of a Letter, and yet no great difference to be in the ſenſe.

Yong. This Diſputation is taken in hand, that the Truth might appear. I perceive that I muſt go another way to work than I had thought. It is a common ſaying, Againſt them that deny Principles, we muſt not diſpute. Therefore, that we may agree of the Principles, I demand, Whether there be any other Body of Chriſt, than his Inſtrumental Body?

D. Yong cometh in with his Sophiſtical Interrogations.

Cran. There is no Natural Body of Chriſt, but his Organical Body.

Yong. Again, I demand, whether Senſe and Reaſon ought to give place to Faith?

Cran. They ought.

Yong. Thirdly, Whether Chriſt be True in all his Words?

Cran. Yea, he is moſt True, and Truth it ſelf.

Yong. Fourthly, Whether Chriſt at his Supper minded to do that which he ſpake, or no?

Cran. Dicendo dixit, non fecit dicendo; ſed fecit Diſcipulis Sacramentum. i. In ſaying he ſpake, but in ſaying he made not, but made the Sacrament to his Diſciples.

Yong. Anſwer according to the Truth, Whether did Chriſt that as God and Man which he ſpake, when he ſaid, This is my Body?

D. Yong's Sophiſtical Interrogatories.

Cran.

Anno 1554.

Cran. This is a Sophiſtical Cavillation; go plainly to work. There is ſome deceit in theſe Queſtions. You ſeek ſubtilneſs, leave your crafty fetches.

Yong. I demand, Whether Chriſt by theſe Words wrought any thing or no?

Cran. He did inſtitute the Sacrament.

Yong. But anſwer, whether did he work any thing?

Cran. He did work in inſtituting the Sacrament.

This Syllogiſm, ſpeaking of a Figure, hath no perfect Form nor Figure.

Yong. Now I have you; for before you ſaid, it was a Figurative Speech.

But a Figure worketh nothing.

Ergo. it is not a Figurative Speech. A Lyar ought to have a good Memory.

Cran. I underſtood your Sophiſtry before. You by Working underſtand Converting into the Body of Chriſt: But Chriſt wrought the Sacrament, not in Converting, but in Inſtituting.

Yong. Wo be to them that make Chriſt a Deceiver. Did he work any other thing than he ſpake, or the ſelf ſame thing?

Cran. He wrought the Sacrament, and by theſe Words he ſignified the Effect.

Yong. A Figurative Speech is no working thing.

Yong. But the Speech of Chriſt is Working:

Ergo, It is not Figurative.

Cran. It worketh by Inſtituting, not by Converting.

Yong. The thing ſignified in the Sacrament, is it not the Sacrament?

Anſwer to D. Yong. by S. Auſtin.

Cran. It is. For the thing is miniſtred in a Sign. He followeth the Letter that taketh the thing for a Sign. Auguſtine ſeparateth the Sacrament from the thing. The Sacrament (ſaith he) is one, and the thing of the Sacrament another.

Weſt. Stick to this Argument.

It is a Figurative Speech.

Ergo, It worketh nothing.

Yong. But the Speech of Chriſt is a Working thing.

Ergo, It is not Figurative.

Cran. Oh how many Crafts are in this Argument? they are meer Fallacies; I ſaid not, That the Words of Chriſt do work, but Chriſt himſelf; and he worketh by a Figurative Speech.

Weſt. If a Figure work, it maketh of Bread the Body of Chriſt.

Cran. A Figurative Speech worketh not.

Weſt. A Figurative Speech, by your own Confeſſion, worketh nothing.

But the Speech of Chriſt in the Supper (as you grant) wrought ſomewhat.

The figurative ſpeech worketh not but Chriſt by the figurative ſpeech worketh the Sacrament.

Ergo, The Speech of Chriſt in the Supper was not Figurative.

Cran. I anſwer, Theſe are meer Sophiſms: The Speech doth not work, but Chriſt by the Speech doth work the Sacrament.

I look for Scriptures at your Hands, for they are the Foundation of Diſputations.

Yong. Are not theſe Words of Scripture, This is my Body? The Word of Chriſt is of ſtrength; and by the Lords Words the Heavens were made. He ſaid, This is my Body: Ergo, he made it.

Cran. He made the Sacrament, and I deny your Argument.

Yong. If he wrought nothing, nothing is left there. He ſaid, This is my Body. You ſay contrary to the Scriptures, it is not the Body of Chriſt, and fall from the Faith.

Cran. You interpret the Scriptures contrary to all the Old Writers, and feign a ſtrange Senſe.

Amb. de iis qui initiantur, &c. cap. 9.

Yong. Ambroſe, De iis qui initiantur Sacris, cap. 9. ſaith: De totius mundi operibus legiſti, quia ipſe dixit, & facta ſunt, ipſe mandavit & creata ſunt. Sermo Chriſti qui potuit ex nihilo facere quod non erat, non poteſt ea quæ ſunt in id mutare quæ non erant? Non enim minus eſt novas res dare, quàm mutare naturas. Sed quid argumentis utimur? ſuis utamur exemplis, incarnationiſque exemplo aſtruamus myſterii veritatem. Nunquid naturæ uſus præceſſit cum Dominus Jeſus ex Maria naſceretur? Si ordinem quærimus, viro mixta fœmina generare conſuevit; Liquet igitur quod præter naturæ ordinem virgo generavit: & hoc quod conficimus corpus ex virgine eſt. Quid hic quæris naturæ ordinem in Chriſti corpore, cum præter naturam ſit ipſe Dominus Jeſus partus ex Virgine? Vera utique caro Chriſti quæ crucifixa eſt, quæ ſepulta eſt: Verè ergo illius Sacramentum eſt. Clamat Dominus Jeſus; Hoc eſt corpus meum. Ante benedictionem verborum cœleſtium alia ſpecies nominatur, poſt conſecrationem corpus ſignificatur. Ipſe dicit ſanguinem ſuum. Ante conſecrationem aliud dicitur: poſt conſecrationem ſanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis, Amen, hoc eſt, verum eſt. Quod os loquitur, mens interna fateatur: quod ſermo ſonat, affectus ſentiat.

That is:

Thou haſt read of the Works of all the World; That he ſpake the Word, and they were made; he commanded, and they were created. Cannot the Word of Chriſt, which made of nothing that which was not, change thoſe things that are, into that they were not? For it is no leſs matter to give new things, than to change Natures. But what uſe we Arguments? let us uſe his own Examples, and let us confirm the Verity of the Myſtery by Example of his Incarnation. Did the Uſe of Nature go before, when the Lord Jeſus was born of Mary? If you ſeek the Order of Nature, Conception is wont to be made by a Woman joyned to a Man. It is manifeſt therefore, that contrary to the "order of Nature, a Virgin did conceive: And this Body that we make, is of the Virgin. What ſeekeſt thou here the Order of Nature in the Body of Chriſt, when againſt the Order of Nature the Lord Jeſus was conceived of a Virgin? It was the true Fleſh of Chriſt which was crucified, and which was buried: Therefore it is truly the Sacrament of him. The Lord Jeſus himſelf crieth; This is my Body. Before the Bleſſing of the Heavenly Words, it is named another kind: but after the Conſecration the Body of Chriſt is ſignified. He calleth it his Blood. Before Conſecration it is called another thing: After Conſecration it is called Blood; and thou ſaiſt, Amen; that is, It is true. That the Mouth ſpeaketh, let the inward Mind confeſs; that the Word ſoundeth, let the Heart perceive.

"As Chriſt Jeſus was conceived againſt the order of nature; ſo in the inſtituting of this Sacrament the order of nature is not to be ſought.

Amb. lib. de ſacram. ca. 4.

The Fourth Chapter, ſaith thus: Panis iſte panis eſt ante verba Sacramentorum; ubi acceſſerit conſecratio, de pane fit caro Chriſti. Hoc igitur aſtruamus; quomodo poteſt, qui panis eſt, corpus eſſe Chriſti conſecratione? conſecratio igitur quibus verbis eſt, & cujus ſermonibus? Domini Jeſu. Nam ad reliqua omnia quæ dicuntur, laus Deo defertur, oratione petitur pro Populo, pro Regibus, pro cæteris; ubi venitur ut conficiatur venerabile Sacramentum, jam non ſuis ſermonibus Sacerdos utitur, ſed ſermonibus Chriſti. Ergo ſermo Chriſti hoc conficit Sacramentum. Quis ſermo? Nempe is quo facta ſunt omnia. Juſſit Dominus & factum eſt cœlum; juſſit Dominus & facta eſt terra; juſſit Dominus & facta ſunt Maria, &c. Vides ergo quàm operatorius ſit ſermo Chriſti. Si ergo tanta vis eſt in ſermone Domini, ut inciperent eſſe quæ non erant, quanto magis operatorius eſt, ut ſint quæ erant, & in aliud commutentur.

That is to ſay.

The words of Ambroſe in Engliſh.

This Bread is Bread before the Words of the Sacraments; when the Conſecration cometh to it, of Bread it is made the Fleſh of Chriſt. Let us confirm this therefore; How can that which is Bread, by Conſecration be the Body of Chriſt? By what words then is the Conſecration made, and by whoſe Words? By the Words of our Lord Jeſus. For touching all other things that are ſaid, Praiſe is given to God, Prayer is made for the People, for Kings, and for the reſt: When it cometh that the Reverend Sacrament muſt be made, then the Prieſt uſeth not his own Words, but the Words of Chriſt: Therefore the Word of Chriſt maketh this Sacrament. What Word? That Word, by which all things were made: The Lord "commanded, and Heaven was made; the Lord commanded, and the Earth was made; the Lord commanded, and the Seas were made; the Lord commanded, and all Creatures were made. Doſt thou not ſee then how ſtrong in working the Word of Chriſt is? If therefore ſo great Strength be in the Lords Word, that thoſe things ſhould begin to be which were not before, how much the rather is it of Strength to work, that theſe things which were, ſhould be changed into another thing? Ambroſe ſaith, that the Words are of Strength to work.

"But the Lord Jeſus here uſed not ſuch words of commanding in the Sacrament as in the Creation: for we read not, fiat hoc corpus meum, as we read, fiat lux &c.

Weſton.

Weſton. You omit thoſe Words which follow, which maketh the Senſe of Ambroſe plain: Read them.

Amb. de Sacram. cap. 5.

Yong. Cælum non erat, mare non erat, terra non erat. Sed audi dicentem, ipſe dixit & facta ſunt; ipſe mandavit & creata ſunt. Ergo tibi ut reſpondeam, non erat corpus Chriſti ante conſecrationem, ſed poſt conſecrationem dico tibi quòd jam "corpus Chriſti eſt. That is, Heaven was not, the Sea was not, the Earth was not, but hear him that ſaid: He ſpake the word, and they were made; he commanded, and they were created. Therefore to anſwer thee, it was not the Body of Chriſt before Conſecration, but after the Conſecration, I ſay to thee, that how it is the Body of Chriſt.

" Alloioſis rerum & ſymbolorum.

Cran. All theſe things are common. I ſay, that God doth chiefly work in the Sacraments.

Yong. How doth he work?

Cran. By his Power, as he doth in Baptiſm.

Yong. Nay, by the Word he changeth the Bread into his Body, This is the Truth, acknowledge the Truth, give place to the Truth.

Cran. O Glorious Words! You are too full of words.

Yong. Nay, O Glorious Truth! You make no Change at all.

Cran. Not ſo, but I make a great change; as in them that are baptized, is there not a great change, when the Child of the Bondſlave of the Devil, is made the Son of God? ſo it is alſo in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiveth us into his Protection and Favour.

Yong. If he work in the Sacraments, he worketh in this Sacrament.

Cran. God worketh in his Faithful, not in the Sacraments.

Weſt. In the Supper the Words are directed to the Bread; in Baptiſm to the Spirit. He ſaid not, the Water is the Spirit, but of the Bread he ſaid, This is my Body.

As the Dove is called the Spirit, ſo the Bread is called the Body.

Cran. He called the Spirit a Dove, when the Spirit deſcended in likeneſs of a Dove.

Weſt. He doth not call the Spirit a Dove; but he ſaith, that he deſcended as a Dove. He was ſeen in the likeneſs of a Dove. As in Baptiſm the words are directed to him that is baptized, ſo in the Supper the words are directed unto the Bread.

John 1. Auguſt. in John cap. 1.

Cran. Nay it is written, Upon whomſoever thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending. He calleth that which deſcended the Holy Spirit. And Auguſtine calleth the Dove, the Spirit. Hear what Auguſtine ſaith in 1 Joh. Quid voluit per Columbam, id eſt, per Spiritum Sanctum? docere, qui miſerat eum. That is, What meant he by the Dove, that is, by the Holy Ghoſt? forſooth to teach, who ſent him.

Ambroſe again repeated. De Sacram. cap. 4.

Yong. He underſtandeth of the Spirit deſcending as a Dove: The Spirit is inviſible. If you mind to have the Truth heard, let us proceed. Hear what Ambroſe ſaith: Vides quàm operatorius ſit Sermo Chriſti. Si ergo tanta vis in ſermone Domini, &c. ut ſupra. That is, You ſee what a working Power the Word of Chriſt hath. Therefore if there be ſo great Power in the Lords Word, that thoſe things which were not, begin to be, how much more of ſtrength is it, to work, that thoſe things that were, ſhould be changed into another thing?

Idem cap 5.

And in the fifth Chap. Antequam conſecretur, panis eſt: ubi autem verba Chriſti acceſſerint, corpus eſt Chriſti, i. Before it is conſecrated, it is Bread: but when the Words of Chriſt come to it, it is the Body of Chriſt.

But hear what he ſaith more; Accipite, edite, hoc eſt corpus meum; Take ye, eat ye, this is my Body. Ante verba Chriſti calix eſt vini & aquæ plenus: ubi verba Chriſti operata fuerint, ibi ſanguis efficitur, qui redemit plebem, i. Before the Words of Chriſt, the Cup is full of Wine and Water; when the Words of Chriſt have wrought, there is made the Blood of Chriſt which redeemed the People. What can be more plain?

Anſwer to Ambroſe.

Cran. Nay, what can be leſs to the purpoſe? The words are of ſtrength to work in this Sacrament, as they are in Baptiſm.

Pie. The Words of Chriſt (as Ambroſe ſaith) are of ſtrength to work. What do they work? Ambroſe ſaith, they make the blood which redeemed the People.

Ergo, The Natural Blood is made.

Cran. The Sacrament of his Blood is made. The words make the Blood to them that receive it: Not that the Blood is in the Cup, but in the Receiver.

Pie. There is made the Blood which redeemed the People. Anno 1554.

Cran. The Blood is made, that is, the Sacrament of the Blood, by which he redeemed the People. (Fit) it is made, that is to ſay, (oſtenditur) it is ſhewed forth there. And Ambroſe ſaith, we receive in a Similitude. As thou haſt received the Similitude of his death, ſo alſo thou drinkeſt the Similitude of his precious Blood.

Mark how D. Weſton expounded it to eat in a ſimilitude.

Weſt. He ſaith, in a Similitude, becauſe it is minſtred under another likeneſs. And this is the Argument:

"If this Syllogiſm be in the ſecond Figure (as by ſtanding of the Terms appeareth) then is it falſe, becauſe it concludeth affirmatively.

"There is made the Blood which redeemed the People.
But the Natural Blood redeemed the People.
Ergo, There is the Natural Blood of Chriſt.

You anſwer, that words make it Blood to them that receive it; not that Blood is in the Cup, but becauſe it is made Blood to them that receive it. That all men may ſee how falſly you would avoid the Fathers, hear what Ambroſe ſaith in the ſixth Book and firſt Chapter.

Amb. lib. 6. cap. 1. de Sacramentis Operari. Mutare.

Forte dicas, quomodo vera? qui ſimilitudinem video, non video ſanguinis veritatem. Primum omnium dixi tibi de ſermone Chriſti, qui operatur, ut poſſit mutare & convertere genera inſtituta naturæ. Deinde ubi non tulerunt ſermonem Diſcipuli ejus, ſed audientes, quòd carnem ſuam dedit manducari, & ſanguinem ſuum dedit bibendum, recedebant. Solus tamen Petrus dixit, Verba vitæ eternæ habes, & ego à te quò recedam? Ne igitur plures hoc diceret, veluti quidam eſſet horror cruoris, ſed maneret gratia redemptionis, ideo in ſimilitudinem quidem accipis ſacramentum, ſed verè naturæ gratiam virtutemque conſequeris.

That is to ſay.

Peradventure thou wilt ſay, How be they true? I which ſee the Similitude, do not ſee the truth of the Blood. Firſt of all I told thee of the Word of Chriſt, which ſo worketh, that it can change and turn kinds ordained by nature. Afterward, when the Diſciples could not abide the Words of Chriſt, but hearing that he gave his Fleſh to eat, and his Blood to dring, they departed. Only Peter ſaid, Thou haſt the Words of Eternal Life, Whether ſhould I go from thee? Leſt therefore more ſhould ſay this thing, as though there ſhould be a certain horror of Blood, and yet the Grace of Redemption ſhould remain: Therefore in a Similitude thou receiveſt the Sacrament, but indeed thou obtaineſt the Grace and Power of his Nature.

Anſwer to Ambroſe.

Cran. Theſe words of themſelves are plain enough. And he read this place again, Thou receiveſt the Sacrament for a Similitude. But what is that he ſaith, Thou receiveſt for a Similitude? I think he underſtandeth the Sacrament to be the ſimilitude of his Blood.

Ched. That you may underſtand that Truth diſſenteth not from Truth, to overthrow that which you ſay of that ſimilitude; hear what Ambroſe ſaith, lib. 4. de Sacrament.

Ambroſ. de Sacrament. lib. 4.

Si operatus eſt ſermo cæleſtis in aliis rebus, non operatur in Sacramentis cæleſtibus? Ergo didiciſti quod è pane corpus fiat Chriſti, & quod vinum & aqua in calicem mittitur, ſed fit ſanguis conſecratione verbi cæleſtis. Sed forte dices, ſpeciem ſanguinis non videri. Sed habet ſimilitudinem. Sicut enim mortis ſimilitudinem ſumpſiſti, ita etiam ſimilitudinem precioſi ſanguinis bibis, ut nullus horror cruoris ſit, & pretium tamen operetur redemptionis. Didiciſti ergo, quia quod accipis corpus eſt Chriſti.

That is to ſay.

If the Heavenly Word did work in other things, doth it not work in the Heavenly Sacraments? Therefore thou haſt learned, that of Bread is made the Body of Chriſt, and that Wine and Water is put into that Cup, but by conſecration of the Heavenly Word it is made Blood. But thou wilt ſay peradventure, that the likeneſs of Blood is not ſeen. But it hath a Similitude. For as thou haſt received the ſimilitude of his death, ſo alſo thou drinkeſt the ſimilitude of his precious Blood, ſo that there is no horror of Blood, and yet it worketh the price of Redemption. Therefore thou haſt learned, that that which thou receiveſt is the Body of Chriſt.

Note, that Ambroſe ſaith, we drink a ſimilitude of Chriſts Blood.

Anſwer to the place of Ambroſ. Sacraments be called by the name of the Things.

Cran. He ſpeaketh of Sacraments ſacramentally. He calleth the Sacraments by the Names of the Things; for he uſeth the Signs for the Things ſignified: And therefore the Bread is not called Bread, but his Body, for the

Anno 1554.

the excellency and dignity of the thing signified by it. So doth Ambrose interpret himself, when he saith, In cujus typum nos calicem mysticum sanguinis ad tuitionem corporis & animæ nostræ percepimus, 1 Cor. 11.

Ambros. in 1 Cor. ca. 11.

That is to say.

For a Type or Figure whereof we receive the Mystical Cup of his Blood, for the safegard of our Bodies and Souls.

Ched. A Type? He calleth not the Blood of Christ a Type or Sign: but the Blood of Bulls and Goats in that respect was a Type or Sign.

Cran. This is new learning; you shall never read this among the Fathers.

Ched. But Ambrose saith so.

Cran. He calleth the Bread and the Cup a Type or Sign of the Blood of Christ, and of his benefit.

West. Ambrose understandeth it for a Type of his benefit, that is, of Redemption; not of the Blood of Christ, but of his Passion. The Cup is the Type or Sign of his Death, seeing it is his Blood.

Cran. He saith most plainly that the Cup is a Type of Christs Blood.

Ambrose alledged against Amb. Argument.

Ched. As Christ is truly and really Incarnate, so is he truly and really in the Sacrament

Da- But Christ is really and truly Incarnate.

ri- Ergo, The Body of Christ is truly and really in the Sacrament.

Cran. I deny the Major.

Ched. I prove the Major out of Justine in his second Apology, Οὐ τρόπον διὰ λόγου θεοῦ σαρκοποιηθεὶς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ὑπὲρ σωτηρίας ἡμῶν ἔσχεν, οὕτω καὶ τὴν διὰ εὐχῆς λόγου τοῦ παρ' αὐτοῦ εὐχαριστηθεῖσαν τροφὴν, ἐξ ἧς αἷμα καὶ σάρκες κατὰ μετάβολὴν τρέφονται ἡμῶν, ἐκείνου τοῦ σαρκοποιηθέντος Ἰησοῦ καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ἐδιδάχθημεν εἶναι.

Justin. Apol. 1.

Cran. This place hath been falsified by Marcus Constantius. Justine meant nothing else but that the Bread, which nourishes us, is called the Body of Christ.

Answer to the place of Justine.

Ched. To the Argument. As Christ is truly and naturally Incarnate, &c. ut supra.

Cran. I deny your Major.

Ched. The Words of Justine are thus to be interpreted word for word.

Mutation.

Quemadmodum per verbum Dei caro factus Jesus Christus, Salvator noster, carnem habuit & sanguinem pro salute nostra: sic & cibum illum consecratum per sermonem precationis ab ipso institutæ, quo sanguis carnesque nostræ per commutationem nutriuntur, ejusdem Jesu, qui caro factus est, carnem & sanguinem esse accepimus.

That is to say.

As by the Word of God, Jesus Christ our Saviour, being made Flesh, had both Flesh and Blood for our Salvation: So we are taught, that the Meat * Consecrated by the Word of Prayer, instituted of him, whereby our Blood and Flesh are nourished by † Communion, is the Flesh and Blood of the same Jesus which was made Flesh.

*of Thanksgiving.

† Mutation.

Cran. You have translated it well; but I deny your Major. This is the sense of Justine; that the Bread is called the Body of Christ, and yet of that sanctified Meat our Bodies are nourished.

Answer.

Ched. Nay, he saith, of that sanctified Meat both our Bodies and Souls are nourished.

Cran. He saith not so; but he saith that it nourisheth our Flesh and Blood: And how can that nourish the Soul, that nourisheth the Flesh and Blood?

αἷμα καὶ σάρκες. i. Blood and Flesh.

Cole. It feedeth the Body by the Soul.

Cran. Speak uprightly. Can that which is received by the Soul and Spirit be called the Meat of the Body.

West. Hear then what Irenæus saith, Eum calicem, qui est creatura, suum corpus confirmavit, ex quo nostra auget corpora. Quando & mixtus calix, & fractus panis percipit verbum Dei, fit Eucharistia sanguinis & corporis Christi, ex quibus augetur, & consistit carnis nostræ substantia. This, the same Cup which is a Creature, he confirmed to be his Body, by which he increaseth our Bodies. When both the Cup mixed, and the Bread broken, hath joyned to it the Word of God, it is made the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, of which the substance of our Flesh is increased and consisteth.

Irenæus.

The substance of our Flesh is increased by the Body and Blood of Christ.

Argument.

Ergo, Our Body is nourished by the Body and Blood of Christ.

Irenæus answered by Tertul.

Cran. I deny your Argument. He calleth it the Flesh and Blood, for the Sacrament of the Body and Blood, as Tertullian also saith, Nutritur corpus pane symbolico, anima corpore Christi. That is, Our Flesh is nourished with Symbolical or Sacramental Bread, but our Soul is nourished with the Body of Christ.

West. Look what he saith more. Quomodo carnem negant capacem esse donationis Dei quæ est vita æterna, quæ sanguine & corpore Christi nutritur? Lib. 5. post duo folia à principio. That is, How do they say, that the Flesh cannot receive the gift of God that is eternal Life, which is nourished with the Blood and Body of Christ? That is in the 5. Book, two leaves from the beginning.

Irenæus Lib. 5.

Cran. The Body is nourished both with the Sacrament, and with the Body of Christ: With the Sacrament to a Temporal Life; with the Body of Christ to Eternal Life.

Ched. I cannot but be sorry, when I see such a manifest lye in your writings. For where you translate Justine on this fashion; that the Bread, Water, and Wine, are not so to be taken in this Sacrament, as common Meats and Drinks are wont to be taken of us, but are Meats chosen out peculiarly for this, namely, for the giving of thanks, and therefore be called of the Greeks Eucharistia, that is, thanksgiving, they are called moreover the Blood and Body of Christ (so have you translated it:) the Words of Justine are thus; We are taught that the Meat consecrated by the Word of Prayer, by the which our Flesh and Blood is nourished by Communion, is the Body and Blood of the same Jesus which was made Flesh.

Note that the Archb. here did not translate the Words of Justine, but only gather the effect of his meaning.

Cran. I did not translate it word for word, but only I gave the meaning: And I go nothing from his meaning.

Cranmer purgeth himself.

Harpsf. You remember touching Justine, to whom this Apology was written, namely, to an Heathen man. The Heathen thought that the Christians came to the Church to Worship Bread, Justine answereth, that we come not to common Bread, but as to, &c. as is said afore. Weigh the place well, it is right worthy to be noted; Our Flesh is nourished according to mutation.

In eating the Sacrament no Bread is considered, but only the true Body of Christ Consecrat. dist. 2. Quia.

Cran. We ought not to consider the bare Bread but whosoever cometh to the Sacrament eateth the true Body of Christ.

West. You have corrupted Emissenus; for in stead of cibis satiandus, that is, to be filled with meat, you have set cibis satiandus spiritualibus, that is, to be filled with Spiritual Meats.

Cran. I have not corrupted it; for it is so in the Decrees.

West. You have corrupted another place of Emissenus. For you have omitted these words, Mirare cum reverendum altare cibis spiritualibus satiandus ascendis: Sacrum Dei tui corpus & sanguinem fide respice, honorem mirare, merito continge, &c. That is, Marvel thou when thou comest up to the reverend Altar to be filled with Spiritual Meats: Look in Faith to the Holy Body and Blood of thy God, marvel at his Honour, worthily touch him.

Cran. This Book hath not that.

Cranmer Charged with false Translating.

West. Also you have falsified this place by evil Translating Honora corpus Dei tui, i. Honour the Body of thy God, You have translated it, Honora eum qui est Deus tuus, i. Honour him which is thy God. Whereas Emissenus hath not (honour him) but (honour the Body of thy God.)

Cranmer purgeth himself.

Cran. I have so translated him, and yet no less truly, than not without a weighty cause; else it should not have been without danger, if I had translated it thus; Honour the Body of thy God; because of certain, that according to the Error of the Anthropomorphites, dreamed that God had a Body.

West. Nay you most of all have brought the people into that Errour, which so long have taught that he sitteth at the right hand of God the Father; and counted me for an Heretick, because I preached that God had no right hand. Then I will oppose you in the very Articles of your Faith.

Christ sitteth at the right hand of God the Father.

But God the Father hath no right hand:

Ergo, Where is Christ now?

Argument. The right hand of God, what it signifieth.

Cran. I am not so ignorant a novice in the Articles of my Faith, but that I understand, that to sit at the right hand of God, doth signifie to be equal in the Glory of the Father.

Weſt. Now then take this Argument.

Whereſoever Gods authority is, there is Chriſts Body.

But Gods authority is in every place,

Ergo, What letteth the Body of Chriſt to be in every place?

Cranmer charged with miſtranſlating Duns.

Moreover you have alſo corrupted Duns.

Cran. That is a great offence, I promiſe you.

Weſt. For you have omitted ſecundum apparentiam, i. as it appeareth. Where his words are theſe, Et ſi quæras quare voluit Eccleſia eligere iſtum intellectum ita difficilem hujus articuli, cum verba Scripturæ poſſint ſalvari ſecundum intellectum facilem & veriorem, ſecundum apparentiam, de hoc articulo, &c. That is, if you demand why the Church did chuſe this ſo hard an underſtanding of this Article, whereas the words of Scripture may be ſalved after an eaſie and true underſtanding (as appeareth) of this Article, &c.

Cran. It is not ſo.

D. Cranmer challenged for ſetting forth the Catechiſm in the name of the Convocation.

Weſt. Alſo you have ſet forth a Catechiſm in the name of the Synod of London, and yet there be 50. which witneſſes that they were of the number of the Convocation, never heard one word of this Catechiſm.

D. Cranmer purgeth himſelf concerning the Catechiſm.

Cran. I was ignorant of the ſetting to of that Title; and aſſoon as I had knowledge thereof, I did not like it: Therefore when I complained thereof to the Councel, it was anſwered me by them, that the Book was ſo entituled becauſe it was ſet forth in the time of the Convocation.

Weſt. Moreover, you have in Duns tranſlated In Romana Eccleſia, pro Eccleſia Catholica. In the Church of Rome, for the Catholick Church.

Cran. Yea, but he meant the Romiſh Church.

D. Cranmer charged with miſtranſlating Tho. Aquinas.

Weſt. Moreover you have depraved S. Thomas, namely, where he hath theſe words; In quantum vero eſt ſacrificium, habet vim ſatisfactivam: Sed in ſatisfactione attenditur magis affectio offerentis, quàm quantitas oblationis. Unde Dominus dicit apud Lucam de vidua quæ obtulit duo æra, quod plus omnibus miſit. Quamvis ergo hæc oblatio ex ſui quantitate ſufficiet ad ſatisfaciendum pro omni pœna: tamen fit ſatisfactoria illis pro quibus offertur, vel etiam offerentibus, ſecundum quantitatem ſuæ devotionis, & non pro tota pœna. That is, Inaſmuch as it is a Sacrifice, it hath the power of ſatisfaction: But in ſatisfaction the affection of the offerer is more to be weighed than the quantity of the oblation. Wherefore the Lord ſaid in Lukes Goſpel, of the widow which offered two mites, that ſhe caſt in more than they all. Therefore although this oblation of the quantity of it ſelf will ſuffice to ſatisfie for all pain, yet it is made ſatisfactory to them, for whom it is offered, or to the offerers, according to the quantity of their devotion, and not for all the pain.

You have thus turned it, Quod ſacrificium Sacerdotis habet vim ſatisfactivam, &c. That is, That the Sacrifice of the Prieſt hath power of ſatisfaction, &c. And therefore in this place you have chopped in this word (Sacerdotis) of the Prieſt, whereas in the tranſlation of all the New Teſtament you have not ſet it, but where Chriſt was put to death. And again, where S. Thomas hath (pro omni pœna) for all pain, your Book omitteth many things there.

Weſton triumpheth before the victory.

Thus you ſee, Brethren, the Truth ſtedfaſt and invincible; you ſee alſo the craft and deceit of Hereticks; the Truth may be preſſed, but it cannot be oppreſſed: therefore cry altogether; Vincit veritas, i. The Truth overcometh.

This diſordered diſputation ſometime in Latin, ſometime in Engliſh, continued almoſt till two of the Clock. Which being finiſhed, and the Arguments written and delivered to the hands of M. Say, the Priſoner was had away by the Mayor, and the Doctors dined together at the Univerſity Colledge.

THe next day following, which was the 12. of April, was brought forth Doctor Ridley to diſpute, againſt whom was ſet D. Smith to be principal Opponent. Touching which D. Smith, forſomuch as mention here happeneth of his name, firſt the Reader is to be advertiſed what is to be attributed to his judgment in Religion, which ſo oftentimes before had turned and returned to and fro, grounded (as it ſeemeth) upon no firm conſcience of Doctrine, as both by his Articles by him recanted may appear, and alſo by his own Letter ſent a little before in K. Edwards days to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from Scotland. Which Letter I thought here to exhibit as a certain Preface before his own Arguments, or rather as a Teſtimony againſt himſelf, whereby the Reader may underſtand how devoutly he magnified them and their Doctrine a little before, againſt whom he now diſputed ſo buſily. Read I beſeech thee his Epiſtle, and judge.

The true Copy of a certain Epiſtle of D. Richard Smith, declaring his affection to the ſetting forth of Gods ſincere Word.

A Letter of D. Smith to D. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

MOſt honourable, I commend me unto your Lordſhip, doing the ſame to underſtand, that I wrote Letters to your Grace in January laſt and the tenth day of February, declaring the cauſes of my ſudden and unadviſed departing from your Grace over the Sea; and deſiring your good Lordſhip of your Charity toward them that repent of their ill Acts, to forgive me your ſelf all the wrong I did towards your Grace, and to obtain in writing the Kings Majeſty's Pardon for me in all points concerning his Laws: upon the receipt whereof I would return again home, and within half a year (at the uttermoſt) afterward write D. Smith purpoſing to write for the marriage of Prieſts.

Wherefore I beſeech your Grace help me home, as ſoon as you may conveniently, for Gods ſake, and ye ſhall never, I truſt in God, repent that fact.*

Ex urbe divi Andreæ. 14. Feb.

Rich. Smitheus.

And thus much touching the forenamed Doctor Richard Smith, being ſet here (as is ſaid) to diſpute againſt Biſhop Ridley, who was brought now the next day after the Archbiſhop to anſwer in the Divinity School. Againſt whom alſo, beſides D. Smith, diſputed D. Weſton, D. Treſham, D. Oglethorp, D. Glin, D. Seton, and D. Cole, M. Ward, M. Harpsfield, D. Watſon, M. Pie, M. Harding, M. Curton, M. Fecknam: To all them he anſwered very learnedly. He made a Preface to theſe queſtions, but they would not let him go forth in it, but cauſed him to make an end of the ſame, and ſaid it was Blaſphemy; and ſome ſaid he drave off the time in ambiguous things, nothing to the purpoſe, and ſo they would not ſuffer him to ſay his mind. D. Smith could get nothing at his hand; inſomuch that other did take his Arguments and proſecuted them. He ſhewed himſelf to be learned, and a great Clerk. They could bring nothing, but he knew it as well as they.

Diſputers againſt D. Ridley.

The Diſputation beginneth.

Weſt. Prolocutor. Good Chriſtian People and Brethren, we have begun this day our School, by Gods good ſpeed I truſt, and are entring into a controverſy, whereof no queſtion ought to be moved concerning the verity of the Body of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt in the Euchariſt. Chriſt is true, which ſaid the words. The words are true which he ſpake, yea, Truth it ſelf that cannot fail. Let us therefore pray unto God to ſend down unto us his holy Spirit, which is the true Interpreter of his Word; which may purge away Errors, and give light, that verity may appear. Let us alſo ask leave and liberty of the Church to permit the Truth received to be called this day in queſtion, without any prejudice to the ſame. Your parts thereof ſhall to be implore the aſſiſtance of Almighty God, to pray for the proſperity of the Queens Majeſty, and to give us quiet and attentive ears. Now go to your queſtion.

Doct. Smith, This day (right learned Mr. Doctor) three queſtions are propounded, whereof no controverſie among Chriſtians ought to be moved, to wit:

1. Whether

Anno 1554.

The queſtions.

1. Whether the Natural Body of Chriſt our Saviour, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and offered for Mans redemption upon the Croſs, is verily & really in the Sacrament by vertue of Gods Word ſpoken by the Prieſts, &c.
2. Whether in the Sacrament, after the Words of Conſecration, be any other Subſtance, &c.
3. Whether in the Maſs be a Sacrifice Propitiatory, &c.

Touching the which queſtions, although you have publickly and partly profeſſed your judgment and opinion on Saturday laſt: Yet being not ſatisfied with that your anſwer, I will aſſay again to demand your ſentence in the firſt queſtion; Whether the true Body of Chriſt, after the words pronounced, be really in the Euchariſt, or elſe only the figure. In which matter I ſtand here now to hear your anſwer.

The Preface or Proteſtation of Dr. Ridley before his Diſputation.

The Proteſtation of Biſhop Ridley.

I Received of you the other day, right worſhipful Mr. Prolocutor, and ye my reverend Maſters, Commiſſioners from the Queens Majeſty and her Honourable Councel, three Propoſitions; whereunto ye commanded me to prepare againſt this day, what I thought good to anſwer concerning the ſame.

Now whilſt I weighed with my ſelf how great a charge of the Lords Flock was of late committed unto me, for the which I am certain I muſt once render an account to my Lord God (and that how ſoon, he knoweth) and that moreover, by the commandment of the Apoſtle Peter, I ought to be ready alway to give a reaſon of the hope that is in me with meekneſs and reverence, unto every one that ſhall demand the ſame: beſides this, conſidering my duty to the Church of Chriſt, and to your Worſhips being Commiſſioners by Publick Authority: I determined with my ſelf to obey your commandment, and ſo openly to declare unto you my mind touching the foreſaid Propoſitions. And albeit, plainly to confeſs unto you the truth in theſe things which ye now demand of me, I have thought otherwiſe in times paſt than now I do, yet (God I call to record unto my Soul, I lie not) I have not altered my Judgment, as now it is, either by conſtraint of any man, or laws, either for the dread of any dangers of this World, either for any hope of commodity; but only for the love of the Truth revealed unto me by the Grace of God (as I am undoubtedly perſwaded) in his holy Word, and in the reading of the Ancient Fathers.

What moved D. Ridley to alter his Judgment from the Church of Rome.

Theſe things I do rather recite at this preſent, becauſe it may happen to ſome of you hereafter, as in times paſt it hath done to me: I mean, if ye think otherwiſe of the matters propounded in theſe Propoſitions than I now do, God may open them unto you in time to come.

But howſoever it ſhall be, I will in few words do that which I think ye all look I ſhould do; that is, as plainly as I can, I will declare my Judgment herein. Howbeit of this I would ye were not ignorant, that I will not indeed wittingly and willingly ſpeak in any point againſt Gods Word, or diſſent in any one jot from the ſame, or from the rules of Faith, or Chriſtian Religion: which rules that ſame moſt ſacred Word of God preſcribeth to the Church of Chriſt, whereunto I now and for ever ſubmit my ſelf, and all my doings. And becauſe the matter I have now taken in hand is weighty, and ye all well know how unready I am to handle it accordingly, as well for lack of time, as alſo lack of Books: therefore here I proteſt, that I will publickly this day require of you, that it my be lawful for me concerning all mine anſwers, explications, and confirmations, to add or diminiſh whatſoever ſhall ſeem hereafter more convenient and meet for the purpoſe, through more found Judgment, better deliberation, and more exact Trial of every particular thing. Having now, by the way of Preface and Proteſtation, ſpoken theſe few words, I will come to the anſwer of the Propoſitions propounded unto me, and ſo to the moſt brief explication and confirmation of mine anſwers.

Biſhop Ridley ſubmitteth himſelf to the Church of Chriſt.

Weſt. Reverend Mr. Doctor, concerning the lack of Books, there is no cauſe why you ſhould complain. What Books ſoever you will name, you ſhall have them: And as concerning the Judgment of your anſwers to be had of your ſelf with farther deliberation; it ſhall (I ſay) be lawful for you until Sunday next to add unto them what you ſhall think good your ſelf. My mind is, that we ſhould uſe ſhort Arguments, leſt we ſhould make an infinite proceſs of the thing.

This promiſe was not kept.

Rid. There is another thing beſides, which I would gladly obtain at your hands. I perceive that you have Writers and Notaries here preſent. By all likelihood our Diſputations ſhall be publiſhed, I beſeech you for Gods ſake let me have liberty to ſpeak my mind freely, and without interruption, not becauſe I have determined to protract the time with a ſolemn Preface, but leſt it may appear that ſome be not ſatisfied. God wot I am no Orator, nor have I learned Rhetorick to ſet colours on the matter.

Weſt. Among this whole company, it ſhall be permitted you to take two for your part.

Two Notaries permitted to D. Ridley.

Rid. I will chuſe two, if there were any here with whom I were acquainted.

Weſt. Here are two which Mr. Cranmer had yeſterday. Take them if it pleaſe you.

Rid. I am content with them; I truſt they are honeſt Men.

These two Notaries were Maſter Joel ſometime Biſhop of Sarisbury, and Maſter Gilbert Mounſell.

The firſt Propoſition.

In the Sacrament of the Altar, by the vertue of Gods Word ſpoken of the Prieſt, the Natural Body of Chriſt born of the Virgin Mary, and his Natural Blood is really preſent under the Forms of Bread and Wine.

The firſt Propoſition.

The Anſwer of N. Ridley.

D. Ridleys anſwer to the firſt Propoſition.

In matters appertaining to God we may not ſpeak according to the ſenſe of Man, nor of the World: Therefore this Propoſition or Concluſion is framed after another manner of phraſe or kind of ſpeech than the Scripture uſeth. Again, it is very obſcure and dark, by means of ſundry words of doubtful ſignification. And being taken in the ſenſe which the Schoolmen teach, and at this time the Church of Rome doth defend, it is falſe and erroneous; and plain contrary to the Doctrine which is according to Godlineſs.

The Propoſition put forth in dark terms.

The Explication.

How far the diverſity and newneſs of the phraſe in all this firſt Propoſition is from the phraſe of the holy Scripture, and that in every part almoſt, it is ſo plain and evident to any that is but meanly exerciſed in holy Writ, that I need not now (eſpecially in this company of learned men) to ſpend any time therein, except the ſame ſhall be required of me hereafter.

The firſt doubt.

Firſt, there is a double ſenſe in theſe words (by vertue of Gods Word) for it is doubtful what Word of God this is; whether it be that which is read in the Evangeliſts, or in Paul, or any other. And if it be that which is in the Evangeliſts, or in S. Paul; what that is. If it be in none of them, then how it may be known to be Gods Word, and of ſuch vertue that it ſhould be able to work ſo great a matter.

2. Doubt in the word Prieſt.

Again there is a doubt of theſe words (of the Prieſt) whether no Man may be called a Prieſt, but he which hath Authority to make a Propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead; and how it may be proved that this Authority was committed of God to any Man, but to Chriſt alone.

3. Doubt in the word Sacrificing.

It is likewiſe doubted, after what Order the Sacrificing Prieſt ſhall be, whether after the Order of Aaron, or elſe after the Order of Melchiſedech. For as far as I know, the holy Scripture doth allow no more.

Weſt. Let this be ſufficient.

Rid. If we lack time at this preſent, there is time enough hereafter.

D. Weſton interrupteth him in his explication.

Weſt. Theſe are but evaſions or ſtarting holes; you conſume the time in vain.

Rid. I cannot ſtart far from you, I am captive and bound.

Weſt. Fall to it my Maſters.

Smith. That which you have ſpoken may ſuffice at this preſent.

Red. Let me alone I pray you, for I have not much to ſay behind.

Weſt. Go forward.

4. Doubt in the word really.

Red. Moreover, there is ambiguity in this word really, whether it be taken as the Logicians term it, tranſcender- ter, that is, most generally: and so it may signifie any manner of thing which belongeth to the Body of Christ, by any means: after which sort we also grant Christs Body to be really in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, (as in disputation, if occasion be given shall be declared) or whether it be taken to signifie the very same thing, having Body, Life, and Soul, which was assumed and taken of the Word of God, into the Unity of Person. In which sense, sith the Body of Christ is really in Heaven, because of the true manner of his Body, it may not be said to be here in the earth. There is yet a further doubtfulness in these words, under the forms of Bread and Wine, whether the forms be there taken to signifie the only accidental and outward shews of Bread and Wine; or therewithal the substantial natures thereof, which are to be seen by their qualities, and perceived by exteriour senses:

5 Doubt in the words (forms of Bread and Wine)

The Proposition Erroneous after the sense of the Romish Church. Transubstantiation not founded in Scripture.

Now the Error and falseness of the Proposition after the sense of the Roman Church and Schoolmen, may hereby appear, in that they affirm the Bread to be transubstantiated and changed to the Flesh assumed of the Word of God, and that (as they say) by virtue of the word, which they have devised by a certain number of words and cannot be found in any of the Evangelists, or in Paul, and so they gather that Christs Body is really contained in the Sacrament of the Altar. Which position is grounded upon the Foundation of the Transubstantiation; which Foundation is monstrous, against reason, and destroyeth the Analogy or proportion of the Sacraments: and therefore this Proposition also, which is builded upon this rotten Foundation, is False, Erroneous, and to be counted as a detestable Heresie of the Sacramentaries.

The Analogy of the Sacrament is the similitude and likeness which they have with the things they represent.

West. We lose time.

Rid. You shall have time enough.

West. Fall to reasoning. You shall have some other day for this matter.

Rid. I have no more to say concerning my explication. If you will give me leave and let me alone, I will but speak a word or two for my confirmation.

West. Go to; say on,

The Confirmation of the aforesaid Answer.

Confirmation of his answer.

Fes- THere ought no Doctrine to be established in the Church of God, which dissenteth from the word of God, from the rule of Faith, and draweth with it many absurdities that cannot be avoided.

ti- But this Doctrine of the first Proposition is such.

no. Ergo. It ought not to be established and maintained in the Church of God.

Argument.

The Major or first part of my Argument is plain and the Minor or second part is proved thus.

The Doctrine maintaineth a real, corporal, and carnal Presence of Christs Flesh, assumed and taken of the Word, to be in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that not by virtue and Grace only, but also by the whole Essence and substance of the Body and Flesh of Christ.

The real Presence of Christs Body disagreeth from the Scriptures.

But such a Presence disagreeth from Gods word, from the rule of Faith, & cannot but draw with it many absurdities.

Ergo, The second part is true.

The first part of this Argument is manifest, and the second may yet further be confirmed thus.

D. Weston again interrupteth Doctor Ridley.

West. Thus you consume time; which might be better bestowed on other matters. Master Opponent, I pray you to your Arguments.

Smith. I will here reason with you upon Transubstantiation, which you say is contrary to the Rule and Analogy of Faith. The contrary whereof I prove by the Scriptures and the Doctors. But before I enter Argumentation with you, I demand first, whether in the sixth Chapter of John there be any mention made of the Sacrament, or of the real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament?

Rid. It is against reason that I should be impeached to prosecute that which I have to speak in this Assembly, being not so long, but that it may be comprehended in few words.

West. Let him read on.

7. Inconveniencies come of the Real Presence.

Rid. First of all, this Presence is contrary to many places of the holy Scripture.

Secondly, it varieth from the Articles of the Faith.

Thirdly, it destroyeth and taketh away the Institution of the Lords Supper.

Fourthly, it maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly persons; for it casteth that which is holy unto dogs, and pearls unto swine. Anno 1554.

Fifthly, it forceth men to maintain many monstrous Miracles without necessity and Authority of Gods word.

Sixthly, it giveth occasion to the Hereticks which erred concerning the two natures in Christ, to defend their Heresies thereby.

Seventhly, it falsifieth the sayings of the Godly Fathers; it falsifieth also the Catholick Faith of the Church, which the Apostles taught, the Martyrs confirmed, and the Faithful (as one of the Fathers saith) do retain and keep untill this day. Wherefore the second part of mine Argument is true.

The probation of the antecedent or former part of this Argument by the parts thereof.

The 7. inconveniences declared by parts. The first inconvenience

IHis carnal Presence is contrary to the word of God, as appeareth, John 16, I tell you the truth. It is profitable to you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter shall not come unto you. Acts 3. Whom the Heavens must receive until the time of restoring of all things which God hath spoken, Matth. 9, The Children of the Bridegroom cannot mourn so long as the Bridegroom is with them: But now is the time of mourning. John 16. But I will see you again, and your Hearts shall rejoyce. John 14. I will come again and take you to my self. Matthew 24. If they shall say unto you, Behold here is Christ, or there is Christ, believe them not: for wheresoever the dead carcase is, thither the Eagles will resort.

The real presence against the Scripture.

2. The real presence against the Articles of the Faith.

It varieth from the Articles of the Faith; He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father. from whence (and not from any other place, saith S. Augustine) he shall come to judge both the quick and the dead.

3. It destroyeth the Institution of the Supper.

It destroyeth and taketh away the Institution of the Lords Supper, which was commanded only to be used and continued until the Lord himself should come. Wherefore he be really present in the Body of his Flesh, then must the Supper cease: For a remembrance is not of a thing present, but of a thing past and absent. And there is a difference between remembrance and presence, and (as one of the Fathers saith) A figure is in vain where the thing figured is present,

4. It prophaneth things holy and precious, and ingendreth absurdities.

It maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly persons, and constraineth men to confess many absurdities. For it, affirmeth, that Whoremongers and Murtherers, yea, and (as some of them hold opinion) the wicked and faithless Mice, Rats, and Dogs, also may receive the very real and corporal Body of the Lord, wherein the fulness of the Spirit of Light and Grace dwelleth; contrary to the manifest words of Christ in six places and sentences of the sixth Chapter of S. John.

Anthropophagi, are a kind of brutish people that feed on mans Flesh.

It confirmeth also and maintaineth that beastly kind of cruelty af the Anthropophagi, that is, the devourers of mans Flesh: For it is a more cruel thing to devour a quick man, than to slay him.

Pie. He requireth time to speak Blasphemies. Leave your Blasphemies.

Rid. I had little thought to have had such reproachful words at your hands.

West. All is quiet. Go to your Arguments, Mr. Doctor.

Rid. I have not many things more to say.

West. You utter Blasphemies with a most impudent Face: leave off (I say) and get you to the Argument.

5. It maintaineth monstrous miracles without necessity.

Rid. It forceth men to maintain many monstrous Miracles, without any necessity and authority of Gods word. For at the coming of this Presence of the Body and Flesh of Christ, they thrust away the Substance of Bread, and affirm that the Accidents remain without any Subject, and in stead thereof they place Christs Body without his qualities and the true manner of a Body. And if the Sacrament be reserved so long until it mould, and worms breed, some say that the substance of Bread miraculously returneth again, and some deny it. Othersome affirm, the real Body of Christ goeth down into the stomack of the receivers, and doth there abide so long only as they shal continue to be good: but another sort hold, that the Body of Christ is carried into Heaven, so soon as the forms of Bread be bruised with the teeth. O works of miracles!

All the rest that followeth was not read because the Prolocutor made post haste to the Arguments.

Truly,

Anno 1554.

Truly, and most truly I see that fulfilled in these men; whereof S. Paul prophesied, 2 Thess. 2. Because they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be saved, God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, and be all damned which have not believed the truth. This gross Presence hath brought forth that fond phantasie of concomitance, whereby is broken at this day and abrogated the commandment of the Lord for distributing of the Lords Cup to the Laity.

By this device or concomitance, the Papists imagine as much to be received under one kind as both.

It giveth occasion to Hereticks to maintain and defend their Errours; as to Marcion, which said that Christ had but a Phantastical Body; and to Eutiches, which wickedly confounded the two Natures in Christ.

6. It giveth occasion to Hereticks.

Finally, It falsifieth the sayings of the Godly Fathers and the Catholick Faith of the Church, which Vigilius a Martyr and grave writer saith, was taught of the Apostles, confirmed with the Blood of Martyrs, and was continually maintained by the faithful, until his time. By the sayings of the Fathers, I mean of Justine, Irene, Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, Emisene, Athanasius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Hierome, Chrysostom, Augustine, Vigilius, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others most ancient Fathers. All those places, as I am sure, I have read making for my purpose, so am I well assured that I could shew the same, If I might have the use of mine own Books, which I will take to me to do, even upon the peril of my Life, and loss of all that I may lose in this World.

7. It falsifieth the sayings of the old Doctors.

The true Presence of Christs Body in the Supper not denied.

But now (my Brethren) think not, because I disallow that Presence which the first Proposition maintaineth (as a Presence which I take to be forged, Phantastical, and besides the authority of Gods Word, perniciously brought into the Church by the Romanists) that I therefore go about to take away the true Presence of Christs Body in his Supper rightly and duly ministred, which is grounded upon the Word of God, and made more plain by the commentaries of the Faithful Fathers. They that think so of me, the Lord knoweth how far they are deceived. And to make the same evident unto you, I will in few words declare what true Presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper I hold and affirm, with the Word of God and the ancient Fathers.

The Faith and confession of D. Ridley in affirming the true Presence in the Sacrament.

I say and confess with the Evangelist Luke, and with the Apostle Paul, that the Bread on the which thanks are given, is the Body of Christ in the remembrance of him and his death, to be set forth perpetually of the faithful until his coming.

The Grace of Life and Immortality given with the Sacrament to the faithful. Life eaten. August.

I say and confess the Bread which we break to be the communion and partaking of Christs Body, with the Ancient and the Faithful Fathers.

The Lord fed in Grace. Emisene. Celestial food received. Athanasius.

I say and believe that there is not only a signification of Christs Body set forth by the Sacrament, but also that therewith is given to the Godly and Faithful the Grace of Christs Body, that is, the Food of Life and Immortality. And this I hold with Cyprian.

The property of Natural Communion received. Hilar. The vertue of Christs Flesh. Cyril. The Mystical Advent of Christ. Basil.

I say also with S. Augustine, that we eat Life and we drink Life; with Emisene, that we feel the Lord to be present in Grace; with Athanasius, that we receive Celestial Food, which cometh from above; the propriety of natural Communion, with Hilarius; the nature of Flesh and Benediction which giveth Life in Bread and Wine, with Cyril; and with the same Cyril, the vertue of the very Flesh of Christ, Life and Grace of his Body, the property of the only begotten, that is to say, Life, as he himself in plain words expoundeth it.

The Sacrament of his very flesh. Ambrose. The Body by Grace. Epiphan. Spiritual Flesh, but not that which was crucified. Hierom. Grace flowing into a Sacrifice. Chrysost. Grace and invisible verity. August.

I confess also with Basil, that we receive the Mystical Advent and coming of Christ, Grace and vertue of his very Nature; the Sacrament of his very Flesh, with Ambrose; the Body by Grace, with Epiphanius; spiritual Flesh, but not that which was crucified, with Hierom; Grace flowing into a Sacrifice, and the Grace of the Spirit, with Chrysostom; Grace and invisible verity, Grace and society of the Members of Christs Body, with Augustine.

The power of Gods Word feeding the Soul. Bertram. The Protestants falsly belied to teach nothing but a figure in the Sacrament.

Finally, with Bertram (which was the last of all these) I confess that Christs Body is in the Sacrament in this respect; namely (as he writeth) because there is in it the Spirit of Christ, that is the power of the Word of God, which not only feedeth the Soul, but also cleanseth it. But of these I suppose it may clearly appear unto all men, how far we are from that opinion, whereof some go about falsly to slander us to the World saying, we teach that the Godly and Faithful should receive nothing else at the Lords Table, but a figure of the Body of Christ.

The second Proposition.

After the consecration there remaineth no substance of Bread and Wine, neither any other substance, than the substance of God and Man.

The Answer.

Answer to the second Proposition. The second Proposition of Transubstantiation denied.

THe second conclusion is manifestly false, directly against the Word of God, the nature of the Sacrament, and the most evident testimonies of the Godly Fathers; and it is the rotten Foundation of the other two conclusions propounded by you, both of the first, and also of the third. I will not therefore now tarry upon any further explication of this answer, being contented with that which is already added afore to the answer of the first Proposition.

The first Argument for the confirmation of this Answer.

Confirmation of his answer.

IT is very plain by the Word of God, that Christ did give Bread unto his Disciples, and called it his Body.

But the substance of Bread is another manner of substance, than is the substance of Christs Body, God and Man:

Therefore the conclusion is false.

The second part of mine Argument is plain, and the first is proved thus:

The second Argument.

Da- That which Christ did take, on the which he gave thanks, and the which he brake, he gave to his Disciples, and called it his Body:

ti- But he took Bread, gave thanks on Bread, and brake Bread:

si- Ergo, The first part is true. And it is confirmed with the Authorities of the Fathers, Irene, Tertullian, Origene, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierom, Augustine, Theodoret, Cyril, Rabanus, and Bede. Whose places I will take upon me to shew most manifest in this behalf, if I may be suffered to have my Books, as my request is.

Bread is the Body of Christ:

Ergo, It is Bread.

* A tertio adjacente ad secundum adjacens cum verbi substantivi pura copula.

* The rule of Logick is this: A propositione de tertio adjacente, ad eam quæ est de secundo cum verbo recto significante existentiam, valet consequentia affirmative, &c.

The third Argument.

Ba- As the Bread of the Lords Table is Christs natural Body, so is his Mystical Body.

ro- But it is not Christs Mystical Body by Transubstantiation.

co. Ergo, It is not his natural Body by Transubstantiation.

The second part of my Argument is plain, and the first is proved thus: As Christ who is the verity, spake of the Bread, This is my Body which shall be betrayed for you, speaking there of his Natural Body: even so Paul, moved with the same Spirit of Truth, said, We, though we be many, yet are we all one Bread, and one Body, which be partakers of one Bread.

The Major proved. 1 Cor. 10.

The fourth Argument

The Argument holdeth. A destructione antecedentis, ad destructionem consequentis. Mat. 26. Mark 14.

We may no more believe Bread to be Transubstantiate into the Body of Christ, than the Wine into his Blood.

But the Wine is not Transubstantiate into his Blood:

Ergo, Neither is that Bread, therefore, Transubstantiate into his Body.

¶ The first part of this Argument is manifest, and the second part is proved out of the Authority of Gods Word in Matthew and Mark, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, &c. Now the fruit of the Vine was Wine, which Christ drank and gave to his Disciples to drink. With this sentence agreeth plainly the place of Chrysostom on the 20. Chapt. of Mat. As Cyprian doth also, affirming that there is no Blood, if Wine be not in the Cup.

Chrysostom. Cyprian.

The fifth Argument.

This Argument holdeth after the same rule as did the other before.

Ba- The words of Christ spoken upon the Cup and upon the Bread, have like effect and working.

ro- But the words spoken upon the Cup have not vertue to Transubstantiate:

co. Ergo, It followeth, that the words spoken upon the Bread have no such vertue.

The ſecond part of the Argument is proved; becauſe they would then Tranſubſtantiate the Cup, or that which is in the Cup into the New Teſtament. But neither of theſe things can be done, and very abſurd it is to confeſs the ſame.

The ſixth Argument.

Da- The Circumſtances of the Scripture, the Analogy and proportion of the Sacraments, and the Teſtimony of the Faithful Fathers ought to rule us in taking the meaning of the Holy Scripture touching the Sacrament.

ti- But the words of the Lords Supper, the Circumſtances of the Scripture, the Analogy of the Sacraments, and the Sayings of the Fathers, do moſt effectually and plainly prove a figurative ſpeech in the words of the Lords Supper.

ſi. Ergo, a figurative ſenſe and meaning is ſpecially to be received in theſe words, This is my Body.

The Circumſtances and words of Scripture.

The Circumſtances of the Scripture, do this in remembrance of me. As oft as ye ſhall eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup, ye ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death. Let a man prove himſelf, and ſo eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup. They came together to break Bread; and they continued in breaking of Bread. The Bread which we break, &c. For we being many, are all one Bread and one Body, &c.

The Analogy of the Sacraments.

The Analogy of the Sacraments is neceſſary: for if the Sacraments had not ſome ſimilitude or likeneſs of the things whereof they be Sacraments, they could in no wiſe be Sacraments. And this ſimilitude in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is taken three manner of ways.

Analogy or ſimilitude in the Sacrament, three manner of ways.

1. The firſt conſiſteth in nouriſhing, as ye ſhall read in Rabana, Cyprian, Auguſtine, Irene, and moſt plainly in Iſidore out of Bertram.

2. The ſecond in the uniting and joyning of many into one, as Cyprian teacheth.

3. The third is a ſimilitude of unlike things: Where, like as the Bread is turned into one Body; ſo we, by the right uſe of this Sacrament, are turned through Faith into the Body of Chriſt.

The ſayings of the Fathers for the figurative ſpeech.

The ſayings of the Fathers declare it to be a figurative ſpeech, as it appeareth in Origen, Tertullian, Chryſoſtom in opere imperfecto, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Baſil, Gregory, Nazianzen, Hilary, and moſt plainly of all in Bertram. Moreover, the ſayings and places of all the Fathers, whoſe names I have before recited againſt the aſſertion of the firſt propoſition, do quite overthrow Tranſubſtantiation. But of all moſt evidently and plainly, Irene, Origen, Cyprian, Chryſoſtom to Ceſarius the Monk, Auguſtine againſt Adamantus, Gelaſius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtom again one the 20. of Matthew, Rabana, Damaſcene and Bertram.

Commendation of Bertram.

Here right worſhipful Mr. Prolocutor and ye the reſt of the Commiſſioners, it may pleaſe you to underſtand, that I do not lean to theſe things only, which I have written in my former Anſwers and Confirmations, but that I have alſo for the proof of that I have ſpoken, whatſoever Bertram, a man learned, of ſound and upright judgment, and ever counted a Catholick for theſe ſeven Hundred years until this our age, hath written. His Treatiſe, whoſoever ſhall read and weigh, conſidering the time of the Writer, his Learning, Godlineſs of life, the Allegations of the ancient Fathers, and his manifold and moſt grounded Arguments, I cannot (doubtleſs) but much marvel, if he have any fear of God at all, how he can with good Conſcience ſpeak againſt him in this matter of the Sacrament. This Bertram was the firſt that pulled me by the Ear, and that firſt brought me from the common Errour of the Romiſh Church, and cauſed me to ſearch more diligently and exactly both the Scriptures and the Writings of the Old Eccleſiaſtical Fathers in this matter. And this I proteſt before the face of God, who knoweth I lye not in the things I now ſpeak.

D. Ridley firſt brought to the knowledge of the Sacrament by Bertram.

The third Propoſition.

The third Propoſition touching propitiatory Maſs.

In the Maſs is the lively Sacrifice of the Church, propitiable and available for the ſins as well of quick as of the dead.

The anſwer to this Propoſition.

Anſwers to the third Propoſition.

I anſwer to this third Propoſition as I did to the firſt. And moreover I ſay, that being taken in ſuch ſenſe as the words ſeem to import, it is not only erroneous, but withal ſo much to the derogation and defacing of the Death and Paſſion of Chriſt, that I judge it may and ought moſt worthily to be counted wicked and blaſphemous againſt the moſt precious Blood of our Saviour Chriſt. Anno 1554.

The Explication.

Explication of the ſame. Doubts in the third Propoſition.

Concerning the Romiſh Maſs which is uſed at this day, or the lively Sacrifice thereof, propitiatory and available for the ſins of the quick and the dead, the holy Scripture hath not ſo much as one ſyllable.

In the Primitive Church the newly inſtructed in the Faith and unworthy were put away from the Communion

There is Ambiguity alſo in the name of Maſs: what it ſignifieth, and whether at this day there be any ſuch indeed as the ancient Fathers uſed; ſeeing that now there be neither Catechiſts nor Pœnitentes to be ſent away.

Again, touching theſe words (The lively Sacrifice of the Church.) There is doubt whether they are to be underſtood figuratively and ſacramentally, for the Sacrament of the lively Sacrifice (after which ſort we deny it it not to be in the Lords Supper) or properly and without any figure: of the which manner there was but one only Sacrifice, and that once offered, namely upon the Altar of the Croſs.

The third doubt.

Moreover, in theſe words (as well as) it may be doubted whether they be ſpoken in mockage, as men are wont to ſay in ſport, of a fooliſh and ignorant perſon, that he is apt as well in conditions as in knowledge, being apt indeed in neither of them both.

The fourth doubt.

There is alſo a doubt in the word (Propitiable) whether it ſignifie here that which taketh away ſin, or that which may be made available for the taking away of ſin; that is to ſay, whether it is to be taken in the active or in the paſſive ſignification.

The falſeneſs of the third Propoſition reproved.

Now the falſeneſs of the Propoſition, after the meaning of the Schoolmen and the Romiſh Church, and Impiety in that ſenſe which the words ſeem to import, is this: that they, leaning to the foundation of their fond Tranſubſtantiation, would make the quick and lively Body of Chriſts Fleſh (united and knit to the Divinity) to lye hid under the accidents, and outward ſhews of Bread and Wine. Which is very falſe, as I have ſaid afore: and they, building upon this Foundation, do hold that the ſame Body is offered unto God by the Prieſt in his daily Maſſings to put away the ſins of the quick and the dead, whereas by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews it is evident, that there is but one Oblation, and one true and lively Sacrifice of the Church offered upon the Altar of the Croſs, which was, is, and ſhall be for ever the propitiation for the ſins of the whole World: and where there is Remiſſion of the ſame, there is (ſaith the Apoſtle) no more offering for ſin.

But one Sacrifice in the Scripture.

Arguments confirming his Anſwer.

The firſt Argument. Heb. 5.

Ce- No Sacrifice ought to be done, but where the Prieſt is meet to offer the ſame.

la- All other Prieſts be unmeet to offer Sacrifice propitiatory for ſin, ſave only Chriſt.

rent. Ergo, no other Prieſts ought to Sacrifice for ſin, but Chriſt alone.

Argument.

The ſecond part of my Argument is thus proved.

Fe- No honour in Gods Church ought to be taken where a man is not called, as Aaron.

ri- It is a great honour in Gods Church to Sacrifice for ſin:

ſon. Ergo, No man ought to Sacrifice for ſin, but only they which are called.

But only Chriſt is called to that honour.

Heb. 7.

Ergo, No other Prieſt but Chriſt ought to Sacrifice for Sin. That no man is called to this degree of Honour but Chriſt alone, it is evident. For there are but two only orders of Prieſthood allowed in the word of God: Namely, the order of Aaron, and the order of Melchiſedech. But now the order of Aaron is come to an end, by reaſon that it was unprofitable, and weak; and of the order of Melchiſedech there is but one Prieſt alone, even Chriſt the Lord, which hath a Prieſthood that cannot paſs to any other.

An Argument.

Ba- That thing is in vain, and to no effect, where no neceſſity is wherefore it is done.

ro- To offer up any more Sacrifice Propitiatory for the quick and the dead there is no neceſſity, for Chriſt our Saviour

Anno 1554.

Saviour did that fully and perfectly once for all.

co. Ergo, To do the same in the Mass it is in vain.

Heb. 9. Ab unacausa veritatis ad præpositionem habentem illam causam valet consequentia.

Another Argument.

Fe- After that Eternal Redemption is found and obtained, there needeth no more daily Offering for the same.

ri- But Christ coming an High Bishop, &c. found and obtained for us Eternal Redemption.

o. Ergo, Their needeth now no more daily Oblation for the sins of the quick and the dead.

Another Argument.

Ca. All Remission of Sins cometh only by shedding of Blood.

mes- In the Mass there it no shedding of Blood.

tres. Ergo, In the Mass there is no Remission of Sins: and so it followeth also that there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice.

Another Argument.

In the Mass the Passion of Christ is not in Verity, but in a Mystery representing the same: Yea, even there where the Lords Supper is duly ministred.

But where Christ suffereth not, there is he not offered in Verity: For the Apostle saith, Not that he might offer up himself often times (for then must he have suffered often times since the beginning of the world,) now where Christ is not offered, there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice:

Heb. 9.

Ergo, In the Mass there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice: For Christ appeared once in the later end of the world, to put sin to flight by the offering up of himself. And as it is appointed to all men that they shall once dye, and then cometh the Judgment: even so Christ was once offered to take away the sins of many. And unto them that look for him shall he appear again without sin unto Salvation.

Another Argument.

D Where there is any Sacrifice that can make the comers thereunto perfect, there ought men to cease from offering any more Expiatory and Propitiatory Sacrifices.

ri- But in the New Testament there is one only Sacrifice now already long since offered, which is able to make the comers thereto perfect for ever.

i. Ergo, In the New Testament they ought to cease from offering any more Propitiatory Sacrifices.

Sentences of the Scripture tending to the same end and purpose, out of which also may be gathered other manifest Arguments for more confirmation thereof.

Heb. 10. By the which will (saith the Apostle) we are sanctified, by the offering up of the Body of Jesus Christ once for all. And in the same place, But this man, after that he had offered one Sacrifice for Sin, sitteth for ever at the right hand of God, &c. For with one offering hath he made perfect for ever them that are sanctified, and by himself hath he purged our sins. I beseech you to mark these words (by himself) the which well weighed, will without doubt cease all Controversie.

(By himself.)

The Apostle plainly denieth any other Sacrifice to remain for him that treadeth under his feet the Blood of the Testament, by the which he was made holy. Christ will not be crucified again, he will not his Death to be had in derision.

Coloss. 1. He hath reconciled us in the Body of his Flesh. Mark, I beseech you, he saith not, in the Mystery of his Body; but in the Body of his Flesh.

1 John 2. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world.

I know that all these places of the Scripture are avoided by two manner of subtil shifts: The one is by the distinction of the bloody and unbloody Sacrifice, as though our unbloody Sacrifice of the Church were any other than the Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving, than a Commemoration, a shewing forth, and a Sacramental Representation of that one only bloody Sacrifice, offered up once for all.

The Popish distinction between bloody and unbloody Sacrifice.

The other is by depraving and wresting the sayings of the ancient Fathers unto such a strange kind of sense, as the Fathers themselves indeed never meant. For what the meaning of the Fathers was, it is evident by that which S. Augustine writeth in his Epistle to Boniface; and in the 83. Chapter of his Ninth Book against Faustus the Manichee, besides many other places; likewise by Eusebius, Emisene, Cyprian, Chrysostom, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others, which do wholly concord and agree together in this Unity in the Lord, that the Redemption, once made in verity for the Salvation of man, continueth in full effect for ever, and worketh without ceasing unto the end of the World, that the Sacrifice once offered cannot be consumed; That the Lords Death and Passion is as effectual, the vertue of that Blood once shed, as fresh at this day for the washing away of sins, as it was even the same day that it flowed out of the blessed side of our Saviour: And finally, That the whole substance of our Sacrifice, which is frequented of the Church in the Lords Supper, consisteth in Prayers, Praise, and giving of Thanks, and in remembring and shewing forth of that Sacrifice once offered upon the Altar of the Cross; that the same might continually be had in reverence by Mystery, which one only, and no more, was offered for the Price of our Redemption.

The Papists maintain their Sacrifice Propitiatory, by the old Doctors falsly wrested.

Doctors making against the Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Mass.

The whole substance of the Sacrifice, wherein it consisteth.

These are the things (right worshipful Mr. Prolocutor, and ye the rest of the Commissioners) which I could presently prepare to the answering of your three foresaid Propositions being destitute of all help in this shortness of time, sudden warning, and want of Books. Wherefore I appeal to my first Protestation, most humbly desiring the help of the same (as much as may be) to be granted unto me. And because ye have lately given most unjust and cruel Sentence against me, I do here Appeal (so far forth as I may) to a more indifferent and just Censure and Judgment of some other Superiour, competent, and lawful Judge, and that according to the approved state of the Church of England. Howbeit, I confess, that I am ignorant what that is at this present, through the trouble and alteration of the state of the Realm. But if this Appeal may not be granted to me upon Earth, then do I fly (even as to my only Refuge and alone Haven of Health) to the Sentence of the Eternal Judge, that is, of the Almighty God, to whose most merciful Justice towards us, and most just Mercifulness, I do wholly commit my self and all my Cause, nothing at all despairing of the Defence of mine Advocate and alone Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom, with the Everlasting Father, and the Holy Spirit, the Sanctifier of us all, be now and for ever all Honour and Glory, Amen.

B. Ridley appealeth from the unjust Sentence of his Adversaries, to some other Superiour competent Judge

B. Ridley, for lack of equal indifferency, appealeth to Almighty God.

Albeit this Learned Bishop was not suffered to read all that is above prefixed before the Disputations, yet because he had it then ready, and offered it up to the Prolocutor after the Disputations and Sentence pronounced; I thought here the place not unmeet to annex the same together with the rest. Now let us hear the Arguments and Answers between Dr. Smith and him.

Dr. Smith beginneth to Oppose.

Smith. You have occasioned me to go otherwise to work with you, than I had thought to have done. Me seemed you did in your Supposition abuse the Testimonies of Scripture concerning the Ascension of Christ, to take away his Presence in the Sacrament, as though this were a strong Argument to enforce your matter withal.

Smiths Argument.

Christ did ascend into Heaven:

Ergo, He is not in the Sacrament.

Now therefore I will go about to disprove this reason of yours.

Christs Ascension is no let to his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Answer.

Ergo, you are deceived, whereas you do ground your self upon those places.

Rid. You import as though I had made a strong Argument by Christs going up into heaven. But howsoever mine Argument is made, you collect it not rightly. For it doth not only stay upon his Ascension, but upon his Ascension and his * abiding there also.

* The verity of Mr. Ridleys answer touching the real being of Christ in Earth to be restrained by his Ascending and abiding in Heaven, standeth upon the necessity, which we call (Necessitas consequentiæ) by this demonstration.

Smith. Christs going up to Heaven, and his abiding there, hinder not his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Ergo,

Anno 1554.

Da. Every Natural Body muſt neceſſarily be contained in his peculiar and certain place.
ri. Chriſts Body is a Natural Body.
i. Ergo, Chriſts Body not to be in one certain place at once contained, it is impoſſible, according to the Rule, Omnes propoſitiones de impoſſibili & de neceſſe æquipollent dicto diſſimiliter ſe habenti, & modo ſimiliter.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. Of Chriſts Real Preſence there may be a double underſtanding: If you take the Real Preſence of Chriſt according to the Real and Corporal Subſtance which he took of the Virgin, that Preſence being in Heaven, cannot be on the Earth alſo. But if you mean a Real Preſence, ſecundum rem aliquam quæ ad Corpus Chriſti pertinet; i. according to ſome thing that appertaineth to Chriſts Body, certes the Aſcenſion and abiding in Heaven are no let at all to that Preſence. Wherefore Chriſts Body after that ſort is here preſent to us in the Lords Supper; by Grace I ſay, as Epiphanius ſpeaketh it.

Weſt. I will cut off from henceforth all equivocation and doubt. For whenſoever we ſpeak of Chriſts Body, we mean that which he took of the Virgin.

Rid. Chriſts Aſcenſion and abiding in Heaven cannot ſtand with his Preſence.

Argument. Smith. Chriſt appeared corporally and really on the Earth, for all his Aſcenſion and continual abode in Heaven unto the Day of Doom.

Ergo, His Aſcenſion and abiding in Heaven, is no let to his Real Preſence in the Sacrament.

Anſwer. Rid. Mr. Doctor, this Argument is nothing worth. I do not ſo ſtreightly tye Chriſt up in Heaven, that he may not come into the Earth at his Pleaſure. For when he will, he may come down from Heaven, and be on the Earth, as it liketh himſelf. Howbeit I do affirm, That it is not poſſible for him to be both in Heaven and Earth at one time.

Smith. Mark, I pray you my Maſters, that he here diligently, what he anſwereth. Firſt he ſaith, That the ſitting of Chriſt at the right Hand of his Father, is a let to the Real Preſence of his Body in the Sacrament, and then afterward he flieth from it again.

Rid. I would not have you think that I do imagine or dream upon any ſuch manner of ſitting, as theſe men here ſit in the School.

Smith. Ergo, It is lawful for Chriſt then to be here preſent on the Earth, when he will himſelf.

Rid. Yea, when he will, it is lawful indeed.

Chriſts abode in Heaven is no let for him to appear on Earth when he will: but whether he will, that muſt be proved. Again, It is one thing to appear on Earth, another ſtill in the Sacrament, and to be preſent the ſame time with his Body in Heaven, when he is bodily preſent in Earth.

Smith. Ergo, He aſcending into Heaven, doth not reſtrain his Real Preſence in the Sacrament.

Rid. I do not gainſay, but that it is lawful for him to appear on the Earth when he will; but prove you that he will.

Smith. Then your Anſwer dependeth upon the will of Chriſt, I perceive: Therefore I will joyn again with you in that ſhort Argument.

Chriſt, albeit he doth alway abide in Heaven after his Aſcenſion, was ſeen really and corporally on Earth.

Ergo, Notwithſtanding his Aſcenſion and continual ſitting at the right hand of his Father, he may be really and corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. If the Notaries ſhould to Record your Argument, as you have framed it, you peradventure would be aſhamed of it hereafter.

Smith. Chriſt after his Aſcenſion was ſeen really and corporally upon the Earth.

Ergo, Notwithſtanding his Aſcenſion and abiding with his Father, he may be corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. I grant the Antecedent, but I deny the Conſequence.

Smith. Do you grant the Antecedent.

Rid. Yea, I grant the Antecedent. I am content to let you have ſo much. Becauſe I know that there be certain ancient Fathers of that opinion. I am well content to let you uſe that Propoſition as true. And I will frame the Argument for you.

He was ſeen on Earth after his Aſcenſion, Ergo, &c.

Smith. Nay, nay, I will frame it my ſelf.

Chriſt after his Aſcenſion was ſeen really and corporally on Earth, albeit he do abide in Heaven continually:

Ergo, Notwithſtanding his Aſcenſion and continual abiding at the right hand of the Father, he may be really and corporally on the Earth.

Chriſt continually ſitting in Heaven expounded. Rid. Let us firſt agree about the continual ſitting at the right hand of the Father.

Smith. Doth he ſo ſit at the right hand of his Father, that he doth never forſake the ſame?

Rid. Nay, I do not bind Chriſt in Heaven ſo ſtraightly. I ſee you go about to beguile me with your Equivocations. Such Equivocations are to be diſtinguiſhed. If you mean by his ſitting in Heaven, to reign with his Father, he may be both in Heaven and alſo in Earth. But if ye underſtand his ſitting to be after a corporal manner of ſitting, ſo is he always permanent in Heaven. For Chriſt to be corporal here on Earth, when corporally he is reſident in Heaven, is clean contrary to the Holy Scriptures, as Auſtine ſaith; Corpus Chriſti eſt in Cælo, ſed veritas ejus ubique diffuſa eſt; i. The Body of Chriſt is in Heaven, but his Truth is diſperſed in every place.

Chriſt cannot be both corporally here, and corporally alſo in Heaven at one time.

Now if continually he abide in Heaven after the manner of his Corporal Preſence, then his perpetual abiding there ſtoppeth or letteth that the ſame Corporal Preſence of him cannot be in the Sacrament.

Smith. Acts 3. We read that Chriſt ſhall ſit perpetually at the right hand of God, unto the conſumption of the World.

Weſt. I perceive you are come here to this Iſſue, whether the Body of Chriſt may be together both in Earth and in Heaven. I will tell you that Chriſt in very deed is both in Earth and in Heaven together, and at one time, both one and the ſame Natural Chriſt, after the Verity and Subſtance of his very Body: Ergo, &c.

Rid. I deny the Antecedent.

Chryſ. Hom. 17. ad Hebræos. Weſt. I prove it by two Witneſſes. Firſt by Chryſoſt. Hom. 17. ad Hebr. Nonne per ſingulos dies offerimus? Offerimus quidem, ſed recordationem facientes mortis ejus. Et una eſt hæc hoſtia, non multæ. Et quomodo una, & non multæ, quæ ſemel oblata eſt in ſancto ſanctorum? Hoc autem ſacrificium exemplar eſt illius; id ipſum ſemper offerimus, nec nunc quidem alium agnum, craſtina alium, ſed ſemper eundem ipſum. Proinde unum eſt hoc ſacrificium; alioqui hac ratione, quoniam in multis locis offertur, multi Chriſti ſunt? Nequaquam, ſed unus ubique eſt Chriſtus; & hic plenus exiſtens, & illic plenus, unum corpus; i. Do we not offer every day? We do ſo indeed; but doing it for the remembrance of his Death. And this offering is one, and not many. And how is it one, and not many, which was offered in the holy place: This Sacrifice is a pattern of that: The ſelf ſame we always offer; Not now as offering one Lamb to day, and another to morrow, but always one and the ſame Lamb. Wherefore here is but one Sacrifice; for elſe by this means, ſeeing there be many Sacrifices in many places, be there many Chriſts? Not ſo, but one Chriſt in all places, both perfect here and perfect there, one only Body. Now thus I argue.

We offer one thing at all times.

There is one Chriſt in all places, both here compleat and there compleat. Argument.

Ergo, By Chryſoſtom there is one Body both in Heaven and Earth.

Rid. I remember the place well. Theſe things make nothing againſt me. Anſwer.

Weſt. One Chriſt is in all places, here full and there full.

Rid. One Chriſt is in all places; but not one Body in all places. One Chriſt, but not one Body, nor after one bodily Subſtance in all places.

Weſt. One Body ſaith Chryſoſtom.

Anſwer to Chryſoſtom. Rid. But not after the manner of bodily Subſtance he is in all places, nor by circumſcription of place. For (hic) and (illic) here and there, in Chryſoſtom do aſſign no place, as Auguſtine ſaith; Surſum eſt Dominus, ſed ubique eſt veritas Domini; i. The Lord is above, but the Truth of the Lord is in all places.

Weſt. You cannot ſo eſcape. He ſaith not the Verity of Chriſt is one; but one Chriſt is in all places, both here and there.

Rid. One Sacrifice is in all places, becauſe of the Unity of him whom the Sacrifice doth ſignifie: Not that the Sacrifices be all one and the ſame.

One Chriſt and one Sacrifice in all places, and how? to wit, Chriſt by Verity, the Sacrifice by ſignification. Ex libro Ridlei ipſius manu deſcripto.

Weſt. Ergo, By your ſaying it is not Chriſt, but the Sacrifice of Chriſt.

But Chryſoſtom ſaith, One Body and one Chriſt is there, and not one Sacrifice.

Rid. I ſay, that both Chriſt and the Sacrifice of Chriſt is there: Chriſt by Spirit, Grace, and Verity; the Sacrifice by ſignification.

Sacrifice, why it is called one.

* Thus I grant with Chryſoſtom, that there is one Hoſt or Sacrifice, and not many: And this our Hoſt is called one, by reaſon of the Unity of that one, which one only all

Anno 1554.

all our Hosts do represent. That only Host was never other, but that which was once offered on the Altar of the Cross, of which Host all our Hosts are but Sacramental Examples.

How one Christ is offered in many places at once.

And where you alledge out of Chrysostom, that Christ is offered in many places at once, both here full Christ, and there full Christ: I grant it to be true, that is, that Christ is offered in many places at once, in a Mystery and Sacramentally, and that he is full Christ in all those places, but not after the Corporal Substance of our Flesh which he took, but after the Benediction which giveth life; and he is given to the godly Receivers in Bread and Wine, as Cyril speaketh concerning the Oblation of Christ, whereof Chrysostom here speaketh, he himself doth clearly shew what he meaneth thereby, in saying by the way of correction, We always do the self same howbeit by the recordation or remembrance of his Sacrifice.

West. The second Witness is Bernard in a Sermon that he made of the Supper of the Lord, who saith; Bernard.

Unde hoc nobis, piissime Iesu, ut nos vermiculi, reptantes super faciem terræ, nos, inquam, qui pulvus & cinis sumus, te præsentem habere mereamur præ manibus, præ oculis, qui totus & integer sedes ad dextram Patris, qui etiam unius horæ momento, ab ortu solis usque ad occasum, ab Aquilone usque ad Austrum præsto es, unus in multis, idem in diversis locis? That is to say, How cometh this to us, most gentle Jesus, that we silly Worms creeping on the face of the Earth, that we I say, which are but dust and ashes, may deserve to have thee present in our hands, and before our eyes, who both together, full and whole, dost sit at the right hand of the Father, and who also in the moment of one hour, from the rising of the Sun to the going down of the same, art present one and the self same in many and divers places?

The time of Bernard.

Rid. These words of Bernard make for you nothing at all. But I know that Bernard was in such a time, that in this matter he may worthily be suspected. He hath many good and fruitful sayings; as also in the same foresaid place by you alledged. But yet he followed in such an Age, whenas the Doctrine of the Holy Supper was sore perverted. Notwithstanding yet I will so expound him, rather than reject him, that he shall make nothing for you at all. He saith, That we have Christ in a Mystery, in a Sacrament, under a veil or cover, but hereafter shall have him without veil or cover. In the mean time, here now he saith, That the verity of Christ is every where. The verity of Christ is both here and there, and in all places.

Bernard rather expounded than rejected.

West. What do you call Verity? He saith not the Verity of Christ, but the Verity of the Body of Christ.

What is the Verity of the Body of Christ.

Rid. The Verity of the Body of Christ is the true Faith of the Body of Christ: after that Verity he is with them which truly believe upon him.

West. Christ is one and the same in divers places. I urge these words (in diversis locis) in divers places, and yet I am not satisfied.

Smith. Christ was seen Really and Corporally on the Earth after his Ascension, and continually sitting at the right hand of the Father.

Ergo, The Ascension and perpetual sitting in Heaven hinder nothing, but that he may be Really and Corporally in the Sacrament.

To be resident and not resident, import Contradiction.

Rid. If by perpetual sitting you mean the Residence of his Body in Heaven, your Reason containeth manifest contradiction.

Smith. These two have no contradiction in them at all, both to sit continually at his Fathers right hand, and also to be seen here really in Earth after his Ascension. First, You will give me, that Christ sitteth in Heaven at the right hand of his Father. For so it is written, Acts 5. Heaven must needs receive him unto the time of the restoring of all, &c. Secondly, He was also seen of Paul here Corporally on Earth.

Wherefore these two do import, as ye see, no contradiction.

Rid. What letteth, but that Christ, if it please him, and when it pleaseth him, may be in Heaven and in Earth, and appear to whom he will? And yet notwithstanding you have not yet proved that he will so do. And though Christ continually shall be resident in Heaven unto the Judgment, yet there may be some intermission, that notwithstanding. But this Controversie, as I said, is amongst all the ancient Doctors and Writers. And that Christ hath been here seen, that they grant all: but whether then he being in Earth or in Heaven, that is doubtful.

To be here, & not here, importeth contradiction in respect of sundry times.

Smith. I will prove that he would appear in Earth.

He so would, and also did appear here in Earth after his Ascension: Ergo, &c.

Rid. He appeared, I grant; but how he appeared, whether then being in Heaven or in Earth, that is uncertain. So he appeared to Steven, being then Corporally sitting in Heaven. For, speaking after the true manner of mans Body, when he is in Heaven, he is not the same time in Earth; and when he is in Earth, he is not the same time Corporally in Heaven.

Christ appearing on the Earth sometime, taketh not away his residence in Heaven.

How Christ appeared in Earth.

Smith. Christ hath been both in Heaven and in Earth all at one time.

Ergo, You are deceived in denying that,

Rid. I do not utterly deny Christ here to have been seen in Earth. Of uncertain things I speak uncertainly.

This Argument holdeth rather materiæ, than ratione formæ

Smith. He was seen of Paul, as being born before his time, after his ascending up to Heaven, 1 Cor. 15.

But his Vision was a Corporal Vision:

Ergo, He was seen Corporally upon the Earth after his ascending into Heaven.

Rid. He was seen Really and Corporally indeed: but whether being in Heaven or Earth, is a doubt. And of doubtful things we must judge doubtfully. Howbeit you must prove that he was in Heaven at the same time, when he was Corporally on Earth.

Smith. I would know of you, whether this vision may inforce the Resurrection of Christ?

Whether Paul saw Christ in Heaven or in Earth, all is one to prove his Resurrection.

Rid. I account this a sound and firm Argument to prove the Resurrection. But whether they saw him in Heaven or in Earth, I am in doubt: and to say the truth, it maketh no great matter. Both ways the Argument is of like strength. For whether he were seen in Heaven, or whether he were seen on Earth, either of both maketh sufficiently for the matter. Certain it is, he rose again: for he could not have been seen, unless he had risen again.

Petitio Principii.

Smith. Paul saw him as he was here conversant on Earth, and not out of Heaven, as you affirm.

Rid. You run to the beginning again: That you take for granted, which you should have proved.

Smith. You make delays for the nonce.

Rid. Say not so, I pray you. Those that hear us be learned: They can tell both what you oppose, and what I answer well enough, I warrant you.

Tresh. He was seen after such sort, as that he might be heard.

Argument.

Ergo, He was Corporally on the Earth, or else how could he be heard?

Answer.

Rid. He that found the means for Steven to behold him in Heaven, even he could bring to pass well enough, that Paul might hear him out of Heaven.

Da- Smith. As other saw him, so Paul saw him.

ti- Other did see him Visibly and Corporally on Earth.

si. Ergo, Paul saw him Visibly and Corporally on Earth.

Argument.

Rid. I grant he was seen Visibly and Corporally: but yet have you not proved that he was seen in Earth.

Answer.

Smith. He was seen of him as of other:

But he was seen of other being on Earth, and appeared visibly to them on Earth:

Ergo, he was seen of Paul on Earth.

Rid. Your Controversie is about (existens in terra) that is, being on Earth: If existere, to be, be referred as unto the place, I deny that Christ after that sort was on Earth. But if it be referred as to the Verity of the Body, then I grant it. Moreover, I say that Christ was seen of men in Earth after his Ascension, it is certain: For he was seen of Steven; he was seen also of Paul. But whether he descended unto the Earth, or whether he being in Heaven did reveal or manifest himself to Paul, when Paul was wrapt into the third Heaven, I know that some contend about it: And the Scripture, as far as I have read or heard, doth not determine it. Wherefore we cannot but judge uncertainly of those things which be uncertain.

Egesippus l. 3. c. 3.

Smith. We have Egesippus and Linus against you, which testifie, that Christ appeared Corporally on the Earth to Peter after his Ascension, lib. 3. cap. 3. Peter overcome with the requests and mournings of the People, which desired him to get him out of the City because of Nero's lying in wait for him, began without Company to convey himself away from thence: And when he was come to the Gate, he seeth

Christ

Anno 1554.

Chriſt come to meet him, and worſhipping him, he ſaid, Maſter, whether walk you? Chriſt anſwered, I am come again to be crucified. Linus writing of the Paſſion of Peter, hath the ſelf ſame ſtory. S. Ambroſe hath the ſame likewiſe, and alſo Abdias, Scholar to the Apoſtles, which ſaw Chriſt before his Aſcending into Heaven. With what face therefore dare you affirm it to be a thing uncertain, which theſe men do manifeſtly witneſs to have been done?

Linus de paſſione Petri. Ambroſius. Abdias.

Rid. I ſaid before that the Doctors in that matter did vary.

Smith. Do you think this ſtory is not certain, being approved by ſo ancient and probable Authority?

Rid. I do ſo think, becauſe I take and eſteem not their words for the words of Scripture. And though I did grant you that ſtory to be certain, yet it maketh not againſt me.

Smith. Such things as be certain, and approved of them, you do reject as things uncertain.

Rid. The ſtory of Linus is not of ſo great authority; although I am not ignorant that * Euſebius ſo writeth alſo in the ſtory of the Church. And yet I account not theſe mens reports ſo ſure as the Canonical Scriptures. Albeit if at any time he had to any man appeared here on the Earth after his Aſcenſion, that doth not diſprove my ſaying. For I go not about to tye Chriſt up in fetters (as ſome do untruly report of us) but that he may be ſeen upon the Earth according to his Divine Pleaſure, whenſoever it liketh him. But we affirm, That it is contrary to the Nature of his Manhood, and the true manner of his Body, that he ſhould be together and at one inſtant both in Heaven and Earth, according to his Corporal Subſtance. And the perpetual ſitting at the right hand of the Father, may (I grant) be taken for the ſtability of Chriſts Kingdom, and his continual or everlaſting Equality with his Father in the Glory of Heaven.

The credit of Linus's ſtory.

* This addition is taken out of the Copy of Bp. Ridleys own writing.

Smith. Now whereas you boaſt that your Faith is the very Faith of the Ancient Church; I will ſhew here that it is not ſo, but that it doth directly ſtrive againſt the Faith of the old Fathers, I will bring in Chryſoſtom for this point. Hom. 2. ad populum Antiochenum. Tanquam maximam hæreditatem, Eliſæus melotem ſuſcepit. Etenim verè maxima fuit hæreditas, omni auro pretioſior: & erat duplex Helias ille: & erat ſurſum Helias, & deorſum Helias. Novi quòd juſtum illum beatum putatis, & velletis quiſque eſſe ut ille. Quid igitur, ſi vobis demonſtravero quid aliud, quod illo multo majus omnes ſacris myſteriis imbuti recipimus? Helias quidem melotem diſcipulo reliquit: Filius autem Dei aſcendens ſuam nobis carnem dimiſit. Sed Helias quidem exutus: Chriſtus autem & nobis reliquit, & ipſam habens aſcendit. That is, Eliſeus received the Mantle, as a right great Inheritance. For it was indeed a right excellent Inheritance, and more precious than any Gold beſide. And the ſame was a double Helias: He was both Helias above, and Helias beneath. I know well you think that juſt man to be happy, and you would gladly be every one of you as he is. What will you then ſay if I ſhall declare unto you a certain other thing, which all we that are indued with theſe holy Myſteries do receive much more than that? Helias indeed left his Mantle to his Scholar: But the Son of God aſcending did leave here his Fleſh unto us. Helias left it, putting off the ſame; but Chriſt both left it to us, and aſcended alſo to Heaven, having it with him.

Chryſoſtom alledged. Hom. 2. ad populum Antioch.

Rid. I grant that Chriſt did both; that is, both took up his Fleſh with him aſcending up, and alſo did leave the ſame behind him with us, but after a divers manner and reſpect. For he took his Fleſh with him, after the true and Corporal Subſtance of his Body and Fleſh: Again, he left the ſame in Myſtery to the Faithful in the Supper, to be received after a Spiritual Communication, and by Grace. Neither is the ſame received in the Supper only, but alſo at other times, by hearing the Goſpel, and by Faith. For, the (Bread) which we break, is the communication of the Body of Chriſt: And generally, unleſs ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his Blood, ye ſhall have no life in you.

Here, at this anſwer great carefuls of taunting, ſpiteful, and reproachful words were caſt upon this good Biſhop.

Smith. Chryſoſtom in his Book De Dignitate Sacerdotij, lib. 3. cap. 3. ſaith, O miraculum, O Dei benevolentiam! Qui ſurſum ſedet tempore ſacrificij, hominum manibus contingetur. Or as other have tranſlated it, O miraculum, O Dei benignitatem! Qui cum parte ſurſum ſedet, in illo ipſo temporis articulo, omnium manibus pertractatur, ac ſe ipſe tradit volentibus ipſum accipere & complecti! i. O Miracle, O good will of God! He that ſitteth above at the Sacrifice time, is contained in the hands of men. Or elſe as other have tranſlated it, thus: O Miracle, O the gentleneſs of God! He that ſitteth above with the Father, is handled with the hands of all men at the very ſame moment of time, and doth himſelf deliver himſelf to them that are deſirous to take him and imbrace him.

Chryſoſt. De Dignitate Sacerdotij, lib. 3. cap. 3.

Rid. He that ſitteth there is here preſent in Myſtery and by Grace, and is holden of the godly, ſuch as communicate him, not only Sacramentally with the Hand of the Body, but much more wholeſomly with the Hand of the Heart, and by inward drinking is received; but by the Sacramental ſignification he is holden of all men.

Seton. Where is then the Miracle if he be only preſent through his Grace and Myſtery only?

Rid. Yes, there is a Miracle, good Sir, Chriſt is not idle in his Sacraments. Is not the Miracle great, trow you, when Bread, which is wont to ſuſtain the Body, becometh Food to the Soul? He that underſtandeth not that Miracle, underſtandeth not the force of that Myſtery. God grant we may every one of us underſtand his Truth, and obey the ſame.

The Miracle in the Sacrament whereon it conſiſteth.

Smith. Chryſoſtom calleth it a Miracle, that Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God in Heaven, and at the ſame time is held in the hands of men: Not that he is handled with the hands of men: Only in a Myſtery, and is with them through Grace. Therefore while you deny that, you are altogether deceived, and ſtray far from the Truth.

Harpſ. The former part of Chryſoſtom is not to be let ſlip. Let me, before I begin, ask this one queſtion of you. Is it not a great matter that Elias left his Cloak or Mantle, and the Gift of his Prophecy to his Scholar?

Rid. Yes ſurely, it is a great matter.

Harpſ. Did not Elias then leave great Grace?

Rid. He did ſo.

Harpſ. But Chriſt left a far greater Grace than Elias. For he could not both leave his Cloak and take it with him; Chriſt doth both in his Fleſh.

Rid. I am well content to grant, that Chriſt left much greater things to us than Elias to Eliſeus, albeit he be ſaid to have left his double Spirit with him: For that the Strength and Grace of the Body of Chriſt, which Chriſt aſcending up here left with us, is the only Salvation and Life of all men which ſhall be ſaved: Which Life Chriſt hath here left unto us, to be received by Faith through the hearing of the Word, and the right Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. This Vertue and Grace Chryſoſtom, after the phraſe and manner of John the Evangeliſt, calleth Chriſts Fleſh.

How Chriſt took up his Body, and left it with us.

The phraſe of Chryſoſtom conſidered.

Harpſ. But Chriſt performed a great matter. He carried up, and left behind. You underſtand not the Compariſon. The Compariſon is in this, That Elias left his Mantle, and carried it not with him; Chriſt left his Fleſh behind him, and carried it with him alſo.

Compariſon between Elias's Mantle and Chriſts Fleſh. Elias took his Mantle, and left neither Mantle nor Sacrament of his Mantle behind him. Chriſt took his Fleſh, and left a Sacrament of his Fleſh, which was more than Elias did: and yet the ſaid Elias afterward caſt down his Mantle.

Rid. True it is, and I my ſelf did affirm no leſs before. Now where you ſeem to ſpeak many things, indeed you bring no new things at all. Let there be a Compariſon between Grace and Grace, then Chriſt gave the far greater Grace, when he did inſert or graft us into his Fleſh.

Harpſ. If you will give me leave, I will ask you this queſtion. If Chryſoſtom would have meant ſo, that Chriſt left his Body in the Euchariſt, what plainer words think you, or more evident could he have uſed than theſe?

Rid. Theſe things be not of ſo great force as they bear a great ſhew outwardly. He might alſo have uſed groſſer words if he had lifted to have uttered his mind ſo groſly: For he was an eloquent man. Now he ſpeaketh after the manner of other Doctors, which of myſtical matters ſpeak myſtically, and of Sacraments ſacramentally.

Har. The Compariſon lieth in this; That which was impoſſible to Elias, is poſſible with Chriſt.

Rid. I grant it was poſſible to Chriſt, which was to the other impoſſible. Elias left his Cloak: Chriſt both left his Fleſh and took it with him.

Harpſ. Elias left behind him, and could not take with him: Chriſt both left behind him, and alſo took with him: Except you will ſay, the Compariſon here made to be nothing.

Rid.

Anno 1554.

Rid. He took up his Fleſh with him to Heaven, and left here the Communion of his Fleſh in Earth.

Weſt. You underſtand in the firſt place his Fleſh for very true Fleſh; and in the ſecond place for Grace, and Communion of his Fleſh; and why do you not underſtand it in the ſecond place alſo for his true Fleſh? I will make it evident how blockiſh and groſs your Anſwer is.

Harpſfield anſwered.

Quam ſit ſtupida & craſſa reſponſio ſua.

Rid. Theſe be Taunts and Reproaches, not beſeeming, as I think, the modeſty of this School.

Weſt. Elias left his Cloak to his Diſciple; but the Son of God going up to Heaven, left his Fleſh. But Elias certainly left his Cloak behind, and Chriſt likewiſe his Fleſh, and yet aſcending he carried the ſame with him too. By which words we make this Reaſon:

Chriſt left his Fleſh to his Diſciples, and yet for all that he took the ſame up with him:

Ergo, He is preſent here with us.

D. Weſton ſpeaketh to the Audience in Engliſh.

Here Dr. Weſton crying to the People, ſaid unto them; Mr. Doctor anſwereth it after this faſhion:

He carried his Fleſh into Heaven, and he left here the Communion of his Fleſh behind. Aſſuredly the Anſwer is too unlearned.

Rid. I am glad you ſpeak in Engliſh. Surely, I wiſh that all the whole world might underſtand your Reaſons and my Anſwers. Reliquit nobis carnem ſuam, i. He left his Fleſh. This you underſtand of his Fleſh, and I underſtand the ſame of Grace. He carried his Fleſh into Heaven, and left behind the Communion of his Fleſh unto us.

But were theſe Judges in K. Edwards time?

Weſt. Ye Judges, what think you of this Anſwer?

Judges. It is ridiculous and a very fond Anſwer.

Rid. Well, I take your words patiently for Chriſts cauſe.

Weſt. Weſton here citeth a place, Spargimur Sanguine Chriſti; We are ſprinkled with the Blood of Chriſt.

How we are ſprinkled with Chriſts Blood.

Rid. Mr. Doctor, it is the ſame Blood, but yet ſpiritually received. And indeed all the Prophets were ſprinkled with the ſame Blood, but yet ſpiritually I ſay, and by Grace. And whatſoever they be that are not ſprinkled with this Blood, they cannot be partakers of the everlaſting Salvation.

* This he repeated in Engliſh to the People alſo.

Weſt. * Here I bring Bernard unto you again, Even from the Weſt unto the Eaſt, from the North unto the South, there is one and the ſelf ſame Chriſt in many and divers places.

Anſwer to Bernard.

Rid. The Anſwer is ſoon made, that one Chriſt is here and in divers places. For God according to his Majeſty, and according to his Providence, as St. Auſtin ſaith, is every where with the godly, according to his indiviſible and unſpeakable Grace. Or elſe, if ye would underſtand

The Papiſts make Chriſt to have a monſtrous Body.

Bernard according to the Corporal Preſence, how monſtrous, or huge, and Giant-like a Body would you then make Chriſts Body to be, which ſhould reach even from North to South, from Weſt to Eaſt?

Weſt. Nay, nay, you make a monſtrous Anſwer, and unlearned.

Ward. Before I come in with thoſe Reaſons which I had purpoſed to bring againſt you, I am minded to come againſt Mr. Doctors Argument, by which you being brought into the Briars, ſeemed to doubt of Chriſts Preſence on the Earth. To the proof of which matter I will bring nothing elſe, then that which was agreed upon in the Catechiſm of the Synod of London, ſet out not long ago by you.

Here they returned again to Latin.

Bp. Ridley falſly charged to ſet forth the Catechiſm. D. Weſton in K. Edwards days ſubſcribed.

Rid. Sir, I give you to wit, before you go any further, that I did ſet out no Catechiſm.

Weſt. Yes, you made one Subſcribe to it, when you were a Biſhop in your Ruff.

Rid. I compelled no man to Subſcribe.

Ward. Yes, by rood, you are the very Author of that Hereſie.

Rid. I put forth no Catechiſm.

Cole. Did you never conſent to the ſetting out of thoſe things which you allowed?

Of this Catechiſm read before.

Rid. I grant that I ſaw the Book; but I deny that I wrote it. I peruſed it after it was made, and I noted many things for it. So I conſented to the Book: I was not the Author of it.

* The Judges give an untrue verdict: for Dr. Cranmer, meaning by the Councel, ſpake no word of Ridley.

Judges. * The Catechiſm is ſo ſet forth, as though the whole Convocation Houſe had agreed to it. Cranmer ſaid yeſterday, that you made it.

Rid. I think ſurely, that he would not ſay ſo.

Ward. The Catechiſm hath this Clauſe; Si viſibiliter in terra, &c. If viſibly on the Earth.

Rid. I anſwer, That thoſe Articles were ſet out, I both witting and conſenting to them. Mine own hand will teſtifie the ſame, and Mr. Cranmer put his hand to them likewiſe, and gave them to other afterward. Now, as for the place which you alledge out of it, that may eaſily be expounded, and without any inconvenience.

Ward. Chriſt is the power and the vertue of his Father.

A poſſibili ad eſſe non valet conſequentia.

Ergo, He was not of ſo little ſtrength, that he could not bring to paſs whatſoever he would himſelf.

Rid. I grant.

Ward. Chriſt was the wiſdom of the Father.

Ergo, That he ſpake he ſpake wiſely, and ſo as every man might underſtand: neither was it his mind to ſpeak one thing inſtead of another.

Rid. All this I grant.

Argument of the wiſdom and truth of Chriſt.

Ward. Chriſt was likewiſe the very Truth: Ergo, he made and performed indeed that which he intended to make. And likewiſe it is, that he doth neither deceive, nor could be deceived, nor yet would go about to deceive other.

Hilar. in Pſal. 118.

Weſt. Hilarius in Pſal. 118. hath theſe words: Vera omnia ſunt, & neque otioſè, neque inutiliter conſtituta Dei verba, ſed extra omnem ambiguitatem ſuperfluæ inanitatis, ignita, & ignita vehementer, ne quid illic eſſet, quod non perfectum ac proprium ſit, exiſtemetur. All Gods words or ſayings are true, and neither idly placed, or unprofitably, but fiery, and wonderful fiery, without all doubtfulneſs of ſuperfluous vanity, that there may be nothing thought to be there, which is not abſolute and proper.

Ward. He is the Truth of the Father: Ergo, He can neither deceive, nor yet be deceived; eſpecially I mean when he ſpake at his later end, and his Teſtament.

Anſwer to Mr. Wards Argument.

Rid. Chriſt is the very Truth of the Father: and I perceive well to what ſcope you drive your reaſon. This is but a far fetcht compaſs of words. If that theſe words of Chriſt, This is my Body, which you mean, be rightly underſtood, they are moſt true.

Ward. He took, he brake, he gave, &c. What took he?

Rid. Bread, his Body.

Ward. What brake he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. What gave he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. Gave he Bread made of Wheat, and material Bread?

Rid. I know not whether he gave Bread of Wheat; but he gave true and material Bread.

Ward. I will prove the contrary by Scriptures.

He delivered to them that which he bade them take.

This Argument is not formal in the ſecond Figure.

But he bade not them take material Bread, but his own Body.

Ergo, He gave not material Bread, but his own Body.

Anſwer. Theophylact. in Mat. 26.

Rid. I deny the Minor. For he bade them take his Body Sacramentally in material Bread: and after that ſort it was both Bread which he bade them take, becauſe the Subſtance was Bread, and it was alſo his Body, becauſe it was the Sacrament of his Body, for the ſanctifying and the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, which is always aſſiſtant to thoſe Myſteries which were inſtituted of Chriſt, and lawfully adminiſtred.

Harpſ. What is he that ſo ſaith, By the coming unto of the Holy Spirit?

Rid. I have Theophilact for mine Author for this manner of ſpeaking. And here I bring him, that ye may underſtand that phraſe not to be mine, upon Matthew 26. Furthermore, the ſaid Theophilact writing upon theſe words, This is my Body, ſheweth, that the Body of the Lord is Bread, which is ſanctified on the Altar.

Ogle. That place of Theophylact maketh openly againſt you. For he ſaith in that place, that Chriſt ſaid not, This is the Figure of my Body, but my Body. For, ſaith he, by an unſpeakable operation it is transformed, although it ſeem to us to be Bread.

The words of Theophylact (who ſaid, not this is a figure of my Body) anſwered.

Rid. It is not a Figure, that is to ſay, Non tantum eſt figura, i. it is not only a Figure of his Body.

Weſt. Where have you that word (tantum) only?

Rid. It is not in that place, but he hath it in another, and Auguſtine doth ſo ſpeak many times, & other Doctors moe.

Weſt. Here Weſton, repeating the words of Theophylact in Engliſh, ſaid, He ſaith it is no Figure, and you ſay it is a Figure.

And

And the same Theophylact saith moreover, that the conversing or turning of the Bread is made into the Lords Flesh.

* This Argument is without perfect mood and form, having the Minor Negative in the second Figure.

* That which Christ gave, we do give.
But that which he gave was not a Figure of his Body.
Ergo, We give no Figure, but his Body.

¶ As concerning the authority of Theophylactus, what he thought and might have spoken of that Author, Dr. Ridley did not then speak, nor could conveniently (as he himself afterward declared, reporting and writing with his own hand the Disputations in the Prison) because of the uproars and clamors, which were so great, and he of so many called upon, that he could not answer as he would, and what he thought touching the authority of Theophylactus, but answered simply to that which is brought out out of that Author on this sort.

Conversion after what sort in the Sacrament.

I grant, quoth he, the Bread to be converted and turned into the Flesh of Christ, but not by Transubstantiation, but by a Sacramental conversion or turning. It is transformed, saith Theophylactus, in the same place, by a mystical Benediction, and by the accession or coming of the Holy Ghost unto the Flesh of Christ. He saith not, by expulsion or driving away the Substance of Bread, and by substituting or putting in his place the corporal Substance of Christs Flesh. And where he saith, It is not a Figure of the Body, we should understand that saying, as he himself doth else where add only, that is, it is no naked or bare Figure only. For Christ is present in his Mysteries, neither at any time, as Cyprian saith, doth the Divine Majesty absent himself from the Divine Mysteries.

West. You put in only, and that is one lye. And I tell you farther, Peter Martyr was fain to deny the Author, because the place was so plain against him. But mark his words, how he saith, It is no Figure, but his Flesh.

Rid. To take his words, and not his meaning, is to do injury to the Author.

This Hard. ng face at the Table among the Notaries.

Hard. No other Doctor maketh more against you. For the words in Greek are μεταστοιχείται, which is in Latin transelementatur, that is, turned from one Element into another. And shewing the cause why it is in form of Bread, he saith, Quoniam infirmi sumus, & horremus crudas carnes comedere, maximè hominis carnem: ideo panis quidem apparet, sed caro est. That is, Because we are infirm, and abhor to eat the raw flesh, specially the flesh of man: therefore it appeareth Bread, but it is Flesh.

Theoph. in 6. cap. Joan.

Rid. That word hath not that strength which you seem to give it. You strain it over-much, and yet it maketh not so much for your purpose. For the same Author hath in another place, ἡμεῖς μεταστοιχείμεθα, that is, We are transelemented or transformed and changed into the Body of Christ: And so by that word, in such meaning as you speak of, I could prove as well that we are transformed indeed into the very Body of Christ.

The word μεταστοιχείωσις. Theophylact expounded.

Ward. Learned Mr. Doctor, thus you expound the place, Hoc est corpus meum, i. This is my Body, that is, a Figure of my Body.

Rid. Although I know there be that so expound it, yet that exposition is not full to express the whole.

Argument in the third Figure.

Da- Ward. My sheep hear my voice, and follow me.
ti- But all the sheep of Christ hear his voice, This is my Body, without a Figure:
si. Ergo, The voice of Christ here hath no Figure.

Rid. The sheep of Christ follow the voice of Christ, unless they be seduced and deceived through ignorance.

Ward. But the Fathers took this place for no figurative Speech.

Rid. Yet they do all number this place among figurative and tropical Speeches.

Justinus Martyr Apolog. 2.

Ward. Justinus Martyr in his second Apology hath thus, ὁ γὰρ ὡς κοινὸν ἄρτον οὐδὲ κοινὸν πόμα ταῦτα λαμβάνομεν, ἀλλ' ὃν τρόπον διὰ λόγου θεοῦ σαρκοποιηθεὶς Ἰησοῦς ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ὑπὲρ σωτηρίας ἡμῶν ἔσχεν: ὕπως καὶ τὴν διὰ εὐχῆς λόγου τοῦ παρ' αὐτοῦ εὐχαριστηθεῖσαν τροφὴν, ἐξ ἧς αἷμα καὶ σάρκες κατὰ μεταβολὴν τρέφονται ἡμῶν, ἐκείνου τοῦ σαρκοποιηθέντος Ἰησοῦ καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ἐδιδάχθημεν εἶναι.

Neq; vero hæc pro pane potuve communi sumimus; Imo quemadmodum verbo Dei Jesus Christus, Servator noster incarnatus, habuit pro salute nostra carnem & sanguinem: Ita per orationem illius verbi consecratum hoc alimentum, quo sanguis & carnes nostræ per immutationem enutriuntur, ejusdem incarnati carnem & sanguinem esse sumus edocti.

This place Cranmer hath corrupted. Thus it is englished. Anno 1554.

¶ For we do not take these for common Bread & Drink, but like as Jesus Christ our Saviour incarnate by the Word of God, had Flesh and Blood for our Salvation; even so we be taught the Food wherewith our Flesh and Blood is nourished by alteration, when it is consecrated by the Prayer of his Word, to be the Flesh and Blood of the same Jesus Incarnate.

Dr. Cranmer charged with misstranslating a place of Justine. Read his answer to this before.

Dr. Cranmer hath thus translated it: Bread, Water, and Wine, are not to be taken as other Common Meats and drinks be, but they be ordained purposely to give thanks to God, and therefore be called Eucharistia, and be called the Body and Blood of Christ: and that it is lawful for none to eat and drink of them, but such as professe Christ, and live according to the same; and yet the same Meat ond Drink is charged into our Flesh and Blood, and nourisheth our Bodies.

Rid. O good Mr. Doctor, go sincerely to work: I know that place, and I know how it is used.

Ward. Ward here repeated the place again out of Justine, We are taught, &c. as above.

Rid. O what upright dealing is this? I have the self same place of Justine here copied out. You know your self which are skilful in Greek, how the words here be removed out of the right place, and without any just cause.

Sumptum ex exemplari Domini Ridley descripto.

Ward. I stand still upon mine Argument. What say you?

Rid. If you will that I should answer to Justine, then you must hear. I have but one tongue, I cannot answer at once to you all.

West. Christ gave us his very and true Flesh to be eaten: But he never gave it to be eaten but in his last Supper, and in the Sacrament of the Altar:

In this Argument if the Minor be a Negative, the form is false: if it be Affirmative, equipollens, Major is to be denied.

Ergo, There is the very Flesh of Christ.

Rid. If you speak of the very true Flesh of Christ, after the Substance of his Flesh taken in the Womb of the Virgin Mary, and not by grace and spiritually, I then do deny the first part of your Reason. But if you understand it of the true Flesh, after grace and spiritual communication, I then grant the first part, and deny the second. For he giveth unto us truly his Flesh, to be eaten of all that believe in him. For he is the very and true Meat of the Soul, wherewith we are fed unto everlasting Life, according to his saying; My Flesh is Meat indeed, &c.

Tertul. contra Marcion. lib. 4.

Ward. Desiderio desideravi hoc Pascha manducare vobiscum; i. I have desired with my hearty desire to eat this Paschal with you. What Paschal I pray you desired he to eat? If you stand in doubt, you have Tertullian, l. 4. contra Marcionem: Professus itaque se concupiscentia concupiscere edere Pascha suum (indignum enim ut alienum concupiscaret Deus) acceptum panem & distributum Discipulis suum corpus illum fecit; Hoc est corpus meum, dicendo, &c. i. He therefore protesting a great desire to eat his Paschal, his own Paschal I say (for it was not meet that he should desire any other than his own (taking Bread and distributing it to his Disciples, made it his Body, saying, This is my Body.

What say you? Did he understand by this Paschal the Judaical Lamb, or by that which afterward he gave in his Supper?

Argument.

Rid. I suppose that the first he understood of the Judaical Passover and afterward of the Eucharist.

Ward. Nay then Tertullian is against you, which saith:
Ba- He desired to eat his Passover.
ro- But the Judaical Passover was not his, but strange from Christ.
co. Ergo, He meant not of the Judaical Passover.

Answer.

Rid. The Judaical Passover was not strange from Christ, but his own: Insomuch as he is the Lord of all; and as well the Lord of the Judaical Passover, as of his own Supper.

Analogical sense is that which hath a high and mystical understanding that lieth abstruse and profound under the external letter. August. in Psal. 96.

Ward. What answer you then to Tertullian, the which saith, He desired to eat his own Passover, and not the Jewish Passover, which stood upon words without flesh?

Rid. Tertullian may here dally in sense Analogical. I know that Cyprian hath these words; Tunc instituit quidem Eucharistiam, sed utrumque erat Christi; i. He began then to institute the holy Eucharist, but both were Christs.

Ward. Augustine in Psalm 96. writing upon these words, Adorate scabellum pedum ejus; i. Worship his Footstool, &c. Quæro, inquit, quid sit scabellum pedum ejus? Et dicit mihi Scriptura, Terra scabellum pedum meorum:

Fluctuans

Anno 1554.

Fluctuans converto me ad Christum, quia ipsum quæro hic, & invenio quomodo sine impietate adoretur scabellum pedum ejus. Suscepit enim de terra terram, quia caro de terra est, & de carne Mariæ carnem accepit, & quia in ipsa carne hic ambulavit, & ipsam carnem nobis manducandam ad salutem dedit: nemo autem illam carnem manducat nisi prius adoraverit. Inventum est qua modo tale scabellum pedum Domini adoretur, ut non solum non peccemus adorando, sed peccemus non adorando ipsum, &c. i. I ask (saith he) what is the footstool of his feet? and the Scripture telleth me, The Earth is the Footstool of my Feet. And so in searching thereof I turn my self to Christ, because I seek him here in the Earth, and find how, without impiety, the footstool of his feet may be worshipped; for he took Earth of Earth, in that he is Flesh and Earth, and of the Flesh of Mary he took Flesh, and because that in the same Flesh here he walked, and also he gave the same Flesh to us to be eaten unto Salvation. But no man eateth that Flesh except he have worshipped before. And so it is found, how such a footstool of the feet of the Lord is to be worshipped, so that not only we Sin not in worshipping, but also do Sin in not worshipping the same, Da- He gave to us his Flesh to be eaten, the which he took of the Earth, in which also here he walked, &c. ti. But he never gave his Flesh to be eaten, but when he gave it at his Supper, saying, This is my Body. si. Ergo, in the Eucharist he gave us his Flesh.

If the minor of this Argument (as said before) be equipollent to affirmative, then it cometh next to the Mood Darii.

Rid. You do alledge the place of Austin upon the 98. Psalm, where he saith, that Christ gave his Flesh to be eaten which he took of the Earth, and in which here he walked, inferring hereupon that Christ never gave the same his Flesh to be eaten, but only in the Eucharist: I deny your Minor; for he gave it both in the Eucharist to be eaten, and also otherwise, as well in the Word, as also upon the Cross.

How Christ gave his Flesh to be eaten, and when.

Smith. What if Augustine say, that Christ did not only give himself to us in a figure, but gave his own very Flesh indeed and really?

Rid. I never said that Christ gave only a figure of his Body. For indeed he gave himself in a real Communication, that is, he gave his Flesh after a Communication of his Flesh.

Christ gave himself not only in a figure, but indeed by a real and effectual communication of his Flesh.

West. Here Weston read the place of Augustine in English, and afterward said; Ye say, Christ gave not his Body, but a figure of his Body.

Rid. I say not so, I say he gave his own Body verily. But he gave it by a real, effectual, and spiritual Communication.

D. Glin disputeth.

¶ After this, Doctor Glin began to reason, who (notwithstanding Mr. Ridley had always taken him for his old friend) made a very contumelious Preface against him. This Preface Mr. Ridley therefore did the more take to heart, because it proceeded from him. Howbeit he thought, that Doctor Glin's mind was to serve the time. For afterward he came to the house wherein M. Ridley was kept, and, as far as Mr. Ridley could call to remembrance, before Doctor Young and Doctor Oglethorp he desired him to pardon his words. The which Mr. Ridley did even from the very heart, and wished earnestly, that God would give not only to him, but unto all other, the true and evident knowledge of Gods Evangelical Sincerity, that all offences put a part, they being perfectly and fully reconciled, might agree and meet together in the house of the Heavenly Father.

D. Glin Bishop Ridleys old friend desireth him of Pardon.

B. Ridley forgiveth D. Glin.

Glin. I see that you elude or shift away all Scriptures and Fathers, I will go to work with you after another sort.

Christ hath here his Church known in Earth, of which you were once a Child, although now you speak contumeliously of the Sacraments.

Rid. This is a grievous contumely, that you call me a shifter away of the Scripture, and of the Doctors: As touching the Sacraments, I never yet spake contumeliously of them. I grant that Christ hath here his Church in Earth: but that Church did ever receive and acknowledge the Eucharist to be a Sacrament of the Body of Christ, yet not the Body of Christ really, but the Body of Christ by Grace.

Glin. Then I ask this question; whether the Catholick Church hath ever or at any time been Idolatrous?

Rid. The Church is the Pillar and stay of the Truth, that never yet hath been Idolatrous in respect of the whole: but peradventure in respect of some part thereof, which sometimes may be seduced by evil Pastors, and through ignorance.

Glin. (a) That Church ever hath worshipped the Flesh of Christ in the Eucharist.

(a) This Argument having the minor a negative, neither is formable in the third figure, neither doth it conclude rightly, but should conclude thus: Ergo, to Worship the Flesh of Christ in the Eucharist is no Idolatry. Sumptum ab autographo Ridlei manu descripto.

But the Church hath never been Idolatrous:

Ergo, It hath alway judged the Flesh of Christ to be in the Eucharist.

Rid. And I also Worship Christ in the Sacrament, but not because he is included in the Sacrament: Like as I Worship Christ also in the Scriptures, not because he is really included in them. Notwithstanding I say, that the Body of Christ is present in the Sacrament, but yet Sacramentally and Spiritually, according to his Grace giving Life, and in that respect really, that is, according to his Benediction giving Life.

Furthermore, I acknowledge gladly the true Body of Christ to be in the Lords Supper, in such sort as the Church of Christ (which is the Spoute of Christ, and is taught of the Holy Ghost, and guided by Gods Word) doth acknowledge the same. But the true Church of Christ doth acknowledge a Presence of Christs Body in the Lords Supper to be Communicated to the Godly by Grace, and spiritually, as I have often shewed, and by a Sacramental signification, but not by the Corporal Presence of the Body of his Flesh.

Glin. Austin contra Faustum, lib. 20. cap. 13. Nonnulli propter panem & calicem Cererem & Bacchum nos colere existimabant, &c. i. Some there were which thought us instead of Bread and of the Cup, to Worship Ceres and Bacchus.

August. contra. Faust. lib. 20. cap. 13.

Upon this place I gather, that there was an Adoration of the Sacrament among the Fathers; and Erasmus, in an Epistle to the Brethren of Low-Germany, saith, that the Worshipping of the Sacrament was before Austin and Cyprian.

Rid. We do handle the signs reverently: but we Worship the Sacrament as a Sacrament, not as a thing signified by the Sacrament.

Glin. What is the Symbol or Sacrament?

Rid. Bread.

Equivocation of this word Worship distinguished.

Glin. Ergo, We Worship Bread.

Rid. There is a deceit in this word (Adoramus:) We Worship the Symbols, when reverently we handle them. We Worship Christ whersoever we perceive his benefits. But we understand his benefit to be greatest in the Sacrament.

Glin. So I may fall down before the Bench here, and Worship Christ and if any man ask me what I do, I may answer, I Worship Christ.

We Worship Christ in the Eucharist: but we Worship not the Eucharist for Christ.

Rid. We Adore and Worship Christ in the Eucharist, And if you mean the external Sacrament, I say, that also is to be Worshipped as a Sacrament.

Glin. So was the Faith of the Primitive Church.

Rid. Would to God we would all follow the Faith of that Church.

Glin. Think you that Christ hath now his Church?

Rid. I do so.

Glin. But all the Church adoreth Christ, verily, and really in the Sacrament.

This Councel of Florence was but of late years in the time of the Councel of Basil.

Rid. You know your self that the Eastern Church would not acknowledge Transubstantiation, as appeareth in the Councel of Florence.

Cole. That is false. For in the same they did acknowledge Transubstantiation, although they would not intreat of the matter, for that they had not in their Commission so to do.

Rid. Nay, they would determine nothing of the matter, when the Article was propounded unto them.

Cole. It was not because they did not acknowledge the same, but because they had no Commission so to do.

Chryf. in ca. 10. Cor. 1. Hom. 24.

Curtop. Reverend Sir, I will prove and declare, that the Body of Christ is truly and really in the Eucharist: and whereas the Holy Fathers, both of the West and East Church, have written both many things and no less manifest of the same matter, yet will I bring forth only Chrysostom. The place is in cap. 10. Corinth. 1. Hom. 24.

(a) The Major should be thus: Whatsoever did flow from the side of Christ is in the Cup, &c. or else the Argument being in the second figure is affirmative, and false.

(a) That which is in the Cup, is the same that flowed from the side of Christ.

But true and pure Blood did flow from the side of Christ.

Ergo, His true and pure Blood is in the Cup.

Rid. It is his true Blood which is in the Chalice, I grant, and the same which sprang from the side of Christ,

But how? It is Blood indeed, but not after the same manner, after which manner it sprang from his side. For here is the Blood, but by way of a Sacrament.

Again, I say, like as the Bread of the Sacrament and of Thanksgiving is called the Body of Christ given for us: so the Cup of the Lord is called the Blood which sprang from the side of Christ. But that Sacramental Bread is called the Body, because it is the Sacrament of his Body: even so likewise the Cup is called the Blood also which flowed out of Christs side, because it is the Sacrament of that Blood which flowed out of his side, instituted of the Lord himself for our singular commodity: namely, for our Spiritual nourishment: like as Baptism is ordained in water to Spiritual Regeneration.

Cur. The Sacrament of the Blood is not the Blood.

Rid. The Sacrament of the Blood is the Blood, and that is attributed to the Sacrament, which is spoken of the thing of the Sacrament.

West. Here West. repeateth Curtops Argument in English.

(l) This Argument concludeth not directly, and being in the second figure affirmative, it is not formal.

(b) That which is in the Chalice, is the same which flowed out of Christs side.

But there came out very Blood:

Ergo, There is Blood in the Chalice.

Rid. The Blood of Christ is in the Chalice indeed, but not in the Real Presence, but by Grace, and in a Sacrament.

West. That is very well. Then we have Blood in the Chalice,

Rid. It is true, but by Grace, and in a Sacrament.

Here the people hissed at him.

Rid. O my Masters! I take this for no Judgment: I will stand to Gods Judgment.

Wat. Good Sir, I have determined to have respect of the time, and to abstain from all those things which may hinder the entrance of our disceptation: and therefore first I ask this question; when Christ said in the sixth of John, Qui manducat carnem meam, i. He that eateth my Flesh, &c. doth he signifie in those words the eating of his true and Natural Flesh, or else of the Bread and Symbol?

Spiritual eating of the Flesh of Christ.

Rid. I understand that place of the very Flesh of Christ to be eaten, but spiritually: And further I say, that the Sacrament also pertaineth unto the Spiritual Manducation. For without the Spirit to eat the Sacrament is to eat it unprofitably. For who so eateth not Spiritually, he eateth his own Condemnation.

Wat. I ask then whether the Eucharist be a Sacrament?

Rid. The Eucharist, taken for a sign or Symbol, is a Sacrament.

Wat. Is it instituted of God?

Rid. It is instituted of God.

Wat. Where?

Rid. In the Supper.

Wat. With what words is it made a Sacrament?

Rid. By the words and deeds which Christ said and did, and commanded us to say and do the same.

Wat. It is a thing commonly received of all, that the Sacraments of the New Law give Grace to them that worthily receive.

The Sacraments give no Grace, but are instruments. Sacrament defined.

Rid. True it is, that Grace is given by the Sacrament, but as by an instrument. The inward vertue and Christ give the Grace through the Sacrament.

Wat. What is a Sacrament?

Rid. I remember there be many definitions of a Sacrament in Augustine: But I will take that which seemeth most fit to this present purpose. A Sacrament is a visible sign of invisible Grace.

Wat. Ergo, Grace is given to the receivers.

(a) The Syllogism is thus to be formed: The Sacrament of the New Testament hath a promise of Grace annexed: Bread and Wine have no promise of Grace annexed: Ergo, Bread and wine is no Sacrement of the New Testament.

Rid. The Society or Conjunction with Christ through the Holy Ghost is Grace, and by the Sacrament we are made the Members of the Mystical Body of Christ, for that by the Sacrament the part of the Body is grafted in the head.

Wat. But there is difference between the Mystical Body, and Natural Body.

Rid. There is (I grant you) a difference, but the head of them both is one.

Wat. (a) The Eucharist is a Sacrament of the New Testament:

Ergo, It hath a promise of Grace.

But no promise of Grace is made to Bread and Wine:

Ergo, Bread and Wine be not the Sacraments of the New Testament.

Rid. I grant that Grace pertaineth to the Eucharist, according to this saying, The Bread which we Break is it not the Communication or partaking of the Body of Christ? And like as he that eateth, and he that drinketh unworthily the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord, eateth and drinketh his own Damnation: Even so he that eateth and drinketh worthily, eateth Life, and drinketh Life. I grant also that there is no (b) promise made to Bread and Wine. But inasmuch as they are sanctified, and made the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of the Lord, they have a promise of Grace annexed unto them; namely, of Spiritual partaking of the Body of Christ to be Communicated and given, not to the Bread and Wine, but to them which worthily do receive the Sacrament.

(b) No promise made to Bread and Wine as they be Common Bread and Common Wine: but as they be sanctified and made Sacraments of the Lords Body and Blood, they are not now called Bread and Wine, but have a promise annexed to them, or rather (to say the truth) annexed to the receivers of them. Argument. Sacraments how they have a promise of Grace annexed, not absolutely, but instrumentally. Grace not included in Sacraments: but the receiving of them turneth to Grace in them that duly come unto them.

Wat. If the Substance of Bread and Wine do remain, then the society betwixt Christ and us is promised to them that take Bread and Wine.

But that Society is not promised to Bread and Wine, but to the receivers of the Flesh and Blood. John 6. Qui manducat, &c.

Ergo, The substance of Bread and Wine remaineth not.

Rid. The promise undoubtedly is made to the Flesh and Blood, but the same is to be received in the Sacrament through Faith.

Wat. Every Sacrament hath a promise of Grace annexed unto it.

Ergo, The Bread and Wine are not Sacraments.

Rid. True it is, every Sacrament hath Grace annexed unto it instrumentally. But there is divers understanding of this word (Habet) hath. For the Sacrament hath not Grace included in it; but to those that receive it well, it is turned to Grace. After that manner the water in Baptism hath Grace promised, and by that Grace the holy Spirit is given, not that Grace is included in Water, but that Grace cometh by Water.

Wat. This promise is made to the Flesh and Blood of Christ, and not to the Bread and Wine.

Ergo, The Sacrament is not Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Christ.

Promise made not to the Symbols, but to the thing of the Sacrament. Sacraments only instruments of Grace. Bread more largely taken in the Minor, than in the conclusion.

Rid. There is no promise made to him that taketh common bread and common Wine but to him that receiveth the Sanctified Bread, and Bread of the Communion, there is a large promise of Grace made, neither is the promise given to the Symbols, but to the thing of the Sacrament. But the thing of the Sacrament is the Flesh and Blood.

Wat. Every Sacrament of the New Testament giveth Grace, promised of God to those that worthily receive it.

Rid. This Sacrament hath a promise of Grace, made to those that receive it worthily, because Grace is given by it, as by an instrument, not that Christ hath transfused Grace into the Bread and Wine.

Wat. But this promise which is made, is not but to those that worthily receive the Flesh and Blood, not the Bread and Wine.

Rid. That proposition of yours hath a divers understanding. There is no promise made to them that receive Common Bread, as it were, but to those that worthily receive the Sanctified Bread, there is a promise of Grace made, like as Origen doth testifie.

Wat. Where is that promise made?

Rid. The Bread which he brake, is it not a Communication of the Body of Christ? (And) we being many are one Bread, one Body of Christ. 1 Cor. 10.

Wat. What doth he mean by Bread in that place?

Rid. The Bread of the Lords Table, the Communion of the Body of Christ.

Wat. Harken what Chrysostom saith upon that place; Panis quem frangimus, nonne communicatio corporis Christi est? Quare non dixit participatio? Quia amplius quid significare voluit, & multam inter hæc convenientiam offendere. Non enim participatione tantum & acceptione, sed unitate communicamus. Quemadmodum enim corpus illud unitum est Christo, ita & nos per hunc panem unione conjungimur. That is, the Bread which we Break, is it not the Communication of Christs Body? Wherefore did he not say participation? Because he would signifie some great matter, and that he would declare a great convenience Chrys. in 1 Cor. cap. 10.

Anno 1554.

Anno 1554.

venience and conjunction betwixt the same. For we do not Communicate by Participation only and receiving, but also by co-uniting. For likewise as that Body is co-united to Christ, so also we by the same Bread are conjoyned and united to him.

Answer to Chrysostom.

Rid. Let Chrysostom have his manner of speaking, and his sentence. If it be true, I reject it not. But let it not be prejudicial to me to name it true Bread.

In 1 Cor. cap. 10.

Wat. All (saith Chrysostom) which sit together at one boord, do Communicate together of one true Body. What do I call (saith he) this communicating? We are all the self same Body. What doth Bread signifie? The Body of Christ. What be they that receive it? The Body of Christ. For many are but one Body. Chrysostom doth interpret this place against you. All we be one Bread, and one Mystical Body, which do participate together one Bread of Christ.

Bread signifieth the Body after Chrysost.

One Bread one Mystical Body.

Rid. All we be one Mystical Body, which do communicate of one Christ in Bread, after the efficacy of Regeneration or quickening.

Wat. Of what manner of Bread speaketh he?

Rid. Of the Bread of the Lords Table.

Wat. Is that Bread one?

Rid. It is one, of the Church being one, because one Bread is set forth upon the Table: And so of one Bread all together do participate which communicate at the Table of the Lord.

Wat. See how absurdly you speak. Do you say all which be from the beginning to the end of the World?

Rid. All, I say, which at one Table together have Communicated in the Mysteries might well so do. Albeit the Heavenly and Celestial Bread is likewise one also, whereof the Sacramental Bread is a Mystery: The which being one, all we together do participate.

Wenseth cavilleth about the word (All.)

Wat. A perverse answer. Which all? Mean you all Christian men.

Rid. I do distribute this word (All:) for all were wont together to Communicate of the one Bread divided into parts. All, I say, which were one Congregation, and which all did communicate together at one Table.

Wat. What? Do you exclude then from the Body of Christ all them which did not Communicate, being present?

Cyprian. de Cœna Dom.

Feck. But Cyprian saith, Panis quem nulla multitudo consumit, i. Bread which no multitude doth consume. Which cannot be understood but only of the Body of Christ.

Rid. Also Cyprian in this place did speak of the true Body of Christ, and not of material Bread.

M. Feckams Reason.

Feck. Nay, rather he did there intreat of the Sacrament in that tractation De Cœna Domini, writing upon the Supper of the Lord.

Rid. Truth it is, and I grant he intreateth there of the Sacrament: But also he doth admix something therewithal of the Spiritual manducation.

Smith. When the Lord saith, This is my Body, he useth no Tropical Speech:

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. I deny your Antecedent.

Augustin. in Psal. 33. Conc. 1.

Smith. I bring here Augustine in Psal. 33. Conc. 1. expounding these words, Ferebatur in manibus suis, i. He was carried in his own hands. 1 Regum.

Hoc quomodo possit fieri in homine, quis intelligat? Manibus enim suis nemo portatur, sed alienis. Quomodo intelligatur de David secundum literam, non invenimus; de Christo autem invenimus. Ferebatur enim Christus in manibus suis cum diceret; Hoc est corpus meum. Ferebat enim illud corpus in manibus suis, &c. That is, How may this be understood to be done in man? For no man is carried in his own hands, but in the hands of other. How this may be understood of David after the Letter, we do not find; Of Christ we find it. For Christ was born in his own hands, when he saith, This is my Body, for he carried that same Body in his own hands, &c.

Augustine here did not see how this place after the Letter could be understood of David, because no man can carry himself in his own hands. Therefore, saith he, this place is to be understood of Christ after the Letter. For Christ carried himself in his own hands in his Supper, when he gave the Sacrament to his Disciples, saying, This is my Body.

The place of Augustine answered.

Rid. I deny your Argument, and I explicate the same. Austin could not find after his own understanding how this could be understood of David after the Letter. Austin goeth here from other in this exposition, but I go not from him. But let this exposition of Austin be granted to you; although I know this place of Scripture be otherwise read of other men, after the verity of the Hebrew Text, and it is also otherwise to be expounded. Yet to grant to you this exposition of Austin, I say yet notwithstanding it maketh nothing against my Assertion: For Christ did bear himself in his own hands, when he gave the Sacrament of his Body to be eaten of his Disciples.

Smith. Ergo, It is true of Christ after the Letter, that he was born in his own hands.

Rid. He was born literally; and after that Letter which was spoken of David: but not after the Letter of these words, Hoc est corpus meum.

The place of Austin, how Christ was carried in his own hands ad literam, i. literally.

I grant that S. Austin saith, that it is not found literally of David, that he carried himself in his own hands, but that it is found of Christ. But this word, ad literam, literally, you do not well refer to that which was born, but rather it ought to be referred to him that did bear it. S. Augustines meaning in this; that it is not read any where in the Bible, that this carnal David, the Son of Jesse did bear himself in his hands; but of that Spiritual David that overthrew Goliah the Devil; that is, of Christ our Saviour, the Son of the Virgin; it may well be found literally, that he bare himself in his own hands after a certain manner, namely, in carrying the Sacrament of himself. And note, that S. Austin hath these words, quodam modo, after a certain manner; which manifestly declare how the Doctors meaning is to be taken.

Ferebatur quodam modo in manibus suis. August. i. Christ was born in his own hands Sacramentally.

Smith: When then was he born in his own hands, and after what Letter?

Rid. He was born in the Supper Sacramentally, when he said, This is my Body.

* A figure he may bear, but not a Sacrament.

Smith. Every man may bear in his own hands a * figure of his Body.

But Augustine denieth that David could carry himself in his hands.

Ergo, He speaketh of no figure of his Body.

Rid. If Austin could have found in all the Scripture, that David had carried the Sacrament of his Body, then he would never have used that exposition of Christ.

Smith. But he did bear himself in his own hands:

Ergo, He did not bear a figure only.

Rid. He did bear himself, but in a Sacrament: and Austin afterward addeth, quodam modo, that is, sacramentally.

Quodam modo.

Smi. You understand not what Austin meant when he said, quodam modo; for he meant that he did bear his very true body in that Supper, not in figure and form of a Body, but in form and figure of Bread.

Ergo, You are holden fast, neither are you able to escape out of this labyrinth.

Doctor Weston repeated this place again in English. Which done, then Doctor Tresham began thus to speak, moved (as it seemed to M. Ridley) with great zeal, and desired that he might be in stead of John Baptist, in converting the hearts of the Fathers, and in reducing the said Bishop Ridley again to the Mother Church. Now at the first, not knowing the person, he thought he had been some good old man, which had the Zeal of God, although not according to Knowledge, and began to answer him with mansuetude and Reverence. But afterward he smelled a Fox under a Sheeps clothing.

D. Tresham prayeth for converting Ridley.

GOD Almighty grant that it may be fulfilled in me, that was spoken by the Prophet Malachi of John Baptist, which may turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the hearts of the Children to their Fathers, that you at length may be converted. The wise man saith, Son, Honour thy Father, and Reverence thy Mother. But you dishonour your Father in Heaven, and pollute your Mother, the Holy Church here on Earth, while ye set not by it.

Rid. These by-words do pollute your School.

The Decree of the Lateran Councel alledged for Transubstantiation. Of this Councel read before.

Tresh. If there were an Arrian which had that subtil wit that you have, he might soon shift off the Authority of the Scriptures and Fathers.

West. Either dispute, or else hold your peace, I pray you.

Tresh. I bring a place here out of the Councel of Lateran, the which Councel representing the Universal Church, wherein were congregated 300. Bishops, and 70. Metropolitans, besides a great multitude of other, decreed that Bread and Wine, by the power of Gods Word, was Transubstantiate into the Body and Blood of the Lord. Therefore whosoever saith contrary, cannot be a Child of the Church, but an Heretick.

The decree of the Lateran Councel alledged for Transubstantiation. Of this Councel read before.

Rid. Good Sir, I have heard what you have cited out of the Councel of Laterane, and remember that there was a great multitude of Bishops and Metropolitans, as you said: But yet you have not numbered how many Abbots, Priors, and Friers were in that Councel, who were to the number of 800.

One of the Scribes carpeth against B. Ridley.

One of the Scribes. What, will you deny then the Authority of that Councel for the multitude of those Priors?

Of this Innocentius the third read before.

Rid. No Sir, not so much for that cause, as for that especially, because the Doctrine of that Councel agreed not with the Word of God, as it may well appear by the Acts of that Councel, which was holden under Innocentius the third, a man (if we believe the Histories) most pernicious to the Church and Common-wealth of Christ.

B. Ridley rejecteth the Councel of Lateran. Good men do eat the very true Body of Christ both Sacramentally and Spiritually.

Tresh. What, do you not receive the Councel of Laterane? Whereupon he with certain other cried, Scribite, scribite, Write, write.

Rid. No Sir, I receive not that Councel; Scribite, & rescribite, Write, and write again.

Tresh. Evil men do eat the Natural Body of Christ. Ergo, The true and Natural Body of Christ is on the Altar.

Rid. Evil men do eat the very true and Natural Body of Christ Sacramentally, and no further, as S. Augustine saith: But good men do eat the very true Body both Sacramentally and Spiritually by Grace.

Aug. lib. 5. cont. Don. ca. 8.

Tresh. I prove the contrary by S. Augustin, Lib. 5. contra Donatistas cap. 8. Sicut enim Judas, cui buccellulam Dominus tradidit, non malum accipiendo, sed male accipiendo peccavit, &c. Like as Judas, to whom the Lord gave the Morsel, did offend, not in taking a thing that was evil, but in receiving it after an evil manner, &c. And a little after, Quia aliquis non ad salutem manducat, non ideo non est Corpus, i. Because some do not eat unto Salvation, it followeth not therefore that it is not his Body.

Manducare panem Domini, & panem Dominum Aug.

Rid. It is the Body to them, that is, the Sacrament of the Body: and Judas took the Sacrament of the Lord to his condemnation. Austin hath distinguished these things well in another place, where he saith, Panem Domini, & panem Dominum. Mali manducant panem Domini, non panem Dominum: boni autem manducant & panem Domini, & panem Dominum, i. The Bread of the Lord, the Bread the Lord. Evil men eat the Bread of the Lord, but not Bread the Lord. But good men eat both the Bread of the Lord, and Bread the Lord.

This Weston spake in English.

West. Paul saith, the Body, and you say, the Sacrament of the Body.

Rid. Paul meaneth so indeed.

Wat. You understand it evil concerning the Sign: For the Fathers say, that evil men do eat him which descended from Heaven.

The Old Doctors do use many times, the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament. Theophylact alledged.

Rid. They eat him indeed; but Sacramentally. The Fathers use many times the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament, and all that same place maketh against you; and so here he cited the place.

West. I bring Theophylact, which saith: That Judas did taste the Body of the Lord. Ostendit Dominus crudelitatem Judæ, qui cum argueretur, non intellexit, & gustavit carnem Domini, &c. i. The Lord did shew the cruelty of Judas, which, when he was rebuked, did not understand, and tasted the Lords Flesh, &c.

Answer.

Rid. This phrase to Divines is well known, and used of the Doctors. He tasted the Flesh of the Lord, Insensibiliter, Insensibly, that is, the Sacrament of the Lords Flesh.

Chrysostom alledged.

West. Chrysostom saith, that the same punishment remaineth to them which receive the Body of the Lord unworthily, as to them which Crucified him.

Chrysostom expounded.

Rid. That is, because they defile the Lords Body: for evil men do eat the Body of Christ Sacramentally, but good men eat both the Sacrament and the matter of the Sacrament.

The Councel of Nice alledged.

Wat. You reject the Councel of Laterane, because (you say) it agreeth not with Gods Word. What say you then to the Councel of Nice? The words of the Councel be these, Ne humiliter spectemus propositum panem & potum, sed exaltata mente fideliter credamus jacere in illa sacra mensa Agnum Dei tollentem peccata mundi à sacerdotibus sacrificatum, i. Let us not look alow by the ground upon the Bread and the Drink set before us, but lifting up our mind let us faithfully believe, there upon the Holy Table to lye the Lamb of God taking away the Sins of the World, being Sacrificed of the Priests.

Anno 1554.

Rid. That Councel was collected out of ancient Fathers: and is to me a great Authority; for it saith, Positum esse panem in altari, & exaltata mente considerandum eum qui in Calis est, i. That Bread is set upon the Altar, and having our minds lifted up, we must consider him which is in Heaven. The words of the Councel make for me.

Wat. (Exaltata mente) with a mind exalted: that is, not as bruit Beasts at the rack or manger, having an eye only upon the thing that is set before them. Agnus Dei jacet in mensa, i. the * Lamb of God lieth on the Table, saith the Councel.

* If the Lamb of God lie really upon the Table, then why doth the Councel bid us lift up our minds, which rather should set down our minds to the Altar? The place of the Nicene Councel expounded.

Rid. The Lamb of God is in Heaven, according to the verity of the Body: and here he is with us in a Mystery, according to his power, not corporally.

Wat. But the Lamb of God lieth on the Table.

Rid. It is a figurative speech, for in our mind we understand him which is in Heaven.

Wat. But he lyeth there, the Greek word is κεῖται.

Rid. He lyeth there, that is, he is there present, not corporally, but he lieth there in his operation.

Wat. He lyeth, but his operation lieth not.

Rid. You think very grossly of the sitting or lying of the celestial Lamb on the Table of the Lord. For we may not imagine any such sitting or lying upon the Table, as the reason of man would judge: but all things are here to be understood Spiritually. For that Heavenly Lamb is (as I confess) on the Table, but by a Spiritual Presence, by Grace, and not after any corporal Substance of his Flesh taken of the Virgin Mary.

De consecrat. dist. 9.

And indeed the same Canon doth plainly teach, that the Bread which is set on the Table is material Bread; and therefore it (the Canon I mean) commandeth that we should not creep on the ground in our cogitation, to mole things which are set before us; as who should say, what other things are they (as much as pertaineth to their true substance) than Bread and Wine? but rather, saith the Canon, lifting up our minds into Heaven, let us consider with Faith the Lamb of God which taketh away the Sins of the World, sitting or lying upon the Table. For a lifted up Faith, saith he, seeth him which sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, after the true manner of a Body set by Grace on the Lords Table, and taking away the Sins of the World. For I think you mean not so; as though the Lamb did lie there prostrate with his members spread upon the Table.

Another place of the Nicene Councel alledged.

Smith. I bring another place out of the Councel of Nice: Nullus Apostolorum dixit, hæc est figura corporis Christi: Nullus venerabilium Presbyterorum dixit incruentum altaris sacrificium figuram, &c. i. None of the Apostles said, this is a figure of the Body of Christ: None of the Reverend Elders said, the unbloody Sacrifice of the Altar to be a figure.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. This Canon is not in the Councel of Nice. For I have read over this Councel many times.

Out of D. Ridley's copy. The Councel of Florence alledged.

Then came in another whom M. Ridley knew not, and said, The Universal Church both of the Greeks and Latines, of the East and of the West, have agreed in the Councel of Florence uniformly in the Doctrine of the Sacrament, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the true and real Body.

Rid. I deny the Greek and the East Church to have agreed either in the Councel at Florence, or at any time else, with the Romish Church in the Doctrine of Transubstantiation of Bread into the Body of Christ. For there was nothing in the Councel of Florence, wherein the Greeks would agree with the Romanists; albeit hitherto I confess it was left free for every Church to use, as they were wont, leavened or unleavened Bread.

Here cried out Doctor Cole, and said, they agreed together concerning Transubstantiation of Bread into the Body of Christ. Mr. Ridley said that could not be.

One of the Scribes.

Here start up another unknown to Mr. Ridley, but thought to be one of the Scribes, who affirmed with him, that indeed there was nothing decreed concerning Transubstantiation; the Councel left that, as a matter

Anno 1554.

ter not meet nor worthy to diſturb the Peace and Concord of the Church. To whom Mr. Ridley anſwered again, ſaying, that he ſaid the truth.

Pie diſputeth againſt B. Ridley.

Pie. What ſay you to that Councel, where it is ſaid, that the Prieſt doth offer an unbloody Sacrifice of the Body of Chriſt?

Rid. I ſay, it is well ſaid, if it be rightly underſtood.

Pie. But he offereth an unbloody Sacrifice.

Sacrifice called unbloody is nothing elſe but a repreſentation of the Bloody Sacrifice of Chriſt.

Rid. It was called unbloody, and is offered after a certain manner, and in a Myſtery, and as a repreſentation of that Bloody Sacrifice, and he doth not lye which ſaith Chriſt to be offered.

Weſton playeth Goliah with David.

Weſt. I with one Argument will throw down to the ground your opinion, but of Chryſoſtom, Hom. 24. in 1. ad Cor. and I will teach, not only a figure and a ſign, or Grace only, but the very ſame Body, which was here converſant on the Earth, to be in the Euchariſt.

We Worſhip the ſelf ſame Body in the Euchariſt which the wiſe men did worſhip in the Manger.

But that was his natural and real Body, not ſpiritual:

This Argument, after the Diſpoſition and terms, as it ſtandeth, is not formal.

Ergo, The real Body of Chriſt is in the Euchariſt.

Again, the ſame Chryſoſtom ſaith, We have not here the Lord in the Manger, but on the Altar. Here a Woman holdeth him not in her hands, but a Prieſt.

Rid. We worſhip, I confeſs, the ſame true Lord and Saviour of the World, which the wiſe men worſhipped in the Manger, howbeit we do it in a Myſtery, and in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that in ſpiritual liberty, as ſaith S. Auſt. lib. 3. De doctrina Chriſtiana: not in carnal ſervitude; that is, we do not worſhip ſervilely the ſigns for the things: For that ſhould be, as he alſo ſaith, a part of a ſervile infirmity. But we behold with the Eyes of Faith him preſent after Grace, and ſpiritually ſet upon the Table; and we worſhip him which ſitteth above, and is worſhipped of the Angels. For Chriſt is always aſſiſtant to his Myſteries, as the ſaid Auguſtine ſaith. And the Divine Majeſty, as ſaith Cyprian, doth never abſent it ſelf from the Divine Myſteries; but this aſſiſtance and Preſence of Chriſt, as in Baptiſm it is wholly ſpiritual, and by Grace, and not by any Corporal Subſtance of the Fleſh: Even ſo it is here in the Lords Supper, being rightly and according to the Word of God duly miniſtred.

Weſt. That which the Woman did hold in her Womb, the ſame thing holdeth the Prieſt.

The ſame thing, but the manner divers.

Rid. I grant the Prieſt holdeth the ſame thing, but after another manner: She did hold the Natural Body; the Prieſt holdeth the Myſtery of the Body.

Weſt. Weſton repeated again his Argument out of Chryſoſtom in Engliſh.

Rid. I ſay that the Author meant it ſpiritually.

Weſt. Weſton here diſſolving the Diſputations, had theſe words: Videtis præfractum hominis animum, glorioſum, vafrum, inconſtantem: videtis hodie veritatis vires inconcuſſas. Itaque clamate, Vicit veritas: i. Here you ſee the ſtubborn, the boaſting, the crafty, the unconſtant mind of this man. Here you ſee, this day, that the ſtrength of the Truth is without foil. Therefore I beſeech you all moſt earneſtly to blow the note; and he began, and they followed, Verity hath the victory, Verity hath the victory

D. Weſton bloweth up the triumph.

The Diſputation had at Oxford the 18. day of April, 1554. between M. Hugh Latimer Anſwerer, and M. Smith, and other Oppoſers.

M. Hugh Latimer diſputeth: April. 13.

After theſe Diſputations of Biſhop Ridley ended, next was brought out Mr. Hugh Latimer to diſpute, upon Wedneſday, which was the eighteenth day of April. Which Diſputation began at eight of the Clock, in ſuch form as before: but it was moſt in Engliſh. For Mr. Latimer the Anſwerer alledged that he was out of uſe with the Latin, and unfit for that place.

M. Smith of Orial Colledge Opponent to M. Latimer.

There replied unto him Mr. Smith of Orial Colledge, Doctor Cartwright, Mr. Harpsfield, and divers other had ſnatches at him, and gave him bitter taunts. He eſcaped no hiſſings and ſcornful laughings, no more than they that went before him. He was very faint, and deſired that he might not long tarry. He durſt not drink for fear of vomiting. The Diſputation ended before eleven of the Clock. Mr. Latimer was not ſuffered to read that he had (as he ſaid) painfully written: but it was exhibited up, and the Prolocutor read part thereof, and ſo proceeded unto the Diſputation.

M. Latimers writings could not be read.

The Preface of Weſton unto the Diſputation following.

Weſtons Preface.

MEn and Brethren, we are come together this day (by the help of God) to vanquiſh the ſtrength of the Arguments, and diſperſed opinions of Adverſaries, againſt the Truth of the real Preſence of the Lords Body in the Sacrament. And therefore, you Father, if you have any thing to anſwer, I do admoniſh that you anſwer in ſhort and few words.

M. Latimer requireth to diſpute in the Engliſh Tongue.

Latimer. I pray you good Maſter Prolocutor, do not exact that of me, which is not in me, I have not theſe twenty years much uſed the Latin Tongue.

Weſt. Take your eaſe, Father.

Lat. I thank you Sir, I am well; Let me here proteſt my Faith, for I am not able to diſpute; and afterwards do your pleaſure with me.

The Proteſtation of M. Hugh Latimer, given up in writing to Doctor Weſton.

The three Concluſions.

The Concluſions whereunto I muſt anſwer, are theſe:

1. The firſt is, That in the Sacrament of the Altar by the vertue of Gods Word pronounced by the Prieſt, there is really preſent the Natural Body of Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, under the kinds of the appearance of Bread and Wine; in like manner his Blood.
2. The ſecond is, That after Conſecration there remaineth no Subſtance of Bread and Wine, nor any other Subſtance, but the Subſtance of God and Man.
3. The third is, That in the Maſs there is the lively Sacrifice of the Church, which is Propitiable, as well for the ſins of the quick, as of the dead.

The anſwer of M. Latimer given up in writing concerning the queſtions aforeſaid.

CConcerning the firſt Concluſion, me thinketh it is ſet forth with certain new found terms that be obſcure, and do not ſound according to the ſpeech of the Scripture. Howbeit; howſoever I underſtand it, this I do anſwer plainly, though not without peril; I anſwer I ſay, that to the right Celebration of the Lords Supper there is no other Preſence of Chriſt required, than a Spiritual Preſence: and this Preſence is ſufficient for a Chriſtian man, as a Preſence by which we abide in Chriſt, and Chriſt abideth in us, to the obtaining of eternal Life, if we perſevere. And this ſame Preſence may be called moſt fitly a Real Preſence, that is, a Preſence not feigned, but a true and a Faithful Preſence. Which thing I here rehearſe, leſt ſome Sycophant or Scorner ſhould ſuppoſe me, with the Anabaptiſts, to make nothing elſe of the Sacrament, but a naked and a bare ſign. As for that which is feigned of many concerning their Corporal Preſence, I for my part take it but for a Papiſtical Invention; therefore think it utterly to be rejected.

The Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, how it is a real Preſence.

Anſwer to the ſecond Concluſion.

Concerning the ſecond Concluſion, I dare be bold to ſay, that it hath no ſtay or ground in Gods Word, but is a thing invented and found out by man; and therefore to be taken as fond and falſe: and I had almoſt ſaid, as the Mother and Nurſe of the other Errors. It were good for my Lords and Maſters of the Tranſubſtantiation, to take heed leſt they conſpire with the Neſtorians, for I do not ſee how they can avoid it.

Anſwer to the third Concluſion.

The third Concluſion (as I do underſtand it) ſeemeth ſubtilly to ſow Sedition againſt the offering which Chriſt himſelf offered for us in his own proper Perſon, according to that pithy place of Paul, Heb. 1. Where he ſaith, That Chriſt his own ſelf hath made purgation of our Sins. And afterward, That he might (ſaith he) be a merciful and Faithful Biſhop, concerning thoſe things which are to be done with God, for the taking away of our Sins. So that the expiation or taking away of our Sins may be thought rather to depend on this, that Chriſt was an offering Biſhop, than that he was offered, were it not that he was offered of himſelf: and therefore it is needleſs that he ſhould be offered of any other. I will ſpeak nothing of the wonderful Preſumption of man, to dare to attempt this thing without a manifeſt vocation, ſpecially in that it tendeth to the overthrowing and making fruitleſs (if not wholly, yet partly) of the Croſs of Chriſt; for truly it is no baſe or mean thing to offer Chriſt. And therefore worthily a man may ſay to my Lords and Maſters the offerers, By what Authority do ye this? and

Heb. 1.

The taking away of Sins dependeth rather in the Perſon of the offerer, than in the thing offered, but that he that was the offerer was offered himſelf.

who gave you this Authority? Where? when? A man cannot (saith the Baptist) take any thing except it be given him from above: Much less then may any man presume to usurp any honour, before he be thereto called. Again, If any man sin (saith S. John) we have (saith he) not a Master or Offerer at home, which can sacrifice for us at Mass; but we have (saith he) an Advocate Jesus Christ, which once offered himself long agoe; of which Offering the efficacy and effect is perdurable for ever, so that it is needless to have such Offerers.

What meaneth Paul, when he saith, They that serve at the Altar, are partakers of the Altar? and so addeth; So the Lord hath ordained, that they that Preach the Gospel, shall live of the Gospel. Whereas he should have said, The Lord hath ordained, that they that Sacrifice at Mass, should live of their Sacrificing, that there might be a living assigned to our Sacrificers now, as was before Christs comming, to the Jewish Priests. For now they have nothing to alledge for their living, as they that be Preachers have. So that it appeareth, that the Sacrificing Priesthood is changed by Gods Ordinance into a Preaching Priesthood, and the Sacrificing Priesthood should cease utterly, saving in as much as all Christian men are Sacrificing Priests.

1 John 2. The Sacrificing Priesthood changed into a Preaching Priesthood.

The Supper of the Lord was instituted to provoke us to Thanksgiving for the Offering which the Lord himself did offer for us, much rather than that our Offerers should do there as they do. Feed (saith Peter) as much as ye may the Flock of Christ. Nay rather let us Sacrifice as much as we may for the Flock of Christ. If so be the matter be as now men make it, I can never wonder enough, that Peter would or could forget this Office of Sacrificing, which at this day is in such a price and Estimation, that to feed is almost nothing with many. If thou cease from feeding the Flock, how shalt thou be taken? truly Catholick enough. But if thou cease from Sacrificing and Massing, how will that be taken? at the least, I Warrant: thee, thou shalt be called an Heretick. And whence, I pray you, come these Papistical Judgments? Except perchance they think a man feedeth the Flock in Sacrificing for them: and then what needeth there any learned Pastors? For no man is so foolish, but soon may he learn to Sacrifice and Mass it.

The final cause why the Lords Supper was chiefly ordained.

Sacrificing taketh away preaching.

Preposterous Judgment of Papists.

Thus Ioe, I have taken the more pains to write, because I refused to dispute, in consideration of my debility thereunto: that all men may know, how that I have so done not without great pains, having not any man to help me, as I have never before been debarred to have. O Sir, you may chance to live till you come to this age and weakness that I am of. I have spoken in my time before two Kings more than once, two or three hours together, without interruption: But now, that I may speak the truth (by your leave) I could not be suffered to declare my mind before you, no, not by the space of a quarter of an hour, without snatches, revilings, checks, rebukes, taunts, such as I have not felt the like, in such an audience, all my Life long. Surely it cannot be but an heinous offence that I have given. But what was it? Forsooth I had spoken of the four Marrowbones of the Mass. The which kind of speaking I never read to be a sin against the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Latimer found more audience with Kings and Princes, than with rustical Divines.

I could not be allowed to shew what I meant by my Metaphor: But sir, now by your favour I will tell your Mastership what I mean.

The first is the Popish consecration, which hath been called a Gods Body-making.

The second is Transubstantiation.

The third is Massal Oblation.

The fourth Adoration.

The four Marrowbones of the Mass by M. Latimer expounded. Consecration, Transubstantiation, Oblation, Adoration.

These chief and principal portions, parts and points belonging or incident to the Mass, and most esteemed and had in price in the same, I call the Marrowbones of the Mass; which indeed you, by force, might, and violence intrude in sound of words in some of the Scripture, with racking and cramping, injuring and wronging the same: but else indeed, plain out of the Scripture, as I am thoroughly persuaded, although in Disputation I now could nothing do to perswade the same to others, being both unapt to study, and also to make a shew of my former study in such readiness as should be requisite to the same.

The Judgment of M. Latimer of D. Weston.

I have heard much talk of Mr. Doctor Weston to and fro in my time: but I never knew your Person to my knowledge, till I came before you, as the Queens Majesties Commissioner. I pray God send you so right Judgment, as I percieve you have a great wit, great learning, with many other qualities. God give you Grace ever well to use them, and ever to have in remembrance, that he that dwelleth on high, looketh on the low things on the Earth; and that there is no councel against the Lord; and also that this World hath been, and yet is a tottering World. And yet again, that though we must obey the Princes, yet that hath this limitation, namely, in the Lord. For who so doth obey them against the Lord, they be most pernicious to them, and the greatest adversaries that they have: For they so procure Gods vengeance upon them, if God be only the ruler of things.

Anno 1554.

Pride of D. Weston privily touched.

Obedience to Princes hath its limitation.

There be some so corrupt in mind, the truth being taken from them, that they think gain to be godliness; Great learned men, and yet men of no learning, but of railing, and raging about questions and strife of words. I call them men of no learning, because they knowe not Christ, how much else soever they knowe. And on this sort we are wont to call great learned Clerks, being ignorant of Christ, unlearned men; for it is nothing but plain ignorance, to know any thing without Christ: Whereas who so knoweth Christ, the same hath knowledg enough, although in other knowledge he be to seek. The Apostle S. Paul confesseth of himself to the Corinthians, that he did knowe nothing but Jesus Christ Crucified. Many men babble many things of Christ which yet knowe not Christ; but pretending Christ do craftily colour and darken his glory. Depart from such men, saith the Apostle S. Paul to Timothy.

Knowledge without Christ is meer ignorance.

Many there be which under pretence of Christ darken the Glory of Christ.

It is not out of the way to remember what S. Augustine saith. The place where, I now well remember not, except it be against the Epistles of Petilian; Whosoever (saith he) teacheth any thing necessarily to be believed, which is not contained in the Old and New Testament, the same is accursed. Oh! bewrare of this curse if you be wise. I am much deceived if Basilius have not such like words; Whatsoever (saith he) is besides the Holy Scripture, if the same be taught as necessarily to be believed, that is Sin. Oh therefore take heed of this Sin!

Augustine.

Basilius.

There be some that speak many false things more probable, and more like to the truth, than the truth it self. Therefore Paul giveth a watchword; Let no man (saith he) deceive you with probability and perswasions of words. But what mean you, saith one, by this talk so far from the matter? Well, I hope, good Masters, you will suffer an Old Man a little to play the Child, and to speak one thing twice. O Lord God! you have changed the most holy Communion into a private action; and you deny to the Laity the Lords Cup, contrary to Christs commandment: and you do blemish the Annunciation of the Lords death till he come: For you have changed the Common Prayer, called the Divine Service, with the Administration of the Sacraments, from the vulgar and knowen Language, into a strange Tongue, contrary to the will of the Lord revealed in his Word. God open the door of your heart, to see the things you should see herein. I would as fain obey my Soveraign as any in this Realm: but in these things I can never do it with an upright conscience. God be merciful unto us. Amen.

The abſurdities of the Papists opened in abasing the Lords Supper.

West. Then refuse you to dispute? Will you here then subscribe?

Lat. No, good Master, I pray be good to an Old Man. You may, if it please God, be once Old, as I am: you may come to this Age, and to this Debility.

But God saw it good, that Weston never came to this Age.

West. Ye said upon Saturday last, that ye could not find the Mass, nor the Marrow-bones thereof in your Book: but we will find a Mass in that Book.

By this first and second Communion, he meaneth the two Books of publick order set forth in K. Edwards days, the one in the beginning, the other in the latter end of his Reign.

Lat. No, good M. Doctor, ye cannot.

West. What find you then there?

Lat. Forsooth a Communion I find there.

West. Which Communion, the first or the last?

Lat. I find no great diversity in them; they are one Supper of the Lord: but I like the last very well.

D. Weston cavilleth against the name of the Lords Supper.

West. The first was naught belike.

La. I do not well remember wherein they differ.

West. Then Cake Bread and Loaf Bread are all one with you. Ye call it the Supper of the Lord, but you are deceived in that: for they had done the Supper before, and therefore the Scripture saith, Postquam cœnatum est; i. After they had had ſupped. For ye know that S. Paul findeth fault with the Corinthians for that ſome of them were drunken at this Supper; and ye know no man can be drunken at your Communion.

Cœna Judaica. Cœna Dominica. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. cap. 10.

Lat. The firſt was called Cœna Judaica, i. The Jewiſh Supper, when they did eat the Paſchal Lamb together: the other was called Cœna Dominica, i. The Lords Supper.

Weſt. That is falſe; for Chryſoſtom denieth that. And S. Ambroſe in cap. 10. prioris ad Corinthios, ſaith, that Myſterium Euchariſtiæ inter cœnandum datum, non eſt Cœna Dominica; i. The Myſtery of the Sacrament, given as they were at Supper, is not the Supper of the Lord.

Greg. Nazianz.

And Gregory Nazianzene ſaith the ſame, Rurſus Paſche ſacra cum Diſcipulis in cœnaculo ac poſt cœnam, dieque unica antè paſſionem celebrat. Nos verò ea in orationis domibus, & ante cœnam & poſt reſurrectionem peragimus: that is, Again he kept the Holy Feaſt of Paſſover with his Diſciples in the dining Chamber after the Supper, and one day before his Paſſion. But we keep it both in the Churches and Houſes of Prayer, both before the Supper, and alſo after the Reſurrection.

Ἀγάπη, i. So were the Feaſts called wont to be given to the Poor.

And that firſt Supper was called ἀγάπη: can you tell what that is:

Lat. I underſtand no Greek. Yet I think it meaneth Charity.

Weſt. Will you have all things done that Chriſt did then? Why, then muſt the Prieſt be hanged on the morrow. And where find you, I pray you, that a woman ſhould receive the Sacrament.

Lat. Will you give me leave to turn my Book: I find it in the 11. Chapter to the Corinthians. I trow theſe be his words, Probet autem ſeipſum homo, &c.

Weſton oppoſed in his Grammar.

I pray you good Maſter, what Gender is homo?

Weſt. Marry the Common Gender.

Δοκιμαζέτω δὲ ἄνθρωπος ἑαυτὸν. 1 Cor. 11.

Cole. It is in the Greek, ὁ ἄνθρωπος.

Harpſ. It is ἄνηρ, that is, vir.

Lat. It is in my Book of Eraſmus's Tranſlation, Probet ſeipſum homo.

Feck. It is Probet ſeipſum indeed, and therefore it importeth the Maſculine Gender.

Lat. What then? I trow when the woman touched Chriſt, he ſaid, Quis tetigit me? Scio quòd aliquis me tetigit; i. Who touched me? I know that ſome man touched me.

Argument.

Weſt. I will be at Hoſt with you anon. When Chriſt was at his Supper, none were with him but his Apoſtles only.

Ergo, He meant no woman, if you will have his Inſtitution kept.

The Apoſtles repreſented the whole Church.

Lat. In the twelve Apoſtles was repreſented the whole Church, in which you will grant both men and women to be.

Weſton ſcorned the Name of Miniſter.

Weſt. So through the whole Heretical tranſlated Bible ye never make mention of Prieſt, till ye come to the putting of Chriſt to death. Where find you then that a Prieſt or Miniſter (a Miniſtrel I may call him well enough) ſhould do it of neceſſity?

The name of Miniſter more fit than the name of Prieſt.

Lat. A Miniſter is a more fit name for that Office; for the Name of a Prieſt importeth a Sacrifice.

Weſt. Well, remember that ye cannot find that a woman may receive by Scripture. Mr. Opponent fall to it.

Smith. Becauſe I perceive that this charge is laid upon my neck to diſpute with you: to the end that the ſame may go forward after a right manner and order, I will propoſe three Queſtions, ſo as they are put forth unto me. And firſt I ask this queſtion of you, although the ſame indeed ought not to be called in queſtion: But ſuch is the condition of the Church, that it is always vexed of the wicked ſort. I ask, I ſay, whether Chriſts Body be really in the Sacrament?

Mr. Latimer modeſtly maketh himſelf unable to diſpute.

Lat. I truſt I have obtained of Mr. Prolocutor, that no man ſhall exact that thing of me which is not in me. And I am ſorry that this worſhipful Audience ſhould be deceived of their expectation for my ſake. I have given up my mind in writing to Mr. Prolocutor.

Smith. Whatſoever ye have given up, it ſhall be regiſtred among the Acts.

Lat. Diſputation requireth a good memory; Aſt abolita eſt mihi memoria: My memory is gone clean, and marvellouſly weakened, and never the better, I wis, for the Priſon.

Weſt. How long have ye been in Priſon?

Lat. This three quarters of this year.

Weſt. And I was in Priſon ſix years.

Lat. The more pity, Sir.

Weſt. How long have you been of this Opinion?

Lat. It is not long, Sir, that I have been of this Opinion.

Weſt. The time hath been when you ſaid Maſs full devoutly.

Lat. Yea, I cry God mercy heartily for it.

Weſt. Where learned you this new fangleneſs?

Then they hiſt and clapt their hands at him.

Lat. I have long ſought for the Truth in this matter of the Sacrament, and have not been of this mind paſt ſeven years: And my Lord of Canterbury's Book hath eſpecially confirmed my Judgment herein. If I could remember all therein contained, I would not fear to anſwer any man in this matter.

Mr. Latimer confirmed by Dr. Cranmer Book.

Treſh. There are in that Book ſix hundred Errors.

Weſt. You were once a Lutheran.

The zeal of Mr. Latimer ſometimes in Popery againſt the Tygurines.

Lat. No, I was a Papiſt: For I never could perceive how Luther could defend his Opinion without Tranſubſtantiation. The Tygurines once did write a Book againſt Luther, and I oft deſired God, that he might live ſo long to make them anſwer.

In that Book the Devil doth not diſſwade him ſo much from ſaying Maſs, as he laboureth to bring him to deſperation for Maſs: ſuch temptations many times happen to good men.

Weſt. Luther in his Book De privata Miſſa, ſaid, That the Devil reaſoned with him, and perſwaded him that the Maſs was not good, fol. 14. Contigit me, &c. Whereof it may appear, that Luther ſaid Maſs, and the Devil diſſwaded him from it.

Lat. I do not take in hand here to defend Luthers ſayings or doings. If he were here, he would defend himſelf well enough I trow. I told you before that I am not meet for Diſputations. I pray you read mine Anſwers wherein I have declared my Faith.

Weſt. Do you believe this, as you have vvritten?

Lat. Yea, Sir.

Weſt. Then have you no Faith.

Lat. Then vvould I be ſorry, Sir.

Treſh. It is vvritten, John 6. Except ye ſhall eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye ſhall have no life in you. Which vvhen the Capernaites, and many of Chriſts Diſciples heard, they ſaid, This is a hard ſaying, &c. Novv that the Truth may the better appear, here I ask of you, Whether Chriſt ſpeaking theſe vvords, did mean of his Fleſh to be eaten vvith the mouth, or of the ſpiritual eating of the ſame?

Here Treſham began to diſpute in Latin.

Lat. I anſvver (as Auguſtine underſtandeth) that Chriſt meant of the ſpiritual eating of his Fleſh.

Treſh. Of vvhat Fleſh meant Chriſt, his true Fleſh, or no?

Lat. Of his true Fleſh, ſpiritually to be eaten in the Supper by Faith, and not corporally.

Treſh. Of vvhat Fleſh mean the Capernaites?

Lat. Of his true Fleſh alſo; but to be eaten vvith the mouth.

Dr. Treſhams Argument without Form or Mood, concluding affirmatively in the ſecond Figure.

Treſh. They (as ye confeſs) did mean his true Fleſh to be eaten vvith the mouth. And Chriſt alſo (as I ſhall prove) did ſpeak of the receiving of his Fleſh vvith the mouth.

Ergo, They both did underſtand it of the eating of one thing, vvhich is done by the mouth of the Body.

Lat. I ſay, Chriſt underſtood it not of the bodily mouth; but of the mouth of the Spirit, Mind, and Heart.

Dr. Treſham flieth to cuſtom.

Treſh. I prove the contrary, that Chriſt underſtandeth it of the eating vvith the bodily mouth. For vvhereas cuſtom is a right good Miſtreſs and Interpreter of things, & whereas the acts put in practice by Chriſt, do certainly declare thoſe things vvhich he firſt ſpake: Chriſts deeds in his Supper, vvhere he gave his Body to be taken vvith the mouth, together vvith the cuſtom vvhich hath been ever ſince that time of that eating vvhich is done vvith the mouth, doth evidently infer that Chriſt did underſtand his vvords, here cited of me out of the ſixth of John, of the eating vvith the mouth.

The Sacrament given to the Mouth, the Body to Faith.

Lat. He gave not his Body to be received vvith the mouth, but he gave the Sacrament of his Body to be received vvith the mouth: He gave the Sacrament to the mouth, his Body to the mind.

Treſh. But my reaſon doth conclude, That Chriſt ſpake concerning his Fleſh to be received vvith the corporal mouth: For othervviſe, (vvhich God forbid) he had been a deceiver, and had been offenſive to the Capernaites and his Diſciples, if he had not meant in this point as they thought he meant: for if he had thought as you do feign, it had been an eaſie matter for him to have ſaid:

* You

Anno 1554.

* And what doth Christ else mean by these words where he saith, My words be spirit and life, the Flesh profiteth nothing?

* You shall not eat my Flesh with your mouth, but the Sacrament of my Flesh; that is to say, ye shall receive with your mouth not the thing it self, but the Figure of the thing, and thus he might have satisfied them: but so he said not, but continued in the truth of his words, as he was wont. Therefore Christ meant the self same thing that the Capernaites did, I mean concerning the thing it self to be received with the mouth, videlicet, that his true Flesh is truly to be eaten with the mouth. Moreover, forasmuch as you do expound for (corpus Christi) the Body of Christ (sacramentum corporis Christi) the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, and hereby do suppose that we obtain but a Spiritual Union, or Union of the Mind between us and Christ, plain it is, that you are deceived in this thing, and do err from the mind of the Fathers: for they affirm by plain and express words, that we are corporally and carnally joyned together. And these be the words of Hilary, Si verè igitur carnem corporis nostri Christus assumpsit, & verè homo ille qui ex Maria natus fuit; nos quoq; verè sub mysterio, carnem corporis sui sumimus, & per hæc unum erimus, quia pater in eo est, & ille in nobis: Quomodo voluntatis unitas asseritur, cum naturalis per sacramentum proprietas perficiat? sacramentum sit unitatis? That is, Therefore if Christ did truly take the Flesh of our Body upon him, and the same Man be Christ indeed which was born of Mary; then we also do receive under a mystery the Flesh of his Body indeed, and thereby shall become one, because the Father is in him, and he in us. How is the Unity of Will affirmed, when a Natural Propriety by the Sacrament is a perfect Sacrament of Unity?

* Thus far hath Hilary. Lo here you see how manifestly these words confound your Assertion. To be short, I my self have heard you preaching at Greenwich before King Henry the Eighth, where you did openly affirm, That no Christian man ought to doubt of the True and Real Presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, forasmuch as he had the Word of Scripture on his side, (videlicet) Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body: whereby he might be confirmed. But now there is the same Truth; the Word of Scripture hath the self same thing which it then had. Therefore why do you deny at this present that, whereof it was not lawful once to doubt before when you taught it?

Mr. Latimer charged to preach the contrary Doctrine before the King at Greenwich.

Lat. Will you give me leave to speak?

Tresh. Speak Latin, I pray you, for ye can do it, if ye list, promptly enough.

Lat. I cannot speak Latin so long and so largely. Mr. Prolocutor hath given me leave to speak English. And as for the words of Hilary, I think they make not so much for you. But he that shall answer the Doctors had not need to be in my case, but should have them in a readiness, and know their purpose. Melanchon saith, If the Doctors had foreseen that they should have been so taken in this Controversie, they would have written more plainly.

Melanchons judgment of the old Doctors.

Smith. I will reduce the words of Hilary into the form of a Syllogism.

Argument.

Da- Such as is the Unity of our Flesh with Christs Flesh, such (yea greater) is the Unity of Christ with the Father.

ti- But the Unity of Christs Flesh with ours is true and substantial.

si. Ergo, The Unity of Christ with the Father is true and substantial.

Lat. I understand you not.

Seaton. I know your learning well enough and how subtil ye be: I will use a few words with you, and that out of Cyprian, De cœna Domini. The Old Testament doth forbid the drinking of Blood; The New Testament doth command the drinking and tasting of Blood: but where doth it command the drinking of Blood?

* Dr. Seaton reasoneth against Mr. Latimer out of Cyprian.

Lat. In these words, Bibite ex hoc omnes; i. Drink ye all of this.

Seat. Then we taste true Blood.

Lat. We do taste true Blood, but spiritually; and this is enough.

* By that reason the New and Old Testament should not differ, but should be contrary one from the other, which cannot be true in natural or moral Precepts Seat. Nay, the Old and New Testament in this do * differ: for the one doth command, and the other doth forbid to drink Blood.

Lat. It is true as touching the matter, but not as touching the manner of the thing.

Seat. Then there is no difference between the drinking of Blood in the New Testament, and that of the Old: for they also drank spiritually.

Lat. And we drink spiritually also, but a more precious Blood.

West. Augustine upon the 45th Psalm, saith, Securè bibite sanguinem quem fudistis: That is, Drink boldly the Blood which ye have powred out.

Ergo, It is Blood.

Lat. I never denied it, nor ever will I go from it, but that we drink the very Blood of Christ indeed, but spiritually: For the same S. Augustine saith, Crede, & manducasti; i. Believe, and thou hast eaten.

West. Nay, Credere, non est bibere nec edere; i. To believe, is not to drink or eat. You will not say, I pledge you, when I say, I believe in God.

Lat. Is not (manducare) to eat, in your learning put for (credere) to believe?

* Edere in some places taken for credere: but in all places it is so taken, as followeth not.

West. I remember my L. Chancellor demanded Mr. Hooper of these questions, Whether * (edere) to eat, were (credere) to believe, and (altare) an Altar, were Christ in all the Scripture, &c. And he answered, Yea.

Then said my L. Chancellor, Why then * Habemus altare de quo non licet edere; i. We have an Altar of which it is not lawful to eat, is as much to say, as Habemus Christum, in quo non licet credere; i. We have a Christ, in whom we may not believe.

* This place of the Hebrews alludeth to the old Sacrifice of the Jews, who, in the Feast of Propitiation the tenth day, used to carry the flesh of the Sacrifice out of the Tents to be burned on an Altar without, because none of them which served in the Tabernacle should eat thereof: only the blood was carried by the high Priest into the holy place.

Tresh. Believe, and thou hast eaten, is spoken of the spiritual eating.

Lat. It is true, I do allow your saying; I take it so also.

West. We are commanded to drink Blood in the New Law.

Ergo, It is very Blood.

Lat. We drink Blood, so as appertaineth to us to drink to our comfort, in Sacramental Wine. We drink Blood Sacramentally: he gave us his Blood to drink spiritually, he went about to shew, that as certainly as we drink Wine, so certainly we drink his Blood spiritually.

West. Do not you seem to be a Papist, which do bring in new words, not found in Scripture? Where find you that (sacramentaliter) sacramentally, in Gods Book?

Lat. It is necessarily gathered upon Scripture.

West. The Old Testament doth forbid the tasting of Blood, but the New doth command it.

Lat. It is true, not as touching the thing, but as touching the manner thereof.

West. Hear ye People, this is the Argument:

That which was forbidden in the Old Testament, is commanded in the New.

To drink Blood was forbidden in the Old Testament, and commanded in the New.

¶ This Argument, because the Major thereof is not universal, is not formal, and may well be retorted against Weston thus.

Dr. Westons Argument retorted against himself.

Ce- No natural or moral thing, forbidden materially in the Old Testament, is commanded in the New.

la- To drink mans natural Blood is forbidden materially in the Old Testament.

rent. Ergo, To drink mans natural Blood materially is not commanded in the New.

Answer.

Lat. It is commanded spiritually to be drunk, I grant it is Blood drunk in the New Testament, but we receive it spiritually.

Pie. It was not forbidden spiritually in the Old Law.

Lat. The Substance of Blood is drunk, but not in one manner.

Pie. It doth not require the same manner of drinking.

Lat. It is the same thing, not the same manner. I have no more to say.

West. Here Weston cited the place of Chrysostom, of Judas's Treason: O Judæ dementia! Ille cum Judæis triginta denariis paciscebatur, ut Christum venderet, & Christus ei sanguinem, quem vendidit, offerebat; i. O the madness of Judas! He made bargain with the Jews for Thirty pence to sell Christ, and Christ offered him his Blood which he sold.

Chrysostom.

Lat. I grant he offered to Judas his Blood which he sold, but in a Sacrament.

West. Because ye can defend your Doctors no better, ye ye ſhall ſee what worſhipful men ye hang upon, and one that hath been of your mind, ſhall diſpute with you. Mr. Cartwright, I pray you diſpute.

Anno 1554.

Dr. Cartwright urged to diſpute.

Cart. Reverend Father, becauſe it is given me in commandment to diſpute with you, I will do it gladly. But firſt underſtand e're we go any further, that I was in the ſame Error that you are in: But I am ſorry for it, and do confeſs my ſelf to have erred, I acknowledge mine offence, and I wiſh and deſire God that you may alſo repent with me.

Cartwright returneth to his old Error again.

Argument à pœna legis durum & difficile.

Lat. Will you give me leave to tell what hath cauſed Mr. Doctor here to recant? It is pœna legis, the pain of the Law, which hath brought you back, and converted you, and many more; the which letteth many to confeſs God. And this is a great Argument, there are few here can diſſolve it.

Cart. That is not my cauſe, but I will make you this ſhort Argument, by which I was converted from mine Errors.

Argument à deſtructione conſequentis, ad deſtructionem antecedentis.

If the true Body of Chriſt be not really in the Sacrament, all the whole Church hath erred from the Apoſtles time. But Chriſt would not ſuffer his Church to err:

Ergo, It is the true Body of Chriſt.

Lat. The Popiſh Church hath erred, and doth err. I think for the ſpace of ſix or ſeven hundred years, there was no mention made of any eating but ſpiritually: For, before theſe five hundred years, the Church did ever confeſs a ſpiritual Manducation. But the Romiſh Church begat the Error of Tranſubſtantiation. My Lord of Canterbury's Book handleth that very well, and by him I could anſwer you, if I had him.

No mention made of any eating, but ſpiritually, in the Church, for the ſpace of 700 years.

Cart. Linus and all the reſt do confeſs the Body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament: And S. Auguſtine alſo upon the 98. Pſalm, upon this place, Adorate ſcabellum pedum, &c. granteth that it is to be worſhipped.

Lat. We do worſhip Chriſt in the Heavens, and we do worſhip him in the Sacrament: But the Maſſing Worſhip is not to be uſed.

Smith. Do you think that Cyril was of the Ancient Church?

Lat. I do think ſo.

Smith. He ſaith, That Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally.

Theſe be Cyrils words of the Myſtical Benediction.

Cyril. in Joan. l. 10. c. 13.

Lat. That (corporally) hath another underſtanding than you do groſly take it.

¶ Cyril ſaith, that Chriſt dwelleth Corporally in us, but he ſaith not that Chriſt dwelleth Corporally in the Bread. Which dwelling of Chriſt in us, is as our dwelling is alſo in Chriſt, not local or corporal; but ſpiritual and heavenly. Corporally therefore is to be taken here in the ſame ſenſe as S. Paul ſaith the fulneſs of Divinity to dwell in Chriſt corporally, that is, not lightly nor accidentally, but perfectly and ſubſtantially, with all his vertue and power, &c. And ſo dwelleth Chriſt corporally in us alſo.

Smith. Here Smith repeateth theſe words of Cyril, Per communionem corporis Chriſti, habitat in nobis Chriſtus corporaliter; i. By the communicating of the Body of Chriſt, Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally.

Lat. The Solution of this is in my Lord of Canterbury's Book.

Smith. Cyril was no Papiſt, and yet theſe be his words, Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally: but you ſay he dwelleth in us ſpiritually.

Lat. I ſay both, that he dwelleth in us both corporally and ſpiritually, according to his meaning: Spiritually by Faith, and corporally by taking our Fleſh upon him. For I remember I have read this in my Lord of Canterbury's Book.

The immodeſt behaviour of this Jack Scorner to be noted.

Weſt. Becauſe your learning is let out to farm, and ſhut up in my Lord of Canterbury's Book, I will recite unto you a place of S. Ambroſe, De apparatione ad Miſſam, where he ſaith, Videmus principem Sacerdotem ad nos venientem, & offerentem ſanguinem, &c. that is, We ſee the chief Prieſt coming unto us, and offering Blood, &c.

Aug. in Pſal. 38. Chryſoſt. de incomprehenſibili Dei natura.

Likewiſe both Auguſtine in the 38. Pſalm, and Chryſoſtom concerning the incomprehenſible Nature of God, Tom. 3. ſay, Non ſolum homines, &c.

Lat. I am not aſhamed to acknowledge mine ignorance; and theſe teſtimonies are more than I can bear away.

Weſt. Then you muſt leave ſome behind you for lack of carriage.

Lat. But of Chryſoſtom, he hath many figurative Speeches, and emphatical Locutions in many places; as in that which you have now recited: but he ſaith not, For the quick and the dead: he taketh the Celebration for the Sacrifice.

Chryſoſtom full of figurative ſpeeches and emphatical locutions.

Weſt. You ſhall hear Chryſoſtom again, upon the ninth Chapter of the Acts, Quid dicis? Hoſtia in manibus ſacerdotis, &c. He doth not call it a Cup of Wine.

Chryſoſtom in Act. cap. 9.

Lat. Ye have mine anſwer there with you in a Paper: and yet he calleth it not, Propitiatorium Sacrificium, i. a Propitiatory Sacrifice.

Weſt. You ſhall hear it to be ſo: and I bring another place of Chryſoſtom out of the ſame Treatiſe, Non temerè ab Apoſtolis eſt inſtitutum, &c.

Lat. He is too precious a thing for us to offer; he offereth himſelf.

Weſt. Here in another place of Chryſoſtom to the People of Antioch, Hom. 69. and alſo to the Philippians he ſaith, There ſhould be a Memory and Sacrifice for the Dead.

Chryſoſt. ad populum Antioch. Hom. 69.

Lat. I do ſay, that the holy Communion beareth the name of a Sacrifice, becauſe it is a Sacrifice memorative.

Weſt. How ſay you to the Sacrifice of the Dead?

Lat. I ſay that it needeth not, and it booteth not.

Weſt. Auguſtine in his Enchiridion the 110. chap. ſaith, Non eſt negandum defunctorum animas pietate ſuorum viventium relevari, quum pro illis Sacrificium Mediatoris offertur; i. We muſt not deny that the Souls of the Dead are relieved by the Devotion of their Friends which are living, when the Sacrifice of the Mediator is offered for them. Where he proveth the verity of Chriſts Body, and praying for the Dead. And it is ſaid, that the ſame Auguſtine ſaid Maſs for his Mother.

Auguſt. Enchirid. c. 110.

Auguſtine falſly belied to ſay Maſs for his Mother.

Lat. But that Maſs was not like yours, which thing doth manifeſtly appear in his Writings, which are againſt it in every place. And Auguſtine is a reaſonable man, he requireth to be believed no further than he bringeth Scripture for his proof, and agreeth with Gods Word.

Weſt. In the ſame place he proveth a Propitiatory Sacrifice, and that upon an Altar, and no Oyſter-board.

The blaſphemous mouth of Dr. Weſton calling the Lords Table an Oyſter Board.

Lat. It is the Lords Table, and no Oyſter-board. It may be called an Altar, and ſo the Doctors call it in many places: But there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice, but only Chriſt. The Doctors might be deceived in ſome points, though not in all things.* I believe them when they ſay well.

* Doctores legendi ſunt cum venia.

Cole. Is it not a ſhame for an old man to lie? You ſay, you are of the old Fathers Faith where they ſay well, and yet ye are not.

Lat. I am of their Faith when they ſay well, I refer my ſelf to my Lord of Canterbury's Book wholly herein.

Smith. Then are not you of Chryſoſtom's Faith, nor of S. Auguſtine's Faith.

Lat. I have ſaid, when they ſay well, and bring Scripture for them, I am of their Faith; and further Auguſtine requireth not to be believed.

Weſt. Origen, Hom. 13. upon Leviticus.

Lat. I have but one word to ſay, Panis ſacramentalis, the Sacramental Bread is called a Propitiation, becauſe it is a Sacrament of the Propitiation. What is your Vocation?

Weſton. My Vocation is at this time to diſpute; otherwiſe I am a Prieſt, and my Vocation is to offer.

Lat. Where have you that Authority given you to offer?

Facere for Sacrificare with Dr. Weſton.

Weſt. Hoc facite, Do this; for facite in that place is taken for offerte, that is, offer you.

Lat. Is facere nothing but Sacrificare to Sacrifice? Why, then no man muſt receive the Sacrament but Prieſts only: For there may none other offer but Prieſts.

Ergo, There may none receive but Prieſts.

Weſt. Your Argument is to be denied.

Lat. Did Chriſt then offer himſelf at his Supper?

Pie. Yea, he offered himſelf for the whole World.

If Chriſt offered himſelf at the Supper, and the next day upon the Croſs, then was Chriſt twice offered.

Lat. Then if this word Facite, Do ye, ſignifie Sacrificate, Sacrifice ye, it followeth, as I ſaid, that none but Prieſts only ought to receive the Sacrament, to whom it is only lawful to Sacrifice: And where find you that I pray you?

Weſt. Forty year agon whither could you have gone to have found your Doctrine?

Lat. The more cauſe we have to thank God, that hath now ſent the light into the World.

Weſtons railing.

Weſt. The light? Nay light and lewd Preachers; for you could not tell what you might have. Ye altered

and

and changed so often your Communions and Altars, and all for this one end, to spoil and rob the Church.

Lat. These things pertain nothing to me, I must not answer other mens deeds, but only for mine own.

West. Well, Mr. Latimer, this is our intent, to will you well, and to exhort you to come to your self, and remember, that without Noahs Ark there is no health. Remember what they have been that were the beginners of your Doctrine, none but a few flying Apostates, running out of Germany for fear of the Fagot. Remember what they have been which have set forth the same in this Realm: A sort of fling-brains and light heads, which were never constant in any one thing, as it was to be seen in the turning of the Table, where like a sort of Apes they could not tell which way to turn their tails, looking one day West, and another day East, one that way, and another this way. They will be like (they say) to the Apostles, they will have no Churches. A Hovel is good enough for them. They come to the Communion with no reverence. They get them a Tankard, and one saith, I drink, and I am thankful; the more joy of thee, saith another. And in them was it true that Hilary saith, Annuas & menstruas de Deo fides facimus; that is, We make every Year and every Month a Faith. A Runnagate Scot did take away the adoration or worshiping of Christ in the Sacrament, by whose procurement that Heresie was put into the last Communion-Book; so much prevailed that one Mans Authority at that time. You never agreed with the Tygurines or Germans, or with the Church, or with your self. Your stubbornness cometh of a vain glory, which is to no purpose: For it will do you no good when a Fagot is in your Beard. And we see all, by your own Confession, how little cause you have to be stubborn, for your learning is in Feoffers hold. The Queens Grace is merciful, if ye will turn.

Lat. You shall have no hope in me to turn. I pray for the Queen daily, even from the bottom of my heart, that she may turn from this Religion.

West. Here you all see the weakness of Heresie against the Truth: he denieth all Truth, and all the old Fathers.

Dr. Westons Apes have tails.

Blasphemous lies of Dr. Weston sitting in Cathedra pestilentiæ. Who be these, or where be they Mr. Oblocutor, that will be like the Apostles, that will have no Churches? that be Runnagates out of Germany? that get them Tankards? that make monthly Faiths? that worship not Christ in all his Sacraments? speak truth man and shame the Devil.

HEre all good Readers may see how this glorious Prolocutor triumpheth: but whether he hath the Victory or no, that I suppose they have yet neither heard nor seen. And give, that he had the Victory, yet what great marvel was it, disputing as he did, Non sine suo Theseo, that is, not without his tipling Cup standing at his Elbow all the time of his Disputation; not without a privy noting and smiling of them that beheld the matter, but especially at that time, when Dr. Ridley disputing with one of the Opponents, the said Prolocutor took the Cup, and holding it in his hand, said to the Opponent, Urge hoc, urge hoc, Nam hoc facit pro nobis. In which words, as he moved no little matter of laughter to the beholders thereof, so I thought here also not to leave the same unmentioned, somewhat also to delight the Reader withal, after his tedious weariness in reading the story thereof.

Urge hoc, quoth Weston with his Beer-pot.

To the Reader.

AND thus hast thou (loving Reader) the whole Action and Stage of this Doctorly Disputation shewed forth unto thee against these three worthy Confessors and Martyrs of the Lord, wherein thou maist behold the disordered usage of the University-men, the unmannerly manner of the School, the rude tumult of the Multitude, the fierceness and interruption of the Doctors, the full pith and ground of all their Arguments, the Censures of the Judges, the railing Language of the Oblocutor, with his blast of Triumph in the latter end, being both the Actor, the Moderator, and also Judge himself. And what marvel then if the courage of this victorious Conqueror, having the Law in his own hands, to do and say what him lusted, would say for himself, Vicit veritas, although he said never a true word, nor made ever a true Conclusion almost in all that Disputation.

It followed furthermore, after Disputation of these three days being ended, that Mr. Harpsfield the next day after, which was the Nineteenth of April, should dispute for his Form, to be made Doctor. To the which Disputation the Archbishop of Canterbury was brought forth, and permitted among the rest to utter an Argument or two in defence of his cause. As in sequele hereof may appear.

April 19.

Anno 1554.

Disputation of Mr. Harpsfield Batchelor of Divinity, answering for his Form to be made Doctor.

Harpsfield.

I Am not ignorant what a weighty matter it is to intreat of the whole order and trade of the Scriptures: And most hard it is too, in the great contention of Religion, to shew the ready way whereby the Scriptures may be best understood. For the often reading of them doth not bring the true understanding of them. What other thing is there then? Verily this is the ready way, not to follow our own Heads and Senses, but to give over our Judgment unto the holy Catholick Church, who hath had of old years the Truth, and always delivered the same to their Posterity: But if the often reading of Scriptures, and never so painful comparing of places should bring the true understanding, then divers Hereticks might prevail even against whole General Councels. The * Jews greatly brag of the knowledge of the Law, and of the Saviour that they waited for. But what availed it them? Notwithstanding, I know right-well, that divers places of the Scripture do much warn us of the often reading of the same, and what fruit doth thereby follow; as Scrutamini, &c. Search the Scriptures; for they do bear witness of me, &c. Lex Domini, &c. The Law of the Lord is pure, able to turn Souls. And that saying of S. Paul, Omnis Scriptura, &c. All Scripture inspired from above, doth make that a man may be instructed to all good Works. Howbeit doth the Law of the Jews convert their Souls? Are they by reading instructed to every good Work? The Letter of the Old Testament is the same that we have.

April 19. The judgment of Mr. Harpsfield for the best way to understand the Scriptures.

If Mr. Harpsfield had willed us to submit our Senses to the Holy Ghost, he had said much better.

No, but those Jews, sticking so much to the old custom and face of their Church, and not seeking for knowledge, by ignorance of the Scriptures were deceived, and so be you.

The Hereticks also have ever had the same Scriptures which we have that be Catholicks. But they are served as Tantalus that the Poets speak of, who, in the plenty of things to eat and drink, is said to be oppressed with hunger and thirst. The swifter that men do seek the Scriptures without the Catholick Church, the deeper they fall, and find Hell for their labour. S. Cyprian never swerving from the Catholick Church, saith, He that doth not acknowledge the Church to be his Mother, shall not have God to his Father. Therefore it is true Divinity, to be wise with the Church, where Christ saith, Nisi manducaveritis, &c. Unless ye eat my Flesh, and drink my Blood, ye have no life in you.

If he had meant of only eating Bread and drinking Wine, nothing had been more pleasant to the Capernaites, neither would they have forsaken him. The Flesh profiteth nothing to them that do so take it. For the Capernaites did imagine Christ to be given in such sort as he lived. But Christ spake high things; not that they should have him as Flesh in the Market, but to consider his Presence with the Spirit (a) under the forms whereby it is given. As there is an alteration of Bodies by courses and times of Ages, so there is no less (b) variety in eating of Bodies.

(a) Under the Forms, that is, under the Properties of Bread and Wine, and so all this is true.

(b) In the material eating of mans body there is no variety: for to eat mans flesh either under Accidents, or not Accidents, both is against the Scripture and against Nature.

These things which I have recited briefly, Mr. Harpsfield did with many more words set out: and hereupon Dr. Weston disputed against him.

VVest. Christs Real Body is not in the Sacrament.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Harps. I deny the Antecedent.

VVest. John 16. Dico veritatem vobis, &c. I speak the truth unto you: It behoveth me that I go away from you. For unless I do depart, that Comforter cannot come, &c.

Upon this I will make this Argument.

Argument.

Christ is so gone away, as he did send the Holy Ghost.
But the Holy Ghost did verily come into the World:
Ergo, Christ is verily gone.

This answer doth not satisfie the Argument: for the Conclusion speaketh of a bodily absence, the Answer speaking of a spiritual remaining.

Harps. He is verily gone, and yet remaineth here.

VVest. S. Augustine saith, that these words, Ego vero, &c. I will be with you even to the end of the World, are accomplished, secundum Majestatem, according to his Majesty: but secundum præsentiam carnis non est hic; i. by the Presence of his Flesh he is not here. The Church hath him not in Flesh, but by Belief.

Harps.

Anno 1554.

Harpſ. We muſt diligently weigh that there are two Natures in Chriſt: the Divine Nature, and Humane Nature. The Divine Nature is of ſuch ſort, that it cannot chooſe but be in all places. The Humane Nature is not ſuch, that of force it muſt be in all places, although it be in divers after a divers manner. So where the Doctors do intreat of his Preſence by Majeſty, they do commend the Majeſty of the Divine Nature, not to hinder us of the (c) Natural Preſence here in the Sacrament.

(c) If the natural Preſence is here, then is it falſe that S. Auguſtine ſaith, Secundum preſentiam carnis non eſt hic.

Weſt. He ſaith further, Me autem non ſemper habebitis, Ye ſhall not have me always with you, is to be underſtood in the fleſh.

Harpſ. The Preſence of the Fleſh is to be conſidered, that he is not here as he was wont to live in converſation with them, to be ſeen, talked withal, or in ſuch ſort as a man may give him (d) any thing: after that ſort he is not preſent.

(d) And how can we then give honour to him to whom we can ſhew no charity, nor give any thing elſe unto? What manner ſoever ye give to the Body, if the ſubſtantial Body be here indeed, it cannot be avoided, but either it muſt needs be falſe that S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non eſt hic, or elſe Chriſt muſt have two Bodies in two places together, preſent here after one manner, and in Heaven after another manner.

Weſt. But what ſay you to this of Auguſtine, Non eſt hic, He is not here.

Harpſ. I do anſwer out of S. Auguſtine upon John, Tract. 25. upon theſe words, Non videbitis me, vado ad Patrem, &c. I go to the Father, ye ſhall not ſee me; that is, Such as I am now. Therefore I do deny the manner of his Preſence.

Weſt. I will overthrow S. Auguſtine with S. Auguſtine, who ſaith this alſo, Quomodo quis poſſit tenere Chriſtum? fidem mitte, & tenuiſti; i. How may a man hold Chriſt? ſend thy Faith, and thou holdeſt him.

So he ſheweth, that by ſending our Faith, we do hold Chriſt.

Harpſ. Indeed no man holdeth Chriſt unleſs he believe in him; but it is another thing to have Chriſt merciful and favourable unto us, and to have him preſent in the Sacrament.

There S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of holding him by Faith, as he is favourable unto us.

Weſt. Nay, he ſpeaketh there how the Fathers had him in the Fleſh, and teacheth that we have him not ſo in the Fleſh, as they had him long time, ſaying, Your Fathers did hold Chriſt preſent in the Fleſh: Do you hold him in your heart? What words can be more plain? Further he ſaith, He is gone and is not here: he hath left us, and yet hath not forſaken us. Hic eſt Majeſtate, abiit carne; i. He is here in Majeſty, and gone touching the Fleſh.

Note what Harpſfield here holdeth, that the Body of Chriſt is not preſent in the Sacrament, but only to them that receive him worthily.

Harpſ. I do underſtand Auguſtine thus, that Chriſt is here in his Fleſh to them that receive him worthily: to ſuch as do worthily receive him, to them he is not preſent in the Fleſh. I judge S. Auguſtine meaneth ſo. We have him, and have him not: we have him in receiving him worthily, otherwiſe not.

Weſt. Nay; Tenere carnem eſt tenere corticem litteræ. I will proſecute another Argument. Cyril doth ſay, By the Majeſty of his Divinity he is ever here, but the Preſence of his Fleſh hath he taken away.

Harpſ. The ſenſe of Cyril is thus to be underſtood; The moſt true Fleſh of Chriſt is at the right hand of the Father. Thus the Fathers taught, and ſo they believed. Thus ſaid Cyril: Thus ſaid Auguſtine; and becauſe this is the Foundation of our Faith, they did oftentimes teach it. Therefore when they prove this, (the Body to be in Heaven) they do not make againſt the Preſence in the Sacrament.

If the Preſence of his Fleſh be taken away, as Cyril ſaith, how then can the Preſence of his Fleſh be in the Sacrament? Vigilius ſaith, his Body is taken up, how then doth the ſame Body remain ſtill? unleſs either ye make him to have two Bodies: or elſe make two Contradictories true in one Propoſition.

So unleſs ye can plainly ſhew, that the Fathers do directly ſay he is not in the Sacrament, you make nothing againſt me: for I have ſhewed why the Fathers ſo ſpake. They did teach the great difference between the Divine Nature, and the Humane Nature, as I have before ſaid.

Weſt. I will then prove, that he is not in the Sacrament. Vigilius againſt the Heretick Eutiches, upon theſe words, Me autem non ſemper habebitis, ſaith, The Son of God, as touching his Humanity, he is gone from us, by his Divinity he remaineth with us. And the ſame Vigilius in his fourth Book ſaith, He that is in the Heaven, is not in the earth; ſpeaking of Chriſt.

Harpſ. I will ſhew you the reaſon of theſe words. The Heretick Eutiches did believe that the Divine Nature of Chriſt was faſtned on the Croſs, and believed that Chriſt had no Natural Body. To this Vigilius ſaid, That the Humane Nature was taken up and aſcended, which could not ſo have done, unleſs he had a Body. This he ſaid not, to take away the Preſence in the Sacrament.

For what had he to refer this Sentence to the Sacrament? He never did ſo much as dream of the Sacrament.

Weſt. Cyril ſaith, Although he be abſent from us in Body, yet are we governed by his Spirit. Cyrillus.

Harpſ. By theſe words he gave us a chearfulneſs to aſpire upwards, ſeeking therehence our help. For as touching his converſation, he is not ſo in the Sacrament as one meet to be lived withal. But let him not teach us that he is not there to feed us; for after that ſort he is there. The Body of Chriſt is here to feed our bellies, but not to be lived withal.

Weſt. You have ſatisfied me with your Anſwers, in doing the ſame learnedly and catolickly. But now to another Argument.

* Chriſt is now ſo abſent from the Earth by his Body, as he was abſent from Heaven when he lived here. * The Argument holdeth a proportione.

But when he did live bodily on Earth; the ſame Natural Body was out of Heaven.

Ergo, Now whilſt this Natural Body is in Heaven, it is not in the Earth.

Harpſ. I deny the Major.

Weſt. Fulgentius ad Thraſimundum Regem; libro ſecundo, ſaith, Secundum humanam ſubſtantiam abſens erat cœlo, cum deſcendit de cœlo. Theſe are Fulgentius's words touching his Humane Subſtance: He was abſent from Heaven, when he deſcended from Heaven; and touching the ſame Subſtance, now he is in Heaven he is not on the Earth: but concerning the Divine Nature, he never forſook, neither Heaven nor Earth.

After theſe words, not waiting Harpſfields Anſwer, he offered Mr. Cranmer to diſpute; who began in this wiſe.

Cranmer. I have heard you right learnedly and eloquently intreat of the Dignity of the Scriptures, which I do both commend, and have marvelled thereat within my ſelf. But whereas you refer the true ſenſe and judgment of the Scriptures to the Catholick Church as Judge thereof, you are much deceived; ſpecially for that under the Name of the Church you appoint ſuch Judges as have corruptly judged, and contrary to the ſenſe of the Scriptures. I wonder likewiſe why you attribute ſo little to the diligent reading of the Scriptures, and conferring of places; ſeeing the Scriptures do ſo much commend the ſame, as well in divers other places, as alſo in thoſe which you your ſelf have already alledged. And as touching your Opinion of theſe Queſtions, it ſeemeth to me neither to have any ground of the Word of God, nor of the Primitive Church. And to ſay the truth, the Schoolmen have ſpoken diverſly of them, and do not agree thereof among themſelves. Wherefore, minding here briefly to ſhew my Judgment alſo, I muſt deſire you firſt to anſwer to me a few Queſtions which I ſhall demand of you. Which being done, we ſhall the better proceed in our Diſputation. Moreover, I muſt deſire you to bear alſo with my rudeneſs in the Latin Tongue, which through long diſuſe is not now ſo prompt and ready with me as it hath been: And now all other things ſet apart, I mind chiefly to have regard to the Truth. My firſt queſtion is this, How Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament; according to your mind or determination? The opinion of Mr. Harpſfield reproved, referring the ſenſe of the Scripture rather to the Judgment of the Church, than to the diligent reading and conferring of places.

Then anſwered a Doctor, he is there as touching his Subſtance, but not after the manner of his Subſtance. Chriſt preſent in the Sacrament in Subſtance, but not after the manner of Subſtance.

Harpſ. He is there in ſuch ſort and manner, as he may be eaten.

Cran. My next Queſtion is, Whether he hath his quantity and qualities, form, figure, and ſuch like properties.

Harpſ. Are theſe your queſtions, ſaid Mr. Harpsfield? I may likewiſe ask you, When Chriſt paſſed through the Virgins Womb, an ruperit necne? When they had thus a while contended, there were divers opinions in this matter. The Rabbines could not agree among themſelves.

All the Doctors fell in a buzzing, incertain what to anſwer: ſome thought one way, ſome another; and thus Mr. Doctors could not agree.

Then Mr. Cranmer ſaid thus; You put off queſtions with queſtions, and not with anſwers, I ask one thing of you, and you anſwer another. Once again I ask, Whether he have thoſe Properties which he had on the Earth.

Treſh. No, he hath not all the quantities and qualities belonging to a Body. Chriſts Body without his Properties in the Sacrament.

Smith. Stay you Mr. Treſham. I will anſwer you Mr. Doctor, with the words of Damaſcene, Tranſformatur panis, &c. The Bread is transformed, &c. But if thou wilt inquire how, Modus impoſſibilis, The manner is impoſſible.

Then

Then two or three others added their Answers to this Question, somewhat doubtfully. A great hurly-burly was among them, some affirming one thing, and some another.

Cran. Do you appoint me a Body, and cannot tell what manner of Body? Either he hath not his quantity, or else you are ignorant how to answer it.

Harps. These are vain Questions, and it is not meet to spend the time on them.

Lanfrancus contra berengarium.

West. Hear me a while, Lanfrancus, sometime Bishop of Canterbury, doth answer in this wise unto Berengarius upon such like Questions, Salubriter credi possunt, fideliter quæri non possunt; i. They may be well believed, but never faithfully asked.

Cran. If you think good to answer it, some of you declare it, Harps. He is there as pleaseth him to be there.

Cran. I would be best contented with that answer, if that your appointing of a Carnal Presence had not driven me of necessity to have inquired for disputations sake, how you place him there, since you will have a Natural Body.

The Papists would have Christs Body in the Sacrament, but they cannot tell how.

When again he was answered of divers at one time, some denying it to be a quantum, some saying it to be quantitativum, some affirming it to have modum quanti, some denying it, some one thing, some another: Up starts Dr. Weston, and boughtily decided, as he thought, all the matter, saying, It is Corpus quantum, sed non per modum quanti; i. It is a Body, saith he, having quantity, but not according to the manner of quantity.

Whereunto Mr. Ward, a great Sophister, thinking the matter not fully answered, did largely declare and discourse his Sentence; How learnedly and truly I cannot tell, nor I think he himself neither, nor yet the best learned there. For it was said since, That far better learned than he, laid as good ear to him as they could, and yet could by no means perceive to what end all his talk tended. Indeed he told a formal Tale to clout up the matter. He was full of quantum & quantitativum. This that follows was, as it is thought, the effect, yet others think no. Howbeit we will rehearse the sum of his words, as it is thought he spake then.

Mr. Ward in the mysty Clouds of Duns's quiddities.

Ward. We must consider, saith he, that there are duæ Positiones, two Positions. The one standeth by the order of parts, with respect of the whole. The other in respect of that which containeth Christ, is in the Sacrament in respect of the whole. This Proposition is in one of Aristotles Predicaments, called Situs. I remember I did intreat these matters very largely, when I did rule and moderate the Philosophical Disputations in the Publick Schools. This Position is sine modo quantitativo, as by an ensample, you can never bring Heaven to a quantity. So I conclude that he is in the Sacrament quantum, sine modo quantitativo.

Aristotle must help to tell us how Christ is in the Sacrament. Christ, sine modo quantitativo in the Sacrament.

These words be amplyfied very largely, and so high he climbed into the Heavens with Duns's Ladder, and not with the Scriptures, that it is to be marvelled how he could come down again without falling. To whom Mr. Cranmer said, Then thus do I make my Argument.

Dr. Cranmers Argument.

Cran. In Heaven his Body had quantity, in Earth it hath none by your saying.

Ergo, He hath two Bodies, the one in Heaven, the other in Earth.

Here some would have answered him, that he had quantity in both, and so put off the Antecedent: But thus said Mr. Harpsfield;

Harps. I deny your Argument, though some would not have had him say so.

Cran. The Argument is good. It standeth upon Contradictories, which is the most sure hold.

Harps. I deny that there are Contradictions.

Cran. I thus prove it. Habere modum quantitativum & non habere, sunt contradictoria.

Sed Christus in cœlis, ut dicitis, habet modum quantitativum, in terra non habet:

Aristotle 4. Metaph. Impossibile est, idem simul esse & non esse.

Ergo, Duo sunt corpora ejus in quæ cadunt hæc contradictoria; Nam in idem cadere non possunt.

West. I deny the Minor.

Harps. I answer that the Major is not true. For Habere quantum, & non habere, non sunt contradictoria, nisi sic considerentur, ejusdem ad idem, eodem modo & simpliciter.

West. I confirm the same: For one Body may have modum quantitativum, and not have; and idem corpus was passible and impassible; one Body may have wounds and not wounds.

Anno 1554.

Cran. This cannot be at one time.

West. The ensample of the Potter doth prove that which I say; who, of that which is Clay now, maketh a Pot or Cup forthwith.

Cran. But I say again, that it is so, but at divers times: As one piece of Meat to be raw and sodden cannot be at one time together. But you would have it otherwise, that Christ should be here and in Heaven at one time, and should have modum quantitativum, and not have; which cannot be but by such Argument as I have shewed you.

West. But I say, Christs Body was passible and not passible at one (a) instant.

(a) Passible and impassible cannot stand together in one Subject. Simul & semel, non secundum & eodem tempore, propter diversum pugnantiam. Christs Body to be passible and not passible at the Supper, it appeareth by these words, That shall be given for you.

Seaton. You may ask as well other Questions, how he is in Heaven? whether he sit or stand? and whether he be there as he lived here?

Cran. You your self, by putting a Natural Presence, do force me to question, how he is here. Therefore next I do ask this Question, Whether good and evil men do eat the Body in the Sacrament?

Harps. Yea, they do so, (b) even as the Sun doth shine upon Kings Palaces, and on Dung-heaps.

(b) That remaineth yet unproved. Harpsfield seemed a little before, to note the contrary, where he said, That the Flesh of Christ to them that receive him not worthily is not present, p. 87

Cran. Then do I inquire, how long Christ tarrieth in the eater?

Harps. These are curious Questions, unmeet to be asked.

Cran. I have taken them out of your Schools and Schoolmen, which you your selves do most use: and there also do I learn to ask how far he goeth into the Body.

Harps. We know that the Body of Christ is received to nourish the whole Man, both Body and Soul: Eousque progreditur corpus quousque (c) species.

(c) Sed species non progreditur usque ad animam: Ergo nec corpus Christi non patitur corpus & animam. These men would needs have a bodily Presence, yet would they not, or else could not bring any reason how.

Cran. How long doth he abide in the Body?

Seaton. S. Augustine saith, our flesh goeth into his flesh. But after he is once received into the stomach, it maketh no matter for us to know how far he doth pierce, or whether he is conveyed.

¶ Here Mr. Tresham and one Mr. London answered, that Christ being given there under such form and quantity as pleased him, it was not to be inquired of his tarrying, or of his descending into the Body.

Harps. You were wont to lay to our charge, that we added to the Scripture; saying always that we should fetch the truth out of the Scripture, and now you your self bring Questions out of the Schoolmen, which you have disallowed in us.

Cran. I say as I have said alway, that I am constrained to ask these Questions, because of this Carnal Presence which you imagine; and yet I know right well, that these Questions be answered out of the Scriptures. As to my last Question, How long he abideth in the Body? &c. the Scripture answereth plainly, that Christ doth so long dwell in his People, as they are his Members. Whereupon I make this Argument.

Ba. They which eat the Flesh of Christ do dwell in him, and he in them.

ro. But the wicked do not remain in him, nor he in them:

'co. Ergo, The wicked do not eat his Flesh, nor drink his Blood.

Dr. Cranmers Argument in the second Figure and second Mood.

Harps. I will answer unto you as S. Augustine saith, not that howsoever a man do eat, he eateth the Body; but he that eateth after a certain manner.

Answer insufficient.

Cran. I cannot tell what manner ye appoint, but I am sure that evil men do not eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ, as Christ speaketh in the sixth of John.

Harps. In the sixth of John some things are to be referred to the godly, and some to the ungodly.

Cran. Whatsoever he doth intreat there of eating, doth pertain unto good men.

Harps. If you do mean only of the word of eating, it is true; if concerning the thing, it is not so; And if your meaning be of that which is contained under the word of eating, it may be so taken, I grant.

Evil men do not eat the Body of Christ.

Cran. Now to the Argument, He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Doth not this prove sufficiently, that evil men do not eat that the good do?

Tresham. You must add, Qui manducat digne, He that eateth worthily.

Cran. I speak of the same manner of eating that Christ speaketh of.

West.

Anno 1554.

West. Augustinus ad Fratres in Eremo, Sermon, 28. Est quidam manducandi modus, That is, There is a certain manner of eating. Augustine speaketh of two manners of eating; the one of them that eat worthily, the other that eat unworthily.

The sixth Chapter of John is to be referred partly to the Supper, partly to Faith, after the Papists.

Harps. All things in the sixth of John are not to be referred to the Sacrament, but to the receiving of Christ by Faith. The Fathers do agree, that there is not intreaty made of the Supper of the Lord, before they come unto, Panis quem dabo vobis, caro mea est, &c.

Cran. There is intreating of Manna both before and after.

Harps. I will apply another Answer. This Argument hath a kind of Poyson in it, which must be thus bitten away; that Manna and this Sacrament be not both one. Manna hath not his Efficacy of himself, but of God.

Comparison between eating of Manna, and eating the Body of Christ.

Cran. But they that did take Manna worthily had fruit thereby: And so by your Assertion, he that doth eat the Flesh of Christ worthily, hath his Fruit by that.

Therefore the like doth follow of them both, and so there should be no difference between Manna and this Sacrament, by your Reason.

Harps. When it is said, that they which did eat Manna are dead, it is to be understood, that they did want the vertue of Manna.

If Master Harpsfield do mean of Bodily Life, they which eat the Sacrament do dye as well as they which did eat the Manna. If he mean of Spiritual Life, neither be they all damned that did eat Manna, nor all saved that do eat the Sacrament. Wherefore the Truth is, that neither the eating of Manna bringeth Death, nor the eating of the Sacrament bringeth Salvation: But only the Spiritual believing upon Christs Bodily Passion, which only justifieth both them and us. And therefore, as the Effect is Spiritual, which Christ speaketh of in this Chapter; so is the Cause of that Effect Spiritual whereof he meaneth, which is our Spiritual believing in him, and not our Bodily eating of him.

Cran. They then which do eat either of them worthily, do live.

Harps. They do live which do eat Manna worthily, not by Manna, but by the Power of God given by it. The other which do eat this Sacrament, do live by the same.

Cran. Christ did not intreat of the Cause, but the Effect which followed: He doth not speak of the Cause, whereof the Effect proceedeth.

Harps. I do say, The Effects are divers, Life, and Death, which do follow the Worthy and Unworthy eating thereof.

Cran. Since you will needs have an Addition to it, we must use both in Manna and in the Sacrament, indifferently, either worthily, or unworthily.

Christ spake absolutely of Manna, and of the Supper, so that, after that absolute speaking of the Supper, wicked men can in no wise eat the Flesh of Christ, and drink his Blood.

Aug. in Joan. tract. 26.

Further, Augustine upon John, Tractat. 26. upon these Words, Qui manducat, &c. saith, There is no such respects in common Meats, as in the Lords Body. For who that eateth other Meats hath still hunger, and needeth to be satisfied daily: but he that doth eat the Flesh of Christ, and drinketh his Blood, doth live for ever. But you know Wicked Men do not so.

Ergo, Wicked Men do not receive.

Harps. S. Augustine meaneth, That he who eateth Christs Flesh, &c. after a certain manner, should live for ever. Wicked Men do eat, but not after that manner.

Argument in the second figure and second mood.

Cran. Only they which participate Christ be of the Mystical Body.
Me- But the Evil Men are not of the Mystical Body.
tres. Ergo, They do not participate Christ.

D. Cranmer commended for his modesty.

West. Your wonderful gentle Behaviour and Modesty (good M. Doctor Cranmer) is worthy much commendation: and that I may not deprive you of your right and just deserving, I give you most hearty thanks in my own name, and in the name of all my Brethren. At which saying, all the Doctors gently put off their Caps. Then M. Weston did oppose the Respondent on this wise.

West. Tertullian doth call the Sacrament the Sign and Figure of the Lord.

Tertul. cont. Marcion. August. ad Bardan.

S. Augustine ad Dardanum saith, Non dubitavit Dominus dicere, Hoc est Corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis, i. The Lord did not stick to say, This is my Body, when he gave a Sign of his Body.

Besides this, he giveth rules how to understand the Scriptures, saying: If the Scriptures seem to command some hainous thing, then it is figurative, as by example; Manducare carnem, & bibere sanguinem est tropicus sermo, i. To eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood, is a Tropical Speech.

August de Doctrina Christiana.

Answer to Tertullian.

Harps. Tertullian did write in that place against Marcion an Heretick, who denied Christ to have a True Body, and said, he had only a Fantastical Body. He went about to shew, that we had Christ both in Heaven and in Earth; and though we have the True Body in the Sacrament, yet he would not go about so to confound him, as to say, That Christ was truly in the Sacrament: For that Heretick would have thereat rather marvelled, than believed it. Therefore he shewed him, that it was the Figure of Christ: And a Figure cannot be but of a thing that is, or hath been extant.

Answer to Augustine.

To the Text of Augustine, the Church hath never taught the contrary. There is an outward thing in the Sacrament, which sometimes hath sundry names. For it may be called a Figure in this Declaration, That Body which is in the Sacrament, is a Figure of Christ dwelling in Heaven.

Answer to Augustine. De Doctrina Christiana.

To the third, That which is brought by Augustine for example, about the understanding of the Scriptures, is thus to be understood, as tending to a general manner of eating; so Manducare carnem, & bibere sanguinem, i. To eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood, may be a figurative Speech to exclude Anthropophagiam, i. The eating of Mans Flesh. The which is, when we eat Mans Flesh cut in Morsels, as we eat common Meat; so as we neither have, nor eat Christ in the Sacrament.

The second question.

West. I understand your short and learned Answer, which doth sufficiently content me. But now to the second Question, which is of Transubstantiation.

The Scripture calleth it Bread.

Ergo, It is Bread.

Harps. In the Name of Bread all is signified which we do eat.

Theodoretus Dialog. 1. A single-sole answer to Theodoretus.

West. Theodoretus an Ancient Writer, in his first Dialogue, saith, That Christ changed not the Nature, but called it his Body.

Harps. He doth there speak de Symbolo, which is Externa species Sacramenti, i. The outward form of the Sacrament. He meaneth, that that doth tarry in his own Nature. Moreover, as it was reported, he brought for his Answer, Augustinum in sententiis Prosperi.

Theodoret. Dial 2.

West. Theodoret also in his second Dialogue of those kinds of Bread and Wine, saith, Nec naturam egrediuntur, manent etiam in sua substantia, i. They go not out of their own Nature, but they tarry in their own Substance.

(a) And how are they turned if they remain in priori substantia.

Harps. They are understood to be of the same Substance wherein they are (a) turned.

West. But what say you to this? Manent in priori substantia, i. They remain in their former Substance.

Harps. Symbola manent, i. The outward signs do tarry.

Symbolum quid.

West. But what is meant here by this word Symbolum?

Harps. The outward form or shape only of the Nature.

West. Then you cannot call them a Substance.

Harps. Yes, Sir, every thing hath a certain Substance in his kind.

West. That is true, but Accidents are not Substances in their kind.

Harps. Sunt quid in suo genere. Of this they contended much.

Chrysost. ad Cæsarium Monachum.

West. Chrysostom ad Cæsarium Monachum, saith, Sicut, antequam consecratur, panis est: sic, postquam consecratur, liberatus est ab appellatione panis, donatusque est appellatione Corporis Domini, cum natura remanet; That is, Like as before it is consecrated, it is Bread: so after it is consecrated, it is delivered from the name of Bread, and is indued with the name of the Lords Body, whereas the Nature doth remain.

D. Weston compileth his Arguments out of Peter Martyr's Story.

Harps. Where read you this place, I pray you?

West. Here in Peter Martyr I find it; I have his Book in my Hand.

Harpſ. The Author ſhall be of more Credit, before that I make ſo much of him, as to frame an Anſwer unto it.

Weſt. Indeed I know not well where he findeth it. But Gelaſius ſaith, That the Nature of Bread and Wine do tarry.

Gelaſius.

Harpſ. What is that Gelaſius?

Weſt. A Biſhop of Rome.

Harpſ. Then he allowed the Maſs?

Weſt. Yea, and oftentimes ſaid it: And Purgatory he alſo allowed, and ſo Prayer for the Dead, Reliques, and Invocation to Saints.

Harpſ. Belike then he meant nothing againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Origen in Mat. cap. 15.

Weſt. It doth appear ſo indeed. But Origen upon Matthew the 15. Chapter ſaith, That the material Bread doth tarry, and is conveyed into the Privy, and is eaten of Worms.

Harpſ. Tuſh, tuſh, this place appertaineth unto Holy Bread.

Weſt. What, doth it appertain to Holy Bread?

Harpſ. Yea, unto Holy Bread.

Weſt. By what means can you ſhew how this miraculous work bringeth Chriſt into the Sacrament?

Harpſ. By the Scriptures I prove that, which ſaith, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my Body.

Weſt. It doth rejoyce all us not a little, that you have ſo well maintained the ſound Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Altar, wherein you have faithfully cleaved to the Catholick Church, as an only Stay of our Religion: By the which means you have proved your ſelf meet to be authoriſed further towards the practiſing of the Scripture.

And here, I do openly witneſs, that I do throughly conſent with you, and have, for Diſputations ſake only, brought theſe Arguments againſt you, which you have right learnedly ſatisfied: And now all things being done, after our Form and Manner, we will end this Diſputation, ſaying, In oppoſitum eſt ſacra Theologia, In oppoſitum eſt, &c.

¶ Thus have ye heard in theſe aforeſaid Diſputations, about the Holy Supper of the Lord, the Reaſons and Arguments of the Doctors, the Anſwers and Reſolutions of the Biſhops, and the Triumph of the Prolocutor, triumphing before the Victory, with Vicit veritas, who rather, in my mind, ſhould have exclaimed, Vicit poteſtas; as it happeneth always, Ubi pars major vincit meliorem. For elſe if poteſtas had not helped the Prolocutor more than veritas, there had been a ſmall victoria. But ſo it is where Judgments be partial, and Parties be addicted, there all things turn to Victory, though it be never ſo mean and ſimple, as in this Diſputation might well appear.

For firſt, of the Opponents part, neither was there almoſt any Argument in true mood and figure rightly framed: Neither could the Anſwerers be permitted to ſay for themſelves: And if they anſwered any thing, it was condemned before they began to ſpeak. Again, Such diſturbance and confuſion, more like a Conſpiration than any Diſputation, without all Form and Order, was in the Schools during the time of their anſwering, that neither could the Anſwerers have place to utter their Minds, neither would the Opponents be ſatisfied with any Reaſons. Concerning the which Diſturbance of that miſruled Diſputation, you ſhall hear what Maſter Ridley himſelf reporteth by his own Deſcription, in manner as followeth.

The Report and Narration of M. Ridley, concerning the miſordered Diſputation had againſt him and his Fellow-priſoners at Oxford.

B. Rid'ys report of the miſorder of this Diſputation.

I Never yet, ſince I was born, ſaw or heard any thing done or handled more vainly or tumultuouſly, than the Diſputation which was with me in the Schools at Oxford. Yea verily, I could never have thought that it had been poſſible to have found amongſt men recounted to be of Knowledge and Learning in this Realm, any ſo brazen-faced and ſhameleſs, ſo diſorderly and vainly to behave themſelves, more like Stage-players in Enterludes to ſet forth a Pageant, than to grave Divines in Schools to diſpute. The Sorbonical Clamours (which at Paris I have ſeen in times paſt, when Popery moſt reigned) might be worthily thought (in compariſon of this Thraſonical oſtentation) to have had much Modeſty. And no great marvel, ſeeing they which ſhould have been Moderators, and Overſeers of others, and which ſhould have given good Examples in Words and Gravity; they themſelves, above all other, gave worſt Example, and did, as it were, blow the Trump to the reſt, to rave, roar, rage, and cry out. By reaſon whereof (good Chriſtian Reader) manifeſtly it may appear, that they never fought for any Truth or Verity, but only for the Glory of the World, and their own bragging Victory. But leſt by the innumerable Railings and reproachful Taunts, wherewith I was baited on every ſide, our cauſe, yea rather Gods cauſe and his Churches, ſhould be evil ſpoken of, and ſlandered to the World through falſe Reports, and untrue Examples given out of our Diſputation, and ſo the Verity might ſuſtain ſome Damage, I thought it no leſs than my Duty to write mine Anſwers; to the intent, that whoſoever is deſirous to know the Truth thereof, may by this perceive as well thoſe things which were chiefly objected, as ſummarily that which was anſwered of me unto every of them. Howbeit (good Reader) I confeſs this to be moſt true, that it is impoſſible to ſet forth either all that was, God knoweth, tumultuouſly and confuſedly objected of their parts, being ſo many, ſpeaking many times altogether ſo thick, that one could not well hear another, neither all that was anſwered on my behalf to them ſo ſundry and divers Opponents.

Anno 1554.

No verity but glory fought for in this Diſputation.

Moreover, a great part of the time appointed for the Diſputations was vainly conſumed in opprobrious Checks and reviling Taunts, with hiſſing and clapping of hands, and that in the Engliſh Tongue, to procure the Peoples Favour withal. All which things, when I with great grief of Heart did behold, proteſting openly, that ſuch exceſſive and outragious Diſorder was unſeemly for thoſe Schools, and Men of Learning and Gravity, and that they which were the Doers and Stirrers of ſuch things, did nothing elſe but betray the ſlenderneſs of their Cauſe, and their own Vanities: I was ſo far off by this my Humble Complaint, from doing any good at all, that I was inforced to hear ſuch Rebukes, Checks, and Taunts for my Labour, as no perſon of any Honeſty, without bluſhing, could abide to hear the like ſpoken of a moſt vile Varlet, againſt a moſt wretched Ruffian.

Taunts and revilings uſed in this Diſputation.

At the firſt beginning of the Diſputation, when I ſhould have confirmed mine Anſwer to the firſt Propoſition in few words, and that (after the Manner and Law of Schools) afore I could make an end of my firſt Probation, which was not very long, even the Doctors themſelves cryed out, He ſpeaketh Blaſphemies, he ſpeaketh Blaſphemies. And when I on my Knees beſought them, and that heartily, that they would vouchſafe to hear me to the End, (whereat the Prolocutor being moved, cried out on high, Let him read it, let him read it.) Yet, when I began to read again, there followed immediately ſuch ſhouting, ſuch a noiſe and tumult, ſuch confuſion of Voices, crying, Blaſphemies, Blaſphemies, as I, to my Remembrance, never heard or read the like, except it be that one, which was in the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſtirred up of Demetrius the Silver-Smith, and other of his Occupation, crying out againſt Paul, Great is Diana of the Epheſians, great is Diana of the Epheſians: And except it be a certain Diſputation which the Arrians had againſt the Orthodoxes, and ſuch as were of Godly Judgment in Africa, where it is ſaid, that ſuch as the Preſident and Rulers of the Diſputation were, ſuch was the end of the Diſputations. All were in a hurly-burly, and ſo great were the Slanders which the Arrians caſt out, that nothing could quietly be heard. This writeth Victor in the ſecond Book of his Hiſtory.

D. Ridley could not be ſuffered to read forth his Proteſtation.

The which Cries and Tumults of them againſt me ſo prevailed, that, will I, nill I, I was inforced to leave off reading of my Probations, although they were ſhort. If any man doubt of the truth hereof, let the ſame ask any one that was there, and not utterly perverted in Popery, and, I am aſſured, he will ſay, I ſpeak the leaſt. But to complain of theſe things further, I will ceaſe.

And further ſpeaking of this Diſputation, he concludeth with theſe Words: And thus was ended this moſt glorious Diſputation of the moſt Holy Fathers, Sacrificers, Doctors and Maſters, which fought moſt manfully, as ye may ſee, for their God and Goods, for their Faith and Felicity, for their Countrey and Kitchin, for their Beauty and and Belly, with triumphant Applauſes, and Favour of the whole Univerſity.

The three Priſoners at Oxford call'd before the Commiſſioners. April 20.

After the Diſputation of M. Latimer ended, which was the 18. day of April; the Friday following, which was the 20. day of the ſaid Month, the Commiſſioners ſate in Saint Maries Church, as they did the Saturday before, and Doctor Weſton uſed particularly Diſſwaſions with every one of them, and would not ſuffer them to anſwer in any wiſe, but directly and peremptorily, as his words were, to ſay whether they would ſubſcribe, or no. And firſt to the Biſhop of Canterbury he ſaid, he was overcome in Diſputations: To whom the Biſhop anſwered, That whereas Doctor Weſton ſaid, he hath anſwered and oppoſed, and could neither maintain his own Errors, nor impugn the Verity; all that he ſaid, was falſe. For he was not ſuffered to oppoſe as he would, nor could anſwer as he was required, unleſs he would have brawled with them, ſo thick their Reaſons came one after another. Ever four or five did interrupt him, that he could not ſpeak. Maſter Ridley and Maſter Latimer were asked what they would ſay: They replyed, That they would ſtand to that they had ſaid. Then were they all called together, and Sentence read over them, that they were no Members of the Church. And therefore they, their Fautors and Patrons, were condemned as Hereticks: And in reading of it, they were asked, Whether they would turn, or no: And they bad them read on in the Name of God, for they were not minded to turn. So they were condemned all three.

D. Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and M. Latimer condemned.

After which, Sentence of Condemnation being awarded againſt them, they anſwered again every one in his turn, in manner and effect of words, as followeth: The Archbiſhop firſt beginning thus:

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

From this your Judgment and Sentence I appeal to the Juſt Judgment of God Almighty, truſting to be preſent with him in Heaven, for whoſe preſence in the Altar I am thus condemned.

Doctor Ridley.

Although I be not of your Company, yet doubt I not but my Name is written in another place, whether this Sentence will ſend us ſooner, than we ſhould by the courſe of Nature have come.

Maſter Latimer.

I thank God moſt heartily, that he hath prolonged my Life to this End, that I may in this caſe glorifie God by that kind of death.

Doctor Weſtons Anſwer unto Latimer.

Weſton giveth Sentence againſt himſelf.

If you go to Heaven in this Faith, then I will never come thither, as I am thus perſwaded.

The Archbiſhop and his Fellow-Priſoners ſeparated.

After the Sentence pronounced, they were ſeparated one from another, videlicet, The Archbiſhop was returned to Bocardo, D. Ridley was carried to the Sheriffs Houſe, Mr. Latimer to the Bayliffs.

On Saturday following, they had a Maſs with a general Proceſſion and great Solemnity. Doctor Cranmer was cauſed to behold the Proceſſion out of Bocardo; Doctor Ridley out of the Sheriffs Houſe. Latimer alſo, being brought to ſee it from the Bayliffs Houſe, thought that he ſhould have gone to Burning, and ſpake to one Auguſtine Cooper a Catchpole, to make a quick Fire. But when he came to Carfox, and ſaw the matter, he ran as faſt as his old Bones would carry him, to one Spenſers Shop, and would not look towards it. Laſt of all, Doctor Weſton carried the Sacrament, and four Doctors carried the Canopy over him.

Immediately after the Sentence was given, Doctor Ridley writeth to the Prolocutor in manner as followeth.

Doctor Ridley to the Prolocutor.

D. Ridleys Letter to the Prolocutor.

MAſter Prolocutor, you remember, I am ſure, how you promiſed me openly in the Schools, after my Proteſtation, that I ſhould ſee how my Anſwers were there taken and written of the Notaries whom ye appointed (me ſciente neminem recuſare) to write what ſhould be ſaid, and to have had Licenſe to have added unto them, or to have altered them, as upon more deliberation ſhould have ſeemed me beſt. Ye granted me alſo, at the delivery of my Anſwer unto your firſt Propoſition, a Copy of the ſame: Theſe Promiſes are not performed. If your ſudden departure be any part of the cauſe thereof, yet I pray you remember that they may be performed; for performance of Promiſe is to be looked for at a Righteous Judges Hands. Now I ſend you here my Anſwers in writing to your ſecond and third Propoſitions, and do deſire and require earneſtly a Copy of the ſame, and I ſhall by Gods Grace procure the pains of the Writer to be paid for, and ſatisfied accordingly. Maſter Prolocutor, in the time of my Anſwering in the Schools, when I would have confirmed my Sayings with Authorities and Reaſons, ye ſaid then openly, that I ſhould have time and place, to ſay and bring whatſoever I could, another time, and the ſame your ſaying was then and there confirmed of other of the Commiſſioners: Yea, and (I dare ſay) the Audience alſo thought then that I ſhould have had another Day, to have brought and ſaid what I could for the Declaration and Confirmation of mine Aſſertions. Now that this was not done, but ſo ſuddenly Sentence given before the Cauſe was perfectly heard, I cannot but marvel, &c.

Papiſts have ſmall conſcience in performing of Promiſes.

On Munday next enſuing, after theſe things done and paſt, being the 23. of the ſaid Month of April, Doctor Weſton Prolocutor took his Journey up to London, with the Letters Certificatory from the Univerſity unto the Queen, by whom the Archbiſhop of Canterbury directed his Letters Supplicatory unto the Councel. The which Letters, after the Prolocutor had received, and had carried them well-near half way to London, by the way he opened the ſame, and ſeeing the Contents thereof, ſent them back again, refuſing to carry them, &c. Likewiſe Biſhop Ridley hearing of the Prolocutors going to London, writeth to him his Letters, wherein he deſireth him to carry his Anſwers up to certain Biſhops in London, the Form of which Letters, firſt of D. Ridley, then of the Archbiſhop; and laſtly, another Letter of D. Ridley to the Archbiſhop, here in order followeth. April 23.

A Letter of Biſhop Ridley to the Prolocutor.

MAſter Prolocutor, I deſire you, and in Gods Name require you, that you truly bring forth and ſhew all mine Anſwers, written and ſubſcribed with mine own Hand, unto the Higher Houſe of the Convocation, and eſpecially to my Lord Chancellor, my Lords of Dureſm, Ely, Worceſter, Norwich, and Chicheſter; and alſo to ſhew and exhibit this my Writing unto them, which in theſe few Lines here I write unto you: And that I did make this Requeſt unto you by this my Writing, know ye, that I did take Witneſs of them by whom I ſend you this Writing, and alſo of thoſe which were then with them preſent, videlicet, The two Bayliffs of Oxford, and of Mr. Iriſh, Alderman, then there called to be a Witneſs.

By me Nicholas Ridley, 13 of April, An. 1554.

The Copy of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Letter to the Councel, ſent by Doctor Weſton, who refuſed to deliver them.

The Archbiſhop writeth to the Councel.

IN right humble wiſe ſheweth unto your Honourable Lordſhips Thomas Cranmer late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, beſeeching the ſame to be a Means for me unto the Queens Highneſs for her Mercy and Pardon. Some of you know by what means I was brought and trained unto the Will of our late Soveraign Lord King Edward the Sixth, and what I ſpake againſt the ſame, wherein I refer me to the Reports of your Honours and Worſhips. Furthermore, this is to ſignifie unto your Lordſhips, that upon Munday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday laſt paſt, were open Diſputations here in Oxford againſt me, Mr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, in three matters concerning the Sacrament: Firſt, Of the Real Preſence. Secondly, Of Tranſubſtantiation: And thirdly, Of the Sacrifice of the Maſs. Upon Munday, againſt me; upon Tueſday, againſt Dr. Ridley; and upon Wedneſday, againſt Mr. Latimer. How the other two were ordered, I know not; for we were ſeparated, ſo that none of us knoweth what the other ſaid, nor how they were ordered. But as concerning my ſelf, I can report. Doctor Chedſey was appointed to diſpute againſt me, but the Diſputation was ſo confuſed, that I never knew the like; every man bringing forth what him liked without Order; and ſuch haſt was made, that no Anſwer could be ſuffered to be taken fully to any Argument, before another brought a New Argument. And in ſuch Weighty Matters the Diſputation muſt needs be ended in one day, which can ſcantly be ended in three Months. And when we had anſwered them, they would not appoint us one day to bring forth our Proofs, that they might anſwer us, being required by me thereunto, whereas I my ſelf have more to ſay, than can be well diſcuſſed, as I ſuppoſe, in twenty days. The means to reſolve the truth, had been to have ſuffered us to anſwer fully to all that they could ſay, and then they again to anſwer us fully to all that we can ſay. But why they would not anſwer us, what other cauſe can there be, but that either they feared their Matter, that they were not able to anſwer us, or elſe for ſome conſideration they made ſuch haſt, not to ſeek the Truth, but to condemn us, that it muſt be done in poſt-haſt before the matters could be throughly heard: For in haſt we were all three condemned of Hereſie. Thus much I thought good to ſignifie unto your Lordſhips, that you may knovv the indifferent handling of matters, leaving the Judgment thereof unto your vvisdoms. And I beſeech your Lordſhips, to remember me, a poor Priſoner, unto the Queens Majeſty; and I ſhall pray, as I do daily unto God, for the long Preſervation of your good Lordſhips in all Godlineſs and Felicity. April 23.

The Archbiſhop not ſuffered to anſwer fully to any Argument.

Haſt made in condemning the Archbiſhop and his Fellows.

Doctor Ridley to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

B. Ridley writeth to the Archbiſhop.

I Wiſh ye might have ſeen theſe mine Anſvvers before I had delivered them, that ye might have corrected them. But I truſt, in the ſubſtance of the matter vve do agree fully, both led by one Spirit of Truth, and both vvalking after one Rule of Gods Word. It is reported, that Sergeant Morgan, the Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, is gone Mad. It is ſaid alſo, that Juſtice Hales hath recanted, perverted by Doctor Moreman. Item, That Maſter Rogers, Doctor Crome, and Maſter Bradford ſhall be had to Cambridge, and there be diſputed vvith, as vve vvere here; and that the Doctors of Oxford ſhall go likevviſe thither, as Cambridge-men came hither. When ye have read mine Anſvvers, ſend them again to Auſten, except ye will put any thing to them. I truſt the day of our delivery out of all Miſeries, and of our entrance into perpetual Reſt, and unto perpetual Joy and Felicity, dravveth nigh: The Lord ſtrengthen us vvith his mighty Spirit of Grace. If you have not to vvrite vvith, you muſt make your Man your Friend. And this Bearer deſerveth to be revvarded; ſo he may, and vvill do you pleaſure. My Man is Truſty, but it grieveth both him and me, that vvhen I ſend him vvith any thing to you, your Man vvill not let him come up to ſee you, as he may to Maſter Latimer, and yours to me. I have a Promiſe to ſee hovv my Anſwers were written in the Schools, but as yet I cannot come by it. Pray for me, I pray for you, and ſo ſhall I for you. The Lord have Mercy of his Church, and lighten the Eyes of the Magiſtrates, that God's extream Plagues light not on this Realm of England. Turn, or burn.

This Juſtice Morgan gave ſentence againſt Lady Jane.

Diſputation in Cambridge intended.

Theſe Diſputations being thus diſcuſſed and ended, which were at Oxford in the Month of April, as is aforeſaid: Now let us return again to the proſecuting of our Story, touching other things likewiſe that happened in other parts of the Realm, in this Tumultuous Time of Q. Mary. And becauſe things that hapned in that Time were ſo many and divers, that it is hard to keep a perfect order in reciting them all: To the intent therefore to inſert things left out before, or elſe to proſecute the ſame more at full, we have thought here a little to interrupt the order of time (albeit not much) returning again to the Month of July the Year before, viz. 1553. In the which Month of July I ſhewed before, how the Duke of Northumberland was apprehended by the Guard, and brought to London by the Earl of Arundel, and other Lords and Gentlemen appointed for that purpoſe, on Saint James's day, being the 25. day of July, and ſo to the Tower, where he remained. Theſe be the Names of them which were committed to the Tower with the Duke.

Upon Monday the 7. day of Auguſt, Dirige in Latin was ſung within the Tower, by all the Kings Chappel, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter was Chief Miniſter, whereat was preſent the Queen, and moſt part of the Councel.

King Edwards Body buried.

Upon Tueſday the 8. of Auguſt, the Kings Body was brought to Weſtminſter, and there buried; where Doctor Day Biſhop of Chicheſter preached. The ſame day a Maſs of Requiem was ſung within the Tower by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who had on his Miter, and did all things as in times paſt was done; at which Maſs the Queen was preſent.

Upon Thurſday the Duke of Norfolk came forth of the Tower, with whom the Dutcheſs of Somerſet was alſo delivered this Thurſday.

Upon Sunday the 11 of Auguſt, Doctor Bourne preached at Pauls Croſs: Of the which Sermon read before, page 14.

Upon

Anno 1554.

Upon which day a Letter was sent unto Sir Henry Tirril, Anthony Brown and Edmund Brown, Esquires, praying them to commit to ward all such as shall contemn the Queens Order of Religion, or shall keep themselves from Church, there to remain until they be conformable, and to signifie their Names to the Councel.

D. Watson preached at Pauls Cross.

Upon Sunday the 20. of August, D. Watson, the Bishop of Winchesters Chaplain, preached at Pauls-Cross, at whose Sermon was present the Marques of Winchester, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Rich, and 200 of the Guard with their Halberds, lest the People should have made any stir against the Preacher.

Upon Munday the 21. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marques of Northampton, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, heard a Mass within the Tower, and after Mass they all five received the Sacrament in one kind only, as in the Popish time was used. On the which day also Queen Mary set forth a Proclamation, signifying to the People, That she could not abide any longer the Religion which she from her Infancy had professed, &c. Inhibiting in the said Proclamation, Printing, and Preaching; the Tenor whereof read before, page 14.

Upon the Tuesday, being the 22. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, Sir John Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, were beheaded at the Tower-Hill, as before is said page 14. The same day certain Noble Personages heard Mass within the Tower, and likewise after Mass, received the Sacrament in one kind.

Execution at the Tower-Hill.

Upon Sunday, the 27. day of August, Doctor Chedsey preached at Pauls-Cross, and the same day the Bishop of Canterbury, Sir Thomas Smith, and the Dean of Pauls were cited to appear the Week following before the Queens Commissioners, in the Bishops Consistory within Pauls.

In this mean time it was noised abroad by running rumors falsly and craftily devised; either to stablish the credit of the mass, or else to bring Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury out of credit, that he, to curry Favour with Queen Mary, should promise to say Dirige Mass after the old custom for King Edward, and that he had already said Mass at Canterbury, &c. Wherefore to stop the noise and slanders of those Rumours, the said Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, the 7. day of September set forth a Letter, which was also printed, in purgation of himself, the Copy of which Letter here ensueth.

A Purgation of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, against certain Slanders falsly raised upon him.

The Archbishop of Canterbury purgeth himself against false Rumours.

AS the Devil, Christs ancient Adversary, is a Lyar, and the Father of Lyes, even so hath he stirred up his Servants and Members to persecute Christ and his True Word and Religion with lying: which he ceaseth not to do most earnestly at this present time. For whereas the Prince of Famous Memory King Henry the Eighth, seeing the great abuses of the Latine Mass, reformed some things therein in his Life time, and after, our late Soveraign Lord King Edward the Sixth, took the same wholly away, for the manifold and great Errors and Abuses of the same, and restored in the place thereof Christs Holy Supper, according to Christs own Institution, and as the Apostles used the same in the Primitive Church, the Devil seeth about now by lying to overthrow the Lords Supper again, and to restore his Latin satisfactory Mass, a thing of his own Invention and Device. And to bring the same more easily to pass, some have abused the Name of me Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, bruting abroad, That I have set up the Mass at Canterbury, and that I offered to say Mass at the Burial of our late Soveraign Prince King Edward the Sixth, and that I offered so say Mass before the Queens Highness, and at Pauls Church, and I wot not where. And although I have been well exercised these twenty Years to suffer and bear Evil Reports and Lyes, and have not been much grieved thereat, but have born all things quietly: Yet when untrue Reports and Lyes turn to the hinderance of Gods Truth, they are in no wise to be suffered. Wherefore these be to signifie unto the World, That it was not I that set up the Mass at Canterbury, but it was a False, Flattering, Lying, and Dissembling Monk, which caused Mass to be set up there without mine Advice or Counsel; Reddat illi Dominus in die illo. And as for offering my self to say Mass before the Queens Highness, or in any other place, I never did it, as her Grace well knoweth. But if her Grace will give me leave, I shall be ready to prove, against all that will say the contrary, that all that is contained in the Holy Communion, set out by the most Innocent and Godly Prince King Edward the Sixth, in his High Court of Parliament, is conformable to that Order which our Saviour Christ did both observe, and command to be observed, and which his Apostles, and the Primitive Church used many Years; whereas the Mass, in many things, not only hath no Foundation of Christ, his Apostles, nor the Primitive Church, but is manifestly contrary to the same, and containeth many horrible Abuses in it. And although many, either Unlearned or Malicious, do report, that M. Peter Martyr is unlearned, yet if the Queens Highness will grant thereunto, I, with the said M. Peter Martyr, and other four or five, which I shall chuse, will, by Gods Grace, take upon us to defend, not only the Common Prayers of the Church, the Ministration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies, but also all the Doctrine and Religion set out by our Soveraign Lord King Edward the Sixth, to be more pure, and according to Gods Word, than any other that hath been used in England these 1000 Years: So that Gods Word may be Judge, and that the Reasons and Proofs of both Parties may be set out in writing, to the intent, as well that all the World may examine and Judge thereon, as that no man shall start back from his Writings. And where they boast of the Faith, that hath been in the Church these 1500 Years, we will joyn with them in this Point; and that the same Doctrine and Usage is to be followed, which was in the Church 1500 Years past: And we shall prove, That the Order of the Church, set out at this present in this Realm by Act of Parliament, is the same that was used in the Church 1500 Years past, and so shall they be never able to prove theirs.

This Monk was Doctor Thornton, a cruel murtherer of Gods People of whose horrible end ye shall read hereafter, partly also in the Life of Cranmer.

The same Thursday, being the 7. of September, Lord Mountacute Chief Justice, and Lord Chief Baron were delivered out of the Tower.

The 13. of September, the Reverend Father Master Hugh Latimer was committed to the Tower.

The 14. of September, the Bishop of Canterbury was committed to the Tower.

The 26. of September, one Master Gray of Cambridge, called before him one Master Garth, for that he would not suffer a Boy of Peterhouse to help him say Mass in Pembroke-Hall, which was before any Law was established for that behalf.

The Queen came to the Tower of London upon the Thursday, being the 28. of September, and upon the Saturday following she rode from the Tower through the City of London, where were made many Pageants to receive her, and so she was triumphantly brought to Westminster to Whitehal.

Amongst these Pageants stood a certain Man upon the top of the Eagle upon Pauls Steeple with a Flag in his hand.

Upon the Sunday, being the first Day of October, the Queens Highness went from Whitehal to Westminster-Abby, accompanied with the most part of the Nobility of this Realm: Namely, these, The Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Marques of Winchester, the Earls of Derby, Bedford, Worcester, Cumberland, Westmerland, Oxford, Sussex, Devonshire, Pembroke, the Lord Dacres of the North, Lord Ferris, Lord Cobham, Lord Aburgeiny, Lord Wentworth, Lord Scroupe, Lord Rich, Lord Vaus, Lord Howard, Lord Conias, Lord Morley, Lord Paget, and the Lord Willowby; with other Nobles, and all the Ambassadors of divers Countries, the Mayor of London with all the Aldermen. Also out of the Abby, to receive her coming, came three Silver Crosses, and to the number of Fourscore, or near upon, of Singing Men, all in very Rich and Gorgeous Coapes. Amongst whom was the Dean of Westminster, and divers of her Chaplains, which bare every one some Enfign in their Hands, and after them followed ten Bishops, Mitred all, and their Croyser Staves in their Hands, and rich Coapes upon them every one. And in this Order they returned from Westminster-Hall before the Queen to the Abby, where she was Crowned by Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and and Lord Chancellor of England. At the time of the Coronation Doctor Day Biſhop of Chicheſter made a Sermon to the Queens Majeſty, and to the reſt of the Nobility.

Q. Mary Crowned.

Dr. Days Sermon.

General pardon at the Queens Coronation. Excepted out of the Pardon.

Alſo there was a general Pardon proclaimed within the Abby at the ſame time of her Coronation, out of which Proclamation all the Priſoners of the Tower and of the Fleet were excepted, and 62. more. Whereof M. Whitchurch and M. Grafton were two.

The third of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge did challenge one Mr. Pierſon, for that he miniſtred ſtill the Communion in his own Pariſh, and did receive Strangers of other Pariſhes to the ſame, and would not ſay Maſs. Whereupon within two days after, he was clean diſcharged from farther miniſtring in his Cure.

Upon the Wedneſday following, the Archbiſhop of York was committed to the Tower.

Q. Mary rideth to the Parliament Houſe. Sergeant Pollard Speaker in the Parliament.

Upon Thurſday, being the 5. of October, 1554. the Queen rode to the Parliament in her Robes, and all the Nobility with her, and when they were ſet in the Parliament Houſe, the Biſhop of Wincheſter made to them a ſolemn Oration, and Sergeant Pollard was choſen Speaker of the Parliament. The ſame day the Biſhops of Lincoln, Hereford, and Weſtcheſter, were diſcharged from the Parliament and Convocation.

The Earl of Huntington delivered out of the Tower.

Alſo the 10. day of October, the Earl of Huntington was delivered out of the Tower.

Upon the Sunday after, being the 15. of October, M. Lawrence Saunders preached at Alhallows in Breadſtreet in the Morning: Where he declared the Abomination of the Maſs, with divers other Matters, very notably and godly. Whereof more ſhall be heard (by the Lords leave) hereafter when we come to his Story. In which his doing, as he ſhewed himſelf to be Gods Faithful Miniſter, ſo is he ſure not to be defrauded of Gods Faithful Promiſe, who ſaith, Omnis qui confitebitur me coram hominibus, confitebor & ego illum coram Patre meo qui eſt in Cœlis, Mat. 10. But about Noon of the ſame day, he was ſent for by the Biſhop of London, and from thence committed to the Marſhalſey.

M. Saunders for preaching againſt the Maſs, committed to the Marſhalſey.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 20. of October, Doctor Weſton preached at Pauls Croſs. Who in the beginning of his Sermon willed the People to pray for the Souls departed, on this wiſe: You ſhall pray for all them that be departed, that be neither in Heaven, nor Hell, but in a place not yet ſufficiently purged to come to Heaven, that they may be relieved by your devout Prayers. He named the Lords Table an Oyſter-Board. He ſaid, that the Catechiſm in Latin, lately ſet out, was abominable Hereſie, and likened the ſetters out of the ſame Catechiſm to Julianus Apoſtata, and the Book to a Dialogue ſet out by the ſaid Julianus Apoſtata, wherein Chriſt and Pilate were the Speakers; with many other things. Which Sermon, with all the points thereof, Maſter Coverdale the ſame time learnedly confuted by writing, which remaineth yet in my hands to be ſeen.

D. Weſtons Popiſh Sermon at Pauls.

Weſtons Sermon confuted by Mr. Coverdale.

In the Week following began the Diſputations in the Convocation Houſe in Pauls Church, whereof ſufficient hath been before declared.

The 26. day of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge went to Clare-hall, and in the preſence of Doctor Walker, diſplaced Doctor Madew, and placed Maſter Swyborne in the Maſterſhip there, by force of the Lord Chancellors Letters, for that he was (as they termed it) Uxoratus, that is, married.

Running before the Law.

The 28. day of October, the Papiſts in the Kings Colledge in Cambridge (not tarrying the making of any Law, but of their blind Zeal) had their whole Service again in the Latin Tongue, contrary to the Law then in force.

The laſt of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge did ſharply reprove and threaten one M. Thrackold, for that he challenged the ſaid Vicechancellor, who had ſuffered Maſter Bovell (contrary to the Statutes then in force) quietly without puniſhment to depart, notwithſtanding that he refuſed to ſwear to the Supremacy of the Queen, and the Abrogation of the Biſhop of Rome.

The Queens proceedings maintained in Cambridge before the Law.

The third day of November, the Vicechancellor ſent for the Curate of the Round Pariſh in Cambridge, commanding him not to miniſter any more in the Engliſh Tongue, ſaying, he would have one Uniform Order of Service throughout the Town, and that in Latin, with Maſs, which was eſtabliſhed the Twelfth day of this Month.

Anno 1554.

The ſixth day of November, Maſter Pollard preached at Saint Michael's, and in his Sermon approved Purgatory.

The 28. day of November, the Archdeacons Official viſited in Hynton, where he gave in charge to preſent all ſuch as did diſturb the Queens Proceedings, in letting the Latin Service, the ſetting up of their Altars, and ſaying of Maſs, or any part thereof: Whereby it was eaſie to ſee how theſe good Fellows meant to proceed, having the Law once on their Side, that thus readily againſt a manifeſt Law, would attempt the Puniſhment of any Man.

K. Edwards Acts repealed.

The 15. day of December there were two Proclamations at London; the one for the Repealing of certain Acts made by King Edward, and for the ſetting up of the Maſs, for the 20. day of December then next following: The other was, That no Man ſhould interrupt any of thoſe that would ſay Maſs.

The Parliament beginning about the 5. day of October, continued till the 5. of December. In the which Parliament were diſſolved as well all the Statutes made of Præmunire, in the time of K. Henry the Eighth, &c. As alſo other Laws and Statutes concerning Religion and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, decreed under King Edward the Sixth, as is partly above touched. In the which Parliament moreover was appointed the 20. day of December next inſuing the ſame year 1553. That all the old Form and Manner of Church-Service, uſed in the laſt year of King Henry, ſhould now again be reſtored.

On New-years Even being the laſt of December, the Lord Marqueſs of Northampton was delivered out of the Tower.

A Prieſt of Canterbury repenting his ſaying Maſs.

About this time a Prieſt of Canterbury ſaid Maſs on the one day, and the next day after he came into the Pulpit, and deſired all the People to forgive him; for he ſaid, he had betrayed Chriſt, not as Judas did, but as Peter did, and there made a long Sermon againſt the Maſs.

The day after New-years day, being the ſecond day of January, in the Year of our Lord, 1554. Four Ambaſſadors came into London from the Emperor, and were Honourably received. Their Names were theſe: Le Countie de Egmont, Le Countie de Lalen, Monſieur Corire, Le Chancellor Nigre.

About this time a great Number of New Biſhops, Deans, &c. were choſen, more than were made at one time ſince the Conqueſt. Their Names are theſe:

New Biſhops made.

D. Holyman Biſhop of Briſtol.
D. Coates Biſhop of Weſtcheſter.
D. Hopton Biſhop of Norwich.
D. Bourne Biſhop of Bath.
D. White Biſhop of Lincoln.
D. Mores Biſhop of Rocheſter.
D. Morgan Biſhop of S. Davids.

D. Moreman, Coadjutor to the Biſhop of Exeter, and after his deceaſe Biſhop of Exeter.
D. Glin Biſhop of Bangor.
Maſter Fecknam Dean of Pauls.
D. Rainolds Dean of Briſtol, with others.

The 12. day of January, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge called a Congregation general, wherein amongſt other things he ſhewed, that the Queen would have there a Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt upon the 18. day of February then next following, for that it was her Birthday, which was fulfilled the day appointed, and that very Solemnly.

Dr. Crome committed to the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday, being the 13. of January, Doctor Crome was committed to the Fleet. Alſo upon the Sunday following, one Mr. Addington was committed to the Tower. Alſo this ſame Sunday knowledge was given in the Court openly by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that the Marriage between the Queens Majeſty and the King of Spain was concluded, and the day following, being being Monday, and the 15*th* of January, the Mayor with the Aldermen and certain Commons were at the Court, and there they were commanded by the Lord Chancellor to prepare the City ready to receive the ſaid King of Spain; who declared unto them what a Catholick, mighty, prudent, and wiſe Prince the ſaid King was, with many other commendations of him.

The Marriage of Q. Mary.

Anno 1554.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 20*th* of January, the Court of the Firſt-Fruits and Tenths was diſſolved.

Upon the Thurſday at night following, the 25*th* day of January; the Lord Marqueſs of Northampton was again committed to the Tower, and Sir Edward Warner with him. Who were brought to the Tower by the Mayor.

Juſtice Hales committed to the Marſhalſey, Mr. Rogers committed to Newgate.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 26*th* of January, Juſtice Hales was committed to the Marſhalſey, and the ſame day Mr. Rogers was committed to the Newgate. Upon this Saturday, Sunday and Monday following, the Londoners prepared a number of Souldiers, (by the Queens Commandment) to go into Kent againſt the Commons: whereof were chief Captains the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Wormwood, Sir Henry Jerningham, Sir George Haward, and ten other Captains. Which Souldiers when they came to Rocheſter-Bridge, where they ſhould have ſet upon their Enemies, moſt of them (as it is ſaid) left their own Captains and came wholly to the Kentiſh Men, and ſo the foreſaid Captains returned to the Court both void of Men and Victory, leaving behind them both ſix pieces of Ordnance and Treaſure.

About the latter end of January, the Duke of Suffolk with his Brethren departed from his Houſe at Shene, and took his Voyage into Leiceſter-ſhire. After whom was ſent the Earl of Huntington to take him and bring him to London, who proclaimed the ſaid Duke Traytor by the way as he rode.

Strange ſights ſeen before the coming in of King Philip, and ſubverſion of Religion.

And thus paſſing to the Month of February, here is to be noted by way of ſtory, that upon the 15*th* day of the ſaid Month, being Thurſday, there were ſeen within the City of London, about Nine of the Clock in the Fore-noon ſtrange ſights. There were ſeen two Suns both ſhining at once, the one a good pretty way diſtant from the other. At the ſame time was alſo ſeen a Rainbow turned contrary, and a great deal higher than hath been accuſtomed. The common ſtanding of the Rainbow is thus ⌒ but this ſtood thus ⌣ with the Head downward, and the Feet as it were upward. Both theſe ſights were ſeen as well at Weſtminſter, in Cheap-ſide, on the South-ſide of Pauls, as in very many other places, and that by a great number of honeſt men: Alſo certain Aldermen went out of the Guild-Hall to behold the ſight.

As touching the riſing of Mr. Wyat, with Sir William Cobham and others in Kent, and their coming to London in the Month of February; alſo of the Queens coming to Guild-Hall, and her Oration there made; and after of the taking of the ſaid Wyat and his Company; likewiſe of the apprehenſion of the Duke of Suffolk with his Brother Lord John Gray; and the next day after of the Beheading of the Lord Gildford and Lady Jane, which was the 12*th* day of February, and how the day before which was the 11*th* of the ſaid Month, Lord William Howard, and Sir Edward Haſtings were ſent for the Lady Elizabeth; and how the ſame Sunday, Sir Henry Iſeley, Mr. Culpepper, and Mr. Winter were committed to the Tower, the Biſhop of Winchеſter the ſame day, being the 11*th* of February, preaching before the Queen, and perſwading her to uſe no mercy toward theſe Kentiſh Men, but ſevere Execution, all which was in the Month of February; becauſe moſt of theſe matters have been briefly touched before or elſe may be found in other Chronicles, I will ceaſe to make any further ſtory of them: having ſomewhat notwithſtanding to declare touching the Arraignment and Death of the D. of Suffolk.

The Duke of Suffolk Arraigned

Upon Saturday, being the 17*th* day of February, the Duke of Suffolk was Arraigned at Weſtminſter, and the ſame day condemned to dye by his Peers; the Earl of Arundel was chief Judge for this day.

Upon the Sunday following, which was the 18*th* day of the ſaid Month, Seſſions was kept in London, which hath not before been kept upon the Sunday.

Upon the Monday, the 19*th* of February, the Lord Cobhams three Sons, and four other Men were Arraigned at Weſtminſter: of which Sons the youngeſt was condemned, whoſe name was Thomas, and the other two came not at the Bar, and the other four were condemned.

The Lord John Gray Arraigned.

Upon the Tueſday, being the 20*th* of February, the Lord John Gray was Arraigned at Weſtminſter, and there condemned the ſame day, and other three Men, whereof one was named Nailer.

Upon Wedneſday, the 21. of February, the Lord Thomas Gray and Sir James Croft were brought through London to the Tower with a number of Horſemen.

Upon the Thurſday, being the 22. of February, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton was committed to the Tower.

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton commited to the Tower.

Upon the Friday, being 23. of February, 1554. the Duke of Suffolk was beheaded at the Tower-Hill, the order of whoſe Death here followed.

The godly End and Death of the Duke of Suffolk Beheaded at Tower-Hill, An. 1554. February 23.

ON Friday the 23. of February, 1554. about Nine of the Clock in the Fore-noon, the Lord Henry Gray, Duke of Suffolk, was brought forth of the Tower of London unto the Scaffold on the Tower-Hill, with a great Company, &c. and in his coming thither, there accompanied him Dr. Weſton as his ghoſtly Father, notwithſtanding, as it ſhould ſeem, againſt the will of the ſaid Duke. For when the Duke went up to the Scaffold, the ſaid Weſton being on the left hand, preſſed to go up with him. The Duke with his hand, put him down again off the Stairs: and Weſton, taking hold of the Duke forced him down likewiſe. And as they aſcended the ſecond time, the Duke again put him down.

The order and manner of the Duke of Suffolks Death. Dr. Weſton the Dukes ghoſtly Father againſt the Dukes will.

Weſton put back by the Dukes hand.

Then Weſton ſaid, that it was the Queens pleaſure he ſhould ſo do. Wherewith the Duke caſting his hands abroad, aſcended up the Scaffold, and paſed a pretty while after. And then he ſaid: Maſters, I have offended the Queen, and her Laws, and thereby am juſtly condemned to dye, and am willing to dye, deſiring all Men to be obedient, and I pray God that this my Death may be an enſample to all Men, beſeeching you all to bear me witneſs, that I dye in the Faith of Chriſt, truſting to be ſaved by his Blood only, and by no other Trumpery, the which died for me, and for all them that truly repent, and ſtedfaſtly truſt in him. And I do repent, deſiring you all to pray to God for me; and that when you ſee my Breath depart from me, you will pray to God that he may receive my Soul. And then he deſired all Men to forgive him, ſaying, that the Queen had forgiven him.

The words of the Duke to the People.

The godly Faith and Confeſſion of the Duke at his Death.

Then Mr. Weſton declared with a loud Voice, that the Queens Majeſty had forgiven him. With that divers of the Standers-by ſaid with meetly, good and audible Voice: Such Forgiveneſs God ſend thee, meaning Dr. Weſton. Then the Duke kneeled down upon his Knees, and ſaid the Pſalm Miſerere mei Deus unto the end, holding up his hands, and looking up to Heaven. And when he had ended the Pſalm, he ſaid, In manus tuas Domine commendo Spiritum meum, &c. Then he aroſe and ſtood up, and delivered his Cap and his Scarf unto the Executioner.

The Duke prayeth.

Then the ſaid Executioner kneeled down, and asked the Duke forgiveneſs. And the Duke ſaid, God forgive thee, and I do: and when thou doſt thine Office, I pray thee do it well, and bring me out of this World quickly, and God have mercy to thee. Then ſtood there a man and ſaid, My Lord, how ſhall I do for the Mony that you do owe me? And the Duke ſaid, Alas good Fellow, I pray thee trouble me not now, but go thy way to my Officers. Then he knit a Kercher about his Face, and kneeled down and ſaid, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c. unto the end. And then he ſaid, Chriſt have mercy upon me, and laid down his Head on the Block, and the Executioner took the Ax, and at the firſt chop ſtrook off his Head, and held it up to the People, &c.

The Duke prepareth him to Death.

The End of the Duke of Suffolk.

The ſame day a number of Priſoners had their Pardon, and came through the City with their Halters about their Necks. There were in (a) number about 200.

(a) The number of thoſe were 240. which with Halters about their Necks paſſed through the City to Weſtminſter, and had their Pardon.

Upon

Upon the Saturday, the 24*th* of February, Sir William Sentlow was committed as Priſoner to the Maſter of the Horſe to be kept. This Sir William was at this time one of the Lady Elizabeths Gentlemen.

Upon the Sunday, being the 25*th* of February, Sir John Rogers was committed to the Tower.

Prieſts divorced.

In this Week, all ſuch Prieſts within the Dioceſs of London as were married, were divorced from their Livings, and commanded to bring their Wives within a fortnight, that they might be likewiſe divorced from them. This the Biſhop did of his own power.

Gentlemen ſent into Kent to be Executed.

Upon the Tueſday in the ſame Week, being the 27*th* of February, certain Gentlemen of Kent were ſent into Kent, to be Executed there. Their Names were theſe, the two Mantels, two Knevets, and Bret; with theſe Mr. Rudſton alſo and certain others were condemned, and ſhould have been Executed, but they had their Pardon.

Mr. Rudſton with certain others pardoned.

As touching the foreſaid Mr. Mantel the Elder, here by the way is to be noted, that as he was led to Execution, and at his firſt caſting under the Gallows, the Rope brake. Then they would have had him recanted the Truth, and received the Sacrament of the Altar (as they term it) and then they ſaid he ſhould have the Queens Pardon: but Mr. Mantel, like a worthy Gentleman, refuſed their Serpentine counſel, and choſe rather to dye, than to live for diſhonouring of God.

Moreover, as touching the ſaid Mr. Mantel, for that he was reported falſly to have fallen from the conſtancy of his Profeſſion; to clear himſelf thereof, and to reprove the ſiniſter ſurmiſe of his Recantation, he wrote this brief Apology in purgation of himſelf: the Copy whereof you ſhall hear.

The Apology of Mr. Mantel the Elder.

March 20. The Belief of Mr. Mantel the Elder.

PErceiving that already certain falſe Reports are raiſed of me concerning my Anſwer in the behalf of my Belief, whiles I was Priſoner in the Tower of London, and conſidering how ſore a matter it is to be an occaſion of Offence to any of thoſe Little ones that believe in Chriſt: I have thought it the duty of a Chriſtian man, as near as I can (with the Truth) to take away this Offence. It pleaſed the Queens Majeſty to ſend unto me Mr. Doctor Bourne, unto whom at the firſt meeting I acknowledged my Faith in all points to agree with the four Creeds, that is, the common Creed, the Creed of Nicene, Quicunque vult, and Te Deum laudamus.

Dr. Bourne ſent to Mr. Mantel.

Further, as concerning Confeſſion and Penance, I declare that I could be content to ſhew unto any learned Miniſter of Chriſts Church any thing that troubled my Conſcience, and of ſuch a man I would moſt willingly hear Abſolution pronounced.

Mr. Mantel oppoſed in the Sacrament.

Touching the Sacrament of the Altar (as he termed it) I ſaid that I believed Chriſt to be there preſent as the Holy Ghoſt meant, when theſe words were written, Hoc eſt corpus meum.

Further, when this would not ſatisfie, I deſired him to conſider, that I was a condemned Man to dye by a Law, and that it was more meet for me to ſeek a readineſs and preparation to Death. And inſomuch as I diſſented not from him in any Article of the Chriſtian Faith neceſſary to Salvation, I deſired him for Gods ſake no more to trouble me with ſuch matters, as which to believe, is neither Salvation; nor not to believe, damnation. He anſwered, that if I diſſented but in the leaſt matter from the Catholick Church, my Soul was in great danger; therefore much more in this great matter, alledging this Text, Qui offenderit in minimo, factus eſt reus omnium, i. He that offendeth in the leaſt of theſe, is guilty of them all. Yea, quoth I, Verum ex hiſce mandatis, i. It is true of theſe Commandments of God. To this I deſired him to conſider it was not my matter, nor could I in theſe matters keep Diſputation, nor minded ſo to do; and therefore to take theſe few words for a full Anſwer, that I not only in the matter of the Sacrament, but alſo in all other matters of Religion, believe as the holy Catholick Church of Chriſt (grounded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles) believeth. But upon this word Church we agreed not; for I took exception at the Anti-chriſtian Popiſh Church.

Matth. 5. James 2.

The Church.

Then fell we in talk of the Maſs, wherein we agreed not; for I both for the occaſion of Idolatry, and alſo the clear ſubverſion of Chriſts Inſtitution, thought it naught; and he, è contra, upon certain conſiderations ſuppoſed it good. I found fault that it was accounted a Sacrifice propitiatory for Sin, and at certain other applications of it. But he ſaid that it was not a Propitiatory Sacrifice for Sin (for the death of Chriſt only was the Sacrifice) and this but a commemoration of the ſame. Then, if ye think ſo, (certain blaſphemous Collects left out) I could be content (were it not for offending my poor Brethren that believe in Chriſt, which know not ſo much) to hear your Maſs. See, quoth he, how vain glory toucheth you. Not ſo Sir, quoth I, I am not now I thank God, in caſe to be vain-glorious.

Anno 1554.

Dr. Bourn and M. Mantel diſagree in the Maſs.

Then I found further fault with it, that it was not a Communion. Yea, ſaith he, one Prieſt ſaying Maſs here, and another there, and the third in another place, &c. is a Communion. This agreeth ſcarcely with theſe words of Paul, ſaid I, Non in melius, ſed in deterius convenitis, i. Ye come not after a better manner, but after a worſe. Yea, and it is a Communion too, ſaid he, when they come together. Now draweth on the time (quoth he) that I muſt depart from you to the Court, to ſay Maſs before the Queen, and muſt ſignifie unto her in what caſe I find you, and methink I find you ſore ſeduced. Then I ſaid, I pray you report the beſt: for I truſt you find me not obſtinate. What ſhall I ſay? are ye content to hear Maſs, and to receive the Sacrament of the Maſs? I beſeech you, ſaid I, ſignifie unto her Majeſty, that I am neither obſtinate nor ſtubborn; for time and perſwaſion may alter me; but as yet my Conſcience is ſuch, that I can neither hear Maſs, nor receive the Sacrament after that ſort. Thus, after certain Requeſts made to the Queens Majeſty concerning other matters, he departed.

Bourn maketh the Maſs a Communion.

1 Cor. 11.

Mantel neither obſtinate nor ſtubborn.

The next day he came to me again, and brought with him St. Cyprians Works; for ſo I had required him to do the day before, becauſe I would ſee his Sermon De Mortalitate. He had in this Book turned and interlined certain places both concerning the Church and the Sacrament, which he willed me to read. I read as much as my time would ſerve, and at his next coming I ſaid, that I was wholly of Cyprians mind in the matter of the Sacrament. Dr. Weſton and Dr. Mallet came after to me, whom I anſwered much after that ſort as I did the other. Dr. Weſton brought in the place of St. Cyprian, Panis iſte non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, &c. I aſked of him how Natura was taken in the Convocation-Houſe, in the Diſputation upon the place of Theodoret.

To be ſhort, Dr. Bourne came often unto me, and I always ſaid unto him, that I was not minded, nor able to diſpute in matters of Religion: but I believed as the holy Catholick Church of Chriſt, grounded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, doth believe: and namely in the matter of the Sacrament, as the holy Fathers, St. Cyprian and St. Auguſtine do write, and believed; and this Anſwer and none other they had of me in effect; what words ſoever have been ſpread abroad of me, that I ſhould be conformable to all things, &c. The truth is, I never heard Maſs, nor received the Sacrament during the time of my Impriſonment.

Mr. Mantel conſtant in his Religion.

One time he willed me to be confeſſed. I ſaid, I am content. We kneeled down to pray together in a Window. I began without Benedicite, deſiring him not to look at my hand for any ſuperſtitious particular enumeration of my Sins. Therewith he was called away to the Council; & ego liberatus. Thus much I bear only for my Life, as God knoweth. If in this I have offended any Chriſtian, from the bottom of my heart I ask them forgiveneſs. I truſt God hath forgiven me, who knoweth that I durſt never deny him before men, leſt he ſhould deny me before his Heavenly Father.

Thus I have left behind me written with mine own hand the effect of all the Talk, eſpecially of the worſt that ever I granted unto, to the uttermoſt I can remember, as God knoweth. All the whole Communication I have not written; for it were both too long and too fooliſh ſo to do. Now I beſeech the living God, which hath received me to his mercy, and brought to paſs, that I may ſtedfaſt and undefiled in his Truth, at utter defiance and deteſtation of all Papiſtical and Antichriſtian Doctrine; I beſeech him (I ſay) to keep and defend all his choſen for Deny not Chriſt before men, leſt he deny you before his heavenly Father. Fear not to loſe your lives for him; for ye ſhall find them again. God hold his merciful hand over this Realm, and avert the Plagues imminent from the ſame. And thus much concerning the purgation of M. Walter Mantel, who if he had conſented unto the Queen, what time ſhe ſent D. Bourne unto him to deny his Faith, it is not otherwiſe to be thought, but he had had his pardon, and eſcaped with life.

March 3. Sir Gawen Carew, and M. Gibbes brought to the Tower.

Upon the Saturday, being the 3. of March, Sir Gawen Carew, and M. Gibbes were brought through London to the Tower with a Company of Horſemen.

In London the 17. day of March, every Houſholder was commanded to appear before the Aldermen of their Ward, and there were commanded, that they, their Wives and Servants, ſhould prepare themſelves to ſhrift, and receive the Sacrament at Eaſter, and that neither they, nor any of them ſhould depart out of the City, until Eaſter was paſt.

March 18. L. Elizabeth brought to the Tower.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 18. day of March, the Lady Elizabeth, of whom mention was made before, the Queens Siſter, was brought to the Tower.

March 24.

Upon Eaſter Even, being the 24. of March, the Lord Marqueſs of Northampton, the Lord Cobham, and Sir William Cobham were delivered out of the Tower.

March 25. The Pix riſen out of the Sepulchre from all the Watchmen at St. Pancraſs Church.

The 25. day (being Eaſter-day) in the morning, at S. Pancraſs in Cheap, the Crucifix with the Pixe were taken out of the Sepulchre, before the Prieſt roſe to the Reſurrection: ſo that when after his accuſtomed manner he put his hand into the Sepulchre, and ſaid very devoutly, Surrexit, non eſt hic, he found his words true, for he was not there indeed: Whereupon being half diſmayed, they conſulted amongſt themſelves whom they thought to be likelieſt to do this thing. In which debatement they remembred one Marſh, which a little before had been put from that Parſonage becauſe he was married, to whoſe charge they laid it. But when they could not prove it, being brought before the Mayor, they then burthened him to have kept company with his Wife, ſince that they were by commandment divorced. Whereto he anſwered, That he thought the Queen had done him wrong to take from him both his Living and his Wife: which Words were then noted, and taken very grievouſly, and he and his Wife was both committed to ſeveral Counters, notwithſtanding that he had been very ſick.

M. Marſh burthened with ſuſpicion and with his Marriage.

April 8: A Cat hanged with a ſhaven Crown upon the Gallows in Cheap.

The 8*th* of April there was a Cat hanged upon a Gallows at the Croſs in Cheap, apparelled like a Prieſt ready to ſay Maſs, with a ſhaven Crown. Her two fore-Feet were tied over her Head, with a round Paper like a Wafer-cake put between them: whereon aroſe great evil Will againſt the City of London. For the Queen and the Biſhops were very angry withal; and therefore the ſame Afternoon there was a Proclamation, that whoſoever could bring forth the Party that did hang up the Cat, ſhould have xx. Nobles, which Reward was afterwards increaſed to xx. Marks, but none could or would earn it.

The number and occaſion of the Gallowſes ſet up in the City of London.

As touching the firſt occaſion of ſetting up this Gallows in Cheapſide, here is to be underſtood, that after the Sermon of the Biſhop of Wincheſter (above-mentioned) made before the Queen for the ſtrait Execution of Wyats Souldiers, immediately upon the ſame, the 13. of February, were ſet up a great number of Gallowſes in divers places of the City; namely, two in Cheapſide, one at Leaden-Hall, one at Billings-gate, one at St. Magnus Church, one in Smithfield, one in Fleetſtreet, four in Southwark, one at Aldgate, one at Biſhopsgate, one at Aldersgate, one at Newgate, one at Ludgate, one at St. James Park Corner, one at Cripplegate: all which Gibbets and Gallowſes, to the number of 20, there remained for Terrour of other, from the 13. of February till the 4. of June, and then at the coming in of King Philip were taken down.

M. Wyats words touching the Lady Elizabeth.

The 11. day of April was Sir Thomas Wyat beheaded and quartered at the Tower-Hill, where he uttered theſe Words touching the Lady Elizabeth, and the Earl of Devonſhire. Concerning, ſaid he, what I have ſaid of others in my Examination, to charge any others as partakers of my doings, I accuſe neither my Lady Elizabeths Grace, nor my Lord of Devonſhire. I cannot accuſe them, neither am I able to ſay, that to my knowledge they knew any thing of my Riſing. And when Dr. Weſton told him, that his Confeſſion was otherwiſe before the Council, he anſwered: That which I ſaid then, I ſaid; but that which I ſay now, is true.

April 17. Sir James Croft. M. Winter. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton.

Upon the Tueſday, being the 17. of April, Sir James Croft and Mr. Winter were brought to the Guild-Hall, with whom alſo the ſame time, and to the ſame place was brought Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, and there arraigned of Treaſon, for that he was ſuſpected to be of the Conſpiracy with the Duke of Suffolk and the reſt, againſt the Queen: where he ſo learnedly and wiſely behaved himſelf (as well in clearing his own caſe, as alſo in opening ſuch Laws of the Realm as were then alledged againſt him) that the Queſt, which was charged with this matter could not in Conſcience but find him not guilty; for the which, the ſaid 12. Perſons of the Queſt, being alſo ſubſtantial Men of the City, were bound in the Sum of 500 pounds apiece to appear before the Queens Council at a day appointed, there to anſwer ſuch things as ſhould be laid againſt them for his acquitting. Which Queſt appeared accordingly before the Council in the Star-Chamber upon Wedneſday, being the 25. of April, and S. Marks day. From whence, after certain queſtioning, they were committed to Priſon: Emanuel Lucar and Mr. Wheſtone were committed to the Tower, and the other ten to the Fleet.

The Queſt troubled for Sir Nicholas Throgmorton.

April 25.

As concerning the Condemnation of Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, which was the 20. of this Month of April, and alſo of their Diſputations, becauſe we have ſaid enough before, it ſhall not need now to beſtow any further rehearſal thereof.

Lord Thomas Gray beheaded April 27.

The Friday next following, after the Condemnation of them, the 27. of April, Lord Thomas Gray, the late Duke of Suffolks Brother, was beheaded at Tower-Hill.

April 28.

Upon the Saturday, being the 28. of April, Sir James Croft and M. Winter were again brought to the Guild-Hall, where Sir James Croft was arraigned and condemned; and becauſe the day was far ſpent, M. Winter was not arraigned.

William Thomas condemned. May 27.

Upon the Thurſday, being the 17. of May, William Thomas was arraigned at the Guild-Hall, and there the ſame day condemned, who the next day after was hanged, drawn and quartered. His Accuſation was, for conſpiring the Queens death: which how true it was I have not to ſay. This is certain, that he made a right godly end, and wrote many fruitful Exhortations, Letters and Sonnets in the Priſon before his death.

A certain Diſputation intended to be had at Cambridge.

In the Month of May it was given out, and bruted abroad, that a ſolemn Diſputation ſhould be holden at Cambridge (as ye heard before in M. Ridleys Letter, p. 75.) between M. Bradford, M. Saunders, M. Rogers, and other of that ſide, and the Doctors of both the Univerſities on the other ſide, like as had been in Oxford before, as you have heard. Whereupon the godly Preachers which were in Priſon having word thereof, albeit they were deſtitute of their Books, neither were ignorant of the purpoſe of the Adverſaries, and how the cauſe was prejudiced before: alſo how the Diſputations were confuſedly handled at Oxford: nevertheleſs they thought not to refuſe the offer of Diſputation, ſo that they might be quietly and indifferently heard; and therefore wiſely pondering the matter with themſelves, by a publick conſent directed out of Priſon a Delaration of their mind by Writing, the 8*th*. day of May. Wherein firſt, as touching the Diſputation, although they knew that they ſhould do no good, whereas all things were ſo predetermined before; yet nevertheleſs they would not deny to diſpute, ſo that the Diſputation might be either before the Queen,

The Preachers in Priſon refuſe not to Diſpute before indifferent Judges.

or before the Council, or before the Parliament-Houſes, or elſe if they might diſpute by Writing: for elſe if the matter were brought to the Doctors handling in their own Schools, they have ſufficient proof, they ſaid, by the Experience of Oxford, what little good will be done at Cambridge; and ſo conſequently declaring the Faith and Doctrine of their Religion, and exhorting the People withal to ſubmit themſelves with all patience and humility, either to the will or puniſhment of the Higher Powers, they appealed in the end from them to be their Judges in this behalf, and ſo ended their Proteſtation, the Copy and Contents whereof I thought not unfit here to be inſerted.

A Copy of a certain Declaration drawn and ſent out of Priſon by Mr. Bradford, Mr. Saunders, and divers other godly Preachers, concerning their Diſputation, and Doctrine of their Religion, as followeth:

A Declaration of the godly Preachers, written and ſent abroad out of Priſon.

BEcauſe we hear that it is determined of the Magiſtrates, and ſuch as be in Authority, eſpecially of the Clergy, to ſend us ſpeedily out of the Priſons of the Kings-Bench, the Fleet, the Marſhalſey, and Newgate, where at this preſent we are, and of long time ſome of us have been, not as Rebels, Traytors, Seditious Perſons, Thieves, or Tranſgreſſors of any Laws of this Realm, Inhibitions, Proclamations, or Commandments of the Queens Highneſs, or of any of the Councils (Gods Name be praiſed therefore) but alonely for the Conſcience we have to God, and his moſt holy Word and Truth, upon moſt certain knowledge: becauſe we ſay, we hear that it is determined, we ſhall be ſent to one of the Univerſities of Cambridge or Oxford, there to diſpute with ſuch as are appointed in that behalf: in that we purpoſe not to diſpute otherwiſe than by Writing, except it may be before the Queens Highneſs and her Council, or before the Parliament-Houſes; and therefore perchance it will be bruted abroad, that we are not able to maintain by the Truth of Gods Word, and the conſent of the true and Catholick Church of Chriſt, the Doctrine we have generally and ſeverally taught, and ſome of us have written and ſet forth, where-through the godly and ſimple may be offended, and ſomewhat weakened: we have thought it our bounden duty now whilſt we may, by writing to publiſh and notifie the Cauſes why we will not diſpute otherwiſe than is above-ſaid, to prevent the Offences which might come thereby.

A Talk of a pretended Diſputation to be had at Cambridge.

The Cauſes why they will not otherwiſe diſpute than before indifferent Judges. The matter of diſputation is againſt Gods Word.

Firſt, Becauſe it is evidently known unto the whole World; that the Determinations of both the Univerſities in matters of Religion, eſpecially wherein we ſhould diſpute, are directly againſt Gods Word, yea, againſt their own Determinations in the time of our late Soveraign Lord and moſt godly Prince, King Edward: and further it is known they be our open Enemies, and have already condemned our Cauſes, before any Diſputation had of the ſame.

The ſecond Cauſe.

Secondly, Becauſe the Prelates and Clergy do not ſeek either us or the Verity, but our deſtruction and their glory. For if they had ſought us (as Charity requireth) then would they have called us forth here-abouts before their Laws were ſo made, that frankly and without peril we might have ſpoken our Conſciences. Again, If they had ſought for the Verity, they would not have concluded of Controverſies before they had been diſputed; ſo that it eaſily appeareth, that they ſeek their own glory and our deſtruction, and not us and the Verity: and therefore we have good cauſe to refuſe Diſputation, as a thing which ſhall not further prevail than to the ſetting forth of their glory, and the ſuppreſſion of the Verity.

In the Diſputation neither Charity nor Verity ſought for.

The third Cauſe. The Judges of the Diſputation profeſſed Enemies againſt the Truth.

Thirdly, Becauſe the Cenſors and Judges (as we hear who they be) are manifeſt Enemies to the Truth, and that which worſe is, obſtinate Enemies, before whom Pearls are not to be caſt, by the Commandment of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and by his own Example. That they be ſuch, their doings of late at Oxford, and in the Convocation-Houſe in October laſt paſt, do moſt evidently appear.

The fourth Cauſe. Want of Books neceſſary for Diſputation.

Fourthly, Becauſe ſome of us have been in Priſon theſe 8 or 9 Months, where we have had no Books, no Paper, no Pen, no Ink, or convenient place for ſtudy, we think we ſhould do evil, thus ſuddenly to deſcend into Diſputation with them, which may alledge, as they liſt, the Fathers and their Teſtimonies, becauſe our Memories have not that which we have read ſo readily, as to reprove, when they ſhall report and wreſt the Authors to their purpoſe, or to bring forth that we may have there for our advantage. Anno 1554.

The fifth Cauſe. Example of the Diſputation at Oxford.

Fifthly, Becauſe in Diſputation we ſhall not be permitted to proſecute our Arguments, but be ſtopt when we ſhould ſpeak; one ſaying this, another that, the third his mind, &c. As was done to the godly Learned Fathers, eſpecially Dr. Ridley at Oxford, who could not be permitted to declare his mind and meaning of the Propoſitions, and had oftentimes half a dozen at once ſpeaking againſt him, always letting him to proſecute his Argument, and to anſwer accordingly: we will not ſpeak of the hiſſing, ſcoffing and taunting, which wonderfully then was uſed. If on this ſort, and much worſe they handled theſe Fathers, much more will they be ſhameleſs bold with us, if we ſhould enter into Diſputation with them.

The ſixth Cauſe.

Sixthly, Becauſe the Notaries, that ſhall receive and write the Diſputations ſhall be of their appointment, and ſuch as either do not or dare not favour the Truth, and therefore muſt write either to pleaſe them, or elſe they themſelves (the Cenſors and Judges we mean) at their pleaſure will put to, and take from that which is written by the Notaries; who cannot, or muſt not have in their cuſtody that which they write, longer than the Diſputation endureth, as their doings at Oxford declareth. No Copy nor Scroul could any man have by their good will. For the Cenſors and Judges will have all delivered into their hands. Yea, if any man was ſeen there to write, as the report is, the ſame man was ſent for, and his Writings taken from him: ſo muſt the Diſputation ſerve only for the glory, not of God, but of the Enemies of his Truth.

Notaries not indifferent.

For theſe cauſes we all think it ſo neceſſary not to diſpute with them, as if we did diſpute we ſhould do that which they deſire and purpoſely ſeek, to promote the Kingdom of Antichriſt, and to ſuppreſs (as much as may be) the Truth. We will not ſpeak of the offence that might come to the godly, when they ſhould hear, by the report of our Enemies, our Anſwers and Arguments framed (you may be ſure) for their Fantaſies, to the ſlandering of the Verity.

Exceptions taken againſt the Adverſaries.

Therefore we publiſh, and by this Writing notifie unto the whole Congregation and Church of England, that for theſe aforeſaid cauſes we will not diſpute with them, otherwiſe than with the Pen, unleſs it be before the Queens Highneſs and her Council, or before the Houſes of the Parliament, as is above-ſaid. If they will write, we will anſwer, and by writing confirm and prove out of the infallible Verity, even the very Word of God, and by the teſtimony of the good and moſt ancient Fathers in Chriſts Church, this our Faith and every piece thereof, which hereafter we, in a Sum, do write and ſend abroad purpoſely, that our good Brethren and Siſters in the Lord may know it: and to ſeal up the ſame, we are ready through Gods help and Grace to give our lives to the Halter or Fire, or otherwiſe, as God ſhall appoint: humbly requiring, and in the bowels of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt beſeeching all that fear God, to behave themſelves as obedient Subjects to the Queens Highneſs and the Superiour Powers, which are ordained of God under her, rather after our example to give their Heads to the Block, than in any point to rebel, or once to mutter againſt the Lords Anointed; we mean our Soveraign Lady Queen Mary, into whoſe heart we beſeech the Lord of Mercy plentifully to pour the wiſdom and grace of his holy Spirit, now and for ever. Amen.

Conditions aſſigned how they would diſpute.

Exhortation to Obedience.

The Confeſſion and Faith of the priſoned Preachers.

Firſt, We confeſs and believe all the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament, and all the Books of the New Teſtament, to be the very true Word of God, and to be written by the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, and are therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Judge in all Controverſies and matters of Religion.

The Catholick Church.

Secondly, We confeſs and believe, that the Catholick Church, which is the Spouſe of Chriſt, as a moſt obedient and loving wife, doth embrace and follow the Doctrine of theſe Books in all matters of Religion, and therefore is ſhe to be heard accordingly; ſo that thoſe which will not hear this Church thus following and obeying the word of

of her Husband, we account as Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, according to this ſaying, If he will not hear the Church, let him be to thee as a Heathen.

The Creed.

Thirdly, We believe and confeſs all the Articles of Faith and Doctrine ſet forth in the Symbol of the Apoſtles, which we commonly call the Creed, and in the Symbols of the Councils of Nice, kept An. Dom. 324. of Conſtantinople, An. Dom. 384. of Epheſus, kept An. Dom. 432. of Chalcedon, kept An. Dom. 454. of Toletum the firſt and fourth. Alſo in the Symbols of Athanaſius, Ireneus, Tertullian, and of Damaſus, which was about the year of our Lord 376. we confeſs and believe (we ſay) the Doctrine of the Symbols generally and particularly; ſo that whoſoever doth otherwiſe, we hold the ſame to erre from the Truth.

Juſtification by Faith only in Chriſt.

Fourthly, We believe and confeſs concerning Juſtification, that as it cometh only from Gods mercy through Chriſt, ſo it is perceived and had of none, which be of years of diſcretion, otherwiſe than by Faith only: which Faith is not an opinion, but a certain perſwaſion wrought by the Holy Ghoſt in the mind and heart of Man, wherethrough as the Mind is illuminated, ſo the heart is ſuppled to ſubmit it ſelf to the will of God unfeignedly, and ſo ſheweth forth an inherent Righteouſneſs, which is to be diſcerned in the Article of Juſtification, from the Righteouſneſs which God endueth us withal, juſtifying us, although inſeparably, they go together. And this we do not for curioſity or contention ſake, but for Conſcience ſake, that it might be quiet, which it can never be, if we confound without diſtinction Forgiveneſs of Sins, and Chriſts Juſtice imputed to us, with Regeneration and inherent Righteouſneſs. By this we diſallow Papiſtical Doctrine of Free-will, of works of Supererogation, of Merits, of the neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion and Satisfaction to God-wards.

What Faith is.

Righteouſneſs in man, Righteouſneſs without man.

The Doctrine of free Juſtification defended not for curioſity, but for quiet of Conſcience.

Service in the Vulgar Tongue.

Fifthly, We confeſs and believe concerning the exteriour Service of God, that it ought to be according to the Word of God; and therefore in the Congregation all things publick ought to be done in ſuch a Tongue as may be moſt to edifie, and not in Latin, where the People underſtand not the ſame.

Invocation to God alone.

Sixthly, We confeſs and believe that God only by Chriſt Jeſus is to be prayed unto and called upon; and therefore we diſallow Invocation or Prayer to Saints departed this life.

Purgatory and Maſſes ſuffragatory denied.

Seventhly, We confeſs and believe, that as a man departeth this life, ſo ſhall he be judged in the laſt day generally, and in the mean ſeaſon is entred either into the ſtate of the Bleſſed for ever, or Damned for ever; and therefore is either paſt all help, or elſe needs no help of any in this life. By reaſon whereof we affirm Purgatory, Maſſes of Scala cæli, Trentals, and ſuch Suffrages as the Popiſh Church doth obtrude as neceſſary, to be the Doctrine of Antichriſt.

Two Sacraments.

Eighthly, We confeſs and believe the Sacraments of Chriſt, which be Baptiſm and the Lords Supper, that they ought to be miniſtred according to the Inſtitution of Chriſt, concerning the ſubſtantial parts of them: and that they be no longer Sacraments, than they be had in uſe, and uſed to the end for which they were inſtituted.

The Supper to be miniſtred in both kinds.

And here we plainly confeſs, that the mutilation of the Lords Supper, and the ſubtraction of the one kind from the Lay People, is Antichriſtian. And ſo is the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation of the Sacramental Bread and Wine after the words of Conſecration, as they be called.

Againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Item, The Adoration of the Sacrament with honour due unto God: the reſervation and carrying about of the ſame.

Againſt Adoration of the Sacrament.

Item, The Maſs to be a Propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and dead, or a work that pleaſeth God.

The Maſs to be no Propitiatory Sacrifice.

All theſe we believe and confeſs to be Antichriſts Doctrine: as is the inhibition of Marriage as unlawful to any ſtate. And we doubt not by Gods Grace, but we ſhall be able to prove all our Confeſſions here to be moſt true by the verity of Gods Word, and conſent of the Catholick Church, which followeth and hath followed the governance of Gods Spirit, and the judgment of his Word.

Inhibition of Prieſts marriage Antichriſtian.

And this through the Lords help we will do, either in Diſputation by word before the Queens Highneſs and her Council, either before the Parliament Houſes, of whom we doubt not but to be indifferently heard, or elſe with our Pens, whenſoever we ſhall be thereto by them that have Authority, required and commanded.

In the mean ſeaſon, as obedient Subjects, we ſhall behave our ſelves towards all that be in Authority, and not ceaſe to pray to God for them, that he would govern them all, generally and particularly, with the Spirit of wiſdom and grace. And ſo we heartily deſire, and humbly pray all men to do, in no point conſenting to any kind of Rebellion or Sedition againſt our Sovereign Lady the Queens Highneſs: but where they cannot obey, but they muſt diſobey God, there to ſubmit themſelves with all patience and humility to ſuffer as the will and pleaſure of the higher Powers ſhall adjudge: as we are ready through the goodneſs of the Lord to ſuffer whatſoever they ſhall adjudge us unto, rather than we will conſent to any Doctrine contrary to this which we here confeſs, unleſs we ſhall be juſtly convinced thereof, either by writing or by word, before ſuch Judges as the Queens Highneſs and her Council, or the Parliament Houſes ſhall appoint. For the Univerſities and Clergy have condemned our cauſes already by the bigger, but not by the better part, without all diſputation of the ſame: and therefore moſt juſtly we may, and do appeal from them to be our Judges in this behalf, except it may be in Writing, that to all Men the matter may appear. The Lord of mercy endue us all with the Spirit of his Truth and Grace of perſeverance therein unto the end. Amen.

Exhortation againſt Rebellion.

The bigger part againſt the better Appeal from the Univerſity Doctors, as not indifferent Judges.

To theſe things aboveſaid, do I Miles Coverdale, late of Exon, conſent and agree, with theſe mine afflicted Brethren being Priſoners, mine own hand.

And thus much concerning this preſent Declaration ſubſcribed by theſe Preachers, which was on the 8th day of May.

May 19. Lady Elizabeth. Sir John Williams.

Furthermore, the 19th day of the ſaid Month, the Lady Elizabeth, Siſter to the Queen, was brought to the Tower, and committed to the cuſtody of Sir John Williams, after Lord Williams of Tame, of whom her Highneſs was gently and courteouſly intreated: who afterward was had to Woodſtock, and there committed to the keeping of Sir Henry Benifield Knight, of Oxborough in Norfolk: who on the other ſide both forgetting her eſtate, and his own duty (as it is reported) ſhewed himſelf more hard and ſtreight unto her, than either cauſe was given of her part, or reaſon of his own part would have led him, if either grace or wiſdom in him might have ſeen before, what danger afterward might have enſued thereof. Whereof we have to intreat more at large (the Lord willing) hereafter in the ſtory and life of Queen Elizabeth.

Sir Henry Benifield.

July 20. King Philip arriveth at Southampton: King Philip carrieth his Sword naked coming into England. The Keys of Southampton delivered to K. Philip.

Upon the Friday following, being the 20th of July, and St. Margarets day, the Prince of Spain landed at Southampton. The Prince himſelf was the firſt that landed: who immediately as he ſet foot upon the Land, drew out his Sword, and carried it naked in his hand a good pretty way.

Then met him, a little without the Town, the Mayor of Southampton with certain Commoners, who delivered the Keys of the Town unto the Prince, who removed his Sword (naked as it was) out of his right into his left hand, and ſo received the Keys of the Mayor without any word ſpeaking, or countenance of thankfulneſs, and after a while delivered the Keys to the Mayor again. At the Town-Gate met him the Earl of Arundel and the Lord Williams, and ſo he was brought to his Lodging.

July 25. Marriage between K. Philip and Q. Mary.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being St. James day, and the 25th of July, Philip Prince of Spain, and Mary Queen of England were married together ſolemnly in the Cathedral Church at Wincheſter, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the preſence of a great number of Noble Men of both the Realms. At the time of this Marriage the Emperours Ambaſſador being preſent, openly pronounced, that in conſideration of that Marriage the Emperor had granted and given unto his Son the Kingdom of Naples, &c.

Where-

Auguſt 1. Whereupon the firſt day of Auguſt following, there was a Proclamation, that from that time forth the ſtile of all manner of Writings ſhould be altered, and this following ſhould be uſed.

Philip and Mary by the Grace of God, King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Jeruſalem and Ireland, Defenders of the Faith, Princes of Spain and Sicil, Archdukes of Auſtrich, Dukes of Millaine, Burgundy, and Brabant, Counties of Haſpurge, Flaunders and Tyrol.

Of this Marriage as the Papiſts chiefly ſeemed to be very glad, ſo divers of them after divers ſtudies, to ſhew forth their inward affections, made Interludes and Pageants, ſome drew forth Genealogies, deriving his Pedigree from Edward the Third, and John of Gaunt, ſome made Verſes. Amongſt all other, M. White, then Biſhop of Lincoln (his Poetical Vein being drunken with joy of the Marriage) ſpued out certain Verſes: the Copy whereof we have here inſerted.

Anno 1554.

After the conſummation of which Marriage, they both removed from Wincheſter to ſundry other places, and by eaſie Journeys came to Windſor Caſtle, where he was ſtalled in the Order of the Garter, upon Sunday, being the 12. of Auguſt. At which time an Herald took down the Arms of England at Windſor, and in the place of them would have ſet up the Arms of Spain, but he was commanded to ſet them up again by certain Lords. From thence they both removed to Richmond, and from thence by Water to London, and landed at the Biſhop of Wincheſters Houſe, through which they paſſed both into Southwark Park, and ſo to Southwark Houſe called Suffolk Place, where they lay that Night, being the 18*th* of Auguſt.

King Philip cometh to Windſor. The Arms of England taken down, and the Arms of Spain ſet up.

King Philip comech to London.

And the next day, being Saturday, and the 19*th* of Auguſt, the King and Queens Majeſties rode from Suffolk Place (accompanied with a great number, as well of Noblemen as Gentlemen) through the City of London to White-Hall, and at London-Bridge, as he entred at the Draw-Bridge, was a vain great Spectacle ſet up, two Images preſenting two Giants, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagog, holding between them certain Latin Verſes, which for the vain oſtentation of flatterie I overpaſs.

Auguſt 19.

Vain Pageants of London.

And as they paſſed over the Bridge, there was a number of Ordnance ſhot off at the Tower, ſuch as by old mens report the like hath not been heard or ſeen theſe 100 years.

From

Anno 1554.

From London-Bridge they passed the Conduit in Gracious-street, which was finely painted, and among other things, the nine Worthies, whereof King Henry the 8*th* was one. He was painted in Harness, having in one hand a Sword, and in the other hand a Book, whereupon was written Verbum Dei, delivering the same Book (as it were) to his Son King Edward, who was painted in a Corner by him.

Winchester cannot abide the Book called Verbum Dei. The Painter sent for to the Bishop of Winchester.

But hereupon was no small matter made: for the Bishop of Winchester, Lord Chancellor, sent for the Painter, and not only called him Knave for painting a Book in King Henries hand, and specially for writing thereupon Verbum Dei, but also rank Traytor and Villain, saying to him that he should rather have put the Book into the Queens hand (who was also painted there) for that she had reformed the Church and Religion, with other things according to the pure and sincere Word of God indeed.

The Painters Answer.

The Painter answered and said, that if he had known that had been the matter wherefore his Lordship sent for him, he could have remedied it, and not have troubled his L^dp.

The Bishop answered and said, that it was the Queens Majesties will and commandment that he should send for him: and so commanding him to wipe out the Book and Verbum Dei too, he sent him home. So the Painter departed, but fearing lest he should leave some part either of the Book, or of Verbum Dei in King Henries hand; he wiped away a piece of his Fingers withal.

Here I pass over and cut off other gawds and Pageants of pastime shewed to him in passing through London, with the flattering Verses set up in Latin, wherein were blazed out in one place the five Philips, as the five Worthies of the World, Philip of Macedonia, Philip the Emperour, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philip Prince of Spain and King of England.

Five Philips.

In another Poetry King Philip was resembled by an Image representing Orpheus, and all English People resembled to brute and savage Beasts following after Orpheus Harp, and dancing after K. Philips Pipe. Not that I reprehend the art of the Latin Verses, which was fine and cunning, but that I pass over the matter, having other graver things in hand; and therefore pass over also the sight at Pauls Church side, of him that came down upon a Rope tied to the Battlements with his Head before, neither staying himself with his hand nor foot; which shortly after cost him his life.

But one thing by the way I cannot let pass, touching the young flourishing Rood, newly set up against this present time to welcom King Philip into Pauls Church. The setting up of which Rood was this, and may make as good a Pageant as the best.

The erecting up of the Rood at Pauls.

Anno 2 Mariæ, Boner in his Royalty, and all his Prebendaries about him in Pauls Quire, the Rood laid along upon the Pavements, and also the Doors of Pauls being shut, the Bishop with others said and sung divers Prayers by the Rood: that being done, they anointed the Rood with Oil in divers places, and after the anointing, crept unto it, and kissed it.

B. Boners god. The Rood of Pauls set up with Te Deum.

After that, they took the said Rood, and weighed him up, and set him in his old accustomed place, and all the while they were doing thereof, the whole Quire sang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the Bells, not only for joy, but also for the notable and great fact they had done therein.

Salutation to the Rood of Pauls.

Not long after this, a merry Fellow came into Pauls, and spied the Rood with Mary and John new set up; whereto, among a great sort of People, he made low Courtesie, and said: Sir, your Mastership is welcom to Town. I had thought to have talked further with your Mastership, but that ye be here clothed in the Queens Colours. I hope that ye be but a Summers Bird, in that ye be dressed in white and green.

The Prince thus being in the Church of Pauls, after Dr. Harpsfield had finished his Oration in Latin, set forward through Fleetstreet, and so came to White-hall, where he with the Queen remained four days after, and from thence removed unto Richmond.

After this, all the Lords had leave to depart into their Countries, with strait commandment to bring all their Harness and Artillery into the Tower of London with all speed. Now remained there no English Lord at the Court, but the Bishop of Winchester. From Richmond they removed to Hampton Court, where the Hall-door within the Court was continually shut; so that no man might enter, unless his Errand were first known, which seem'd strange to Englishmen that had not bin used thereto.

Septemb. 8. About the 8. day of September Bishop Boner began his Visitation, who charged six men in every Parish to enquire (according to their Oaths) and to present before him the day after S. Matthews day, being the 23. of September, all such persons as either had or should offend in any of his Articles, which he had set forth to the number of 37. Of the which Visitation of Boner I have somewhat more largely to intreat, after that first I shall overpass a few other things following in course of this present story.

Septem. 17. The 17. day of September was a Proclamation in London, That all Vagabonds and Masterless men, as well Strangers as Englishmen, should depart the City within five days; and straitly charging all Inholders, Victuallers, Taverners and Alehouse-keepers, with all other that sell Victuals, that they (after the said five days) should not sell any Meat, Drink, or any kind of Victual to any Servingman whatsoever, unless he brought a Testimonial from his Master to declare whose Servant he was, and were in continual houshold with his said Master, upon pain to run in danger of the Law, if they offended herein.

Septem. 30. The Bishop of Winchester preacheth. Upon the Sunday following, being the 30. day of September, the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chancelor of England, preached at Pauls-Cross, at whose Sermon were present all the Council that were at the Court: namely, the Marques of Winchester, the Earl of Arundel, Lord North, Sir Anthony Brown, M. Rochester, M. Walgrave, M. Englefield, Lord Fitzwater, and Secretary Peter, and the Bishops of London, Duresm and Ely, which three sate under the Bishops Arms. The Gospel whereof he made his Sermon, is written in the 22. Chapter of Matthew. where the Pharisees came unto Christ, and amongst them one asked Christ which was the greatest Commandment; Christ answered, Thou shalt love thy Lord God with all thy heart, &c. and thy Neighbour as thy self, in these two is comprehended the Law and the Prophets.

A blasphemious Mouth against the true Preachers of Gods Word.

After his long declaration of these Words, speaking very much of Love and Charity, at last he had occasion upon S. James his words to speak of the true Teachers, and of the false Teachers; saying, that all the Preachers almost in King Edwards time, preached nothing but Voluptuousness, and filthy and blasphemous Lies, affirming their Doctrine to be that false Doctrine whereof S. James speaketh; saying, that it was full of perverse Zeal, earthly, full of discord and dissention, that the Preachers aforenamed would report nothing truly, and that they taught that it was lawful for a man to put away his Wife for Adultery, and marry another, and that if a man vowed to day, he might break it to Morrow at his pleasure, with many other things which I omit. And when he spake of the Sacrament, he said, that all the Church from the beginning have confessed Christs Natural Body to be in Heaven, and here to be in the Sacrament, and so concluded that matter: and then willed all Men to say with Josephs Brethren, Peccavimus in fratrem: We have all sinned against our Brother, and so (said he) have I too. Then he declared what a Noble King and Queen we have, saying, that if he should go about to shew that the King came hither for no necessity or need, and what he had brought with him, it should be superfluous, seeing it is evidently known, that he hath ten times as much as we are in hope and possession of, affirming him to be as wise, sober, gentle, and temperate a Prince as ever was in England, and if it were not so proved, then to take him for a false Lyar for his so saying: Exhorting all men to make much of him, and to win him whilst we had him, and so should we also win all such as he hath brought with him, and so made an end.

The Church never confessed the Natural Body of Christ so to be in the Sacrament, that the Substance of Bread was taken away, before the time of Pope Innocent the Third. An. 1215. Winchester preacheth in commendation of King Philip.

Upon the Tuesday following, being the seventh day of October, twenty Carts came from Westminster laden (as it was noised) with Gold and Silver, and certain of the Guard with them through the City to the Tower, and there it was received in by a Spaniard, who was the Kings Treasurer, and had custody of it within the Tower. It was matted about with Mats, and mailed in little bundles about two foot long, and almost half a foot thick, and in every Cart were six of those bundles. What it was indeed, God knoweth, for it is to us uncertain.

About the ſame time, or a little before, upon Corpus Chriſti Day, the Proceſſion being made in Smithfield, where after the manner the Prieſt with his Box went under the Canopy, by chance there came by the way a certain ſimple man, named John Street, a Joyner of Coleman-Street, who having ſome haſte in his buſineſs, and finding no other way to paſs through, by chance went under the Canopy by the Prieſt. The Prieſt ſeeing the man ſo to preſume to come under the Canopy, being belike afraid, and worſe feared than hurt, for fear let his Pix fall down. The poor Man, being ſtreigtways apprehended, was had to the Counter, the Prieſt accuſing him unto the Council, as though he had come to ſlay him, whenas the poor Man, (as himſelf hath ſince declared unto us) had no ſuch thought ever in his mind. Then from the Counter he was had unto Newgate, where he was caſt into the Dungeon, there chained to a Poſt, where he was cruelly and miſerably handled, and ſo extreamly dealt withal, that being but ſimple before, he was now feared out of his Wits altogether, and ſo upon the ſame had to Bedlam. Whereupon the brief Chronicle of London in this point is not to be credited, which untruly reported that he feigned himſelf in Newgate to be mad: which thing we in writing of this Hiſtory, by due Inquiſition of the party, have found to be contrary.

About the fifth of October, and within a fortnight following, were divers as well Houſholders as Servants and Prentices apprehended and taken, and committed to ſundry Priſons, for the having and ſelling of certain Books which were ſent into England by the Preachers that fled into Germany and other Countreys; which Books nipped a great number ſo near, that within one fortnight there were little leſs than Threeſcore impriſoned for this matter: among whom was Maſter Brown a Goldſmith, Mr. Spark a Draper, Randal Tirer a Stationer, Mr. Beſton a Merchant, with many other.

October 14. Upon the Sunday, being the 14. day of October, the old Biſhop of Dureſm preached in the Shrouds.

Upon St. Lukes day following, being the 18. of October, the Kings Majeſty came from Weſtminſter to Pauls Church along the Streets, accompanied with a great number of Noble men, and there he was received under a Canopy at the Weſt-door, and ſo came in to the Chancel, where he heard Maſs, which a Spaniſh Biſhop and his own Chappel ſung, and that done he returned to Weſtminſter to Dinner again.

October 26. Upon Friday, being the 26. of October, certain men, whereof I ſpake before, which were of Mr. Throgmortons Queſt, being in number 8. (for the other four were delivered out of Priſon, for that they ſubmitted themſelves, and ſaid they had offended, like Weaklings, not conſidering truth to be truth, but of force for fear ſaid ſo) theſe eight Men, I ſay, whereof M. Emanuel Lucas, and M. Wheteſtone were chief, were called before the Council of the Star-Chamber: where they all affirmed that they had done all things in that matter according to their knowledge, and with good Conſciences, even as they ſhould anſwer before God at the day of Judgment. Where M. Lucas ſaid openly before all the Lords, that they had done in the matter like honeſt men, and true and faithful Subjects, and therefore they humbly beſought the Lord Chancellor, and the other Lords, to be means to the King and Queens Majeſties that they might be diſcharged and ſet at liberty, and ſaid that they were all contented humbly to ſubmit themſelves to their Majeſties, ſaving and reſerving their Truth, Conſciences, and Honeſty. Some of the Lords ſaid, that they were worthy to pay a thouſand pounds apiece, and other ſome ſaid, that Mr. Lucas and Mr. Wheteſtone were worthy to pay a 1000 Marks apiece, and the reſt 500 l. apiece. In concluſion, Sentence was given by the Lord Chancellor, that they ſhould pay a thouſand Marks apiece, and that they ſhold go to Priſon again, and there remain till further order were taken for their puniſhment.

The trouble of the good men which were of M. Throgmortons Queſt.

October 30. Upon Tueſday, being the 30. of October, the Lord J. Gray was delivered out of the Tower, and ſet at liberty.

Novemb. 4. Upon Sunday the 4. of November, five Prieſts did Penance at Pauls-Croſs, which were content to put away their Wives, and take upon them again to miniſter. Every of them had a Taper in his hand, and a Rod, wherewith the Preacher did diſpel them.

Upon Wedneſday the 7. of November, the Lord Paget, and Sir Edward Haſtings Maſter of the Horſe, were ſent as Ambaſſadors, I know not whither, but, as it was adjudged, to Cardinal Poole, who lay all that Summer before at Bruſſels: and it was thought they were ſent to accompany and conduct him into England, where at that time he was nominated and appointed Bp. of Canterbury. Anno 1554.

Novemb. 7. Card. Poole nominated Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Upon the Friday following the 9. of November, Mr. Barlow late Biſhop of Bathe, and Mr. Cardmaker, were brought before the Council in the Star-Chamber, where after communication they were commanded to the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday, being the 10. of November, the Sheriffs of London had commandment to take an Inventory of every one of their goods which were of Maſter Throgmortons Queſt, and to ſeal up their Doors, which was done the ſame day. M. Wheteſtone, M. Lucas, and M. Kytely, were judged to pay 1000 pounds apiece, and the reſt 1000 Marks apiece, to be paid within one fortnight after. From this payment were exempted thoſe four which confeſſed a fault, and ſubmitted themſelves, whoſe Names, are theſe, M. Loe, M. Poynter, M. Beſwike, and M. Carter.

Novemb. 8.

Mention was made a little before of the Viſitation of Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, which began (as is ſaid) about the Month of September: for the better preparation whereof were ſet forth certain Articles to the number of 37. Which Articles, partly for the tediouſneſs of them, partly for that M. Bale in a certain Treatiſe hath ſufficiently painted out the ſame in their colours, partly alſo becauſe I will not infect this Book with them, I ſlip them over, proceeding in the progreſs of this Biſhop in his Viſitation in the County of Eſſex. Who paſſing through the ſaid County of Eſſex, being attended with divers Worſhipful of the Shire (for ſo they were commanded) arrived at Sterford in Hertfordſhire, where he reſted certain days, ſolacing himſelf after that painful peregrination with no ſmall feaſting and banqueting with his Attendants aforeſaid, at the houſe of one Parſons his Nephew, whoſe Wife he commonly called his fair Neice (and fair ſhe was indeed) he took there great pleaſure to hear her play upon the Viginals (wherein ſhe excelled) inſomuch that every dinner (ſitting by his ſweet ſide) ſhe aroſe and played three ſeveral times at his requeſt of his good and ſpiritual Devotion towards her. Theſe certain days thus paſſed in this Biſhop-like faſhion, he proceeded in his Popiſh Viſitation towards Hadham his own Houſe and Pariſh, not paſt two miles from Sterford, being there moſt ſolemnly rung out, as in all other places whereas he paſſed. At length drawing near unto Hadham, when he heard no ſtirring there in honour of his Holineſs, he grew into ſome Choler, and the nearer he approached the hotter was his fit: and the quieter the Bells were, the unquieter was his Mood. Thus rode he on chafing and fuming with himſelf. What meaneth (ſaith he) that Knave the Clark that he Ringeth not? and the Parſon that he meeteth me not? with ſundry other furious words of fiery element. There this patient Prelate, coming to the Town, alighted, calling for the Key of the Church, which was then all unready, for that (as they then pretended) he had prevented his time by two hours, whereupon he grew from choler to plain melancholy, ſo as no man willingly would deal with him to qualifie the raging humor ſo far incorporated in his Breſt. At the laſt, the Church-door being opened, the Biſhop entred, and finding no Sacrament hanged up, nor Rood-loft decked after the Popiſh Precept (which had commanded about the ſame time a well favoured Rood, and of tall ſtature univerſally in all Churches to be ſet up) curtailed his ſmall Devotions, and fell from all choler and melancholy to flat madneſs in the uttermoſt degree, ſwearing and raging with an hunting Oath or two, and by no Beggars, that in his own Church, where he hoped to have ſeen beſt order, he found moſt diſorder, to his Honours moſt heavy diſcomfort, as he ſaid, calling the Parſon (whoſe name was Doctor Bricket) Knave, and Heretick. Who there humbled himſelf, and yielded, as it were, to his fault, ſaying, He was ſorry his Lordſhip was come before that he and his Pariſh looked for him, and therefore could not do their duties to receive him accordingly: and as for thoſe things lacking, he truſted in ſhort time hereafter he ſhould compaſs that, which hitherto he could not bring about. D. Bricket Parſon of Hadham, called Knave of Boner.

Anno 1554.

Therefore if it pleased his Lordship to come to his poor House (where his Dinner was prepared) he would satisfie him in those things which his Lordship thought amiss. Yet this so reasonable an Answer nothing could satisfie nor asswage his passion unreasonable. For the Catholick Prelate utterly defied him and his Cheer, commanding him out of his sight, saying, as his by-word was, Before God thou art a Knave, avant Heretick, and therewithal, whether thrusting or striking at him, so it was that with his hand he gave Sir Thomas Josselin Knight (who was then amongst the rest, and stood next the Bishop) a good flewet upon the upper part of the Neck, even under his Ear, as some say which stood by, but, as he himself said, he hit him full upon the Ear: whereat he was somewhat astonied at the suddenness of the Quarrel for that time. At last he spake and said, What meaneth your Lordship? have you been trained in Will Sommers School, to strike him that standeth next you? The Bishop still in rage either heard not, or would not hear.

Sir Thomas Josselin strucken of Boner.

B. Boner striketh him that standeth next.

Then M. Fecknam Dean of Pauls, seeing the Bishop still in this bitter rage, said, O M. Josselin, you must bear with my Lord, for truly his long imprisonment in the Marshalsey, and the misusing of him there hath altered him, that in these Passions he is not ruler of himself, nor it booteth any man to give him counsel until his heat be past, and then assure your self M. Josselin, my Lord will be sorry for those abuses that now he cannot see in himself. Whereunto he merrily replied and said, So it seems M. Fecknam, for now that he is come forth of the Marshalsey, he is ready to go to Bedlam. At which merry Conceit some laughed, and mo smiled, because the Nail was so truly hit upon the Head. The Bishop, nothing abashed at his own folly, gave a deaf Ear; as no marvel it was that he shamed little to strike a Stranger, which spared not the burning of so many good men.

Fecknam excuseth B. Boner by the Marshalsey.

Sir Thomas Josselin's Apothegm touching B. Boner.

After this worthy combat thus finished and atchieved, this Martial Prelate presently taketh him to his Horse again, notwithstanding he was minded to tarry at Hadham three or four days, and so had made provision in his own House, and leaving his Dinner rode that Night with a small company of his houshold to Ware, where he was not looked for three days after, to the great wonder of all the Country, why he so prevented his day aforestalled.

At this hasty posting away of this Bishop, his whole Train of Attendants there left him. Also his Doctors and Chaplains (a few excepted) tarried behind, and Dined at Doctor Brickets as merrily, as he rode toward Ware all chasingly: which Dinner was prepared for the Bishop himself. Now whether the Bishop were offended at those Solemnities which he wanted, and was accustomed to be saluted withal in other places where he journeyed, joyning to that, that his great God was not exalted above-ground over the Altar, nor his Block Almighty set seemly in the Rood-loft to entertain Strangers, and thereupon took occasion to quarrel with Doctor Bricket (whose Religion perchance he somewhat suspected) I have not perfectly to say, but so it was supposed of divers the cause thereof to rise, which drave the Bishop so hastily from such a Dinner. Testified by such as there and then were present. Rich. K. &c.

Bishop Boner driven from a good Dinner.

A story of a Rood set up in Lancashire.

IN this Visitation of Bishop Boner above-mentioned, ye see how the Bishop took on for not setting up the Rood, and ringing the Bells at Hadham. Ye heard also of the Precept, which commanded in every Parish a Rood to be erected, both well favoured and of a tall stature. By the occasion whereof it cometh in mind (and not out of place) to story likewise what happened in a certain Town in Lancashire near to Lancaster, called Cockram, where the Parishioners and Church-wardens, having the same time a like Charge for the erecting of a Rood in their Parish-Church, had made their bargain and were at a price with one that could cunningly carve and paint such Idols, for the framing of their Rood: who, according to his Promise, made them one, and set it up in their Church. This done, he demanded his Money: But they, misliking his Workmanship, refused to pay him, whereupon he arrested them, and the Matter was brought before the Mayor of Lancaster, who was a very meet Man for such a purpose, and an old Favourer of the Gospel, which is rare in that Country. Then the Carver began to declare how they Covenanted with him for the making of a Rood with the appurtenances, ready c[arved] and set up in their Church, which he according to his Promise had done, and now demanding his Money, they refused to pay him. Is this true, quoth the Mayor to the Wardens? Yea Sir, said they. And why do you not pay the poor Man his due, quoth he? And it please you Master Mayor (quoth they) because the Rood we had before was a well-favoured man, and he promised to make us such another: but this that he hath set us up now is the worst favoured thing that ever you set your eyes on, gaping and grinning in such sort, that none of our Children dare once look him in the face, or come near him. The Mayor thinking that it was good enough for that purpose if it had been worse; My Masters (quoth he) howsoever the Rood like you, the poor mans labour hath been never the less, and it is pity that he should have any hindrance or loss thereby. Therefore I will tell you what you shall do: Pay him the Money ye promised him, and go your ways home and look on it, and if it will not serve for a god, make no more ado, but clap a pair of Horns on his Head, and so he will make an excellent Devil. This the Parishioners took well in worth: the Poor man had his Money, and divers laughed well thereat: but so did not the Babylonish Priests.

The men of Cockram not pleased with their Rood.

This Mayor above-mentioned continued a Protestant almost 50 years, and was the only Reliever of March the Martyr (whose story followeth hereafter) with Meat, Drink and Lodging, while he lay in Lancaster Castle, the space of three Quarters of a year, before he was had to Chester to be burned, &c.

The Mayor of Lancaster a good man.

About this time or the month next before, which was October, there came a Precept or Mandate from Boner B. of London, to all Bishops and Curates within his Diocess, for the abolishing of such Scriptures and Writings as had been painted upon Church-Walls before, in King Edwards days. The Copy of which Precept or Mandate here we thought good to express, that the World might see the wicked proceedings of their impious Zeal, or rather their malicious Rage against the Lord and his Word, and against the edifying of Christian People: whereby it might appear, by this blotting out of Scriptures, not only how blasphemously they spake against the holy Scriptures of God, but also how studiously they sought by all manner of means to keep the People still in Ignorance.

A Mandate of Boner Bishop of London, to abolish the Scriptures and Writings painted upon the Church-Walls.

EDmund, by Gods permission Bishop of London, to all and every Parsons, Vicars, Clarks, and Lettered, within the Parish of Hadham, or within the precinct of our Dioces of London, whersoever being, sendeth Greeting, Grace and Benediction.

Because some Children of Iniquity, given up to Carnal desires and Noveltres, have by many ways enterprized to banish the ancient manner and order of the Church, and to bring in and establish Sects and Heresies; taking from thence the picture of Christ, and many things besides instituted and observed of ancient time laudably in the same, placing in the room thereof such things, as in such a place it behoved them not to do, and also have procured as a stay to their Heresies (as they thought) certain Scriptures wrongly applied to be painted upon the Church-Walls, all which persons tend chiefly to this end; that they might uphold the liberty of the Flesh, and marriage of Priests, and destroy, as much as lay in them, the reverent Sacrament of the Altar, and might extinguish and enervate Holy-days, Fasting-days, and other laudable Discipline of the Catholick Church, opening a window to all Vices, and utterly closing up the way unto Vertue: Wherefore we being moved with a Christian Zeal, judging that the premisses are not to be longer suffered, do for discharge of our duty, commit unto you joyntly and severally, and by the tenor hereof do straitly charge and command you, that at the receipt hereof, with all speed convenient, you do warn, or cause to be warned, first, second, and third time, and peremptorily, all and singular Church-wardens and Parishioners whosoever within our foresaid Dioces of London, wheresoever any such Scriptures or Paintings have been attempted, that they abolish and extinguish such manner of Scriptures,

The Scriptures painted on Church-Walls razed out.

Note well these sauses Reader, why the Scriptures should be razed out.

Scriptures open a window to Vices with Boner:

ſo that by no means they be either read or ſeen, and therein to proceed moreover as they ſhall ſee good and laudable in this behalf. And if after the ſaid monition, the ſaid Churchwardens and Pariſhioners ſhall be found remiſs and negligent, or culpable, then you joyntly and ſeverally ſhall ſee the foreſaid Scriptures to be razed, aboliſhed and extinguiſhed forthwith: citing all and ſingular thoſe Churchwardens and Pariſhioners, (whom we alſo for the ſame do cite here by the tenor hereof) that all and ſingular the Churchwardens and Pariſhioners being ſlack and negligent, culpable therein, ſhall appear before us, our Vicar general and principal Official, or our Commiſſary ſpecial in our Cathedral Church of St. Paul at London, *in the Conſiſtory there, at the hour appointed for the ſame, the ſixth day next after their Citation, if it be a Court-day, or elſe at the next Court-day after enſuing, whereas either we or our Official or Commiſſary ſhall ſit: there to ſay and alledge for themſelves ſome reaſonable cauſe, if they have or can tell of any, why they ought not to be Excommunicated, or otherwiſe puniſhed for their ſuch negligence, ſlackneſs and fault, to ſay and to alledge, and further to do and receive, as Law and Reaſon requireth. And what you have done in the premiſſes, do you certifie us, or our Vicar, principal Official, and ſuch our Commiſſary, diligently and duly in all things, and through all things, or let him among you thus certifie us, which hath taken upon him to execute this Mandate: In Witneſs whereof we have ſet our Seals to theſe Preſents. M. Chriſtopherſon ſent to Cambridge with Gardiners inſtructions

About this time the Lord Chancellor ſent M. Chriſtopherſon unto the Univerſity of Cambridge, with theſe three Articles, which he enjoyned them to obſerve.

The firſt, That every Scholar ſhould wear his apparel according to his degree in the Schools.

The ſecond was touching the pronunciation of the Greek Tongue.

The third, That every Preacher there ſhould declare the whole ſtile of the King and Queen in their Sermons.

In Cambridge were 24 places void at one time in one Colledge.

In this Univerſity of Cambridge, and alſo of Oxford, by reaſon of the bringing of theſe things, and eſpecially for the alteration of Religion, many good Wits and Learned men departed the Univerſities: of whom, ſome of their own accord gave over, ſome were thruſt out of their Fellowſhips, ſome were miſerably handled: inſomuch that in Cambridge, in the Colledge of St. John, there were four and twenty places void together, in whoſe rooms were taken in four and twenty other, which neither in Vertue nor in Religion ſeemed to anſwer to them before. And no leſs miſerable was the eſtate of Oxford, by reaſon of the time, and the ſtrait dealing of the Viſitors, that, for ſetting forward their Papiſtical proceedings, had no regard or reſpect to the forwardneſs of good Wits, and the maintenance of good Letters, beginning then more and more to flouriſh in that Univerſity.

A Popiſh Exhortation of Doctor Treſham.

And for ſo much as we have entred into the mention of Oxford, we may not paſs over in ſilence the famous Exhortation of Dr. Treſham, who ſupplying the room of the Subdean in Chriſt-Church, after he had called all the Students of the Colledge together, with great Eloquence and Art perſwaſory, began to commend the dignity of the Maſs unto them, declaring, that there was ſtuff enough in the Scripture to prove the Maſs good. Then to allure them to the Catholick Service of the Church, he uſed theſe Reaſons, declaring that there were a goodly company of Copes, that were appointed to Windſor, but he had found the Queen ſo gracious unto him, that they ſhould come to Chriſts-Church. Now, if they like honeſt men would come to Church, they ſhould wear them on Holy-days. And beſides all this, he would get them the Lady Bells of Bampton, and that ſhould make the ſweeteſt Ring in all England. And as for an holy Water ſprinkle, he had already the faireſt that was within the Realm. Wherefore he thought that no man would be ſo mad to forgo theſe Commodities, &c.

Which things I rehearſe, that it may appear what want of diſcretion is in the Fathers of Popery, and into what idle Follies ſuch men do fall, whom I beſeech the Lord, if it be his pleaſure, to reduce to a better Truth, and to open their eyes to ſee their own blindneſs.

To proceed now further in the courſe and race of our Story whereas we left, being before in the Month of November, it followeth more, that on the * xxii. day of the ſame Month of November, being Monday, began the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, to the beginning whereof both the King and Queen rode in their Parliament Robes, having two Swords born before them. The Earl of Pembroke bare his Sword, and the Earl of Weſtmerland bare the Queens. They had two Caps of Maintenance born before them, whereof the Earl of Arundel bare one, and the Earl of Shrewsbury the other.

* Where note, that the Printer of Q. Maries Statutes doth err in his Suppuration, which ſith that this Parliament began the 11. of this Month, which day was then Sunday.

Cardinal Poole landed at Dover upon the Wedneſday, being the 21. day of November, on which day one Act paſſed in the Parliament for his reſtitution in Blood, utterly repealing as falſe and moſt ſlanderous, that Act made againſt him in King Henry the Eighths time, and on the next day being Thurſday, and the 22. of November, the King and the Queen came both to the Parliament Houſe to give their Royal Aſſent, and to eſtabliſh this Act againſt his coming.

Ex Statut: an. 1 & 2 R. Philip. & Mariæ, c. 8.

Upon the Saturday, being the 24. of November, the ſaid Cardinal came by Water to London, and ſo to Lambeth Houſe, which was ready prepared againſt his coming.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being the 28. of November, there was general Proceſſion in Pauls for joy that the Queen was conceived and quick with Child, as it was declared in a Letter ſent from the Council to the Biſhop of London.

Novemb. 28.

The ſame day were preſent at this Proceſſion ten Biſhops, with all the Prebendaries of Pauls, and alſo the Lord Mayor with the Aldermen, and a great number of Commons of the City in their beſt array. The Copy of the Councils Letter here followeth, ad perpetuam rei memoriam.

A Copy of a Letter ſent from the Council unto Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, concerning Queen Maries conceiving with Child.

The Councils Letter to Biſhop Boner of the Queens conceiving with Child.

After our hearty Commendations unto your good Lordſhip: whereas it hath pleaſed Almighty God amongſt other his infinite benefits of late moſt graciouſly poured upon us and this whole Realm, to extend his Benediction upon the Queens Majeſty in ſuch ſort, as ſhe is conceived and quick of Child: Whereby her Majeſty (being our natural Liege Lady, Queen, and undoubted Inheritor of this Imperial Crown) good hope of certain Succeſſion in the Crown is given unto us, and conſequently the great Calamities (which for want of ſuch Succeſſion might otherwiſe have fallen upon us and our Poſterity) ſhall by Gods grace be well avoided, if we thankfully aknowledge this benefit of Almighty God, endeavouring our ſelves with earneſt Repentance to thank, honour and ſerve him, as we be moſt bounden: Theſe be not only to advertiſe you of theſe good news, to be by you publiſhed in all places within your Dioceſs, but alſo to pray and require you, that both your ſelf do give God thanks with us for this his eſpecial grace, and alſo give order that Thanks may be openly given by ſinging of Te Deum in all the Churches within your ſaid Dioceſs; and that likewiſe all Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters, in their Maſſes, and other Divine Services, may continually pray to Almighty God ſo to extend his holy hand over her Majeſty, the Kings Highneſs, and this whole Realm, as that this thing, being by his Omnipotent Power graciouſly thus begun, may by the ſame be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glory of his Name. Whereunto, albeit we doubt not, ye would of your ſelf have had ſpecial regard without theſe our Letters, yet for the earneſt deſire we have to have this thing done out of hand, and diligently continued, we have alſo written theſe our Letters, to put you in remembrance; and ſo bid your Lordſhip moſt heartily well to fare. From Weſtminſter the 27th of November, 1554.

If Q. Mary were quick with Child in the 28. of the month of November, and afterward did Labour in the month of June, then went ſhe almoſt 7 months quick with Child.

Te Deum ſung for Queen Maries Child.

Alſo

Anno 1554.

Alſo the ſame day in the Afternoon Cardinal Poole came to the Parliament-Houſe, which at that preſent was kept in the great Chamber of the Court at White-Hall, for that the Queen was then ſick, and could not go abroad: where the King and Queens Majeſty ſitting under the Cloth of Eſtate, and the Cardinal ſitting on the Right hand, with all the other Eſtates of the Parliament being preſent, the Biſhop of Wincheſter being Lord Chancellor began in this manner.

The words of Wincheſter for receiving of the Cardinal.

Wincheſters Words for Card. Poole.

MY Lords of the Upper Houſe, and you my Maſters of the Nether Houſe, here is preſent the Right Reverend Father in God my Lord Cardinal Poole, come from the Apoſtolick See of Rome, as Ambaſſadour to the King and Queens Majeſties, upon one of the weigh-tieſt Cauſes that ever hapned in this Realm, and which pertaineth to the glory of God, and your Univerſal benefit. The which Ambaſſage their Majeſties pleaſure is to be ſignified unto you all by his own mouth, truſting that you will receive and accept it in as benevolent and thankful wiſe as their Highneſſes have done, and that you will give an attent and inclinable ear unto him.

When the Lord Chancellor had thus ended his Talk, the Cardinal, taking the time then offered, began his Oration, wherein he declared the cauſes of his coming, and what were his deſires and requeſts. In the which mean time the Court Gate was kept ſhut until he had made an end of his Oration.

The tenour of Cardinal Pools Oration, made in the Parliament-Houſe.

Card. Poole's Oration in the Parliament Houſe.

MY Lords all, and you that are the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, which in effect is nothing elſe but the State and Body of the whole Realm. As the cauſe of my repair hither hath been moſt wiſely and gravely declared by my Lord Chancellor, ſo, before that I enter to the particularities of my Commiſſion, I have ſomewhat touching my ſelf, and to give moſt humble and hearty Thanks to the King and Queens Majeſties, and after them to you all, which of a Man exiled and baniſhed from this Commonwealth, have reſtored me to be a Member of the ſame, and of a man having no place neither here, or elſewhere within this Realm, have admitted me in a place, where to ſpeak and to be heard. This I proteſt unto you all, that though I was Exiled my Native Country without juſt cauſe, as God knoweth, yet the Ingratitude could not pull from me the affection and deſire that I had to profit and do you good. If the offer of my ſervice might have been received, it was never to ſeek, and where that could not be taken, you never failed of my Prayer, nor ever ſhall.

But leaving the rehearſal thereof, and coming more near to the matter of my Commiſſion, I ſignifie unto you all. That my principal Travel is for the reſtitution of this noble Realm to the ancient Nobility, and to declare unto you, that the See Apoſtolick, from whence I come, hath a ſpecial reſpect to this Realm above all other, and not without cauſe, ſeeing that God himſelf, as it were by Providence, hath given this Realm prerogative of Nobility above other: which to make more plain unto you, it is to be conſidered that this Iſland firſt of all Iſlands received the light of Chriſts Religion. For as ſtories teſtifie, it was prima Provinciarum quæ amplexa eſt fidem Chriſti.

More for the Vantage that was hoped by it, than for any great love.

England, of all Iſlands, received firſt the Faith of Chriſt.

For the Britains being firſt Inhabitants of this Realm (notwithſtanding the ſubjection of the Emperours and Heathen Princes) did receive Chriſts Faith from the Apoſtolick See univerſally, and not in parts as other Countries, nor by one and one, as Clocks increaſe their hours by diſtinction of times, but altogether at once, as it were in a moment. But after that their ill Merits or forgetfulneſs of God had deſerved expulſion, and that Strangers being Infidels had poſſeſſed this Land, yet God of his goodneſs, not leaving where he once loved, ſo illuminated the hearts of the Saxons being Heathen-men, that they forſook the darkneſs of Heathen Errors, and embraced the light of Chriſts Religion: ſo that within a ſmall ſpace Idolatry and Heathen Superſtition was utterly abandoned in this Iſland.

This was a great Prerogative of Nobility, the benefit whereof though it be to be aſcribed to God, yet the mean occaſion of the ſame came from the Church of Rome. In the Faith of which Church we have ever ſince continued and conſented with the reſt of the World in unity of Religion. And to ſhew further the fervent Devotion of the Inhabitants of this Iſland towards the Church of Rome, we read that divers Princes in the Saxons time with great Travel and Expences went perſonally to Rome, as Offa and Adulphus, which thought it not enough to ſhew themſelves obedient to the ſaid See; unleſs that in their own perſons they had gone to that ſame place from whence they had received ſo great a grace and benefit.

That the Faith of the Britains came firſt from Rome, neither doth it ſtand with the circumſtance of our ſtories: and if it ſo did, yet that Faith and Doctrine of the Romaniſts was not ſuch then as it is now. Read before. Of this Offa read before. Of Alcuinus read before.

In the time of Carolus Magnus, who firſt founded the Univerſity of Paris, he ſent into England for Alcuinus a great Learned man, which firſt brought Learning to that Univerſity, whereby it ſeemeth that the greateſt part of the World fetcht the light of Religion from England.

Adrian the Fourth being an Engliſh-man converted Norway from Infidelity, which Adrian afterwards, upon great affection and love that he bare to this Realm being his Native Country, gave to Henry the Second, King of England, the right and Seignory of the Dominion of Ireland, which pertained to the See of Rome.

I will not rehearſe the manifold benefit, that this Realm hath received from the Apoſtolick See, nor how ready the ſame hath been to relieve us in all our neceſſities. Nor will I rehearſe the manifold Miſeries and Calamities that this Realm hath ſuffered by ſwerving from that Unity. And even as in this Realm, ſo alſo in all other Countries which refuſing the Unity of the Catholick Faith have followed fantaſtical Doctrine, the like Plagues have happened. Let Aſia and the Empire of Greece be a Spectacle unto the World, who, by ſwerving from the Unity of the Church of Rome, are brought into Captivity and ſubjection of the Turk. All ſtories be full of like Examples. And to come unto the later time, look upon our Neighbours in Germany, who, by ſwerving from this Unity, are miſerably afflicted with diverſity of Sects, and divided into Factions.

Nay rather what Riches and Treaſures the See of Rome hath ſucke out of England, it is incredible. The cauſe of their ſubjection to the Turk cannot be proved to come by ſwerving from the Unity of the Church of Rome, for they never fully joyned unto it. And as touching the ſubjection of Aſia and Greece to the Turk, read in the ſtory of the Turk before. And why then do ye more cruelly than the Turk perſecute others for their Conſcience?

What ſhall I rehearſe unto you the tumults and effuſion of Blood that hath happened there of late days? Or trouble you with the rehearſal of thoſe Plagues that have happened ſince this Innovation of Religion, whereof you have felt the bitterneſs, and I have heard the Report? Of all which matters I can ſay no more, but ſuch was the miſery of the time. And ſee how far forth this Fury went. For thoſe that live under the Turk may freely live after their Conſcience, and ſo was it not lawful here.

If men examine well upon what grounds theſe Innovations began, they ſhall well find that the Root of this, as of many other Miſchiefs, was Avarice, and that the luſt and carnal Affection of one man confounded all Laws both divine and human. And notwithſtanding all theſe Devices and Policies practiced within this Realm againſt the Church of Rome, they needed not to have loſt you, but that they thought rather as Friends to reconcile you, than as Enemies to infeſt you. For they wanted not great Offers of the moſt mighty Potentates in all Europe to have aided the Church in that Quarrel. Then mark the Sequel: There ſeemed by theſe Changes to riſe a great face of Riches and Gain, which in proof came to great miſery and lack. See how God then can confound the wiſdom of the wiſe, and turn unjuſt Policy to meer folly, and that thing which ſeemed to be done for relief, was cauſe of plain ruine and decay. Yet ſee that goodneſs of God, which at no time failed us, but moſt benignly offered his Grace, when it was of our parts leaſt ſought, and worſe deſerved.

And when all light of true Religion ſeemed utterly extinct, the Churches defaced, the Altars overthrown, the Miniſters corrupted: even like as in a Lamp the light being covered, yet it is not quenched, even ſo in a few remained the confeſſion of Chriſts Faith, namely in the Breaſt of the Queens Excellency, of whom, to ſpeak without adulation, the ſaying of the Prophet may be verified, Ecce quaſi derelicta!

And ſee how miraculouſly God of his goodneſs preſerved her Highneſs, contrary to the expectation of man, that when numbers conſpired againſt her, and Policies were deviſed to diſinherit her, and armed Power prepared to deſtroy her, yet ſhe being a Virgin helpleſs, naked and unarmed, prevailed and had the Victory of Tyrants, which is not to be aſcribed to any policy of man, but to the Almighty great goodneſs and providence of God, to whom the honour is to be given. And therefore it may be ſaid, Da gloriam Deo. For in mans Judgment, on her Graces part was nothing in appearance but deſpair.

Anno 1554.

What policy is this to make promiſe to get ſtrength, and to break it as the Queen did?

And yet for all theſe practiſes and devices of ill men, here you ſee her Grace eſtabliſhed in her Eſtate, being your lawful Queen and Governeſs, born among you, whom God hath appointed to reign over you for the reſtitution of true Religion, and extirpation of all Errors and Sects. And to confirm her Grace the more ſtrongly in this enterprize, lo how the Providence of God hath joyned her in Marriage with a Prince of like Religion, who being a King of great Might, Armor, and Force, yet uſeth towards you neither Armor nor Force, but ſeeketh you by the way of Love and Amity: in which reſpect great cauſe you have to give thanks to Almighty God, that hath ſent you ſuch a Catholick Governeſs. It ſhall be therefore your part again to love, obey, and ſerve them.

The Cardinal here appeareth to be a falſe Prophet.

And as it was a ſingular favour of God to conjoyn them in Marriage, ſo it is not to be doubted but that he ſhall ſend them Iſſue, for the comfort and ſurety of this Commonwealth.

Of all Princes in Europe, the Emperor hath travelled moſt in the cauſe of Religion, as it appeareth by his acts in Germany: yet happily by ſome ſecret judgment of God, he hath not atchieved the end. With whom in my Journey hitherwards I had conference touching my Legation: whereof when we had underſtanding, he ſhewed a great appearance of moſt earneſt joy and gladneſs, ſaying, That it rejoyced him no leſs of the reconcilement of this Realm unto Chriſtian Unity, than that his Son was placed by Marriage in the Kingdom, and moſt glad he was of all, that the occaſion thereof ſhould come by me being an Engliſh-man born, which is (as it were) to call home our ſelves. I can well compare him to David, which though he were a Man elect of God, yet, for that he was contaminate with Blood and War, he could not build the Temple of Jeruſalem, but left the finiſhing thereof to Solomon, which was Rex pacifi-cus. So may it be thought, that the appeaſing of Controverſies of Religion in Chriſtianity, is not appointed to this Emperor, but rather to his Son, who ſhall perform the building that his Father had begun. Which Church cannot be perfectly builded, unleſs univerſally in all Realms we adhere to one Head, and do acknowledge him to be the Vicar of God, and to have Power from above. For all Power is of God, according to the ſaying, Non eſt poteſtas, niſi à Deo. And therefore I conſider that all Power being in God, yet, for the conſervation of quiet and godly life in the World, he hath derived that Power from above into the parts here in Earth: which is, into the Power Imperial, and Eccleſiaſtical. And theſe two Powers, as they be ſeveral and diſtinct, ſo have they two ſeveral effects and operations. For Secular Princes, to whom the Temporal Sword is committed, be Miniſters of God to execute Vengeance upon Tranſgreſſors and Evil livers, and to preſerve the well-doers and innocents from Injury and Violence. Which Power is repreſented in theſe two moſt excellent Perſons, the King and Queens Majeſty here preſent, who have this Power committed unto them immediately from God, without any Superiour in that behalf.

Charles the Emperour compared to David.

Two Powers on Earth: Eccleſiaſtical and Imperial.

The other Power is of Miniſtration, which is the power of the Keys, and Order in the Eccleſiaſtical State, which is by the Authority of Gods Word, and examples of the Apoſtles, and of all old holy Fathers from Chriſt hitherto, attributed and given to the Apoſtolick See of Rome, by ſpecial Prerogative. From which See I am here deputed Legate and Embaſſador, having full and ample Commiſſion from thence, and have the Keys committed to my hands, I confeſs to you that I have the Keys, not as mine own Keys, but as the Keys of him that ſent me, and yet cannot open; not for want of Power in me to give, but for certain impediments in you to receive, which muſt be taken away before my Commiſſion can take effect. This I proteſt before you, my Commiſſion is not of prejudice to any perſon. I come not to deſtroy, but to build, I come to reconcile, not to condemn, I am not come to compel, but to call again, I am not come to call any thing in queſtion already done, but my Commiſſion is of grace and clemency, to ſuch as will receive it. For touching all matters that be paſt they ſhall be as things caſt into the Sea of forgetfulneſs.

The Power of the Keys Clarkly declared.

But the mean, whereby you ſhall receive this benefit, is to revoke and repeal thoſe Laws and Statutes, which be impediments, blocks and bars to the execution of my Commiſſion. For like as I my ſelf had neither place nor voice to ſpeak here among you, but was in all reſpects a baniſhed man, till ſuch time as ye had repealed thoſe Laws that lay in my way: even ſo cannot you receive the benefit and grace offered from the Apoſtolick See, until the abrogation of ſuch Laws, whereby you have diſjoyned and diſſevered your ſelves from the Unity of Chriſts Church.

The Popes Keys cannot work in England before the Lack of good Laws be changed.

It remaineth therefore that you, like true Chriſtians and provident men for the weal of your Souls and Bodies, ponder what is to be done in this ſo weighty a cauſe, and ſo to frame your Acts and proceedings, as they may firſt tend to the glory of God, and next to the conſervation of your Commonwealth, ſurety and quietneſs.

The next day after the Three Eſtates aſſembled again in the great Chamber of the Court at Weſtminſter: where the King and Queens Majeſties and the Cardinal being preſent, they did exhibit (all kneeling on their knees) a Supplication to their Highneſſes, the tenor whereof enſueth.

The Copy of the Supplication and Submiſſion exhibited to the King and Queens Majeſties, by the Lords and Commons of the Parliament.

The Supplication and Submiſſion of the Lords and Commons, to the King and Queens Majeſties.

WE the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, repreſenting the whole Body of the Realm of England and Dominions of the ſame, in our own names particularly, and alſo of the ſaid Body univerſally, in this Supplication directed to your Majeſties with moſt humble ſuit, that it may by your gracious interceſſion and means, be exhibited to the moſt Reverend Father in God, the Lord Cardinal Poole Legate, ſent ſpecially hither from our moſt holy Father Pope Julius the Third, and the See Apoſtolick of Rome, do declare our ſelves very ſorry, and repentant for the Schiſm and Diſobedience committed in this Realm and Dominions of the ſame, againſt the ſaid See Apoſtolick, either by making, agreeing or executing any Laws, Ordinances or Commandments againſt the Supremacy of the ſaid See, or otherwiſe doing or ſpeaking that might impugn the ſame: offering our ſelves, and promiſing by this our Supplication, that for a token and knowledge of our ſaid Repentance, we be, and ſhall be alway ready, under and with the Authority of your Majeſties, to the uttermoſt of our power, to do that which ſhall be in us for the abrogation and repealing of the ſaid Laws and Ordinances in this preſent Parliament; as well for our ſelves as for the whole Body whom we repreſent.

O great ſorrow and deep Repentance!

Whereupon we moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſties, as perſons undefiled in the offence of this Body towards the ſaid See, which nevertheleſs God by his Providence hath made ſubject unto your Majeſties, ſo to ſet forth this our moſt humble ſuit, that we may obtain from the See Apoſtolick, by the ſaid moſt Reverend Father, as well particularly as univerſally, abſolution, releaſe and diſcharge from all danger of ſuch Cenſures and Sentences, as by the Laws of the Church we be fallen in, and that we may as Children repentant, be received into the boſom and unity of Chriſts Church, ſo as this Noble Realm, with all the Members thereof, may in unity and perfect obedience to the See Apoſtolick, and Pope for the time being, ſerve God and your Majeſties, to the furtherance and advancement of his honour and glory, Amen.

The Popes Abſolution cannot come, but by interceſſion of Kings and Queens.

The Supplication being read, the King and Queen delivered the ſame unto the Cardinal, who (perceiving the effects thereof to anſwer his expectation) did receive the ſame moſt gladly from their Majeſties: and after he had in few words given thanks to God, and declared what great cauſe he had to rejoyce above all others, that his coming from Rome into England had taken moſt happy ſucceſs: He by the Popes Authority did give them this Abſolution following.

The Supplication given up by the King and Queen to the Cardinal.

The Popes Keys ſent by the Cardinal.

Anno 1554.

An Abſolution pronounced by Cardinal Poole to the whole Parliament of England, in the Preſence of the King and Queen.

Abſolution from the Pope given to the Realm of England. Chriſts Abſolution not ſufficient, without the Popes be joyned withal. England brought from Gods bleſſing into the warm Sun.

OUr Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which with his moſt precious Blood hath redeemed and waſhed us from all our Sins and Iniquities, that he might purchaſe unto himſelf a Glorious Spouſe without Spot or Wrinkle, and whom the Father hath appointed Head over all his Church, he by his Mercy abſolve you. And we by Apoſtolick Authority given unto us (by the moſt Holy Lord Pope Julius the Third, his Vicegerent in Earth) do abſolve and deliver you, and every of you, with the whole Realm and Dominions thereof, from all Hereſie and Schiſm, and from all and every Judgment, Cenſures and Pains, for that cauſe incurred; and alſo we do reſtore you again unto the Unity of our Mother the Holy Church, as in our Letters more plainly it ſhall appear: In the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

Te Deum ſung, but with heavy hearts God knoweth.

When all this was done, they went into the Chappel, and there ſinging Te Deum, with great ſolemnity declared the Joy and Gladneſs that for this Reconciliation was pretended.

Great Joy at Rome for the Converſion of England, and good cauſe why.

The Report of this was with great ſpeed ſent unto Rome; as well by the King and Cardinals Letters, which hereafter follow, as alſo otherwiſe. Whereupon the Pope cauſed there at Rome Proceſſions to be made, and Thanks to be given to God with great Joy for the Converſion of England to his Church, and therefore praiſing the Cardinals Diligence, and the Devotion of the King and Queen, on Chriſtmaſs Even, by his Bulls he ſet forth a General Pardon to all ſuch as did truly rejoyce for the ſame.

A Copy of King Philips Letter, written with his own Hand to Pope Julius, touching the reſtoring of the Realm of England.

Novemb. 30. King Philips Letter to the Pope tranſlated out of Spaniſh into Engliſh.

MOſt Holy Father, I wrote yeſterday unto Don John Maurique, that he ſhould declare by word of Mouth, or elſe write to your Holineſs, in what good State the Matter of Religion ſtood in this Realm, and of the ſubmiſſion to your Holineſs, as to the Chief. As this day which is the Feaſt of S. Andrew, late in the evening, we have done God that ſervice (to whoſe only Godneſs we muſt impute it, and to your Holineſs, who have taken ſo great pain to gain theſe Souls) that this Realm with full and general conſent of all them that repreſent the State, being very penitent for that was paſt, and well bent for that they come to do, ſubmitted themſelves to your Holineſs, and to that Holy See; whom, at the Requeſt of the Queen and me, your Legate did abſolve. And foraſmuch as the ſaid Don John ſhall ſignifie unto your Holineſs all that paſſed in this matter, I will write no more thereof, but only that the Queen and I, as moſt faithful and devout Children of your Holineſs, have received the greateſt Joy and Comfort thereof that may be expreſſed with Tongue: Conſidering that, beſides the Service done to God hereby, it hath chanced in the time of your Holineſs, to place as it were in the Lap of the Holy Catholick Church ſuch a Kingdom as this is. And therefore I think I cannot be thankful enough for that is done this day. And I truſt in him, that your Holineſs ſhall alway underſtand, that the Holy See hath not had a more Obedient Son than I, nor more deſirous to preſerve and increaſe the Authority of the ſame. God guide and proſper the moſt holy Perſonage of your Holineſs as I deſire.

From London the 30. of November, 1554.

Your Holineſs moſt Humble Son the King, &c.

Here followeth likewiſe the Cardinals Letter to the ſaid Pope concerning the ſame Matter.

The Cardinals Letter to the Pope for the reclaiming again of England to his See.

THoſe things which I wrote unto your Holineſs of late, of that Hope which I truſted would come to paſs, that in ſhort ſpace this Realm would be reduced to the Unity of the Church, and Obedience of the Apoſtolick See, though I did write then not without great Cauſe: yet nevertheleſs I could not be void of all fear, not only for that difficulty which the Minds of our Countrymen did ſhew, being ſo long alienated from the See Apoſtolick, and for the old Hatred which they had born ſo many years to that Name: But much more I feared, leſt the firſt entry into the Cauſe it ſelf, ſhould be put off by ſome other Matter or Convention coming betwixt.

For the avoiding whereof, I made great means to the King and Queen, which little needed: For their own godly Forwardneſs, and earneſt Deſire to bring the thing to paſs, far ſurmounted my great and earneſt Expectation. This day in the Evening, being S. Andrews day (who firſt brought his Brother Peter to Chriſt) it is come to paſs by the Providence of God, that this Realm is reclaimed to give due obedience unto Peters Seat and your Holineſs, by whoſe means it may be conjoyned to Chriſt the Head, and his Body which is the Church. The thing was done and concluded in Parliament (the King and Queen being preſent) with ſuch full conſent and great rejoycing, that incontinently after I had made my Oration and given the Benediction, with a great joy and ſhout there was divers times ſaid, Amen, Amen. Which doth evidently declare, that that Holy Seed, although it hath been long oppreſſed, yet was not utterly quenched in them; which chiefly was declared in the "Nobility. Returning home to my Houſe, theſe things I wrote unto your Holineſs upon the ſudden, rejoycing that I had ſo luckily brought to paſs, ſo weighty a Matter by the Divine Providence, thinking to have ſent my Letters by the Kings Poſt, who (as it was ſaid) ſhould have departed ſhortly: But afterwards changing my purpoſe, when I had determined to ſend one of mine own Men, I thought good to add thus much to my Letters, for the more ample Gratulation and Rejoycing at that good Chance: Which thing as it was right great gladneſs to me, through the Event of the ſame (being it ſelf very great, and ſo holy, ſo profitable to the whole Church, ſo healthful to this my Country which brought me forth, ſo honourable to the ſame which received me:) So likewiſe I took no leſs rejoycing of the Princes themſelves, through whoſe Vertue and Godlineſs the matter did take ſucceſs and perfection. Of how many, and how great things may the Church (which is the Spouſe of Chriſt, and our Mother) make her Account through thoſe her Children? Oh notable Zeal of Godlineſs! Oh Ancient Faith! which undoubtedly doth ſo manifeſtly appear in them both, that whoſo ſeeth them, muſt needs (whether he will or no) ſay the ſame which the Prophet ſpake of the firſt Children of the Church; Iſti ſunt ſemen cui benedixit Dominus. Hæc plantatio Domini ad gloriandum. That is, Theſe are the Seed which the Lord hath bleſſed. This is the Lords planting to glory in. How holily did your Holineſs with all your Authority and earneſt Affection favour this Marriage? which truly ſeemeth to expreſs a great ſimilitude of the Higheſt King, which being Heir of the World, was ſent down by his Father from the Regal Seat to be Spouſe and Son of the Virgin, and by this means to comfort all Mankind: For even ſo this King himſelf, the greateſt Heir of all Men which are in the Earth, leaving his Fathers Kingdoms that are moſt great, is come into this little Kingdom, and is become both the Spouſe and Son of this Virgin, (for he ſo behaveth himſelf as though he were a Son, whereas indeed he is a Husband) that he might, as he hath in effect already performed, ſhew himſelf an Aider and Helper to reconcile this People to Chriſt, and his Body, which is the Church. Which things, ſeeing they are ſo, what may not our Mother the Church her ſelf look for at his hands, that hath brought this to paſs, to convert the Hearts of the Fathers towards their Sons, and the Unbelievers to the Wiſdom of the Righteous? which Vertue truly, doth wonderfully ſhine in him. But the Queen, which at that time, when your Holineſs ſent me Legate unto her, did riſe up as a Rod of Incenſe ſpringing out of the Trees of Mirrhe, and as Frankincenſe out of the Deſert; She, I ſay, which a little before was forſaken of all men, how wonderfully doth ſhe now ſhine? What a Savour of Mirrhe and Frankincenſe doth ſhe give forth unto her People? which (as the Prophet ſaith of the Mother of Chriſt) brought forth before ſhe laboured, before ſhe was delivered brought forth a Man-Child: Who ever heard of ſuch a thing? and who hath ſeen the like of this? Shall the Earth bring forth in one day, or ſhall a whole Nation be brought forth together? But ſhe now hath brought forth a whole Nation before the time of that Delivery, whereof we are in moſt great Hope.

"The Popes Authority as much welcom to the Nobility of England, as water into the Ship.

Oh diſſimulation of a flattering Cardinal!

What ſimilitude is betwixt light and darkneſs? 2 Cor. 6.

Cardinal Poole flattereth the King.

Scripture well applyed.

How

How great cauſe is given to us to rejoyce? How great cauſe have we to give thanks to Gods Mercy, your Holineſs, and the Emperors Majeſty, which have been Cauſers of ſo Happy and ſo Godly a Marriage; by which we being reconciled, are joyned to God the Father, to Chriſt, and to the Church? of the which although I cannot comprehend in words the Joy that I have taken, yet I cannot keep ſilence of it. And to this my rejoycing this alſo was joyned (which when I had perceived by the Letters of the Reverend Archbiſhop of Comſane, your Holineſs Nuncio with the Emperors Majeſty, brought me marvellous great gladneſs) that your ſaid Holineſs began to reſtore to the Ancient Beauty thoſe things, which in the Church of Rome through the corruption of times were deformed, which truly, when it ſhall be finiſhed, then indeed may we well cry out with the Prophet, and ſpeak unto your Holineſs with theſe words, Exue te ſtolâ luctus & vexationis, & indue te decore, qui à Deo tibi eſt in gloria ſempiterna: nominabitur enim tibi nomen tuum à Deo ſempiternum, pax juſtitiæ & honor pietatis. Tum autem dicetur, Circumſpice & vide collectos filios tuos ab oriente ſole uſque in occidentem, verbo ſancto gaudentem. That is, Put off the ſtole of Sorrow and Vexation, and put on Comlineſs, which thou haſt of God in everlaſting Glory. For thy Name ſhall be named of God everlaſting, peace of righteouſneſs, and honour of Godlineſs; and then it ſhall be ſaid, Look about and ſee thy Sons gathered together from the Sun-riſing, to the going down of the ſame, rejoycing in the Holy Word. There is nothing truly (to ſpeak of thy Children gathered together in the Weſt, which prepare themſelves to meet their Mother) which they had rather ſee, than her apparelled (that I may uſe the words of the Prophet) in that Garment of Righteouſneſs wherewith God adorned her in times paſt. This one thing remaineth, That your Holineſs Joy, and the Joy of all the Univerſal Church may be perfected, which, together with us her unworthy Children, ceaſeth not to pray to God for it. The Almighty God preſerve your Holineſs long to continue in Health for the profit of his Church. From London the laſt of November, 1554.

Your moſt humble Servant
Reginald Poole, Cardinal.

The Scripture ſpeaking of Sion and Jeruſalem, unaptly applyed to the Pope.

December 2. A Sermon of Stephen Gardiner preached at Pauls Croſs.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 2. of December, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Lord Chancellor of England, preached at Pauls Croſs, at which Sermon was preſent the King and Cardinal Poole. He took for his Theam this part of the Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Romans the 13. Chapter, This alſo we know the Seaſon (brethren) that we ſhould now awake out of ſleep, for now is our Salvation nearer, than when we believed, &c. Some Notes whereof as they came to my hands faithfully gathered (as it appeareth by ſundry Copies) I have here thought good to ſet forth.

A dreaming Sermon of the B. of Wincheſter.

Firſt, He ſhewed how the ſaying of S. Paul was verified upon the Gentiles, who had a long time ſlept in dark Ignorance, not knowing God: Therefore S. Paul (quoth he) to ſtir up their heavy dulneſs, willed them to awake out of their long ſleep, becauſe their Salvation was nearer, than when they believed. In amplifying this matter, and comparing our times with theirs, he took occaſion to declare what difference the Jewiſh Sacraments had from theſe of the Chriſtians, wherein he uſed theſe words:

Even as the Sacrament of the Jews did declare Chriſt to come, ſo do our Sacraments declare Chriſt to be already come: But Chriſt to come, and Chriſt to be come, is not all one. For now that he is come, the Jews Sacraments be done away, and ours only remain, which declare that he is already come, and is nearer us, than he was to the Fathers of the Old Law: For they had him but in Signs, but we have him in the Sacrament of the Altar, even his very Body. Wherefore now alſo it is time that we awake out of our ſleep, who have ſlept, or rather dreamed theſe twenty years paſt, as ſhall more eaſily appear by declaring at large ſome of the Properties and Effects of a Sleep or a Dream. And firſt, As Men intending to ſleep, do ſeparate themſelves from company, and deſire to be alone; even ſo have we ſeparated our ſelves from the Sea Apoſtolick of Rome: and have been alone, no Realm in Chriſtendom like us.

Secondly, as in ſleep Men dream ſometime of killing, ſometime of maiming, ſometime of drowning, or burning, ſometime of ſuch beaſtlineſs as I dare not name, but will ſpare your Ears: So we have in this our ſleep not only dreamed of Beaſtlineſs, but we have done it indeed. For in this our ſleep hath not one Brother deſtroyed another? Hath not half our Money been wiped away at one time? And again, thoſe that would defend their Conſcience, were ſlain, and others alſo otherwiſe troubled; beſides infinite other things, which you all know as well as I, whereof I report me to your own Conſciences. Further, in a mans ſleep all his Senſes are ſtopped, ſo that he can neither ſee, ſmell, nor hear: Even ſo whereas the Ceremonies of the Church were inſtituted to move and ſtir up our Senſes, they being taken away, were not our Senſes (as ye would ſay) ſtopped, and we faſt aſleep? Moreover, when a man would gladly ſleep, he will put out the Candle, leſt peradventure it may let his ſleep, and awake him: So of late all ſuch Writers as did hold any thing with the Apoſtolick See, were condemned, and forbidden to be read; and Images (which were "Lay-mens Books) were caſt down and broken.

Anno 1554.

Wincheſter very expert (as appeareth) in Ghoſtly Dreams.

Who puteth out the Candle, but they which extinguiſh Gods Word, and forbid the Scriptures, that ſhould give us Light? "They forbid Lay-mens Books, but you forbid the Book of God.

The Sleep hath continued with us theſe twenty years, and we all that while without a Head. For when King Henry did firſt take upon him to be Head of the Church, it was then no Church at all. After whoſe death, King Edward (having over him Governours and Protectors which ruled as them liſted), could not be Head of the Church, but was only a Shadow or Sign of a Head: And at length it came to paſs, that we had no Head at all; no, not ſo much as our two Archbiſhops. For on the one ſide, the Queen being a Woman, could not be Head of the Church; and on the other ſide, they both were convicted of one Crime, and ſo depoſed. Thus, while we deſired to have a Supream Head among us, it came to paſs, that we had no Head at all. When the Tumult was in the North in the time of K. Henry the Eighth (I am ſure) the K. was determined to have given over the Supremacy again to the Pope; but the hour was not then come, and therefore it went not forward, leſt ſome would have ſaid, that he did it for Fear.

Then belike Chriſt is no Head at all to give life to his Church, unleſs the Popes Head alſo be clapt on the Churches Shoulders.

After this, Mr. Knevet and I were ſent Ambaſſadors unto the Emperor, to deſire him that he would be a Mean between the Popes Holineſs and the King, to bring the King to the obedience of the See of Rome, but the time was not yet come. For it might have been ſaid, that it had been done for a Civil Policy. Again, in the beginning of King Edwards Reign the matter was moved, but the Time was not yet: For it would have been ſaid, that the King (being but a Child) had been bought and ſold. Neither in the beginning of the Queens Reign was the hour come; for it would have been ſaid, that it was done in a time of weakneſs. Likewiſe when the K. firſt came, if it had been done, they might have ſaid it had been by Force and Violence. But now, even now, "hora eſt, the hour is come, when nothing can be objected, but that it is the meer Mercy and Providence of God. Now hath the Popes Holineſs, Pope Julius the 3*d*. ſent unto us this Moſt Reverend Father, Cardinal Poole, an Ambaſſador from his ſide. What to do? Not to revenge the Injuries done by us againſt his Holineſs, ſed benedicere maledicentibus, to give his Benediction to thoſe that defamed and perſecuted him.

"Ignoto poteſtas tenebraram.

Stephen Gardiner claweth the Cardinal.

And that we may be the more meet to receive the ſaid Benediction, I ſhall deſire you that we may alway acknowledge our ſelves offenders againſt his Holineſs; I do not exclude my ſelf forth of the number. I will flere cum flentibus, & gaudere cum gaudentibus; That is, Weep with them that weep, and rejoyce with them that rejoyce. And I ſhall deſire you, that we may defer the matter no longer; for now, hora eſt, the hour is come. The King and Queens Majeſties have already reſtored our Holy Father the Pope to his Supremacy, and the three Eſtates aſſembled in the Parliament, repreſenting the whole Body of the Realm, have alſo ſubmitted themſelves to his Holineſs, and his Succeſſors "for ever, wherefore let us not any longer ſtay. And even as Saint Paul ſaid to the Corinthians, that he was their Father, ſo may the Pope ſay, that he is our Father: For we received our Doctrine firſt from Rome, therefore he may challenge us as his own. We have all cauſe to rejoyce, for his Holineſs hath ſent hither and prevented us, before we ſought him:

Note how the meaning of S. Pauls words are here applied "For ever, Wincheſter a falſe Prophet. S. Paul, though he were the Father of many Churches in Chriſt Jeſus, yet was he never ſo arrogant to take upon him to be Supream Head of any Church, but left that ſolely to Chriſt, and laboured to bring all under him.

ſuch

Anno 1554.

ſuch Care hath he for us. Therefore let us ſay, Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea, Rejoyce in this Day, which is of the Lords working, that ſuch a Noble Birth is come, yea, ſuch a Holy Father (I mean my Lord Cardinal Pool) which can ſpeak unto us as unto Brethren, and not as unto Strangers, who hath a long time been abſent. And let us now awake, which ſo long have ſlept, and in our ſleep have done ſo much naughtineſs againſt the Sacraments of Chriſt, denying the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and pulled down the "Altar, which thing Luther himſelf would not do, but rather reproved them that did, examining them of their belief in Chriſt.

"So Chriſt pulled down the Hill Altars, which Manaſſes afterward did ſet up: and yet we commend the doings of Ezechias, and diſprove the fact of the other.

This was the Sum of his Sermon before his Prayers, wherein he prayed firſt for the Pope, Pope Julius the Third, with all his Colledge of Cardinals, the Biſhop of London, with the reſt of that Order; then for the King and Queen, and the Nobility of this Realm; and laſt, for the Commons of the ſame, with the Souls departed, lying in the pains of Purgatory. This ended, the time being late, they began in Pauls to ring to their Evening Song, whereby the Preacher could not be well heard, which cauſed him to make a ſhort end of his Clerkly Sermon.

About this very time a Poſt or Meſſenger was ſent from the whole Parliament to the Pope, to deſire him to confirm and eſtabliſh the Sale of Abby-lands and Chauntry-lands; For the Lords and the Parliament would grant nothing in the Popes behalf, before their Purchaſes were fully confirmed.

Decemb. 6. The Chapter of Pauls abſolved by the Cardinal.

Upon the Thurſday following, being the 6 day of December, and Saint Nicholas day, all the whole Convocation, both Biſhops and others, were ſent for to Lambeth to the Cardinal, who the ſame day forgave them all their Perjurations, Schiſms, and Hereſies, and they all there kneeled down and received his Abſolution, and after an Exhortation and Gratulation for their Converſion to the Catholick Church made by the Cardinal, they departed.

Decemb 11. The Queſtmen of Mr. Throgmorton put to their Fine, and delivered.

Upon the Wedneſday, being the 12. of December, five of the eight men which lay in the Fleet, that were of Maſter Throgmortons Queſt, were diſcharged, and ſet at liberty upon their Fine paid, which was 220 pound a piece; and the other three put up a Supplication, therein declaring, that their Goods did not amount to the Sum that they were appointed to pay; and ſo upon that Declaration paying 40 li. a piece, they were delivered out of Priſon upon St. Thomas day before Chriſtmaſs, being the 21. of December.

Decemb. 22.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 22. of December, all the whole Parliament had ſtrict commandment, that none of them ſhould depart into their Countrey this Chriſtmaſs, nor before the Parliament were ended. Which commandment was wonderful contrary to their Expectations. For as well many of the Lords, as alſo many of the Inferiour ſort had ſent for their Horſes, and had them brought hither.

Decemb. 28.

Upon the Friday following, being the 28. of December, and Childermaſs day, the Prince of Piedmont came to the Court at Weſtminſter.

ANNO 1555.

January. M. Roſe with 30. perſons taken at a Communion in Bow-Churchyard.

UPon New-years day at Night following, certain Honeſt Men and Women of the City, to the Number of 30. and a Miniſter with them named Maſter Roſe, were taken as they were in a Houſe in Bow-Church-Yard at the Communion, and the ſame Night they were all committed to Priſon And on the Thurſday following, being the 3. day of January, M. Roſe was before the B. of Wincheſter, being Lord Chancellor, and from thence the ſame day he was committed to the Tower, after certain Communication had between the Biſhop and him.

January 3.

The Act of Supremacy paſſed in the Parliament.

The ſame day the Act of Supremacy paſt in the Parliament. Alſo the ſame day at Night was a great Tumult between Spaniards and Engliſh-men at Weſtminſter, whereof was like to have enſued a great Miſchief through a Spaniſh Frier, which got into the Church and rung Alarum. The Occaſion was about two Whores which were in the Cloyſter at Weſtminſter with a ſort of Spaniards, whereof, whilſt ſome plaid the Knaves with them, other ſome did keep the Entry of the Cloyſter with Dags in harneſs. In the mean time certain of the Deans Men came into the Cloyſter, and the Spaniards diſcharged their Dags at them, and hurt ſome of them. By and by the Noiſe of this doing came into the Streets, ſo that the whole Town was up almoſt, but never a ſtroke was ſtricken. Notwithſtanding the Noiſe of this doing with the Deans Men, and alſo the ringing of the Alarum, made much ado, and a great Number alſo to be ſore afraid.

A ſtir between the Spaniards and Engliſh-men at Weſtminſter.

Ye heard a little before the Councels Letter ſent to Biſhop Boner, ſignifying the good News of Queen Mary to be not only conceived, but alſo quick with Child, which was in the Month of November, the 28. day. Of this Child great talk began at this time to riſe in every Mans Mouth, with buſie preparation, and much ado, eſpecially amongſt ſuch as ſeemed in England to carry Spaniſh Hearts in Engliſh Bodies. In Number of whom here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condign Commendation for his worthy Affection toward his Prince and her Iſſue, one Sir Richard Southwell, who being the ſame time in the Parliament-houſe, whenas the Lords were occupied in other Affairs and Matters of Importance, ſuddenly ſtarting up, for fulneſs of Joy burſt out in theſe Words following: Tuſh my Maſters, quoth he, what talk ye of theſe Matters? I would have you take ſome Order for our Maſter that is now coming into the World apace, leſt he find us unprovided, &c. By the which words both of him, and alſo by the foreſaid Letters of the Councel, & the common talk abroad, it may appear what an aſſured Opinion was then conceived in mens Heads of Q. Mary to be conceived and quick with Child. Inſomuch that at the ſame time, and in the ſame Parliament there was eftſoons a Bill exhibited, and an Act made upon the ſame, the words whereof, for the more evidence, I thought good here to exemplifie, as followeth.

The words of Sir Rich. Southwell in the Parliament-houſe.

The Words of the Act.

Ex ſtat. an. 1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. cap.

ALbeit we the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, have firm hope and confidence in the Goodneſs of Almighty God, that like as he hath hitherto miraculouſly preſerved the Queens Majeſty from many great imminent Perils and Dangers; even ſo he will of his Infinite Goodneſs give her Highneſs ſtrength, the rather by our continual Prayers, to paſs well the danger of deliverance of Child, wherewith it hath pleaſed him (to all our great comforts) to bleſs her: yet forſomuch as all things of this World be uncertain, and having before our eyes the dolorous experience of this inconſtant Government, during the time of the Reign of the late King Edward the Sixth, do plainly ſee the manifold Inconveniences, great Dangers and Perils that may enſue in this whole Realm, if foreſight be not uſed to prevent all evil Chances, if they ſhould happen: For the eſchewing hereof, we the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, for and in conſideration of a moſt ſpecial Truſt and Confidence that we have and repoſe in the Kings Majeſty, for and concerning the Politick Government, Order, and Adminiſtration of this Realm in the time of the young years of the Iſſue or Iſſues of her Majeſties Body to be born, if it ſhould pleaſe God to call the Queens Highneſs out of this preſent Life, during the tender years of ſuch Iſſue or Iſſues (which God forbid) according to ſuch order and manner, as hereafter in this preſent Act his Highneſs moſt Gracious Pleaſure is, ſhould be declared and ſet forth, have made our humble Suit, by the Aſſent of the Queens Highneſs, that his Majeſty would vouchſafe to accept and take upon him the Rule, Order, Education, and Government of the ſaid Iſſue or Iſſues to be born, as is aforeſaid: Upon which our Suit, being of his ſaid Majeſty moſt graciouſly accepted, it hath pleaſed his Highneſs not only to declare, That like as for the moſt part his Majeſty verily truſteth that Almighty God (who hath hitherto preſerved the Queens Majeſty, to give this Realm ſo good an Hope of certain Succeſſion in the Blood Royal of the ſame Realm) will aſſiſt her Highneſs with his Graces and Benedictions, to ſee the Fruit of her Body well brought forth, live, and able to govern (whereof neither all this Realm, nay all the World beſides, ſhould or could receive more Comfort than his Majeſty ſhould and would) yet if ſuch chance ſhould happen, his Majeſty at our humble Deſires is pleaſed and contented, not only to accept and take upon him the cure and charge of the Education, Rule, Order, and Government of ſuch Iſſues as of this

The Judgement of the Parliament deceived in Gods bleſſing.

Order taken by Parliament for Q. Maries Child.

Truſt diſappointed.

this moſt happy Marriage ſhall be born between the Queens Highneſs and him; but alſo, during the time of ſuch Government, would by all ways and means, ſtudy, travel, and imploy himſelf to advance the Weal both publick and private of this Realm and Dominion thereunto belonging, according to the ſaid Truſt in his Majeſty repoſed, with no leſs good will and affection, than if his Highneſs had been naturally born amongſt us. In conſideration whereof, be it Enacted by the King and the Queens moſt Excellent Majeſties, by the aſſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, &c. As it is to be ſeen in the Act more at large ratified and confirmed at the ſame Parliament, to the ſame intent and Purpoſe.

¶ Thus much out of the Act and Statute I thought to rehearſe, to the intent the Reader may underſtand not ſo much how Parliaments may ſometimes be deceived (as by this Child of Q. Mary may appear) as rather what cauſe we Engliſhmen have to render moſt earneſt thanks unto Almighty God, who ſo mercifully, againſt the opinion, expectation, and working of our Adverſaries, hath helped and delivered us in this caſe, which otherwiſe might have opened ſuch a Window to the Spaniards, to have entred and repleniſhed this Land, that peradventure by this time Engliſhmen ſhould have enjoyed no great quiet in their own Countrey: The Lord therefore make us perpetually mindful of his Benefits: Amen.

Thus we ſee then how man doth purpoſe, but God diſpoſeth as pleaſeth him. For all this great Labour, Proviſion and Order taken in the Parliament-houſe for their Young Maſter long looked for, coming ſo ſurely into the World, in the end appeared neither young Maſter, nor young Miſtreſs, that any Man yet to this day can hear of. Furthermore, as the labour of the Lay-ſort was herein deluded; ſo no leſs ridiculous it was to behold, what little Effect the Prayers of the Popes Churchmen had with Almighty God, who travelled no leſs with their Proceſſions, Maſſes and Collects, for the happy deliverance of this young Maſter to come, as here followeth to be ſeen.

The Prayers of the Papiſts, of what little effect they are with God.

A Prayer made by Dr. Weſton Dean of Weſtminſter, daily to be ſaid for the Queens deliverance.

A prayer for Queen Mary and her Child, turned out of Latin into Engliſh.

O Moſt Righteous Lord God, which for the Offence of the firſt Woman, haſt threatned unto all Women a common ſharp, and inevitable malediction, and hath enjoyned them that they ſhould conceive in ſin, and being conceived, ſhould be ſubject to many and grievous torments; and finally, be delivered with the danger and jeopardy of their Lives: We beſeech thee for thine exceeding great goodneſs and bottomleſs mercy, to mitigate the ſtrictneſs of that Law. Aſſwage thine anger for a while, and cheriſh in the boſam of thy favour and mercy our moſt Gracious Queen Mary, being now at the point to be delivered. So help her, that without danger of her Life ſhe may overcome the ſorrow, and in due ſeaſon bring forth a Child, in Body beautiful and Comely, in mind Noble and Valiant. So that afterward, ſhe, forgetting the trouble, may with joy, laud and praiſe the bountifulneſs of thy Mercy, and, together with us, praiſe and bleſs both thee and thy Holy Name World without end. This, O Lord, we deſire thee, we beſeech thee, and moſt heartily crave of thee. Hear us, O Lord, and grant us our Petition: Let not the Enemies of thy Faith, and of thy Church ſay, Where is their God?

A ſolemn Prayer made for King Philip and Queen Maries Child, that it may be a Male-child, welfavoured, and witty, &c.

A devout Prayer made by the Catholicks for Q. Mary, being great and quick with Child.

O Moſt Mighty Lord God, which regardeſt the Prayer of the humble, and deſpiſeſt not their Requeſt; bow down from thine high Habitation of the Heavens, the eyes of thy Mercy unto us wretched Sinners, bowing the knees of our Hearts, and with many and deep Sighs bewailing our ſins and offences, humbly with eyes intent, and hands diſplayed, praying and beſeeching thee, with the ſhield of thy Protection, to defend Mary thy Servant, and our Q. who hath none other Helper but thee, and whom, through thy Grace, thou haſt willed to be conceived with Child: and at the time of her travel graciouſly with the help of thy right Hand deliver her, and from all danger, with the Child in her conceived, mercifully preſerve.

Anno 1554.

It hath ſeemed good in thy ſight, merciful Father, by thy Servant Mary, to work theſe Wonders; that is to ſay, In her hands to vanquiſh and overthrow the ſtout Enemy, and to deliver us, thy People, out of the hands of "Hereticks, Infidels, Enemies to thee, and to the Croſs of thy beloved Son Jeſus Chriſt, that of thy Servant thou mighteſt ſpeak in far Countries. Therefore for theſe wonderful works, which thou doſt to thy Servants, thou art magnified Lord God, for ever, and we thy People bleſs thee the God of Heaven, which hath wrought upon us this great Mercy, and hath excluded from us the Heretick, the Enemy of Truth, the Perſecutor of thy Church. We know, we know, that we have grievouſly (Lord) ſinned, that we have been deceived by vanity, and that we have forſaken thee our God. Our Iniquities be multiplied on our Head, and our ſins be increaſed up to Heaven: and we our ſelves having offended, and our Princes and our Prieſts, for theſe our Sins, have deſerved an Hypocrite to our Prince, our Sins have deſerved a Tyrant to our Governour, that ſhould bring our life to bitterneſs. We be not worthy to have ſo gentle and merciful a Queen, ſo godly a Ruler, and finally, ſo vertuous a Prince; at the very beginning of whoſe Reign, a new Light, as it were, of Gods Religion ſeemed to us for to ſpring and riſe. The Jews did bleſs the Widow Judith with one voice, ſaying, Thou art the glory of Jeruſalem, thou art the joy of Iſrael, thou art the honour of our People, for that thou haſt loved Chaſtity, and thou ſhalt be bleſſed for ever.

"The Papiſts call the Proteſtants Hereticks and Enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt, even as Achab called Elias the diſturber of Iſrael, when he was only the Diſturber himſelf.

Q. Mary compared of the Papiſts to Widow Judith.

And we the Engliſh People with one agreeable conſent do cry; Thou Mary art the glory of England, our joy, the honour of thy People, for that thou haſt embraced Chaſtity; thine heart is ſtrengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thee, and therefore thou ſhalt be bleſſed for ever. But bow down, O moſt merciful Father, thine Ear, and open thine Eyes, and behold our Affliction, and our humble Confeſſion. Thou knoweſt, Lord, that againſt Philip, not by Human, but by thy Ordinance our King, and againſt thy Servant Mary, by thy Providence our Queen, the Reſtorers and Maintainers of thy Teſtament of the Faith, and moſt conſtant Defenders of thy Church: Thou knoweſt, I ſay, that againſt theſe our two Governors, the enemies of thy Holy "Teſtament, and of the Church thy Spouſe, be moſt rank Rebels and ſpiteful Murmurers, walking after their Luſts, whoſe mouth ſpeaketh words of Pride, to the end they may ſet up the Kingdom of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. By the Power of their hands they "would change thy Promiſes, and deſtroy thine Inheritance, and ſtop and ſhut up the mouths of them that praiſe thee, and extinguiſh the glory of thy Catholick Church and Altar.

Mark how forgetting his Prayer, he falleth to the praiſing of Q. Mary.

"The Teſtament ſeeketh up only the Glory of Chriſt.

It is manifeſt and plain, how many Contentions, how many Conſpiracies and Seditions, how great Wars, what Tumults, how many and how great trouble ſome Vexations, how many Hereſies and Schiſms (for theſe be the moſt ready devices, and evident tokens of Hereticks) for our Sins do hang over us, if thy Servant be taken from this Life: for we acknowledge that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwelling-place in the midſt of his People, to the intent to deliver us out of the hands of our Enemies. Turn therefore thy Countenance unto us, ſhew unto us, O Lord, thy face. Puniſh us for our Sins according to thy Will and Pleaſure, only now deliver us. We bowing the knees of our heart, beſeech thee, that thou wilt not reſerve unto us puniſhment for ever, and we ſhall praiſe thee all the days of our life. Hear our cry, and the Prayer of thy People, and open to them the treaſure of thy Mercy, thy gracious Favour, the Spring of Lively Water. Thou that haſt begun, make in the hand of thy Servant a perfect work. Suffer not, we pray thee, the "faithleſs Rebels to ſay of thy Servant and her Councellors, that they have deviſed matters which they cannot perform. And grant unto thy Servant an happy and an eaſie Travel. For it is not impoſſible to thy Power, nor indecent to thy Juſtice, nor unwonted to thy Mercy.

"If the changing of Gods promiſes, deſtroying his inheritance, ſtopping the mouths of Gods people if contentions, wars, & ſchiſms be tokens of Hereticks, who ſo great Hereticks as the Papiſts?

"Cry up louder you Prieſts, peradventure your God is aſleep.

It is well known unto us, how marvellouſly thou didſt work in Sarah of the Age of 90. Years, and in Elizabeth the barren, and alſo far ſtricken in Age: For thy Counſel is not in the Power of men. Thou Lord that art the Searcher of Hearts and Thoughts, thou knoweſt that thy Servant never luſted after Man, never gave her ſelf to wanton wanton Company, nor made her ſelf Partaker with them that walk in lightneſs: But ſhe conſented to take an Huſband with thy fear, and not with her luſt. Thou knoweſt that thy Servant took an Husband not for carnal pleaſure, but only for the deſire and love of Poſterity, wherein thy Name might be bleſſed for ever and ever. Give therefore unto thy Servants, Philip our King, and Mary our Queen, a Male Iſſue, which may ſit in the Seat of thy Kingdom. Give unto our Queen thy Servant, a little Infant, in faſhion and body comely and beautiful, in pregnant wit notable and excellent.

"It is not beſt ſuch a one to be granted unto you, for being like Abraham, Joſeph, Moſes and Solomon, he may chance to ſpell out your corrupt Doctrine, and to deteſt your bloody tyranny, &c.

Grant the ſame to be in obedience like "Abraham, in hoſpitality like Lot, in chaſtity and brotherly love like Joſeph, in meekneſs and mildneſs like Moſes, in ſtrength and valour like Sampſon. Let him be found faithful as David after thy Heart. Let him be wiſe among Kings as the moſt wiſe Solomon. Let him be like Job, a ſimple and an upright man, fearing God, and eſchewing evil. Let him finally be garniſhed with the comlineſs of all Vertuous conditions, and in the ſame let him wax old and live, that he may ſee his Childrens Children to the third and fourth generation. And give unto our Soveraign Lord and Lady, King Philip and Queen Mary, thy Bleſſings and long life upon Earth; and grant that of them may come Kings and Queens, which may ſtedfaſtly continue in Faith, Love, and Holineſs. And bleſſed be their Seed of our God, that all Nations may know, thou art only God in all the Earth, which art bleſſed for ever and ever: Amen.

Another Prayer for Queen Mary, and her conceived Child.

Another Prayer for the ſame.

O Almighty Father, which didſt ſanctifie the Bleſſed Virgin and Mother Mary in her Conception, and in the Birth of Chriſt our Saviour thine only Son: Alſo by thine Omnipotent Power didſt ſafely deliver the Prophet Jonas out of the Whales Belly: Defend, O Lord, we beſeech thee, thy ſervant Mary, our Queen, with Child conceived, and ſo viſit her, in and with thy Godly Gift of health that not only the Child thy Creature, within her contained, may joyfully come from her into this World, and receive the Bleſſed Sacraments of Baptiſm and Confirmation, enjoying therewith daily increaſe of all Princely and Gracious Gifts both of Body and Soul; but that alſo ſhe the Mother, through thy ſpecial Grace and Mercy, may in time of her Travel avoid all exceſſive Dolor and Pain, and abide perfect and ſure from all peril and danger of Death, with long and proſperous Life, through Chriſt our Lord: Amen.

January 10.

It followeth now further in proceſs of the Story, that upon the Tueſday, being the 10. of January, nineteen of the Lower Houſe of the Parliament with the Speaker, came to the Whitehal to the King, and offered him the Government of the Realm and of the Iſſue, if the Queen ſhould fail, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament within ten days after.

January 28. The Popes Supremacy eſtabliſhed by Parliament.

Upon Wedneſday following, being the 28. of January, the Parliament was clean diſſolved. In this Parliament amongſt other tidings, the Biſhop of Rome was eſtabliſhed, and all ſuch Laws as were made againſt him ſince the twentieth Year of K. Henry the 8th. were repealed, and alſo Cardinal Poole, Biſhop Pates, Lilly, and other were reſtored to their Blood.

Matters concluded in the Parliament.

Alſo there was an Act made for ſpeaking of Words; That whoever ſhould ſpeak any thing againſt the King, or Queen, or that might move any Sedition or Rebellion, at the firſt time to have one of his Ears cut off, or to forfeit an hundred Marks; and at the ſecond time, to have both his Ears cut off, or elſe to forfeit an hundred pound; and whoſoever ſhould write, cypher, or print any of the Premiſſes, to have their Right Hand cut off.

Three Statutes againſt Hereticks revived.

Alſo in this Parliament three Statutes were revived for trial of Hereſie: one made in the fifth year of R. 2. another in the ſecond year of H. 4. and the third in the ſecond year of H. 5. Alſo the doing of M. Roſe, and the other that were with him, was communed of in this Parliament, and upon that occaſion an Act was made, That certain Evil Prayers ſhould be Treaſon againſt the Queens Highneſs. The Prayers of theſe men were thus; God turn the Heart of Q. Mary from Idolatry, or elſe ſhorten her days. Whereof read the Statute An. 1 & 2 Reg. Phil. & Mar. cap. 9.

As touching the taking of Mr. Roſe and his Fellows, word was brought thereof to Mr. Hooper, being then in the Fleet. Whereupon the ſaid Mr. Hooper ſendeth Anſwer again; with a Letter alſo of Conſolation ſent to the ſaid Priſoners; the Copy whereof I thought here not to overpaſs.

The Anſwer of Mr. Hooper to a Letter ſent unto him concerning certain Priſoners taken in Bow-Church-yard.

Mr. Hoopers anſwer to a certain Letter ſent unto him.

THe Grace of God be with you, Amen. I perceive by your Letter, how that upon New-years day at Night there were taken a godly company of Chriſtians, whilſt they were praying. I do rejoyce in that men can be ſo well occupied in this perilous time, and flee unto God for Remedy by Prayer, as well for their own lacks and neceſſities; as alſo charitably to pray for them that perſecute them. So doth the Word of God command all men to pray charitably for them that hate them, and not to revile any Magiſtrate with words, or to mean him Evil by force or violence. They alſo may rejoyce that in well-doing they were taken to the Priſon. Wherefore I have thought it good to ſend them this little Writing of Conſolation; praying God to ſend them patience, charity, and conſtancy in the Truth of his moſt Holy Word. Thus fare you well, and pray God to ſend his true Word into this Realm again amongſt us, which the ungodly Biſhops have now baniſhed. Jan. 4. An. 1555.

A Letter of Conſolation ſent from Mr. Hooper to the Godly Brethren taken in Bow-Church-yard in Prayer, and laid in the Counter in Breadſtreet.

A Letter of Mr. Hooper full of moſt heavenly conſolation.

THe Grace, Favour, Conſolation, and aid of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you now and ever: So be it.

Dearly beloved in the Lord, ever ſince your Impriſonment I have been marvellouſly moved with great affections and paſſions, as well of Mirth and Gladneſs, as of Heavineſs and Sorrow. Of Gladneſs in this, that I perceived how ye be bent and given to Prayer and Invocation of Gods help in theſe dark and wicked Proceedings of men againſt Gods Glory. I have been ſorry to perceive the malice and wickedneſs of men to be ſo cruel, deviliſh, and tyrannical to perſecute the People of God for ſerving of God, ſaying and hearing of the holy Pſalms, and the Word of eternal life. Theſe cruel doings do declare, that the Papiſts Church is more bloody and tyrannical, than ever was the Sword of the Ethnicks and Gentiles.

Of this perſecution read before.

When I heard of your taking, and what ye were doing, wherefore, and by whom ye were taken, I remembred how the Chriſtians in the Primitive Church were uſed by the cruelty of unchriſtned Heathens, in the time of Trajan the Emperor, about 77. years after Chriſts Aſcenſion into Heaven: and how the Chriſtians were perſecuted very ſore, as though they had been Traytors and Movers of Sedition. Whereupon the gentle Emperor Trajan required to know the true Cauſe of Chriſtian mens trouble. A great learned Man called Plinius, wrote unto him, and ſaid; It was becauſe the Chriſtians ſaid certain Pſalms before day unto one called Chriſt, whom they worſhipped for God. When Trajan the Emperor underſtood it was for nothing but for Conſcience and Religion, he cauſed by his Commandments every where, That no man ſhould be perſecuted for ſerving of God. But the Pope and his Church hath caſt you into Priſon, being taken even doing the Work of God, and one of the excelleneſt Works that is required of Chriſtian Men: that is to wit, whilſt ye were in Prayer, and not in ſuch wicked and ſuperſtitious Prayers as the Papiſts uſe, but in the ſame Prayer that Chriſt hath taught you to pray. And in his Name only ye gave God thanks for that ye have received, and for his Sake ye asked for ſuch things as ye want. O, glad may ye be that ever ye were born, to be apprehended whilſt ye were ſo vertuouſly occupied. Bleſſed be they that ſuffer for Righteouſneſs ſake. For if God had ſuffered them that took your Bodies, then to have taken your Life alſo, now had you been following the Lamb in perpetual Joys, away from the Company and Aſſembly of Wicked men. But the Lord would not have you ſuddenly ſo to depart, but reſerveth you, glorioufly to ſpeak and maintain his Truth to the World.

The Pope worſe than Trajanus the Heathen Emperor.

Be ye not careful what ye ſhall ſay, for God will go out and in with you, and will be preſent in your Hearts, and in your Mouths to ſpeak his Wiſdom, although it ſeemeth ſeemeth Fooliſhneſs to the World. He that hath begun this good work in you, continue you in the ſame unto the end; and pray unto him that ye may fear him only, that hath power to kill both Body and Soul, and to caſt them into Hell-fire. Be of good comfort. All the Hairs of your Head are numbred, and there is not one of them can periſh, except your Heavenly Father ſuffer it to periſh. Now ye be in the field, and placed in the Fore-front of Chriſts Barrel. Doubtleſs it is a ſingular Favour of God, and a ſpecial Love of him towards you, to give you this foreward and preheminence, as a Sign that he truſteth you before others of his People. Wherefore (dear Brethren and Siſters) continually fight this Fight of the Lord. Your Cauſe is moſt juſt and godly, ye ſtand for the true Chriſt (who is after the Fleſh in Heaven) and for his true Religion and Honour, which is amply, fully, ſufficiently, and abundantly contained in the Holy Teſtament, ſealed with Chriſts own Blood. How much be ye bound to God who puts you in truſt with ſo Holy and juſt a Cauſe?

Mat. 10. Luke. 12.

The firſt onset of this perſecution given in Bow Church yard

Remember what lookers-on you have to ſee and behold you in your fight, God and all his Angels, who be ready always to take you up into Heaven, if ye be ſlain in his fight. Alſo you have ſtanding at your backs all the multitude of the Faithful, who ſhall take courage, ſtrength, and deſire to follow ſuch Noble and Valiant Chriſtians as you be. Be not afraid of your Adverſaries: for he that is in you, is ſtronger than he that is in them. Shrink not although it be pain to you, your pains be not now ſo great, as hereafter your Joyes ſhall be. Read the comfortable Chapters to the Romans 8. 10. 15, Hebrewes 11. 12. And upon your knees thank God that ever ye were accounted worthy to ſuffer any thing for his Names ſake. Read the ſecond Chapter of S. Lukes Goſpel, and there you ſhall ſee how the Shepheards that watched upon their ſheep all night, as ſoon as they heard that Chriſt was Born at Bethlem, by and by went to ſee him. They did not reaſon nor debate with themſelves, who ſhould keep the wolf from the ſheep in the mean time, but did as they were commanded, and committed their ſheep unto him, whoſe pleaſure they obeyed. So let us do now we be called, commit all other things to him that calleth us. He will take heed that all things ſhall be well. He will help the Husband, he will comfort the Wife, he will guide the ſervants, he will keep the Houſe, he will preſerve the goods; yea, rather than it ſhould be undone, he will waſh the diſhes, and rock the cradle. Caſt therefore all your care upon God for he careth for you.

1 John 4.

Comfort taken out of the Scriptures.

True obedience putteth no doubts.

All carefulnes to be caſt upon the Lord.

Beſides this, you may perceive by your Impriſonment, that your Adverſaries weapons againſt you be nothing but Fleſh, Blood, and Tyranny. For if they were able, they would mantain their wicked Religion by Gods Word: but for lack of that, they would Violently compel us as they cannot by Holy Scripture perſwade, becauſe the Holy Word of God, and all Chriſts doings be contrary unto them. I pray you, pray for me, and I will pray for you. And although we be aſſunder after the World, yet in Chriſt (I truſt) for ever joyning in the Spirit, and ſo ſhall meet in the Palace of the Heavenly Joys, after this ſhort and tranſitory life is ended. Gods Peace be with you. Amen. The 14. of January, 1555.

All the ſtrength of the Popes Religion ſtandeth in outward force.

January 18 Gentlemen delivered out of the Tower by the Queens pardon.

Upon the Friday following, being the 18. of January, all the Councel went unto the Tower, and there the ſame day diſcharged and ſet at liberty all the priſoners of the Tower, or the moſt part of them, namely, the late Duke of Northumberlands Sons, Ambroſe, Robert, and Henry; Sir Andrew Dudly, Sir John Rogers, Sir James Croftes, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, Sir Nicholas Arnal, Sir George Harper, Sir Edward Warner, Sir William Sentlow, Sir Gawen Carew, Maſter Gibbes, Cuthbert Vaugham, with many other.

January 22. The Preachers called before the B. of Winchester at St. Mary Overies.

Upon the Tueſday following, being the 22. of January, all the Preachers that were in priſon were called before the Biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Chancellor, and certain other, at the Biſhops Houſe at Saint Mary Overies. From whence (after Communication, being asked whether they would Convert and enjoy the Queens Pardon, or elſe ſtand to that they had taught; they all anſwered, that they would ſtand to that they had taught) they were committed to ſtreighter priſon than before they were, with Charge that none ſhould ſpeak with them.

Among the which Number of priſoners, one James George the ſame time died in priſon, being there in Bands for Religion and Righteouſneſs ſake; who therefore was exempted to be buried in the Popiſh Churchyard, and was buried in the Field. Anno 1555.

James George died in priſon, and was buried in the fields, January 23.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being the 23. of January, all the Biſhops with all the reſt of the Convocation Houſe were before the Cardinal at Lambeth, where he willed them to repair every man where his cure and Charge lay, exhorting them to intreat the people and their flock with all gentleneſs, and to endeavour themſelves to win the people rather by gentleneſs than by extremity and rigour, and ſo let them depart.

January 25. General Proceſſion for joy of the Realm's Converſion.

Upon the Friday following, being the 25. of January, and the day of the Converſion of Saint Paul, there was a General and Solemn Proceſſion thorow London, to give God thanks for their Converſion to the Catholick Church: wherein (to ſet out their Glorious pomp) there were fourſcore and ten Croſſes, 160. Prieſts and Clerks, who had every one of them Copes upon their backs, ſinging very luſtily. There followed alſo for the better eſtimation of the ſight, eight Biſhops, and laſt of all came Boner the Biſhop of London, carrying the Popiſh Pix under a Canopie.

Beſides, there was alſo preſent the Major, Aldermen, and all the Livery of every occupation. Moreover, the King alſo himſelf, and the Cardinal came to Pauls Church the ſame day. From whence after Maſs they returned to Weſtminſter again. As the King was entred the Church at the ſteps going up to the Quire, all the Gentlemen that of late were ſet at liberty out of the Tower, kneeled before the King, and offered unto him themſelves and their ſervices.

After the Proceſſion there was alſo commandment given to make Banfires at night. Whereupon did riſe among the people a doubtful talk why all this was done. Some ſaid it was that the Queen being (as they ſaid) with Child, might have a ſafe delivery. Others thought that it was for Joy that the Realm was joyned again to the See of Rome, which opinion, of both, ſeemed moſt true.

January 28. Commiſſion from the Cardinal to ſit upon the perſecuted Preachers for Religion.

Upon the Munday following, being the 28. of January, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the other Biſhops had Commiſſion from the Cardinal to ſit upon, and order, according to the Laws, all ſuch Preachers and Hereticks (as they termed them) as were in priſon, and according to this Commiſſion, the ſame day the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the other Biſhops, with certain of the Councel, ſate in S. Mary Overies Church and called before them theſe three, M. Hooper, M. Rogers, and Maſter Cardmaker, who where brought thither by the Sheriffs; from whence after Communication they were committed to priſon till the next day, but Cardmaker this day ſubmitted himſelf unto them.

January 29. M. Hooper and M. Rogers condemned.

Upon the Tueſday, being the 29. of January, Hooper, Rogers, Doctor Taylor, and Bradford were brought before them, where Sentence of Excommunication and Judgment Eccleſiaſtical was pronounced upon M. Hooper and M. Rogers, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who ſate as Judge in Caiphas ſeat, who drave them out of the Church, according to their law and order. Doctor Taylor and Bradford were committed to priſon till the next day.

January 30. Doctor Ferrar D. Taylor and M. Saunders condemned.

Upon the Wedneſday, being the 30. of January, Doctory Taylor, Doctor Crome, M. Bradford, M. Saunders, and Doctor Ferrar, ſometimes Biſhop of S. Davids, were before the ſaid Biſhops, where three of them, that is to ſay, Doctor Taylor, Maſter Saunders, and M. Bradford were likewiſe Excommunicated, and Sentence pronounced upon them, and ſo committed to the Sheriffs. D. Crome deſired two moneths reſpite, and it was granted him; and M. Ferrar was again committed to priſon till another time. All theſe men ſhewed themſelves to be learned, as indeed they were no leſs: but what availeth either learning, reaſon, or Truth it ſelf, where will beareth rule?

After the examination and Condemnation of theſe good men and Preachers above recited, Commiſſions and Inquiſitors were ſent abroad likewiſe into all Parts of the Realm: by reaſon whereof, a great number of moſt godly and true Chriſtians (out of all the quarters of the Realm, but eſpecially Kent, Eſſex, Northfolk and Suffolk) were apprehended,

Anno 1554. were apprehended, brought up to London, caſt into priſon, and afterward (moſt of them) either conſumed cruelly by fire, or elſe through evil handling died in the Priſons, and were buried on the Dung-Hills abroad in the Fields, or in ſome backſide of the Priſon. Of all which matters, concerning the Tragical handling of the bleſſed Martyrs and Witneſſes of Jeſus Chriſt, of all the Bloody Perſecution of this time, now followeth (the Lord ſo granting) ſeverally and more particularly in this next Book in order to be declared: after that I ſhall firſt recite a general Supplication, given up in the name of the Preachers aforeſaid lying in Priſon, unto the King and Queen, during the time of the Parliament, as followeth.

Unto the King and Queens moſt excellent Majeſties, and to their moſt Honourable and High Court of Parliament.

A Supplication of the perſecuted Preachers to the King and Queen.

IN moſt humble and lamentable wiſe complain unto your Majeſties, and to your High Court of Parliament, your poor deſolate and obedient Subjects: H. F. T. B. P. R. S. &c. That whereas your ſaid Subjects, living under the Laws of God, and of this Realm in the days of the late moſt noble King Edward the ſixth, did in all things ſhew themſelves true, faithful, and diligent Subjects, according to their vocation, as well in the ſincere miniſtring of Gods moſt Holy Word, as in due obedience to the higher Powers, and in the daily practice of ſuch vertues and good demeanour, as the Laws of God at all times, and the Statutes of the Realm did then allow: Your ſaid Subjects nevertheleſs, contrary to all Laws of Juſtice, Equity, and Right, are in very extream manner, not only caſt into Priſon (where they have remained, now theſe 15. or 16. Months) but their Livings alſo, their Houſes and Poſſeſſions, their Goods and Books taken from them, and they ſlandered to be moſt Hainous Hereticks, their Enemies themſelves being both Witneſſes, Accuſers, and Judges, belying, ſlandering, and miſ-reporting your ſaid Subjects at their pleaſure, whereas your ſaid Subjects, being ſtraightly kept in Priſon, cannot yet be ſuffered to come forth, and make anſwer accordingly.

The long impriſonment of the Chriſtian Preachers. Underly proceeding of the adverſaries againſt Gods people.

In conſideration whereof, it may pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſties, and this your High Court of Parliament, graciouſly to tender the preſent Calamity of your ſaid poor Subjects, and to call them before your Preſence, granting them liberty, either by Mouth or Writing in the plain Engliſh Tongue, to anſwer before you, or before indifferent Arbiters to be appointed by your Majeſties, unto ſuch Articles of controverſie in Religion as their ſaid Adverſaries have already condemned them of, as of Hainous Hereſies: Provided, that all things may be done with ſuch moderation and quiet behaviour, as becometh Subjects and Children of Peace, and that your ſaid Subjects may have the free uſe of all their own Books, and conference together among themſelves.

Requeſt of the Preachers to ſtand to the trial of their Doctrine before indifferent Judges.

Which thing being granted, your ſaid Subjects doubt not but it ſhall plainly appear, that your ſaid Subjects are true and Faithful Chriſtians, and neither Hereticks, neither Teachers of Hereſie, nor cut off from the true Catholick Univerſal Church of Chriſt: yea, that rather their Adverſaries themſelves be unto your Majeſties as were the Charmers of Egypt to Pharoah, Zedechias and his Adherents unto the King of Iſrael, and Barjeſu to the Proconſul Sergius Paulus. And if your ſaid Subjects be not able by the teſtimony of Chriſt, his Prophets, Apoſtles, and Godly Fathers of his Church, to prove, that the Doctrine of the Church, Homiles, and Service taught and ſet forth in the time of our late moſt godly Prince and King, Edward the ſixth, is the true Doctrine of Chriſts Catholick Church, and moſt agreeable to the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith; your ſaid Subjects offer themſelves then to the moſt heavy puniſhment, that it ſhall pleaſe your Majeſties to appoint.

Act. 13.

Wherefore for the tender Mercy of God in Chriſt (which you look for at the day of Judgment) your ſaid poor Subjects in Bonds moſt humbly beſeech your moſt excellent Majeſties, and this your High Court of Parliament, benignly and graciouſly to hear and grant this their Petition, tending ſo greatly to the Glory of God, to the edifying of his Church, to the Honour of your Majeſties, to the commendation and maintenance of Juſtice, Right, and Equity both before God and Man. And your ſaid Subjects, according to their bounden duty, ſhall not ceaſe to pray unto Almighty God for the Gracious preſervation of your moſt excellent Majeſties long to endure.

The end of the Tenth Book.

THE ELEVENTH BOOK:

WHEREIN

Is diſcourſed the bloody Murthering of God's Saints, with the particular Proceſſes and Names of ſuch good Martyrs, both Men and Women, as in this time of Queen MARY were put to Death.

The Story, Life, and Martyrdom of Mr. John Rogers.

February 4. The life and ſtory of Mr. John Rogers.

THE Fourth day of February ſuffered the conſtant Martyr of God, Maſter John Rogers, concerning whoſe Life, Examinations, and Suffering, here followeth in order ſet forth. And firſt touching his Life and bringing up.

John Rogers brought up in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he profitably travelled in good Learning, at the length was choſen and called by the Merchants Adventurers to be their Chaplain at Antwerp in Brabant, whom he ſerved to their good contentation many years. It chanced him there to fall in Company with that worthy Servant and Martyr of God William Tindal, and with Miles Coverdale, which both for the hatred they bare to Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry, and love to true Religion, had forſaken their Native Country. In conferring with them the Scriptures he came to great knowledge in the Goſpel of God, inſomuch that he caſt off the heavy Yoke of Popery, perceiving it to be impure and filthy Idolatry, and joyned himſelf with them two in that painful and moſt profitable labour of tranſlating the Bible into the Engliſh Tongue, which is Intituled, The Tranſlation of Thomas Matthew. He knowing by the Scriptures, that unlawful Vows may lawfully be broken, and that Matrimony is both honeſt and honourable among all men, joyned himſelf in lawful Matrimony, and ſo went to Wittenberg in Saxony, where he with much ſoberneſs of living did not only greatly increaſe in all good and godly Learning, but alſo ſo much profited in the knowledge of the Dutch Tongue, that the Charge of a Congregation was orderly committed to his Cure.

Mr. Rogers Chaplain to the Merchants Adventurers at Antwerp.

Mr. Rogers brought to the Goſpel by Mr. Tindall and Mr. Coverdale.

Of Mr. Rogers doing in this Tranſlation, read afore.

Mr. Rogers goeth to Wittenberg.

In which Miniſtry he diligently and faithfully ſerved many years, until ſuch time as it pleaſed God, by the faithful travel of his choſen and dear Servant, King Edward the Sixth, utterly to baniſh all Popery forth of England, and to receive in true Religion, ſetting Gods Goſpel at liberty. He then being orderly called, having both a Conſcience and a ready good will to help forward the Work of the Lord in his Native Country, left ſuch honeſt and certain Conditions as he had in Saxony, and came into England to preach the Goſpel, without certainty of any Condition. In which Office, after he had a ſpace diligently and faithfully travelled, Nicholas Ridley, then Biſhop of London, gave him a Prebend in the Cathedral Church of Paul; and the Dean and the Chapter choſe him to be the Reader of the Divinity Leſſon there, wherein he diligently travelled, until ſuch time as Queen Mary obtaining the Crown, baniſhed the Goſpel and true Religion, and brought in the Antichriſt of Rome, with his Idolatry and Superſtition.

Mr. Rogers returneth from Saxony into England in King Edwards time.

Mr. Rogers Reader and Prebendary in Pauls.

After the Queen was come to the Tower of London, he being orderly called thereunto, made a godly and vehement Sermon at Pauls Croſs, confirming ſuch true Doctrine as he and other had there taught in King Edwards days, exhorting the People conſtantly to remain in the ſame, and to beware of all peſtilent Popery, Idolatry, and Superſtition. The Councel being then over-matched with Popiſh and Bloody Biſhops, called him to account for his Sermon: To whom he made a ſtout, witty, and godly Anſwer, and yet in ſuch ſort handled himſelf, that at that time he was clearly diſmiſſed. But after that Proclamation was ſet forth by the Queen to prohibite true Preaching, he was called again before the Councel; for the Biſhops thirſted after his Blood. The Councel quarrelled with him concerning his Doctrine, and in concluſion commanded him as Priſoner to keep his own Houſe, and ſo he did: although by flying he might eaſily have eſcaped their cruel hands, and many things there were which might have moved him thereunto. He did ſee the Recovery of Religion in England, for that preſent, deſperate: He knew he could not want a Living in Germany, and he could not forget his Wife and ten Children, and to ſeek means to ſuccour them. But all theſe things ſet apart, after he was called to anſwer in Chriſts Cauſe, he would not depart, but ſtoutly ſtood in defence of the ſame, and for the trial of that Truth, was content to hazard his Life.

Mr. Rogers called to account for his Sermon at Pauls Croſs.

Mr. Rogers again called before the Councel, and commanded to keep his Houſe.

Thus he remained in his own Houſe as Priſoner a long time, till at the length, through the uncharitable procurement of Boner Biſhop of London, who could not abide ſuch honeſt Neighbours to dwell by him, he was removed from his own Houſe to the Priſon called Newgate, where he was lodged among Thieves and Murderers for a great ſpace: During which time, what buſineſs he had with the Adverſaries of Chriſt, all is not known, neither yet any certainty of his Examinations, further then he himſelf did leave in Writing, which God would not to be loſt, but to remain for a perpetual Teſtimony in the Cauſe of Gods Truth, as here followeth recorded and teſtified by his own writing.

Mr. Rogers ſent to Newgate.

The Examination and Anſwer of John Rogers made to the Lord Chancellor, and to the reſt of the Councel, the 22. of January, Anno 1555.

The Lord Chancellor.

FIrſt the Lord Chancellor ſaid unto me thus: Sir, ye have heard the ſtate of the Realm in which it ſtandeth now.

Examination and anſwer of Mr. John Rogers.

Rogers. No, my Lord, I have been kept in cloſe Priſon, and except there have been ſome general thing ſaid at the Table when I was at Dinner or Supper, I have heard nothing; and there have I heard nothing whereupon any ſpecial thing might be grounded.

L. Chan. Then ſaid the Lord Chancellor; General things, general things, mockingly? Ye have heard of my Lord Cardinals coming, and that the Parliament hath received his Bleſſing, not one reſiſting unto it, but one man which did ſpeak againſt it. Such an Unity, and ſuch a Miracle hath not been ſeen. And all they, of which there are Eight ſcore in one Houſe, (ſaid one that was by, whoſe name I know not) have with one aſſent and * conſent received Pardon of their Offences, for the Schiſm they have lied in England, in refuſing the holy Father

Anno 1555.

Rome to be Head of the Catholick Church. How say ye? Are ye content to unite and knit your self to the Faith of the Catholick Church with us, in the state in which it is now in England? Will ye do that?

Rog. The Catholick Church I never did nor will dissent from.

L. Chan. Nay, but I speak of the state of the Catholick Church, in that wise in which we stand now in England, having received the Pope to be Supream Head.

No Head of the Catholick Church but Christ.

Rog. I know none other Head but Christ of his Catholick Church, neither will I acknowledge the Bishop of Rome to have any more Authority than any other Bishop hath by the Word of God, and by the Doctrine of the old and pure Catholick Church four hundred years after Christ.

L. Chan. Why didst thou then acknowledge K. Henry the Eighth to be the Supream Head of the Church, if Christ be the only Head?

The Supremacy of K. Henry 8. how it is to be taken.

Rog. I never granted him to have any Supremacy in Spiritual things, as are the Forgiveness of Sins, Giving of the Holy Ghost, Authority to be a Judge above the Word of God.

Tonstall Bp. of Durham. N. Bishop of Worcester.

L. Chan. Yea, said he, and Tonstall Bishop of Duresme, and N. Bishop of Worcester, if thou hadst said so in his days (and they nodded the head at me with a laughter) thou hadst not been alive now.

Rog. Which thing I denied, and would have told how he was said and meant to be Supream Head. But they looked and laughed one upon another, and made such a business, that I was constrained to let it pass. There lyeth also no great weight thereupon; for all the World knoweth what the meaning was. The Lord Chancellor also said to the Lord William Haward, that there was no inconvenience therein, to have Christ to be Supream Head and the Bishop of Rome also: And when I was ready to have answered that there could not be two Heads of one Church, and have more plainly declared the vanity of that his Reason, the Lord Chancellor said, What saist thou? Make us a direct Answer whether thou wilt be one of this Catholick Church or not, with us in that state in which we are now?

The meaning why K. Henry was tituled Supream Head.

Rog. My Lord, without fail I cannot believe, that ye your selves do think in your hearts that he is Supream Head in forgiving of Sin, &c. (as is before said) seeing you, and all the Bishops of the Realm have now twenty years long preached, and some of you also written to the contrary, and the Parliament hath so long agone condescended unto it. And there he interrupted me thus.

The Bishops contrary to their former doings and writings.

L. Chan. Tush, that Parliament was with most great cruelty constrained to abolish and put away the Primacy from the Bishop of Rome.

Rog. With cruelty? why then I perceive that you take a wrong way with cruelty to perswade mens Consciences. For it should appear by your doings now, that the cruelty then used hath not perswaded your Consciences. How would you then have our Consciences perswaded with cruelty?

L. Chan. I talk to thee of no cruelty, but that they were so often and so cruelly called upon in that Parliament, to let the Act go forward; yea, and even with force driven thereunto, whereas in this Parliament it was so uniformly received, as is aforesaid.

Rog. Here my Lord Paget told me more plainly, what my Lord Chancellor meant. Unto whom I answered: My Lord, what will ye conclude thereby; that the first Parliament was of less Authority, because but few condescended unto it? And this last Parliament of great Authority, because more condescended unto it? It goeth not my Lord, by more or lesser part, but by the wiser, truer, and godlier part: And I would have said more, but the L. Chancellor interrupted me with his question, willing me once again to answer him. For, said he, we have, more to speak with than thou, which must come in after thee. And so there were indeed ten persons more out of Newgate, besides two that were not called. Of which ten, one was a Citizen of London, which granted unto them, and nine were contrary: which all came to Prison again, and refused the Cardinals Blessing, and the Authority of his holy Fathers Church, saving that one of these nine was not asked the question, otherwise than thus, whether he would be an honest man as his Father was before him, and he answering Yea, he was so discharged by the friendship of my L. William Haward, as I have understood. He bade me tell him what I would do; whether I would enter into the one Church with the whole Realm as it is now, or not? No, said I, I will first see it proved by the Scriptures. Let me have Pen, Ink, and Books, &c. And I shall take upon me plainly to set out the matter, so that the contrary shall be proved to be true, and let any man that will confer with me by writing.

Truth goeth not by number, nor by the greater Part.

Ten Prisoners out of Newgate to be convented before Gardiner. Nine of these Prisoners refused the Popes Authority, the tenth yielded.

L. Chan. Nay, that shall not be permitted thee? Thou shalt never have so much proferred thee as thou hast now, if thou refuse it, and will not now condescend and agree to the Catholick Church. Here are two things, Mercy and Justice: If thou refuse the Queens Mercy now, then shalt thou have Justice ministred unto thee.

Sir. Gardine refused to have the Truth to be tried by Learning.

Rog. I never offended, nor was disobedient unto her Grace, and yet I will not refuse her Mercy. But if this shall be denied me to confer by writing, and to try out the truth, then it is not well, but too far out of the way. Ye your selves (all the Bishops of the Realm) brought me to the knowledge of the pretended Primacy of the Bishop of Rome, when I was a young man twenty years past: And will ye now without collation have me to say and do the contrary? I cannot be so perswaded.

The Bishops neither will stand by their Assertion, nor yet will suffer other men so to do.

L. Chan. If thou wilt not receive the Bishop of Rome to be Supream Head of the Catholick Church, then thou shalt never have her Mercy thou mayest be sure. And as touching conferring and trial, I am forbidden by the Scriptures to use any conferring and trial with thee. For S. Paul teacheth me, that I should shun and eschew an Heretick after one or two Monitions, knowing that such an one is overthrown, and is faulty, insomuch as he is condemned by his own Judgment.

A fair pretence to excuse your ignorance.

Rog. My Lord, I deny that I am an Heretick: Prove ye that first, and then alledge the foresaid Text. But still the Lord Chancellor played on one string, saying:

L. Chan. If thou wilt enter into one Church with us, &c. tell us that, or else thou shalt never have so much proferred thee again as thou hast now.

Gardiner will compel to that which he cannot reach to be true.

Rogers. I will find it first in the Scripture, and see it tried thereby, before I receive him to be Supream Head.

Wor. Why? Do ye not know what is in your Creed: Credo Ecclesiam sanctam Catholicam, I believe the holy Catholick Church.

Rog. I find not the Bishop of Rome there. For (Catholick) signifieth not the Romish Church: It signifieth the consent of all true Teaching Churches of all times, and all ages. But how should the Bishop of Rome's Church be one of them, which teacheth so many Doctrines that are plainly and directly against the Word of God? Can that Bishop be the true Head of the Catholick Church that doth so? that is not possible.

The Popes Church proved not to be Catholick.

L. Chan. Shew me one of them, one, let me hear one.

Rog. I remembered my self, that amongst so many I were best to shew one, and said, I will shew you one.

L. Chan. Let me hear that, let me hear that.

Rog. The Bishop of Rome and his Church, say, read, and sing, all that they do in their Congregations, in Latin, which is directly and plainly against the first to the Corinthians, the fourteenth Chapter.

Latin Service.

L. Chan. I deny that, I deny that that is against the Word of God. Let me see you prove that; how prove you that?

Rog. Thus I began to say the Text from the beginning of the Chapter, Qui loquitur lingua, &c. to speak with tongue, said I, is to speak with a strange tongue, as Latin or Greek, &c. and so to speak, is not to speak unto men, but to God. But ye speak in Latin, which is a strange tongue, wherefore ye speak not unto men, but unto God * (meaning God only at the most.) This he granted, that they spake not unto men, but unto God.

Speaking in a strange tongue against S. Paul.

* Imperfection.

L. Chan. Well, then it is in vain unto men.

Rog. No, not in vain. For one man speaketh in one tongue, and another in another tongue, and all well.

L. Chan. Nay, I will prove then, that he speaketh neither to God nor to Man, but unto the Wind.

Rog. I was willing to have declared how and after what sort these two Texts do agree (for they must agree, they be both the sayings of the Holy Ghost, spoken

1 Cor. 14. To speak to God only.

To ſpeak both to God and Man. To ſpeak neither to God nor Man, but the Wind.

by the Apoſtle Paul) as to wit, to ſpeak not to Men, but unto God, and to ſpeak into the Wind: and ſo to have gone forward with the proof of my matter begun, but here aroſe a noiſe and a confuſion. Then ſaid the Lord Chancellor:

L. Chan. To ſpeak unto God, and not unto God, were unpoſſible.

Rog. I will prove them poſſible.

L. Haward. No, ſaid my Lord William Haward to my Lord Chancellor: now will I bear you witneſs that he is out of the way: For he granted firſt, that they which ſpeak in a ſtrange ſpeech ſpeak unto God: and now he ſaith the contrary, that they ſpeak neither to God nor to Man.

Rog. I have not granted nor ſaid (turning me to my Lord Haward) as you report. I have alledged the one Text, and now I am come to the other. They muſt agree, and I can make them to agree. But as for you, you underſtand not the matter.

Secretary Bourne.

L. Haward. I underſtand ſo much, that that is not poſſible. This is a point of Sophiſtry, quoth Secretary Bourne.

A City in Saxon.

L. Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor began to tell the Lord Haward, that when he was in High Dutchland, they at Hale, which had before prayed and uſed their Service all in Dutch, began then to turn part into Latin, and part into Dutch.

Worceſt. Yea, and at Wittenberg too.

Mr. Rogers could not be heard to ſpeak.

Rog. Yea, (but I could not be heard for the noiſe) in an Univerſity, where men for the moſt part underſtand the Latin, and yet not all in Latin. And I would have told the Order, and have gone forward both to have anſwered my Lord, and to have proved the thing that I had taken in hand: but perceiving their talk and noiſe to be too noiſom, I was fain to think this in my heart, ſuffering them in the mean while to talk one of them one thing, and another another. Alas! neither will theſe men hear me if I ſpeak, neither yet will they ſuffer me to write. There is no remedy, but let them alone, and commit the matter to God. Yet I began to go forward, and ſaid, that I would make the Texts to agree, and to prove my purpoſe well enough.

L. Chan. No, no, thou canſt prove nothing by the Scripture. The Scripture is dead: it muſt have a lively Expoſitor.

Rog. No, the Scripture is alive. But let me go forward with my purpoſe.

Wor. All Hereticks have alledged the Scriptures for them, and therefore we muſt have a lively Expoſitor for them.

Rog. Yea, all Hereticks have alledged the Scriptures for them: but they were confuted by the Scriptures, and by none other Expoſitor.

Wor. But they would not confeſs that they were overcome by the Scriptures, I am ſure of that.

Confuſed talk without order.

Rog. I believe that: and yet were they overcome by them, and in all Councils they were diſputed with and overthrown by the Scriptures. And here I would have declared how they ought to proceed in theſe days, and ſo have come again to my purpoſe, but it was unpoſſible: for one asked one thing, another ſaid another, ſo that I was fain to hold my peace, and let them talk. And even when I would have taken hold on my proof, the Lord Chancellor, bade to Priſon with me again; and away, away, ſaid he, we have more to talk withal: If I would not be reformed (ſo he termed it) away, away. Then up I ſtood, for I had kneeled all the while.

Sir Richard Southwell ſpeaketh.

Then Sir Richard Southwell, who ſtood by in a Window, ſaid to me, Thou wilt not burn in this gear when it cometh to the purpoſe, I know well that.

Rog. Sir, I cannot tell, but I truſt in my Lord God, yes, lifting up mine eyes unto Heaven.

The Bp. of Ely ſpeaketh

B. of Ely. Then my Lord of Ely told me much of the Queens Majeſties pleaſure and meaning, and ſet it out with large words, ſaying, That ſhe took them that would not receive the Biſhop of Rome's Supremacy, to be unworthy to have her Mercy, &c.

Rogers. I ſaid I would not refuſe her Mercy, and yet I never offended her in all my life: And that I beſought her Grace, and all their Honours, to be good to me, reſerving my Conſcience.

Anno 1555.

Divers ſpake at once. No, quoth they then, a great ſort of them, and ſpecially Secretary Bourne; A married Prieſt, and have not offended the Law?

Divers ſpeak at once.

Rog. I ſaid, I had not broken the Queens Law, nor yet any point of the Law of the Realm therein: For I married where it was lawful.

Divers ſpeak at once.

Divers at once. Where was that, ſaid they? thinking that to be unlawful in all places.

Lawfulneſs of Prieſts marriage.

Rogers. In Dutchland. And if ye had not here in England made an open Law that Prieſts might have had Wives, I would never have come home again; for I brought a Wife and eight Children with me: which thing ye might be ſure that I would not have done, if the Laws of the Realm had not permitted it before.

Mr. Rogers brought 8. Children with him into England.

Then there was a great noiſe, ſome ſaying that I was come too ſoon with ſuch a ſort: I ſhould find a ſowre coming of it; and ſome one thing, and ſome another. And one ſaid (I could not well perceive who) that there was never a Catholick man or Country, that ever granted that a Prieſt might have a Wife.

Rogers. I ſaid, The Catholick Church never denied Marriage to Prieſts, nor yet to any other man; and therewith was I going out of the Chamber, the Sergeant which brought me thither having me by the Arm.

Wor. Then the Biſhop of Worceſter turned his face towards me, and ſaid that I wiſt not where that Church was or is.

Mr. Rogers had away to Priſon.

Rogers. I ſaid, yes, that I could tell where it was, but therewith went the Sergeant with me out of the Door.

This was the very true effect of all that was ſpoken unto me, and of all that I anſwered thereunto.

And here would I gladly make a more perfect Anſwer to all the former Objections, as alſo a due proof of that which I had taken in hand: but at this preſent I was informed that I ſhould to morrow come to further Anſwer. Wherefore I am compelled to leave out that which I would moſt gladly have done, deſiring here the hearty and unfeigned help of the Prayers of all Chriſts true Members, the true Imps of the true unfeigned Catholick Church, that the Lord God of all Conſolation will now be my Comfort, Aid, Strength, Buckler and Shield: As alſo of all my Brethren that are in the ſame Caſe and Diſtreſs, that I and they all may deſpiſe all manner of threats and cruelty, and even the bitter burning Fire, and the dreadful dart of Death, and ſtick like true Souldiers to our dear and loving Captain, Chriſt, our only Redeemer and Saviour, and alſo the only true Head of the Church, that doth all in us all, which is the very property of an Head (and is a thing that all the Biſhops of Rome cannot do) and that we do not traiterouſly run out of his Tents, or out of the plain Field from him, in the moſt jeopardy of the Battel, but that we may perſevere in the Fight (if he will not otherwiſe deliver us) till we be moſt cruelly ſlain of his Enemies. For this I moſt heartily, and at this preſent, with weeping tears moſt inſtantly and earneſtly deſire and beſeech you all to pray: And alſo if I dye, to be good to my poor and moſt honeſt Wife, being a poor Stranger, and all my little Souls, hers and my Children. Whom, with all the whole faithful and true Catholick Congregation of Chriſt, the Lord of Life and Death ſave, keep, and defend in all the troubles and aſſaults of this vain World, and bring at the laſt to everlaſting Salvation the true and ſure Inheritance of all croſſed Chriſtians, Amen, Amen.

Mr. Rogers careful prayer for his Wife and Children.

The 27. day of January at night.

The ſecond Confeſſion of John Rogers, made, and that ſhould have been made (if it might have been heard) the 28 and 29 day of January, 1555.

The ſecond Examination of Mr. Rogers.

FIrſt, being asked again by the Lord Chancellor, whether I would come into one Church with the Biſhops and whole Realm, as now was concluded by Parliament (in the which all the Realm was converted to the Catholick Church of Rome) and ſo receive the mercy before proferred me, ariſing again with the whole Realm out of the Schiſm and Error in which we had long been, with Recantation of my Errors. I anſwered, That before I could not tell what his mercy meant, but now I underſtand Winchester's Mercy, what it meaneth.

that

that it was a Mercy of the Antichristian Church of Rome, which I utterly refused, and that the rising which he spake of, was a very fall into Error and false Doctrine. Also that I had and would be able, by Gods grace, to prove that all the Doctrine which I had ever taught was true and Catholick, and that by the Scriptures and the Authority of the Fathers that lived 400. years after Christs Death. He answered, That should not, might not, nor ought not to be granted me: for I was but a private man, and might not be heard against the Determination of the whole Realm. Should, quoth he, when a Parliament hath concluded a thing, one, or any private person have Authority to discuss, whether they had done right or wrong? No, that may not be.

To rise to the Pope is to fall from Christ.

Whatsoever is once concluded in a Parliament, ought not to be reformed afterward by Doctrine, nor the Word of God, by the Bishop of Winchester's Divinity.

I answered shortly, That all the Laws of men might not, neither could rule the Word of God, but, that they all must be discussed and judged thereby, and obey thereto: and neither my Conscience, nor any Christian mans, could be satisfied with such Laws as disagreed from that Word: and so was willing to have said much more. But the Lord Chancellor began a long Tale to very small purpose, concerning mine Answer, to have defaced me; that there was nothing in me wherefore I should be heard, but Arrogancy, Pride, and Vain-glory. I also granted mine Ignorance to be greater than I could express, or than he took it: but yet that I feared not, by Gods assistance and strength, to be able by writing to perform my word, neither was I (I thanked God) so utterly ignorant as he would make me; but all was of God, to whom be thanks rendred therefore. Proud man was I never, nor yet vain-glorious. All the world knew well, where and on which side Pride, Arrogancy, and Vain-glory was. It was a poor Pride, that was or is in us, God it knoweth.

Then said he, That I at the first dash condemned the Queen and the whole Realm to be of the Church of Antichrist, and burdened me highly therewithal. I answered, That the Queens Majesty (God save her Grace) would have done well enough, if it had not been for his counsel. He said, the Queen went before him, and it was her own motion. I said, without fail I neither could, nor would I ever believe it.

Dr. Aldrife witnesseth with the Bp. of Winchester.

Then said Dr. Aldrife the Bishop of Carliſle, that they the Bishops would bear him witness. Yea, quoth I, that I believe well, and with that the People laughed: For that day there were many, but on the morrow they kept the Doors shut, and would let none in, but the Bishops Adherents and Servants in a manner, yea, and the first day the thousand man came not in. Then Mr. Comptroller and Secretary Bourne would have stood up also to bear witness, and did.

I said it was no great matter: and to say the truth, I thought that they were good helpers thereunto themselves: but I ceased to say any more therein, knowing that they were too strong and mighty of power, and that they should be believed before me, yea, and before our Saviour Christ, and all his Prophets and Apostles too, in these days.

The opinion of M. Rogers touching the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, required.

Then after many words, He asked me what I thought concerning the blessed Sacrament, and stood up, and put off his Cap, and all his Fellow Bishops, (of which there were a great sort, new men, of whom I knew few) whether I believed in the Sacrament to be the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, that was born of the Virgin Mary, and hanged on the Cross, really and substantially.

I answered, I had often told him that it was a matter in which I was no medler, and therefore suspected of my Brethren to be of a contrary Opinion. Notwithstanding, even as the most part of your Doctrine in other Points is false, and the defence thereof only by force and cruelty: so in this matter I think it to be as false as the rest. For I cannot understand (really and substantially) to signifie otherwise than corporally: but corporally Christ is only in Heaven, and so cannot Christ be corporally also in your Sacrament. And here I somewhat set out his Charity after this sort: My Lord, quoth I, ye have dealt with me most cruelly: For ye have put me in Prison without Law, and kept me there now almost a year and a half. For I was almost half a year in my House, where I was obedient to you, God knoweth, and spake with no man. And now have I been a full year in Newgate at great Costs and Charges, having a Wife and ten Children to find, and I had never a penny of my Livings; which was against the Law.

Acts 1.

Cruelty shewed without cause.

Mr. Rogers year and a half in durance.

He answered, That Dr. Ridley which had given them me, was an Usurper, and therefore I was the unjust Possessor of them.

Was the King then an Usurper, quoth I, which gave Dr. Ridley the Bishoprick?

Yea, quoth he, and began to set out the wrongs that the King had done to the Bishop of London, and to himself also. But yet I do misuse my terms, quoth he, to call the King Usurper. But the word was gone out of the abundance of the heart before: and I think that he was not very sorry for it in heart. I might have said more concerning that matter, but I did not.

Str. Gardiner calleth King Edward an Usurper.

I asked him wherefore he put me in Prison. He said, because I preached against the Queen.

I answered that it was not true: and I would be bound to prove it, and to stand to the trial of the Law, that no man should be able to disprove it, and thereupon would set my life. I preached (quoth I) a Sermon at the Cross, after the Queen came to the Tower; but therein was nothing said against the Queen, I take witness of all the Audience, which was not small. I alledged also that he had, after Examination, let me go at liberty after the preaching of that Sermon.

Yea, but thou didst read thy Lectures after, quoth he, against the commandment of the Councel.

That did I not, quoth I, let that be proved, and let me dye for it. Thus have you now against the Law of God and Man handled me, and never sent for me, never conferred with me, never spoke of any learning, till now that ye have gotten a whip to whip me with, and a sword to cut off my neck, if I will not condescend to your mind. This Charity doth all the World understand.

Mr. Rogers imprisoned against all Law and Right.

I might and would have added, if I could have been suffered to speak, that it had been time enough to take away mens Livings, and thereto to have imprisoned them, after that they had offended Laws: For they be good Citizens that break not Laws, and worthy of praise, and not of punishment. But their purpose is to keep men in Prison, until they may catch them in their Laws, and so kill them. I could and would have added the Example of Daniel, which by a crafty devised Law was cast into the Lions Den. Item, I might have declared, that I most humbly desired to be set at liberty, sending my Wife to him with a Supplication, being great with Child, and with her eight honest Women, or thereabouts, to Richmond, at Christmas was a twelve month, whiles I was yet in my House.

Mr. Rogers punished before any Law was broken.

Item, I wrote two Supplications to him out of Newgate, and sent my Wife many times to him. Mr. Gosnold also that worthy man, who is now departed in the Lord, laboured for me, and so did divers other worthy men also take pains in the matter. These things declare my Lord Chancellors Antichristian Charity, which is, that he hath and doth seek my Blood, and the destruction of my poor Wife and my ten Children.

Mr. Gosnold laboured for Mr. Rogers.

This is a short sum of the words which were spoken on the 28. day of January at Afternoon, after that Mr. Hooper had been the first, and Mr. Cardmaker the second in Examination before me. The Lord grant us Grace to stand together, fighting lawfully in his cause, till we be smitten down together, if the Lords will be so to permit it. For there shall not a hair of our heads perish against his will, but with his will. Whereunto the same Lord grant us to be obedient unto the end, and in the end, Amen: Sweet, mighty, and merciful Lord Jesus, the Son of David and of God: Amen, Amen, let every true Christian say and pray.

Then the Clock being, as I guessed, about four, the Lord Chancellor said, That he and the Church must yet use Charity with me (what manner of Charity it is, all true Christians do well understand, as to wit, the same that the Fox doth with the Chickens, and the Wolf with the Lambs) and gave me respite till to morrow, to see whether I would remember my self well to morrow, and whether I would return to the Catholick Church (for so he calleth his Antichristian false Church) again, and repent, and they would receive me to Mercy.

Great mercy of Winchester, no less than the Fox hath to the Chickens, or the Wolf to suck the blood of Lambs.

I said that I was never out of the true Catholick

Church, nor would be: but into his Church would I, by Gods Grace, never come.

The Popes Church is the Church of Antichriſt.

Well, quoth he, then is our Church falſe and Antichriſtian.

Yea, quoth I.

And what is the Doctrine of the Sacrament?

Falſe, quoth I, and caſt my hands abroad.

Then ſaid one, that I was a Player. To whom I anſwered not; for I paſſed not upon his mock.

Mr. Rogers warned to appear the next day.

Come again, quoth the Lord Chancellor, to morrow between nine and ten.

I am ready to come again, whenſoever ye call, quoth I.

And thus was I brought up by the Sheriffs to the Compter in Southwark, Mr. Hooper going before me, and a great multitude of People being preſent, ſo that we had much to do to go in the Streets.

Thus much was done the 28. day of January.

Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hooper brought again before the Chancellor.

THe ſecond day, which was the 29. of January, we were ſent for in the Morning about 9. of the Clock, and by the Sheriffs fetched from the Compter in Southwark to the Church again, as to wit, to St. Mary Overies, where we were the day before in the Afternoon, as is ſaid. And when Mr. Hooper was condemned, as I underſtood afterward, then ſent they for me. Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid unto me:

Gardiners words to Mr. Rogers.

Rogers, quoth he, here thou waſt yeſterday, and we gave thee liberty to remember thy ſelf this night, whether thou wouldſt come to the Holy Catholick Church of Chriſt again or not. Tell us now what thou haſt determined, whether thou wilt be repentant and ſorry, and wilt return again and take mercy.

Anſwer of Mr. Rogers to the Bp. of Winchester.

My Lord, quoth I, I have remembred my ſelf right-well, what you yeſterday ſaid to me, and deſire you to give me leave to declare my mind, what I have to ſay thereunto; and that done I ſhall anſwer you to your demanded queſtion.

Mr. Rogers not ſuffered here to defend himſelf by writing.

When I yeſterday deſired that I might be ſuffered by the Scripture and Authority of the firſt, beſt, and pureſt Church to defend my Doctrine by writing (meaning not only of the Primacy, but alſo of all the Doctrine that ever I had preached) ye anſwered me, that it might not, nor ought not to be granted me, for I was a private perſon; and that the Parliament was above the Authority of all private perſons, and therefore the Sentence thereof might not be found faulty and valueleſs by me being but a private perſon. And yet my Lord, quoth I, I am able to ſhew Examples, that one man hath come into a General Councel, and after the whole had determined and agreed upon an Act or Article, ſome one man coming in afterward, hath by the Word of God declared ſo pithily, that the Councel had erred in decreeing the ſaid Article, that he cauſed the whole Councel to change and alter their Act or Article before determined. And of theſe Examples, ſaid I, I am able to ſhew two. I can alſo ſhew the Authority of S. Auguſtine; that when he diſputed with an Heretick, he would neither himſelf, nor yet have the Heretick to lean unto the determination of two former Conncels, of the which the one made for him, and the other for the Heretick that diſputed againſt him: but ſaid that he would have the Scriptures to be their judge, which were common and indifferent for them both, and not proper to either of them.

Whole Councels turned by private perſons.

Contra Maxent. l. 3. c. 14

Item, I could ſhew, ſaid I, the Authority of a learned Lawyer Panormitanus, which ſaith, that unto a ſimple Lay-man that bringeth the Word of God with him there ought more credit to be given, than to a whole Councel gathered together. By theſe things will I prove that I ought not to be denied to ſay my mind, and to be heard againſt a whole Parliament, bringing the Word of God for me, and the Authority of the old Church 400. years after Chriſt, albeit that every man in the Parliament had willingly and without reſpect of fear and favour agreed thereunto, which thing I doubt not a little of; ſpecially ſeeing the like had been permitted in the old Church, even in General Councels, yea, and that in one of the chiefeſt Councels that ever was, unto which neither any Acts of this Parliament, nor yet any of the late General Councels of the Biſhops of Rome ought to be compared. For, ſaid I, if Henry the Eighth were alive, and ſhould call a Parliament, and begin to determine a thing (and here I would have alledged the example of the Act of making the Queen a Baſtard, and of making himſelf the Superiour Head; but I could not, being interrupted by one whom God forgive) then will ye (pointing to my Lord Chancellor) and ye, and ye, and ſo ye all (pointing to the reſt of the Biſhops) ſay, Amen: yea, and it like your Grace, it is meet that it be ſo enacted.

Extrav. de Appel. cap. Significaſti.

A Caſe put to the B. of Winchester.

Anno 1555.

This was Sir Anthony Brown.

Here my Lord Chancellor would ſuffer me to ſpeak no more; but bade me ſit down mockingly, ſaying, that I was ſent for to be inſtructed of them, and I would take upon me to be their Inſtructor.

Mr. Rogers not ſuffered to ſpeak.

My Lord, quoth I, I ſtand, and ſit not: Shall I not be ſuffered to ſpeak for my life?

Mark here the Spirit of this Prelate.

Shall we ſuffer thee to tell a Tale, and to prate, quoth he? And with that he ſtood up, and began to face me, after his old arrogant proud faſhion, for he perceived that I was in a way to have touched them ſomewhat, which he thought to hinder by daſhing me out of my Tale, and ſo he did. For I could never be ſuffered to come to my Tale again, no not to one word of it; but he had much like communication with me, as he had the day before, and as his manner is, taunt upon taunt, and check upon check. For in that caſe, being Gods cauſe, I told him he ſhould not make me afraid to ſpeak.

Lord Chan. See what a Spirit this Fellow hath, ſaid he, finding fault at mine accuſtomed earneſtneſs, and hearty manner of ſpeaking.

The godly Spirit of Mr. Rogers.

Rogers. I have a true Spirit, quoth I, agreeing and obeying the Word of God, and would further have ſaid, That I was never the worſe, but the better, to be earneſt in a juſt and true Cauſe, and in my Maſter Chriſts matters; but I could not be heard. And at the length he proceeded towards his Excommunication and Condemnation, after that I had told him that his Church of Rome was the Church of Antichriſt, meaning the falſe Doctrine and Tyrannical Laws, with the maintenance thereof by cruel perſecutions uſed by the Biſhops of the ſaid Church (of which the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the reſt of his fellow Biſhops, that are now in England, are the chief Members:) Of Laws I mean, quoth I, and not all men and women which are in the Popes Church. Likewiſe when I was ſaid to have denied their Sacrament (whereof he made his wonted reverent mention, more to maintain his Kingdom thereby, than for the true reverence of Chriſts Inſtitution; more for his own and his Popiſh Generations ſake, than for Religion or Gods ſake) I told him after what order I did ſpeak of it (for the manner of his ſpeaking was not agreeing to my words, which are before recited in the Communication that we had in the 28. of January) wherewith he was not contented, but he asked the Audience whether I had not ſimply denied the Sacrament. They would have ſaid, and did, what he luſted, for the moſt of them were of his own Servants at that day, the 29 of January I mean. At the laſt I ſaid, I will never deny that I ſaid, that is, that your Doctrine of the Sacrament is falſe; but yet I tell you after what order I ſaid it.

The Church of Rome to be the Church of Antichriſt, meaning the Laws and Doctrine now uſed in Rome.

How the B. of Wincheſter ſeeketh for blood.

To be ſhort, he read my Condemnation before me, particularly mentioning therein but two Articles; firſt, That I affirmed the Romiſh Catholick Church to be the Church of Antichriſt; and that I denied the Reallity of their Sacrament. He cauſed me to be degraded and condemned, and put into the hands of the Laity, and ſo he gave me over into the Sheriffs hands, which were much better than his.

The Copy of which his Condemnation here I thought good to put down in Engliſh, to the intent that the ſame, being here once expreſſed, may ſerve for all other Sentences Condemnatory thorow the whole Story to be referred unto.

The Sentence Condemnatory againſt Mr. Rogers.

The Sentence definitive againſt Mr. Rogers.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Steven by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of Wincheſter, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly favour by Authority and Vertue of our Office, againſt thee John Rogers Prieſt, alias called Matthew, before us perſonally here preſent, being accuſed and detected, and notoriouſly ſlandered of Hereſie, having heard, ſeen, and underſtood, and with all

Anno 1555. all diligent deliberation weighed, diſcuſſed, and conſidered the merits of the cauſe, all things being obſerved, which by us in this behalf in order of Law ought to be obſerved; ſitting in our Judgment Seat, the Name of Chriſt being firſt called upon, and having only God before our eyes, becauſe by the Acts enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this matter, and by thine own Confeſſion judicially made before us, we do find that thou haſt taught, holden, and affirmed, and obſtinately defended divers Errors, Hereſies, and Damnable Opinions, contrary to the Doctrine and Determination of the Holy Church, His Articles. as namely theſe; That the Catholick Church of Rome is the Church of Antichriſt: Item, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not ſubſtantially nor reâlly the Natural Body and Blood of Chriſt. The which aforeſaid Hereſies and Damnable Opinions being contrary to the Law of God, and Determination of the Univerſal and Apoſtolical Church, thou haſt arrogantly, ſtubbornly, and wittingly maintained, held and affirmed, and alſo defended before us, as well in this Judgment, as alſo otherwiſe, and with the like obſtinacy, ſtubbornneſs, malice and blindneſs of heart, both wittingly and willingly haſt affirmed, that thou wilt believe, maintain and hold, affirm and declare the ſame: We therefore S. Winchester Biſhop, Ordinary, and Dioceſan aforeſaid, by the conſent and aſſent as well of our Reverend Brethren the Lord Biſhops here preſent and aſſiſtant, as alſo by the Counſel and Judgment of divers worſhipful Lawyers and Profeſſors of Divinity, with whom we have communicated in this behalf, do declare and pronounce thee the ſaid John Rogers, otherwiſe called Matthew, through thy demerits, tranſgreſſions, obſtinacies, and wilfulneſs (which through manifold ways thou haſt incurred by thine own wicked and ſtubborn obſtinacy) to have been and to be guilty of the deteſtable, horrible, and wicked offences of Heretical Pravity and execrable Doctrine, and that thou haſt before us ſundry times ſpoken, maintained, and wittingly and ſtubbornly defended the ſaid curſed and execrable Doctrine in the ſundry Confeſſions, Aſſertions, and Recognitions here Judicially before us oftentimes repeated, and yet ſtill doſt maintain, affirm and believe the ſame, and that thou haſt been and art lawfully and ordinarily convicted in this behalf: We therefore, I ſay, albeit following the example of Chriſt, Which would not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he ſhould convert and live; we have gone about oftentimes to correct thee, and by all lawful means that we could, and all wholeſom admonitions that we did know, to reduce thee again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Univerſal Catholick Church, notwithſtanding have found thee obſtinate and ſtiff-necked, willingly continuing in thy Damnable Opinions and Hereſies, and refuſing to return again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and as the Child of wickedneſs and darkneſs ſo to have hardned thy heart, that thou wilt not underſtand the voice of thy Shepheard, which with a Fatherly affection doth ſeek after thee, nor wilt be allured with his Fatherly and Godly Admonitions: we therefore These murderers pretend ſorrow of heart, and yet they will not ceaſe from murdering. Steven the Biſhop aforeſaid, not willing that thou which art wicked ſhouldeſt now become more wicked, and infect the Lords Flock with thine Hereſie (which we are greatly afraid of) with ſorrow of mind and bitterneſs of heart do judge thee, and definitively condemn thee the ſaid John Rogers, otherwiſe called Matthew, thy demerits and faults being aggravated through thy damnable obſtinacy, as guilty of moſt deteſtable Hereſies, and as an obſtinate impenitent ſinner, refuſing penitently to return to the lap and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and that thou haſt been and art by Law Excommunicate, and do pronounce and declare thee to be an Excommunicate perſon. Alſo we pronounce and declare thee, being an Heretick, to be caſt out from the Church, and left unto the Judgment of the Secular Power, and now preſently ſo do leave thee as an obſtinate Heretick, and a perſon wrapped in the Sentence of the Great Curſe, to be degraded worſhily for thy demerits (requiring them notwithſtanding in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that this execution and puniſhment worthily to be done upon thee, may ſo be moderated, that the Rigor thereof be not too extream, nor yet the gentleneſs too much mitigated, but that it may be to the Salvation of thy Soul, to the extirpation, terror, and converſion of the Hereticks; to the Unity of the Catholick Faith) by this our Sentence Definitive which we here lay upon and againſt thee; and do with ſorrow of heart promulgate in this form aforeſaid.

M. Rogers and M. Hooper ſent to Newgate. After this Sentence being read; he ſent us (Mr. Hooper I mean, and me) to the Clink, there to remain till night: and when it was dark, they carried us, M. Hooper going before with the one Sheriff, and I coming after with the other, with bills and weapons enow, out of the Clink, and led us thorow the Biſhops Houſe, and ſo thorow S. Mary Overies Church-yard, and ſo into Southwark, and over the Bridge on Proceſſion to Newgate through the City. But I muſt ſhew you this alſo, that when he had read the Condemnation, he declared that I was in the Great Curſe, and what a vengeable dangerous matter it was to eat and drink with us that were accurſed, or to give us any thing: for all that ſo did, ſhould be partakers of the ſame Geat Curſe. A vengeable thing to be in the Popes Curſe.

M. Rogers words to the Biſhop of Winchester. Well my Lord, quoth I, here I ſtand before God and you, and all this Honourable Audience, and take him to witneſs, that I never wittingly or willingly taught any falſe Doctrine; and therefore have I a good Conſcience before God and all good men. I am ſure that you and I ſhall come before a Judge that is righteous, before whom I ſhall be as good a man as you: and I nothing doubt but that I ſhall be found there a true Member of the true Catholick Church of Chriſt, and everlaſtingly ſaved. And as for your falſe Church, ye need not to Excommunicate me forth of it. I have not been in it theſe twenty years, the Lord be thanked therefore. But now ye have done what ye can, my Lord, I pray you yet grant me one thing.

What is that, quoth he?

M. Rogers requeſt, to have his wife come to him while he lived, could not be granted. That my poor Wife, being a ſtranger, may come and ſpeak with me ſo long as I live. For ſhe hath ten Children that are hers and mine, and ſomewhat I would Counſel her; what were beſt for her to do.

No, quoth he, ſhe is not thy Wife.

Yes my Lord, quoth I, and hath been theſe 18. years.

Should I grant her to be thy Wife, quoth he?

Chuſe you, quoth I, whether ye will or not; ſhe ſhall be ſo nevertheleſs.

She ſhall not come at thee, quoth he.

Then I have tried out all your Charity, ſaid I. You make your ſelf highly diſpleaſed with the Matrimony of Prieſts, but you maintain open Whoredom: as in Wales, quoth I, where every Prieſt hath his Whore openly dwelling with him, and lying by him: even as your Holy Father ſuffereth all the Prieſts in Dutchland and in France to do the like. Thereto he anſwered not, but looked as it were a ſquint at it: and thus I departed, and ſaw him laſt.

Other good matter there is beſide penned by Mr. Rogers in the Priſon, which he thought and would have anſwered, if he might have been permitted: which matter hereunder followeth to be ſeen by his own ſetting down.

HItherto, dearly beloved, ye have heard what was ſaid: now hear what I purpoſed the night before to have ſaid, if I could have been permitted. Two things I purpoſed to have touched. The one, how it was lawful for a private man to reaſon and write againſt a wicked Act of Parliament, or ungodly Councel, which the Lord Chancellor the day before denyed me. The other was to prove that Proſperity was not always a token of Gods Love.

And this I purpoſed to ſpeak of, becauſe the Lord Chancellor boaſted of himſelf, that he was delivered forth of Priſon as it were by Miracle, and preſerved of God to reſtore true Religion, and to puniſh me and ſuch other, whom he termed Hereticks. Concerning theſe two points, in this matter I purpoſed to have proceeded. It is not unknown to you, that King Henry the eighth in his time made his daughter, the Queen that now is, a Baſtard: he aboliſhed the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome: he pulled down Abbeys: And all this he did by the conſent of Parliament.

King Edward the ſixth in his time made lawful the marriage of Prieſts, turned the Service into Engliſh, aboliſhed the Idolatrous Maſs, with all like Superſtitious

Trumpery,

Trumpery, ſet up the holy Communion, and all by conſent of Parliament,

The Queen that now is hath repealed the Act that made her Baſtard, hath brought in the Biſhop of Rome, and ſet him in his old Authority, beginneth to ſet up Abbeys again, hath made the marriage of Prieſts unlawful, hath turned the Engliſh Service into Latin again, hath ſet up the Maſs again, with like baggage, and pulled down the holy Communion: And all this is done by conſent of Parliament.

If the Acts of Parliament, made in King Henries time and in King Edwards, had their Foundation upon Gods Word, whereupon all poſitive Law ought to be grounded; then theſe which are ſtabliſhed in the Queens time, being clean contrary to the others, as they are not warranted by Gods Word, ſo are they wicked, and therefore to be both ſpoken and written againſt of all men, as well of private as of publick perſons.

If your Acts, my Lord Chancellor, which you have lately coyned (I call them yours, becauſe ye only bear the ſwinge, deviſe, and decree what ye liſt, all other men are forced to follow) be good, and according to Gods Word, then the former Acts were naught, which thing ye ſeem to ſay, in utterly taking of them away, and ſetting up of the contrary: If the former were naught, why then did ye conſent unto them, and confirm them to be good by your voluntary and adviſed writing? as it appeareth, and will do to the Worlds End, in your Book De vera Obedientia, where you prove the Queen a Baſtard, and the Biſhop of Rome to be an Uſurper, and to have no Authority in the Realm of England.

Ye muſt needs confeſs, that the moſt part of your Acts of Parliament in theſe latter days have been according to the fantaſies of a few. King Henry in his time eſtabliſhed by Parliament in a manner what he liſted, and many things that might well have been amended.

In King Edwards days the Dukes of Somerſet and Northumberland bare a great ſtroke in things, and did not all things ſincerely. Even ſo, ſince the Queen that now is came to the Government of the Realm, all things are ordered by your device, and head, and the whole Parliament Houſe is led as you liſt; by reaſon whereof they are compelled to condeſcend to things both contrary to Gods manifeſt Word, and alſo contrary to their own Conſciences: ſo great is your cruelty.

For to bring your wicked purpoſes to paſs, and to eſtabliſh your Antichriſtian Kingdom (which, I truſt, the Lord with the Breath of his Mouth will ſpeedily blow over) ye have called three Parliaments in one year and an half, that, what ye could not compaſs by ſubtil perſwaſion, ye might bring to paſs by tyrannical threatning: For if ye had not uſed cruel force in your doings, ye had never brought to paſs ſuch things as this day ye have, to the utter defacing and aboliſhing of Gods true Religion, and to the caſting away and deſtruction of your Natural Country, ſo much as in you lieth.

And as it is moſt true, that Acts of Parliament have in theſe latter days been ruled by the fantaſies of a few; and the whole Parliament Houſe, contrary to their minds, was compelled to conſent to ſuch things as a few have conceived: So it muſt needs be granted, that the Papiſts at all times were moſt ready to apply themſelves to the preſent World, and like men-pleaſers to follow the fantaſies of ſuch as were in Authority, and turn with the State, which way ſoever it turned. Yea, if the State ſhould change ten times in one year, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and ſo follow the cry, and rather utterly forſake God, and be of no Religion, than that they ſhould forgoe luſt or living, for God or for Religion.

King Henry by Parliament, according to Gods Word, put down the Pope: The Clergy conſented, and all men openly by oath refuſed his uſurped Supremacy, knowing by Gods Word Chriſt to be Head of the Church, and every King in his Realm to have, under and next unto Chriſt, the chief Soveraignty.

King Edward alſo by Parliament, according to Gods Word, ſet the Marriage of Prieſts at liberty, aboliſhed the Popiſh and Idolatrous Maſs, changed the Latin Service, and ſet up the holy Communion: The whole Clergy conſented hereunto; many of them ſet it forth by their Preaching; and all they by practiſing confirmed the ſame. Anno 1555.

Notwithſtanding, now when the State is altered, and the Laws changed, the Papiſtical Clergy, with other like Worldlings, as men neither fearing God, neither flying Worldly ſhame, neither yet regarding their Conſciences, Oaths, or Honeſty, like wavering Weather-Cocks, turn round about, and putting on Harlots foreheads, ſing a new ſong, and cry with an impudent mouth; Come again, come again to the Catholick Church, meaning the Antichriſtian Church of Rome, which is the Synagogue of Satan, and the very Sink of all Superſtition, Hereſie, and Idolatry.

Of what force I pray you may a man think theſe Parliaments to be, which ſcantly can ſtand a year in ſtrength? Or what credit is to be given to theſe Law-makers, which are not aſhamed to eſtabliſh contrary Laws, and to condemn that for evil, which before (the thing it ſelf and the circumſtances remaining all one) they affirmed and decreed to be good. Truly ye are ſo ready, contrary to all right, to change and turn for the pleaſure of man, that at length, I fear, God will uſe you like Changelings, and both turn you forth of his Kingdom, and out of your own Countrey.

Ye charge the Goſpel-Preachers with the undoing of this Realm: Nay, it is the turning Papiſts, which have not only ſet to Sale their Country like Traytors, but alſo troubled the ſimple People, ſo that they cannot tell what they may believe. For that which they affirmed, and Preached to be true Doctrine in King Edwards days, now they cry againſt it, as it were moſt abominable Hereſie. This fault, I truſt, ye ſhall never find at our hands.

Therefore to conclude that which I purpoſed, forſomuch as the Acts of Parliament of theſe later times are one contrary to another, and thoſe which ye now have eſtabliſhed in your time are contrary to Gods moſt manifeſt Word, as is the uſurped Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, the Idolatrous Maſs, the Latin Service, the prohibiting of lawful Marriage (which S. Paul calleth the Doctrine of Devils) with many ſuch other: I ſay, it is not only lawful for any private man, which bringeth Gods Word for him, and the Authority of the primitive and beſt Church, to ſpeak and write againſt ſuch unlawful Laws; but it is his duty, and he is bound in very Conſcience to do it. Which thing I have proved by divers examples before, and now will add but one other, which is written in the fifth of the Acts, where it appeareth that the High Prieſts, the Elders, Scribes, and Phariſees, decreed in their Councel, and gave the ſame Commandments to the Apoſtles, that they ſhould not preach in the Name of Chriſt, as ye have alſo forbidden us; Notwithſtanding when they were charged therewithal, they anſwered, Obedire oportet Deo magis quàm hominibus: that is, We ought more to obey God than man: even ſo we may, and do anſwer you; God is more to be obeyed than man; and your wicked Laws cannot ſo tongue-tye us, but we will ſpeak the truth.

The Apoſtles were beaten for their boldneſs, and they rejoyced that they ſuffered for Chriſts cauſe. Ye have alſo provided Rods for us, and bloody Whips: Yet when ye have done that which Gods hand and Councel hath determined that ye ſhall do, be it Life or Death, I truſt that God will ſo aſſiſt us by his holy Spirit and Grace, that we ſhall patiently ſuffer it, and praiſe God for it: and whatſoever become of me and others, which now ſuffer for ſpeaking and profeſſing of the Truth, yet be ye ſure, that Gods Word will prevail and have the upper hand, when your bloody Laws and wicked Decrees, for want of ſure Foundation, ſhall fall in the duſt: and that which I have ſpoken of your Acts of Parliament, the ſame may be ſaid of the General Councels of theſe latter days, which have been within theſe five hundred years, where the Antichriſt of Rome, by reaſon of his uſurped Authority, ruled the roaſt, and decreed ſuch things as made for his gain, not regarding Gods Glory: and therefore are they to be ſpoken, written, and cryed out againſt of all ſuch as fear God and love his Truth.

And thus much I purpoſed to have ſaid concerning the firſt point.

Now

Anno 1555.

Now touching the ſecond Point. That whereas my Lord Chancellor had the day before ſaid his pleaſure of them that ruled the Realm while he was in Priſon, and alſo rejoyced as though God had made this Alteration, even for his ſake and his Catholick Church, as he called it, and to declare as it were by Miracle, that we were before in a Schiſm and Hereſie, and the Realm was now brought unto an Unity, and to a Truth, and I cannot tell whereto: thereto was I fully purpoſed to have ſaid. Secondly, my Lord, whereas ye yeſterday ſo highly diſpraiſed the Government of them that ruled in innocent King Edwards days, it may pleaſe your Lordſhip to underſtand, that we poor Preachers, whom ye ſo evil allow, did moſt boldly and plainly rebuke their evil Governance in many things, ſpecially their Covetouſneſs, and neglect and ſmall regard to live after the Goſpel, as alſo their negligence to occaſion other to live thereafter, with more things than I can now rehearſe. This can all London teſtifie with us. I would alſo have told him, what I my ſelf for my part did once at Paul's Croſs, concerning the miſuſe of Abbeys, and other Church Goods: and I am aſſured right well, that never a Papiſt of them all did ever ſo much therein as I did, I thank the Lord therefore: I was alſo, as is well known, fain to anſwer therefore before all the Councel, and many of my Brethren did the like, ſo that we for the not rebuking of their Faults, ſhall not anſwer before God, nor be blameworthy before men. Therefore let the Gentlemen and Courtiers themſelves, and all the Citizens of London, teſtifie what we did.

But, my Lord, you could not abide them, for that which they did unto you, and for that they were of a contrary Religion unto you. Wherefore in that you ſeem ſo infeſt againſt them, it is neither any juſt or publick Cauſe, but it is your own private hate that maketh you to report ſo evil of their Governance. And ye may now ſay what ye liſt of them, when they be partly dead and gone, and partly by you put out of Office.

But what ſhall be ſaid of you when your fall ſhall follow, ye ſhall then hear. And I muſt ſay my Conſcience to you: I fear me, ye have and will with your Governance bring England out of Gods Bleſſing into a warm Sun. I pray God you do not.

I am an Engliſh man born, and, God knoweth, do naturally wiſh well to my Countrey. And, my Lord, I have often proved that the things, which I have much feared aforehand ſhould come to paſs, have indeed followed. I pray God I may fail of my gueſſing in this behalf: but truly, that will not be with expelling the true Word of God out of the Realm, and with the ſhedding of Innocent Blood.

And as touching your rejoycing, as though God had ſet you aloft to puniſh us by Miracle (for ſo you report and brag openly of your ſelf) and to miniſter Juſtice, if we will not receive your holy Father's Mercy, and thereby do declare your Church to be true, and ours falſe, to that I anſwer thus: Gods Works be wonderful, and are not to be comprehended and perceived by mans wiſdom, nor by the wit of the moſt wiſe and prudent. Yea, they are ſooneſt deceived, and do moſt eaſily judge amiſs of Gods wonderful Works, that are moſt worldy-wiſe. God hath made all the wiſdom of this World fooliſhneſs, firſt to the Corinthians, the firſt, and the ſecond Chapter.

Dedit dilectam animam ſuam in manus inimicorum ejus. Hierem. xii.

That is,

He hath put his beloved and dear heart into the hands of the Enemies thereof.

This thing doth God, which thing all wiſe men accompt to be the moſt fooliſh and unwiſe part that can be. Will the wiſe of the world, trow ye, put their moſt dear friends and tenderly beloved Children into their Enemies hands, to kill, ſlay, burn, &c. that is unto them a madneſs, above all madneſs. And yet doth God uſe this order, and this is an high and ſingular wiſdom in his ſight, which the world taketh to be moſt extream madneſs.

Can the world ſhew a cauſe why he ſuffered the great multitude of innocent Children to be murdered of Herod of Aſcalon, or why he put that moſt holy man, John Baptiſt, into the hands of Herod his Son to be beheaded, and that in Priſon ſecretly without open Judgment moſt tyrannouſly? Why he ſuffered his beloved Apoſtle James to be beheaded of another Herod? Acts 12. Why he ſuffered his beloved Seed of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to be four hundred years in thraldom and bondage, and under Pharaoh? And all the Stock of Juda and Benjamin, his beloved Children and Church, to come under the Power, Sword, and Tyranny of Nebuchadonoſor? No verily, but his true Catholick Church knoweth divers Cauſes thereof, which are now too long to rehearſe, and which I would right gladly ſhew, if I had time.

But this I am right ſure of, that it was not becauſe that the foreſaid godly men were in Hereſies, and ſubject to falſe Gods Services, and Idolatry, and that their Adverſaries were men of God, and beloved of God: The contrary was true: John Baptiſt was beloved of God, and Herod hated, and ſo forth of the reſt: And John Baptiſt, the innocent Children, James, the Children of Iſrael in Egypt, and in Babylon, were the Catholick Members and People of God: And their Adverſaries, into whoſe hands they were put and delivered, and that of God, by his good will and pleaſure, were Idolaters, and the People of the Devil: But they would be called the chief Members of God, and rejoyced that they had the true God, and that it was now declared by Miracle, that the Iſraelites had but a falſe God, and a falſe Religion, ſeeing they were delivered into the Babylonians hands. And all the other (the Herods and Pharaoh I mean) plainly determined, that if the men, which they killed and handled evil, had been Gods People, God would never have ſuffered them to come into their hands, but rather have done the contrary, and have let John Baptiſt kill Herod, and the Iſraelites Pharaoh and Nebuchadonoſor. Even the like is now to be ſeen in us, and in our moſt cruel Adverſaries.

They are not therefore the Catholick Church, becauſe our merciful God hath at this preſent given our lives into their hands: Neither are we therefore Hereticks, becauſe we ſuffer puniſhment at their hands; as the Lord Chancellor by his rejoycing ſeemeth to gather: The contrary is hereby to be gathered, that we be the Members of the true Catholick Church, becauſe we ſuffer for the ſame Doctrine which John Baptiſt, James, the Iſraelites, yea Chriſt, and the Apoſtles did teach: of which none taught any thing of our Adverſaries Doctrine, namely, that the rotten Antichriſtian Head of Rome ſhould be the Head of Chriſts Church: but they have manifeſtly taught the contrary, ſpecially Paul, in the ſecond to the Theſſalonians, the ſecond Chapter: John in the Apocalyps: Daniel 11. Which thing, if I might have Life and Books, I would ſo (by Gods grace) ſet forth, that all the world ſhould ſee it: and that our Adverſaries, with their Antichriſtian Head, are the Members of the Devils Church, as they undoubtedly are. And in like caſe, as the above-mentioned holy men, though they in their days were counted to be Hereticks, Seditious, and Diſturbers of the whole world; for unto John Baptiſt it was ſaid, Joh. 1. Wherefore baptizeſt thou, if thou be not Helias, nor that Prophet? &c. As who ſhould ſay, Thou haſt no ſuch Authority to begin a new Ceremony in the Church. For we be in ordinary poſſeſſion of the Church: and of us thou haſt received no ſuch Power: we abide by our Circumciſion: and the like could I declare of James, and of all the Apoſtles and Prophets, and of our Saviour Chriſt himſelf, that were all condemned as Hereticks, and Blaſphemers of God, and Diſturbers of the whole World. Paul and Silas, Acts the ſixteenth, heard like words of the Philippians; Theſe men trouble our City, ſeeing they are Jews, and preach Inſtitutions which are not lawful for us to receive, ſeeing we be Romans. And in the ſeventeenth; In Athens, the wiſe men of this world, and ſuch as gave their endeavour to wiſdom, ſaid by S. Paul; Quid vult ſpermo-logus hic dicere? that is, What will this Prater (as my Lord Chancellor ſaid to me, Shall we ſuffer this Fellow to prate, when I would fain have ſaid that thing that I have here written) Trifler, News-carrier or bringer, that telleth whatſoever men will have him for gain and advantage, that will for a piece of Bread ſay what ye will have him, &c. And another ſaid in the ſame place, He ſeemeth to be a Preacher of new Devils, &c. And Acts 21. the Jews ſay by Paul, laying hands on him, help O ye Iſraelites, ſay they, this is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the People (meaning the Jews) and the Law of this place (meaning Jeruſalem) and yet was never a word of theſe true. And Acts 22. the ſame Jews ſaid of Paul: Out of the Earth with that man, or away with him: For it is not lawful for him to live, or he is not worthy to live. And how many more of theſe Examples are to be found in the Bible? Although I ſay theſe men were in their days taken for Hereticks of them that were then in Authority, and of the great multitude of the World, yet it is now well known, yea and very ſhortly after their deaths this was known, yea, and even in their lives alſo unto the true Catholick Church, that they were not only the chief and ſpecial Members of the true Catholick Church, but alſo the founders and builders thereof (notwithſtanding the ſiniſter Judgment that the wiſe and mighty men, and the great multitude of the World had of them) and in their Conſciences they were always aſſuredly certified of the ſame. Even the ſame ſhall the World find true in us, ſhortly after our deaths, as alſo there be at this hour (the Lord be thanked therefore) not a few that already know it, as we our ſelves alſo are by Gods Grace aſſuredly certified in our Conſciences, that we are not Hereticks, but Members of the true Catholick Church, and that our Adverſaries the Biſhops and Popiſh Clergy, which will have that Title, are the Members of Satans Church, and their Antichriſtian Head of Rome with them.

But here they will cry out; Loe theſe men will be ſtill John Baptiſt, the Apoſtles, and Prophets, &c.

I anſwer, We make not our ſelves like unto them, in the ſingular vertues and gifts of God given unto them; as of doing miracles, and of many other things. The ſimilitude & likeneſs of them & us conſiſteth not in all things, but only in this, that is, that we be like them in Doctrine, and in the ſuffering of Perſecution and Infamy for the ſame.

We have Preached their very Doctrine, and none other thing: That we are able ſufficiently to declare by their writings; and by writing for my part, I have proferred to prove the ſame, as is now often ſaid. And for this cauſe we ſuffer the like reproach, ſhame, and rebuke of the World, and the like perſecution, loſing of our Lives and Goods, forſaking (as our Maſter Chriſt commandeth) Father, Mother, Siſter, Brethren, Wives, Children, and all that there is, being aſſured of a Joyful Reſurrection, and to be Crowned in Glory with them, according to the infallible promiſes made unto us in Chriſt, our only and ſufficient Mediator, Reconciler, Prieſt, and Sacrifice, which hath pleaſed the Father, and quieted and pacified his wrath againſt our Sins, and made us without ſpot or wrinkle in his ſight by imputation, although we, of and in our ſelves, are beſpotted, and be-blotted with many filthy Sins, which if the great Mercy granted in Chriſt did not put away, by not imputing them unto us of his meaſureleſs unſpeakable Mercy and Love to ſave us, they would have brought us to everlaſting Damnation, and Death perpetual: Herein, and in no other, do we affirm our ſelves to be like unto our Head Chriſt, and all his Apoſtles, Prophets, Martyrs, and Saints. And herein ought all Chriſtian men to be like them, and herein are all true Chriſtian men and women like them every one, according to the meaſure of the Faith that God hath dealt unto them, and to the diverſity of the gifts of the Spirit given unto them. But let us now conſider, that if it be Gods good will and pleaſure to give his own beloved heart, that is his beloved Church, and the Members thereof, into the hands of their Enemies, to chaſten, try and prove them, and to bring them to the true unfeigned acknowledging of their own natural ſtubbornneſs, diſobedience towards God and his Commandment, as touching the Love of God and of their Brethren or Neighbours, and their natural inclination, readineſs, and deſire to love Creatures, to ſeek their own luſts, pleaſures, and things forbidden of God, to obtain a true and earneſt repentance, and ſorrowfulneſs therefore, & to make them to ſigh and cry for the forgiveneſs of the ſame, and for the aid of the Spirit, daily to mortifie and kill the ſaid evil deſires and Luſts; yea, and often falling into groſs outward Sins, as did David, Peter, Magdalen, and others, to riſe again alſo thereout with a mighty crying for Mercy, with many other cauſes: let us alſo conſider what he hereafter doth with the ſaid enemies, into whoſe hands he hath given his tender beloved dearlings to be chaſtned and tried. Forſooth, whereas he but chaſteneth his dearlings, and croſſeth them for a ſmall while, according to his good pleaſure, as all Fathers do with their Children, Heb. 12. Prov. 3. he utterly deſtroyeth, yea and everlaſtingly damneth the unrepentant Enemies. Let Herod tell me what he wan by killing James, and perſecuting Peter, and Chriſts tender dearlings, and beloved Spouſe and Wife, his Church. Verily God thought him not worthy to have death miniſtred unto him by Men or Angels, or any worthy Creatures, but thoſe ſmall, and yet moſt vile vermine, lice, and worms muſt conſume and kill his beaſtly, vile, and tyrannous Body; Pharaoh and Nebuchadonoſor, for all their pride and moſt mighty power, muſt at the length let Gods dearlings go freely away out of their land, yea out of their bands and tyranny. For when it could not be obtained at their hands that Gods Congregation might have true mercy Miniſtred unto them, but the counterfeit mercy of theſe our days, that is to ſay, extream cruelty, and even the very and that moſt horrible and cruel death, God aroſe and awoke out of his ſleep, and deſtroyed thoſe enemies of his flock with a mighty hand, and ſtretched out arm. Pharaoh did with moſt great and intollerable labors and burdens oppreſs and bring under the poor Iſraelites, and yet did the Courtiers undoubtedly noiſe abroad, that the King was merciful unto them, to ſuffer them to live in the land, and to ſet them awork, that they might get them their livings. If he ſhould thruſt them out of his Land whither ſhould they go, like a ſort of Vagabonds and Runnagates? This Title and Name of mercy would that Tyrant have, and ſo did his flattering falſe Courtiers ſpread his vain praiſe abroad. Have not we the like examples now-adays? O that I had now time to write certain things pertaining to our Wincheſters mercy! How merciful he hath been to me and to my good Brethren I will not ſpeak of, neither yet unto the D. of Suffolks moſt innocent Daughter, and to her as innocent Husband. For although their Fathers were faulty, yet had their youth and lack of experience deſerved a pardon by all true merciful Mens Judgments. O that I had time to paint out this matter aright! but there be many alive that can do it much better when I am dead. Pharaoh had his Plagues, and his moſt flouriſhing Land was by counterfeit mercy, which was indeed right cruelty and abominable Tyranny, utterly deſtroyed. And think ye that bloody butcherly Biſhop of Wincheſter and his moſt bloody Brethren ſhall eſcape? Or that England ſhall for their offences, and ſpecially for the maintenance of their Idolatry, and wilful following of them, not abide as great brunts? yes undoubtedly.

Wincheſters mercy.

If God look not mercifully upon England, the ſeeds of utter deſtruction are ſown in it already by theſe Hypocritical Tyrants, and Antichriſtian Prelats, Popiſh Papiſts, and double Traytors to their Natural Countrey. And yet they ſpeak of Mercy, of Bleſſing, of the Catholick Church, of Unity, of Power, and Strengthning of the Realm. This double diſſimulation will ſhew it ſelf one day when the Plague cometh, which will undoubtedly light upon thoſe Crown-ſhorn Captains, and that ſhortly, whoſoever the Godly and the poor Realm ſuffer in the mean while by Gods good ſufferance and will.

rebuke, ruine, decay, and deſtruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not ſuffer for ever their abominable lying falſe Doctrine, their Hypocriſie, Blood-thirſt, whoredom, idleneſs, their peſtilent Life, pampered in all kind of pleaſure, their Thraſonical boaſting pride, their malicious, envious, and poyſoned ſtomacks, which they bear towards his poor and miſerable Chriſtians. Peter truly warneth, that *If Judgment beginneth at the Houſe of God, what ſhall be the end of them that believe not the Goſpel? February. After that John Rogers, as ye have heard, had been long and ſtraitly impriſoned, lodged in Newgate amongſt Thieves, often examined, and very uncharitably intreated, and at length unjuſtly and moſt cruelly by wicked Wincheſter condemned: The fourth of February, in the year of our Lord 1555. being Munday in the morning he was warned ſuddenly, by the keepers wife of Newgate, to prepare himſelf to the fire: who being then found aſleep, ſcarce with much ſhogging could we awaked. At length being raiſed and waked, and bid to make haſt, then, ſaid he, if it be ſo, I need not tye my points: and ſo was had down, firſt to Boner to be degraded. That done, he craved of Boner but one Petition. And Boner asking what that ſhould be: Nothing (ſaid he) but that he might talk a few words with his wife before his burning. But that could not be obtained of him. Then ſaid he, you declare your Charity what it is: and ſo he was brought into Smithfield by Mr. Cheſter, and Mr. Woodroofe, then Sheriffs of London, there to be burnt; where he ſhewed moſt conſtant patience, not uſing many words, for he could not be permitted, but only exhorting the people conſtantly to remain in that Faith and true Doctrine which he before had taught, and they had learned, and for the Confirmation whereof he was not only content patiently to ſuffer and bear all ſuch bitterneſs and cruelty as had been ſhewed him, but alſo moſt gladly to reſign up his Life, and to give his Fleſh to the conſuming fire, for the Teſtimony of the ſame.

M. Rogers warned to prepare for Death.

M. Rogers degraded.

M. Rogers could not be ſuffered of Boner to ſpeak to his wife before his burning.

M. Rogers brought to Smithfield.

Briefly, and in few words to comprehend the whole order of his Life, doings and Martyrdom: Firſt, this Godly M. Rogers was committed to Priſon, as is aboveſaid, and there continued a year and half. In Priſon he was merry, and earneſt in all he went about. He wrote much; his examinations he penned with his own hand, which elſe had never come to light. Wherein is to be noted, by the way, a memorable working of Gods Providence. Ye heard a little above, how M. Rogers craved of Boner, going to his burning, that he might ſpeak a few words before with his wife, which could not be granted. What theſe words were, which he had to ſay to his wife, it is for no man certainly to define. Likewiſe it may be ſuppoſed that his purpoſe was, amongſt other things, to ſignifie unto her of the Book written of his Examinations and Anſwers, which he had privily hid in a ſecret corner of the Priſon where he lay. But where mans power lacketh, ſee how Gods providence worketh. For notwithſtanding that during the time of his Impriſonment, ſtrait ſearch there was to take away his Letters and writings; yet after his death, his wife and one of her Sons called Daniel, comming into the place where he lay, to ſeek for his Books and writings, and now ready to go away; it chanced her Son aforenamed, caſting his eye aſide, to ſpie a Black thing, (for it had a black cover, belike becauſe it ſhould not be known) lying in a blind corner under a pair of Stairs. Who, willing his Mother to ſee what it was, found it to be the Book written with his own hand, containing theſe his Examinations, and Anſwers with other matter above ſpecified. In the latter end whereof, this alſo was contained; which becauſe it concerneth a Prophetical Forewarning of things pertaining to the Church, I thought to place the ſame his words, as they be there written, which are theſe: If God look not mercifully upon England, the ſeeds of utter deſtruction are ſown in it already by theſe Hypocritical Tyrants, and Antichriſtian Prelates, Popiſh Papiſts, and double Traitors to their Natural Countrey. And yet they ſpeak of Mercy, of Bleſſing, of the Catholick Church, of Unity, of Power, and ſtrengthning of the Realm. This double diſſimulation will ſhew it ſelf one day when the plague cometh, which undoubtedly will light upon theſe Crown-ſhorn Captains, and that ſhortly, whatſoever the Godly and the poor Realm ſuffer in the mean while by Gods ſufferance and will.

The Copy of M. Rogers examinations by Gods providence preſerved.

M. Rogers ſeemeth to prophecie here of England, and that truly.

Spite of Nebuchadonoſor's beard, and maugre his heart, the captive, thrall, and miſerable Jews muſt come home again, and have their City and Temple builded up again by Zorobabel, Eſdras, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdom of Babylon muſt go to ruin and be taken of ſtrangers, the Perſians and Meads. So ſhall the diſperſed Engliſh Flock of Chriſt be brought again into their former Eſtate, or to a better, I truſt in the Lord God, than it was in innocent King Edwards days; and our Bloody Babylonical Biſhops, and the whole Crown-ſhorn Company brought to utter ſhame, rebuke, ruine, decay, and deſtruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not ſuffer for ever their abominable lying falſe Doctrine, their Hypocriſie, Blood-thirſt, Whoredom, Idleneſs, their peſtilent Life, pampered in all kind of pleaſure, their Thraſonical boaſting Pride, their malicious, envious and poyſoned ſtomacks, which they bear towards his poor and miſerable Chriſtians. Peter truly warneth, that If Judgment beginneth in the Houſe of God, what ſhall be the end of them that believe not the Goſpel? If the righteous ſhall ſcant be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinful appear? Some ſhall have their puniſhment here in this World and in the World to come; and they that do eſcape in this World, ſhall not eſcape everlaſting Damnation. This ſhall be your ſawce, O ye wicked Papiſts, make ye merry as long as ye may.

He meaneth here of the return of the Exiles into England.

1 Pet. 4.

Furthermore, amongſt other words and ſayings, which may ſeem Prophetically to be ſpoken of him, this alſo may be added, and is notoriouſly to be marked, that he ſpake, being then in Priſon, to the Printer of this preſent book, who then alſo was laid up for like cauſe of Religion: Thou, ſaid he, ſhalt live to ſee the Alteration of this Religion, and the Goſpel to be freely preached again: And therefore have me commended to my Brethren, as well in exile as others, and bid them be circumſpect in diſplacing the Papiſts, and putting good Miniſters into Churches, or elſe their end will be worſe than ours. And for lack of Good Miniſters to furniſh Churches, his device was (M. Hooper alſo agreeing to the ſame) that for every ten Churches ſome one good and learned ſuperintendent ſhould be appointed, which ſhould have under him Faithful Readers, ſuch as might well be got, ſo that Popiſh Prieſts ſhould clean be put out, and the Biſhop once a year to overſee the profiting of the Pariſhes; and if the Miniſter did not his duty, as well in profiting himſelf in his Book, and his Pariſhioners in good inſtructions, ſo that they may be trained by little and little to give a reckoning how they do profit, then he to be expelled, and another put in his place: And the Biſhop to do the like with the ſuperintendent: This was his Councel and requeſt: Shewing moreover, and proteſting in his commendations to his Brethren by the Printer aforeſaid, that if they would not ſo do, their end, he ſaid, would be worſe than theirs.

M. Rogers prophecieth of the return of the Goſpel.

M. Rogers councel in placing good Miniſters.

Over and beſides divers things touching M. Rogers, this is not to be forgotten, how in the days of King Edward the ſixth, there was a controverſie among the Biſhops and Clergy, for wearing of Prieſts Caps, and other attire belonging to that order. M. Rogers being one of that number which never went otherwiſe than in a round Cap, during all the time of King Edward, affirmed that he would not agree to that decreement of uniformity, but upon this condition, that if they would needs have ſuch an uniformity of wearing the Cap, Tippet, &c. then it ſhould alſo be decreed withal, that the Papiſts, for a difference betwixt them and others, ſhould be conſtrained to wear upon their ſleeves a Chalice with an Hoſt upon it. Whereupon if they would conſent, he would agree to the other; otherwiſe he would not, he ſaid, conſent to the ſetting forth of the ſame, nor ever wear the Cap, as indeed he never did.

Provision by Mr. Rogers for the Priſoners.

To proceed now further in deſcribing the doings of this man, during the time while he remained Priſoner in Newgate, he was to the Priſoners beneficial and liberal; for whom he had thus deviſed, that he with his Fellows ſhould have but one Meal a day, they paying notwithſtanding for the Charges of the whole; the other Meal ſhould be given to them that lacked on the other ſide of the Priſon. But Alexander their Keeper, a ſtrait man, and a right Alexander, a Copperſmith indeed, of whoſe doing more ſhall be ſaid God-willing hereafter, would in no caſe ſuffer that. The Sunday before he ſuffered, he drunk to Mr. Hooper, being then underneath him, and bade them commend him unto him, and tell him, There was never little Fellow better would ſtick to a man, than he would ſtick to him, preſuppoſing they ſhould both be burned together, although it happened otherwiſe; for Mr. Rogers was burnt alone. And thus much briefly concerning the Life and ſuch Acts of Mr Rogers, as I thought worthy noting.

Alexander Andrew, Goaler of Newgate, compared to Alexander the Copperſmith.

Now when the time came, that he being delivered to the Sheriffs, ſhould be brought out of Newgate to Smithfield, the place of his Execution, firſt came to him Mr. Woodroofe, one of the aforeſaid Sheriffs, and calling Mr. Rogers unto him, asked him if he would revoke his abominable Doctrine, and his evil Opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar. Mr. Rogers anſwered and ſaid, That which I have Preached I will Seal with my Blood. Then, quoth Mr. Woodroofe, thou art an Heretick. That ſhall be known, quoth Rogers, at the Day of Judgment. Well, (quoth Mr. Woodroofe) I will never pray for thee. But I will pray for you, quoth Mr. Rogers; and ſo was brought the ſame day, which was Monday the Fourth of February, by the Sheriffs toward Smithfield, ſaying the Pſalm Miſerere by the way, all the People wonderfully rejoycing at his Conſtancy, with great Praiſes and Thanks to God for the ſame: And there in the Preſence of M. Rocheſter, Comptroller of the Queens Houſhold, Sir Richard Southwell, both the Sheriffs, and a wonderful number of People, he was burned into Aſhes, waſhing his hands in the flame as he was in burning. A little before his burning at the Stake, his Pardon was brought, if he would have Recanted, but he utterly refuſed it. He was the firſt Protomartyr of all the bleſſed Company that ſuffered in Queen Mary's time, that gave the firſt adventure upon the Fire. His Wife and Children, being eleven in number, and ten able to go, and one ſucking on her Breaſt, met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield: This ſorrowful ſight of his own fleſh and blood could nothing move him, but that he conſtantly and chearfully took his Death with wonderful Patience, in the defence and quarrel of Chriſts Goſpel.

The Hiſtory and Martyrdom of Laurence Saunders, burned for the Defence of the Goſpel., at Coventry, Anno 1555. February 8.

Anno 1555.

AFter that Queen Mary, by publick Proclamation in the firſt year of her Reign, had inhibited the ſincere preaching of Gods holy Word, as is before declared, divers godly Miniſters of the Word, which had the Cure and Charge of Souls committed to them, did notwithſtanding, according to their bounden Duty, feed their Flock faithfully, not as Preachers authorized by publick Authority, (as the Godly Order of the Realm was in the happy days of bleſſed King Edward) but as the private Paſtors of particular Flocks, among whom Laurence Saunders was one, a man of worſhipful Parentage. His bringing up was in Learning from his Youth, in places meet for that purpoſe, as namely in the School of Eaton. From whence (according to the manner there uſed) he was choſen to go to the Kings Colledge in Cambridge, where he continued Scholar of the Colledge three whole years, and there profited in knowledge and learning very much for that time: Shortly after that, he did forſake the Univerſity, and went to his Parents, upon whoſe advice he minded to become a Merchant, for that his Mother, who was a Gentlewoman of good eſtimation, being left a Widow, and having a good Portion for him among his other Brethren, ſhe thought to ſet him up wealthily, and ſo he coming up to London, was bound Apprentice with a Merchant, named Sir William Cheſter (who afterward chanced to be Sheriff of London the ſame year that Saunders was burned at Coventry.) Thus by the mind of his Friends Laurence ſhould needs have been a Merchant; but Almighty God, which hath his ſecret working in all things, ſaw better for his Servant, as it fell out in the end: For although that Saunders was bound by faſt Indenture to play the Merchant, yet the Lord ſo wrought inwardly in his heart, that he could find no liking in that Vocation: So that when his other Fellows were buſily occupied about that kind of Trade, he would ſecretly withdraw himſelf into ſome privy Corner, and there fall into his ſolitary Lamentations, as one not liking with that kind and trade of life.

Anno 1555.

It happened that his Maſter, being a good man, and hearing his Prentice thus in his ſecret Prayers inwardly to mourn by himſelf, called him unto him, to know what the cauſe was of that his ſolitarineſs and lamentation: who then perceiving his mind nothing to fantaſie that kind of Life, (for ſo Sanders declared unto him) and perceiving alſo his whole purpoſe to be bent to the ſtudy of his book, and ſpiritual contemplation, like a good man directed his Letters incontinently unto his friends, and giving him his Indenture ſo ſet him free: and thus Laurence Sanders being raviſhed with the love of learning, and eſpecially with the reading of Gods Word, tarried not long time in the traffick of Merchandize, but ſhortly returned to Cambridge again to his ſtudy, where he began to couple to the knowledge of the Latin, the ſtudy of the Greek Tongue, wherein he profited in ſmall time very much: Therewith alſo he joyned the ſtudy of the Hebrew. Then gave he himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of the holy Scripture, to furniſh himſelf to the Office of a Preacher.

M. Sanders appointed to the trade of Merchandize, could not away with that kind of Life.

M. Sanders from Merchandize returneth to his ſtudy.

In ſtudy he was diligent and painful, in Godly Life he declared the fruits of a well exerciſed Conſcience, he prayed often and with great fervor, and in his Prayers as alſo at other times, he had his part of ſpiritual exerciſes, which his hearty ſighing to God declared, in which when any ſpecial aſſault did come, by Prayer he felt preſent relief: then was his company marvellous comfortable. For as his exerciſes were ſpecial teachings, ſo in the end they proved ſingular Conſolations: wherein he became ſo expert, that within ſhort ſpace he was able to comfort others which were in any Affliction, by the conſolation wherewith the Lord did comfort him. Thus continued he in the Univerſity, till he proceeded Maſter of Arts, and a long ſpace after.

In the beginning of King Edwards Reign, when Gods true Religion was begun to be reſtored, after Licence obtained, he began to preach, and was ſo well liked of them which then had Authority, that they appointed him to read a Divinity Lecture in the Colledge at Fothringa, where by Doctrine and Life he edified the Godly, drew many ignorant to Gods true knowledge, and ſtopped the mouth of the Adverſaries. He married about that time, and in the married eſtate led a Life unblamable before all men. The Colledge of Fothringa being diſſolved, he was placed to be reader in the Minſter at Lichfield: where he ſo behaved himſelf in teaching and living, that the very Adverſaries did give him a full report as well of Learning, as of much Godlineſs. After a certain ſpace, he departed from Lichfield to a Benefice in Leiceſterſhire, called Churchlangton, whereupon he keeping reſidence taught diligently, and kept a liberal houſe. From thence he was orderly called to take a Benefice in the City of London, named Allhallows in Breadſtreet. Then minded he to give over his Cure in the Countrey: and therefore after he had taken poſſeſſion of his Benefice in London, he departed from London into the Countrey, clearly to diſcharge himſelf thereof. And even at that time began the broyl about the claim that Queen Mary made to the Crown, by reaſon whereof he could not accompliſh his purpoſe.

The conſtant purpoſe of M. Sanders.

In this trouble, and even among the beginners of it, (ſuch I mean as were for the Queen) he preached at Northampton, nothing medling with the State, but boldly uttered his Conſcience againſt Popiſh Doctrine and Antichriſts damnable Errors, which were like to ſpring up again in England, as a juſt plague for the little Love which the Engliſh Nation did bear to the Bleſſed Word of God, which had been ſo plentifully offered unto them. The Queens men which were there and heard him, were highly diſpleaſed with him for his Sermon, and for it kept him among them as Priſoner. But partly for love of his Brethren and Friends, which were chief doers for the Queen among them, partly becauſe there was no Law broken by his Preaching, they diſmiſſed him. He, ſeeing the dreadful days at hand, inflamed with the fire of Godly zeal, preached with Diligence at both thoſe Benefices, as time could ſerve him, ſeeing he could reſign neither of them now, but into the hand of a Papiſt.

Thus paſſed he to and fro Preaching, until that Proclamation was put forth, of which mention is made in the beginning. At which time he was at his Benefice in the Countrey, where he (notwithſtanding the Proclamation aforeſaid) taught diligently Gods truth confirming the people therein, and arming them againſt falſe Doctrine, until he was not only commanded to ceaſe, but alſo with force reſiſted, ſo that he could not proceed there in Preaching. Some of his Friends, perceiving ſuch fearful menacing councelled him to flie out of the Realm, which he refuſed ſo to do. But ſeeing he was with violence kept from doing good in that place, he returned towards London to viſit the Flock, of which he had there the charge.

M. Sanders refuſeth to flie the Realm.

On Saturday, the 14. of October, as he was coming nigh to the City of London, Sir John Mordant, a Counſellor to Queen Mary, did overtake him, and asked him whether he went. I have (ſaid Sanders) a Cure in London, and now I go to inſtruct my People according to my duty. If you will follow my Counſel, quoth Mr. Mordant, let them alone, and come not at them. To this Sanders anſwered: how ſhall I then be diſcharged before God, if any be ſick, and deſire Conſolation, if any want good Counſel and need inſtruction, or if any ſhould ſlip into Error and receive falſe Doctrine? Did you not, quoth Mordant, Preach ſuch a day, and named the day, in Breadſtreet in London? Yes verily, ſaid Sanders, that ſame is my Cure. I heard you my ſelf, quoth Mr. Mordant: and will you Preach now there again? If it pleaſe you, ſaid Sanders to morrow you may hear me again in that ſame place, where I will confirm by the Authority of Gods Word, all that I ſaid then, and whatſoever before that time I taught them.

I would counſel you (quoth the other) not to Preach. If you can and will forbid me by lawful Authority, then muſt I obey, ſaid Sanders. Nay (quoth he) I will not forbid you, but I do give you Counſel. And thus entred they both the City, and departed each from other. M. Mordant, of an uncharitable mind went to give warning to Boner Biſhop of London, that Sanders would Preach in his Cure the next day. Sanders reſorted to his lodging, with a mind bent to do his duty. Where becauſe he ſeemed to be ſomewhat troubled, one which was there about him, asked him how he did. In very deed (ſaith he) I am in Priſon, till I be in Priſon: meaning that his mind was unquiet until he had Preached, and that he ſhould have quietneſs of mind, though he were put in Priſon.

M. Mordant diſſwadeth Laurence Sanders from Preaching.

M. Sanders in Priſon, till he was in Priſon.

The next day, which was Sunday in the forenoon, he made a Sermon in his Pariſh, entreating on that place which Paul writeth to the Corinthians: I have coupled you to one man, that ye ſhould make your ſelves a chaſte Virgin unto Chriſt. But I fear leaſt it come to paſs, that as the Serpent beguiled Eve; even ſo your wits ſhould be corrupt from the ſingleneſs which ye had towards Chriſt. He recited a ſum of that true Chriſtian Doctrine, through which they were coupled to Chriſt, to receive of him free juſtification through Faith in his Blood. The Papiſtical Doctrine he compared to the Serpents deceiving: and leſt they ſhould be deceived by it, he made a compariſon between the voice of God, and the voice of the Popiſh Serpent; deſcending to more particular Declaration thereof, as it were to let them plainly ſee the difference that is between the Order of the Church Service ſet forth by King Edward in the Engliſh Tongue, and comparing it with the Popiſh Service then uſed in the Latine Tongue.

M. Sanders Sermon at Allhallows. 2 Cor. 11.

The firſt he ſaid was good, becauſe it was according to the Word of God, Corinth. 14. and the order of the Primitive Church. The other he ſaid was evil, and though in that evil be intermingled ſome good Latin words; yet was it but as a little honey or milk mingled with a great deal of Poyſon, to make them drink up all. This was the ſum of his Sermon.

In the Afternoon he was ready in his Church to have given another exhortation to his people. But the Biſhop of London interrupted him by ſending an Officer for him. This Officer charged him, upon the pain of Diſobedience and Contumacy, forthwith to come to the Biſhop his Maſter. Thus, as the Apoſtles were brought out of the Temple, where they were teaching, unto the Rulers of the Prieſts; ſo was Laurence Sanders brought before this Biſhop of this place of London, who had in his company the aforenamed Sir John Mordant and some of his Chaplains. The Bishop laid no more to Laurence Sanders charge, but Treason for breaking the Queens Proclamation, Heresie and Sedition for his Sermon.

Preaching of Gods Word made Treason with Bishop Boner.

The Treason and Sedition his charity was content to let slip, untill another time. But an Heretick he would now prove him, and all those, he said, which did teach and believe that the Administration of the Sacraments and all orders of the Church are most pure, which do come most nigh to the order of the Primitive Church. For the Church was then but in her Infancy, and could not abide that perfection which was afterward to be furnished with Ceremonies. And for this cause Christ himself, and after him the Apostles, did in many things bear with the rudeness of that Church. To this Laurence Sanders answered with the Authority of S. Augustine, That Ceremonies were even from the beginning invented and ordained for the rude infancy and weak infirmity of man, and therefore it was a token of the more perfection of the Primitive Church, that it had few Ceremonies, and of the rudeness of the Church Papistical, because it had so many Ceremonies, partly Blasphemous, partly unsavoury and unprofitable.

Ceremonies invented only for weak infirmity.

B. Boner seeketh the Blood of M. Sanders

After much talk had concerning this matter, the Bishop willed him to write what he believed of Transubstantiation. Laurence Sanders did so, saying; My Lord, ye do seek my Blood, and ye shall have it: I pray God that ye may be so Baptized in it, that ye may thereafter loath blood-sucking, and become a better man. This writing, the Bishop kept for his purpose, even to cut the writers throat, as shall appear hereafter. The Bishop, when he had his will, sent Laurence Sanders to the Lord Chancellor, as Annas sent Christ to Caiphas: and like favour found Sanders as Christ his Master did before him. But the Chancellor being not at home, Sanders was constrained to tarry for him by the space of four hours, in the utter Chamber, where he found a Chaplain of the Bishops very merrily disposed, with certain Gentlemen playing at the Tables, with divers others of the same Family or House occupied there in the same exercise.

M. Sanders sent from Annas to Caiphas.

All this time Sanders stood very modestly and soberly at the Screen or Cupboard bare-headed, Sir John Mordant his Guide or Leader walking up and down by him: who (as I said before) was then one of the Councel. At the last the Bishop returned from the Court, whom, as soon as he was entred, a great many suiters met and received: so that before he could get out of one house into another, half an hour was passed. At the last he came into the Chamber where Sanders was, and went thorow into another Chamber: where in the mean way Sanders leader gave him a writing, containing the Cause, or rather the Accusation of the said Sanders: Which when he had perused; where is the man, said the Bishop? Then Sanders, being brought forth to the place of Examination, first most lowly and meekly kneeled down, and made curtesie before the Table where the Bishop did sit; unto whom the Bishop spake on this wise:

Winchesters talk with M. Sanders.

How happeneth it, said he, that, notwithstanding the Queens Proclamation to the contrary, you have enterprised to preach?

M. Sanders answer to Ste. Winchester.

Sanders denied not that he did preach: saying, that forsomuch as he saw the perillous times now at hand, he did but (according as he was admonished, and warned by Ezekiel the Prophet) exhort his Flock and Parishioners to persevere and stand stedfastly in the Doctrine which they had learned; saying also, That he was moved and pricked forward thereunto by the place of the Apostle, wherein he was commanded rather to obey God than man; and moreover, that nothing more moved or stirred him thereunto, than his own Conscience.

Winchester.

A goodly Conscience surely, said the Bishop. This your Conscience could make our Queen a Bastard, or misbegotten: Would it not, I pray you?

M. Sanders.

Then said Sanders, We, said he, do not declare or say, that the Queen is base, or misbegotten, neither go about any such matter. But for that let them care whose writings are yet in the hands of men, witnessing the same, not without the great reproach and shame of the Author: privily taunting the Bishop himself, which had before (to get the favour of Henry the Eighth) written and set forth in print a Book of true Obedience, wherein he had openly declared Queen Mary to be a Bastard. Now Mr. Sanders going forwards in his purpose, said; We do only profess and teach the sincerity and purity of the Word; the which, albeit it be now forbidden us to Preach with our Mouths, yet notwithstanding, I do not doubt, but that our Blood hereafter shall manifest the same. The Bishop being in this sort pretily nipped and touched, said; Carry away this frenzie fool to Prison. Unto whom M. Sanders answered, that he did give God thanks, which had given him at the last a place of rest and quietness, whereas he might pray for the Bishops conversion.

Note how Winchester confuteth M. Sanders.

A notable example of the Lord comforting his servants in their troubles.

Furthermore, he that did lie with him afterwards in Prison, in the same Bed, reported that he heard him say, that even in the time of his Examination he was wonderfully comforted, insomuch as not only in Spirit, but also in Body, he received a certain taste of that Holy Communion of Saints, whilst a most pleasant refreshing did issue from every Part and Member of the Body unto the seat and place of the Heart, and from thence did ebb and flow to and fro unto all the parts again.

M. Sanders in Prison a year and three months.

This Sanders continued in Prison a whole year and three months. In all which space he sent divers Letters to divers men; as one to Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer; another to his Wife, and also to others, certifying them both of the Publick Calamity of the time, and also of his private Afflictions, and of sundry his conflicts with his Adversaries: as in writing to his friend he speaketh of Weston conferring with him in Prison, whereof ye shall hear anon (by the leave of the Lord) as followeth in the story. In the mean time the Chancellor, after this little talk with Mr. Sanders (as is aforesaid) sent him to the Prison of the Marshalsey, &c. For the Caiphas (Winchester I mean) did nothing but bait him with some of his curriish eloquence, and so committed him to the Prison of the Marshalsey, where he was kept Prisoner one whole year and a quarter. But of his Cause and Estate, thou shalt now see what L. Sanders himself did write.

A parcel of a Letter of Laurence Sanders sent to the Bishop of Winchester, as an answer to certain things wherewith he had before charged him.

A fragment of M. Sanders Letter.

Touching the cause of my Imprisonment, I doubt whether I have broken any Law or Proclamation. In my Doctrine I did not, forasmuch as at that time it was permitted by the Proclamation to use, according to our Consciences, such service as was then established. My Doctrine was then agreeable unto my Conscience and the same service then used. The Act which I did (he meaneth publick teaching of Gods Word in his own Parish, called Alhallows in Breadstreet in the City of London) was such as being indifferently weighed, sounded to no breaking of the Proclamation, or at the least no wilful breaking of it, forasmuch as I caused no bell to be rung, neither occupied I any place in the Pulpit, after the order of Sermons or Lectures. But be it that I did break the Proclamation, this long time of Continuance in Prison may be thought to be more than a sufficient punishment for such a fault.

He meaneth the Proclamation, of which mention is made before, Sat is peccavit qui resistere non potuit.

Touching the charging of me with my Religion, I say with S. Paul; this I confess, that after the way which they call Heresie, so worship I the God of my fore-fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets, and have hope towards God, &c. And herein study I to have always a clear Conscience towards God and towards men: So that God I call to witness, I have a Conscience. And this my Conscience is not grounded upon vain fantasie, but upon the infallible verity of Gods Word, with the witnessing of his chosen Church agreeable unto the same.

Act. 24.

A good Testimony of a good Conscience.

It is an easie thing for them, which take Christ for their true Pastor, and be the very Sheep of his Pasture, to discern the Voice of their true Shepheard, from the Voice of Wolves, Hirelings, and Strangers: forasmuch as Christ saith; My Sheep hear my Voice: Yea, and thereby they shall have the gift to know the right Voice of the true Shepheard, and so to follow him, and to avoid the contrary, as he also saith; The Sheep follow the Shepheard, for they know know his voice: A ſtranger they will not follow, but will flye from him; for they know not the Voice of a ſtranger. Such inward inſpiration doth the Holy Ghoſt put into the Children of God, being indeed taught of God, but otherwiſe unable to underſtand the true way of their Salvation. And albeit that the Wolf (as Chriſt ſaith) cometh in ſheeps Cloathing, yet he ſaith, by their fruits ye ſhall know them. For there be certain fruits whereby the Wolf is bewrayed, notwithſtanding that otherwiſe, in ſundry ſorts of devout holineſs in outward ſhew, he ſeemeth never ſo ſimple a Sheep. That the Romiſh Religion is ravening & wolfiſh, it is apparent in three principal points:

Mat. 7. How the Wolf is known from the true Shepherd.

Firſt, it robbeth God of his due and only Honour.

Secondly, it taketh away the true comfort of Conſcience, in obſcuring, or rather burying of Chriſt and his Office of Salvation.

The inconvenience of the Romiſh Religion in 3. points.

Thirdly, it ſpoileth God of his true Worſhip and ſervice in Spirit and Truth, appointed in his preſcript commandments, and driveth men unto that inconvenience, againſt the which Chriſt with the Prophet Eſay doth ſpeak ſharply; This People honoureth me with their Lips, but their Heart is far from me. They Worſhip me in vain, teaching the Doctrine and Precepts of Men. And in another place; Ye caſt aſide the Commandments of God, to maintain your own Traditions.

Eſay 26. Mat. 25.

Wherefore I in conſcience weighing the Romiſh Religion, and by indifferent diſcuſſing thereof, finding the Foundation unſtedfaſt, and the building thereupon but vain: and on the other ſide having my Conſcience framed after a right and uncorrupt Religion, ratified and fully eſtabliſhed by the Word of God, and the conſent of his true Church, I neither may, nor do intend, by Gods Gracious Aſſiſtance, to be pulled one jot from the ſame; no, though an Angel out of Heaven ſhould preach another Goſpel than that which I have received of the Lord.

And although that for lack either of ſuch deep Knowledge and profound Judgment, or of expedite uttering of that I do know and judge, as is required in an excellent Clerk, I ſhall not be able ſufficiently to anſwer, for the convincing of the gain-ſayer: yet, nevertheleſs this my proteſtation ſhall be of me premiſed, that for the reſpect of the grounds and cauſes before conſidered, albeit I cannot * Explicita fide, as they call it, conceive all that is to be conceived, neither can diſcuſs all that is to be diſcuſſed, nor can effectually expreſs all that can be expreſſed in the diſcourſe of the Doctrine of this moſt true Religion, whereunto I am profeſſed: yet do I bind my ſelf, as by my humble ſimplicity, ſo by my fidem * implicitam; that is, by Faith in generality (as they call it) to wrap my belief in the credit of the ſame, that no authority of that Romiſh Religion repugnant thereunto, ſhall by any means remove me from the ſame, though it may hap that our Adverſaries will labour to beguile us with inticing words, and ſeek to ſpoil us through Philoſophy and deceitful vanity, after the Traditions of men, and after the Ordinances of the World, and not after Chriſt, &c.

* Explicita fides, is when a man hath to anſwer to every point of his Faith by ſufficient ground and learning.

* Implicita fides is when a man without inſtruction in himſelf, groundeth only upon the Faith of the Church, not able to render any reaſon of that which he believeth.

And thus much of M. Sanders Letter, ſo much as remained thereof. The reſidue, becauſe it was rent away, I could not adjoyn thereunto. Notwithſtanding, by this already expreſſed, it is ſufficient to underſtand, how good was the cauſe and ſtate of this bleſſed Child of God, being priſoner for Chriſts cauſe. For the defence whereof he wholly beſtowed and reſigned himſelf, in ſuch ſort, as he forbad his Wife to ſue for his delivery: and when others of his Friends had by ſuit almoſt obtained it, he diſcouraged them, ſo that they did not follow their ſuit, as by his Letter following may appear.

A Letter of M. Sanders to his Wife.

GRace, Mercy, and Peace in Chriſt our Lord. Entirely beloved Wife, even as unto mine own Soul and Body, ſo do I daily in my Hearty Prayer wiſh unto you; for I do daily, twice at the leaſt, in this ſort remember you. And I do not doubt (dear Wife) but that both I and you, as we be written in the Book of Life, ſo we ſhall together enjoy the ſame Everlaſtingly, through the Grace and Mercy of God our dear Father, in his Son our Chriſt. And for this preſent Life, let us wholly appoint our ſelves to the will of our good God, to glorifie him either by Life or by Death; and even that ſame merciful Lord make us worthy to honour him either way as pleaſeth him, Amen. I am merry, I thank my God and my Chriſt, in whom and through whom I ſhall (I know) be able to fight a good fight, and finiſh a good courſe, and then receive the Crown which is laid up in ſtore for me, and all the true Souldiers of Chriſt. Wherefore, Wife, let us, in the Name of our God, fight luſtily to overcome the Fleſh, the Devil, and the World. What our Harneſs and Weapons be in this kind of fight, look in the ſixth chapter unto the Epheſians, and Pray, pray, pray. I would that you make no ſuit for me in any wiſe. Thank you know whom, for her moſt ſweet and comfortable putting me in remembrance of my journey whither I am paſſing. God ſend us all good ſpeed, and a joyful meeting. I have too few ſuch friends to further me in that journey, which is indeed the greateſt friendſhip. The Bleſſing of God be with you all, Amen.

1 Tim. 4.

M. Sanders would have no ſuit made for him.

A Priſoner in the Lord,
L. Sanders.

This his conſtancy is ſufficiently commended and declared by his valiant buckling with two mighty enemies, Antichriſt and Death. To neither of theſe did he give place: but by ſuffering their malice got the Victory over them both. One of the conflicts which he had with Antichriſt and his Members, I have gathered out of a Letter of his own hand writing. It was with Doctor Weſton, a man, whom though I ſhould praiſe, yet would all good and godly men worthily diſpraiſe. Of this the ſaid Laurence Sanders thus writeth in a Letter which he ſent to one of his Friends, which wrote to him to know what Doctor Weſton did at the Marſhalſey: whereunto he thus anſwereth.

Antichriſt and Death two enemies.

M. Weſton came to confer with Maſter Grimoald. What he hath concluded with him I know not: I wiſh it may be to Gods Glory, Amen, Amen. M. Weſton of his gentleneſs viſited me, and offered me Friendſhip in his Worldly wily ſort, &c. I had not ſo much good manners, as to take it at his hand: for I ſaid, that I was well enough, and ready cheerfully to abide the extremity, to keep thereby a good Conſcience. Ye be aſleep in ſin, ſaid he. I would awake (quoth I) and do not forget Vigilate & Orate, i. Watch and Pray. What Church was there, thirty years paſt? What Church was there, quoth I, in Helias time? Joan of Kent, ſaid he, was of your Church. No. quoth I, we did condemn her as an Heretick.

This Doctor Weſton and M. Grimoald died both about the Coronation of Q. Elizabeth.

Who was of your Church, ſaid he, thirty years paſt? Such (quoth I) as the Romiſh Antichriſt, and his rabble have reputed and condemned as Hereticks: Wickliff, ſaid he, Thorp, Oldcaſtle, &c. Yea, quoth I, with many more, as ſtories do tell.

The Church goeth not always by number.

The Biſhop of Rome hath, ſaid he, long time played a part in your railing Sermons: but, now be ye ſure, he muſt play another manner of part. The more pity, quoth I, and yet ſome comfort it is to ſee how that the beſt learned, wiſeſt, and holieſt of you all, have heretofore had him to play a part likewiſe in your Sermons and Writings, though now to pleaſe the World, you do turn with the Weather-Cock. Did you ever, ſaid he, hear me Preach againſt the Biſhop of Rome? No (quoth I) for I never heard you Preach. But I trow you have been no wiſer than other, &c. with more about the Sacrament. Pray, pray. God keep your Family, and Bleſs it.

What Bleſſed taſt M. Sanders had of Chriſts comforts.

What a Bleſſed taſte this good man had of Gods Holy Spirit, by divers and Sundry his Letters may right well appear to him that is diſpoſed to peruſe the ſame: whereof certain we have here thought good, the Lord willing, to expreſs; firſt beginning with that which he wrote out of the Marſhalſey to D. Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer Priſoners for the like cauſe of Chriſt in Oxford.

To the Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, being priſoned in Oxford.

IN my moſt humble wiſe I ſalute you, moſt Reverend Fathers in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. Immortal thanks and Everlaſting praiſes be given unto that our Father of Coloſſ 1. Coloſſ 3. mercies, Which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of Saints in light, which hath delivered us from the power of darkneſs, and hath tranſlated us into the Kingdom of his beloved Son, by whom we have redemption through his Blood, &c. O moſt happy eſtate, that in an unſpeakable wiſe our Life is hid with Chriſt in God: But whenſoever Chriſt which is our Life ſhall

1 Cor 13. ſhew himſelf, then ſhall we alſo appear with him in Glory. In the mean ſeaſon as our ſight is but in a glaſs, even in a dark ſpeaking, ſo we walk in Faith, not after outward appearance: The which Faith although for want of outward appearance, reaſon reputeth but as vain, yet the choſen of God do know the effect thereof, to bring a more ſubſtantial ſtate and lively fruition of very felicity and perfect bleſſedneſs than reaſon can reach, or ſenſes receive. By this Faith we have in our poſſeſſion all good things, yea even them which

Eſay 54. 1 Cor. 2. the eye hath not ſeen, and the ear hath not heard, neither hath entred the heart of man, &c. Then if hereby we do enjoy all good things, it followeth that we muſt needs poſſeſs, have and enjoy you, moſt Reverend Fathers, who be no ſmall part of our joy and good things given us of God.

We heretofore have had the fruition of you by bodily Preſence to our inexplicable benefit, praiſed be that our moſt Gracious God therefore. And now in Spirit we have the experience of unſpeakable comfort by your Reverend Fatherhoods, for that in this ſo glorious ſort ye

Mat. 5. become a Town ſet upon a Hill, a Candle upon a Candleſtick, a Spectacle unto the World, both to the Angels and unto men. So that as we to our great comfort do feel, you alſo may aſſuredly with

2 Cor. 4. Phil 1. S. Paul, that the things which happen unto us, do chance unto the great furtherance of the Goſpel; ſo that our Bonds in Chriſt are manifeſt, not only throughout all the Judgment-hall, but in all whole Europe; inſomuch that many of the Brethren in the Lord, being incouraged through our Bonds, dare more boldly ſpeak the word without fear. And herein as you have with S. Paul greatly to rejoyce, ſo we rejoyce with you, and we do indeed with you give thanks for this worthy excellent favour of our God towards you, that Chriſt is thus magnified in you, yea, and hereafter ſhall be magnified in your Bodies, whether it be through Life or Death. Of which thing truly we are aſſured in our Prayers for

Phil. 2. Phil. 1. you, and Miniſtring of the Spirit. And although for our own parts, Chriſt is unto you in Life and Death advantage, and that your deſire is (as indeed it were better for you) to be looſed, and to be with Chriſt, yet for the Church of Chriſt were it much more neceſſary, that ye ſhould abide in the Fleſh. Yea, that Merciful God, even for his Chriſts ſake, grant that ye may abide and continue for the furtherance of the Church, and rejoycing of Faith, that the rejoycing thereof may be the more abundant through Chriſt by your reſtoring, Amen, Amen.

But if it ſeem better otherwiſe unto the Divine Wiſdom, that by ſpeedy Death he hath appointed you to glorifie him, the Lords will be done. Yea, even as we do rejoyce both on your behalfs, and alſo on our own, that God is magnified by Life, and ſhould be more abundantly glad for the continuance thereof; ſo we ſhall no leſs rejoyce to have the ſame wrought by Death. We ſhall give thanks for this honour given unto you, rejoycing that ye are accounted worthy to ſuffer for the Name of Chriſt, and that it is given to you of God, not only that ye ſhould believe in him, but alſo that ye ſhould ſuffer for his ſake. And herein we ſhall have to rejoyce in the behalf of the Church of Chriſt, whoſe Faith may be the faſter fixed upon Gods verity, being confirmed with three ſuch worthy witneſſes. O thanks be to God for this his unſpeakable gift!

And now moſt Reverend Fathers, that you may underſtand the truth of us, and our eſtate how we ſtand in the Lord; I do aſſure your Reverences, partly by that I perceive by ſuch of your Brethren as be here in Bonds with me, partly by that I hear of them which be in other places, and partly by that inward experience which I, moſt unworthy, have of Gods good comfort (more abundance whereof I know there is in others) you may be aſſured (I ſay) by Gods Grace, that you ſhall not be fruſtrate of your hope of our conſtant continuance in the cheerful confeſſion of Gods everlaſting verity. For even as we have received the Word of Truth, even the Goſpel of our Salvation, wherein we believing are ſealed with the holy Spirit of Promiſe, which is the earneſt of our Inheritance (the which ſpirit certifieth our ſpirit, that we are the Children of God, and therefore God hath ſent the ſpirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father) ſo after ſuch portion as God meaſureth unto us, we with the whole Church of Chriſt, and with you Reverend Fathers, receiving the ſame Spirit of Faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore I have ſpoken: We alſo believe, and therefore ſpeak. For the which we in this dangerous Bondage and other Afflictions, having even ſuch a fight as we have ſeen in you, and have heard of you, are in no wiſe affraid of our adverſaries.

And foraſmuch as we have ſuch an Office, even as God hath had Mercy on us, we go not out of kind, but even with you, after our little power, we labour to maintain the Faith of the Goſpel, knowing moſt certainly, that though we have this treaſure in earthen Veſſels, that the excellency of this power might be Gods, and not ours; yet ſhall we not be daſhed in pieces: For the Lord will put his hand under us. When we are troubled on every ſide, yet are we not without ſhift: When we are in poverty, we are not utterly without ſome thing: When we ſuffer Perſecution, we are not forſaken therein: When we are caſt down, yet we ſhall not periſh: but to Communicate with our ſweet Saviour Chriſt in bearing the Croſs, it is appointed unto us, that even with him alſo we ſhall be glorified: For it is a true ſaying; If we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him; If we be patient, we ſhall alſo raign with him: If we deny him, he ſhall alſo deny us. Wherefore be we of good cheer, always bearing about in our Body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the Life of Jeſus might appear alſo in our Body: For we know, that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe up us alſo by the means of Jeſus, & ſhall joyn us to himſelf together with you. Wherefore we are not wearied; but though our outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our Tribulation which is momentany and light, prepareth an exceeding and eternal weight of Glory unto us, while we look not on the things which are ſeen, but on the things which are not ſeen. For the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal.

1 Cor. 4. 1 Cor. 4. 1 Tim. 3. 2 Cor. 4.

We teſtifie unto you, Reverend Fathers, that we draw theſe matters with joy out of the Wells of the Saviour. And I truſt we ſhall continually with you bleſs the Lord, and give thanks unto the Lord out of the Wells of Iſrael; we truſt to be merry together at that great Supper of the Lamb, whoſe Spouſe we are by Faith, and there to ſing that ſong of everlaſting Halelujah, Amen. Yea, come Lord Jeſus. The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you, Amen.

GRace and Comfort in Chriſt Jeſus, our only Comfort in all extream aſſaults, Amen.

Fain would this Fleſh make ſtrange of that which the ſpirit doth embrace; Oh! Lord, how loth is this loytering ſluggard to paſs forth in Gods path? It phantaſieth forſooth much fear of fray-hugs: and were it not for the force of Faith which pulleth it forward by the rein of Gods moſt ſweet promiſe, and of hope which pricketh on behind, great adventures there were of fainting by the way. But bleſſed and everlaſtingly bleſſed be that Heavenly Father of ours, who in his Chriſt, our ſufficient Saviour, hath vouchſafed to ſhine in our Hearts, that he giveth us the light of the knowledge of the Glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt: and having this treaſure in our earthen Veſſels, that the excellency of the power might be Gods and not ours, we are (according to his good will) troubled on every ſide, yet are we not without ſhift; we are in poverty, but yet not without that is ſufficient; we ſuffer perſecution, but are not forſaken therein; we are caſt down, nevertheleſs we periſh not; we bear in the Body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the Life of Jeſus might alſo appear in our Body. Wherefore by the Grace of our Christ we shall not be wearied, neither be dismaied by this our probation through the fire of Affliction, as though some strange thing had happened unto us: But by his Power we shall rejoyce, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christs Passion, that when he doth appear, we may be merry and glad, knowing that our Tribulation, which is momentany and light, prepareth an exceeding and an eternal weight of Glory unto us, while we look not on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen. They that sow in Tears, shall reap in Joy. For he that goeth on his way weeping and scattering his good seed, shall doubtless come again with joy, and bring his whole sheaves with him. Then, then shall the Lord wipe away all Tears from our Eyes. Then, then shall be brought to pass that saying which is written; Death is swallowed up in victory. Death, where is thy sting? Hell, where is thy Victory? Yea, thanks be to God, which hath given us Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

Psal. 126.

1 Cor. 15.

In the mean season it remaineth for us to follow Saint Peters bidding; Let them (saith he) that are troubled, according to the will of God, commit their Souls to him with well doing, as a Faithful Creator and Maker. He is our Maker, we are his handy-work and Creatures, whom now when he hath made, he doth not leave and forsake, as the Shipright doth the Ship, leaving it at all adventures to be tossed in the Tempest, but he comforteth us his Creatures, and in him we live, move and have our being: Yea, not only that, but now that he hath in his dear Christ repaired us, being before utterly decayed, and redeemed us, purging us unto himself as a peculiar people by the Blood of his Son, he hath put on a most tender good-will and Fatherly Affection towards us, never to forget us: unto whom by such promises he hath plighted such Faith, that though it were possible that the Mother could forget her Infant, and not be tender-hearted to the Child of her Womb, yet may not it be, that his Faithful Believers should be forgotten of him. He biddeth us to cast our care on him, and saith, that assuredly he careth for us. And what though for a season he doth suffer us to be turmoiled in the troublous Tempests of Temptation, and seemeth as in much anger to have given us over, and forgotten us? let not us for all that leave off to put our trust in him, but let us with Godly Job conclude in our selves and say; Even though he kill me, yet will I put my trust in him. Let us with the Blessed Abraham in hope, even contrary to hope, by Belief lean unto that our loving Lord, who though for our probation he suffereth us to be afflicted, yet will he not be always chiding, neither keepeth he his anger for ever: for he knoweth whereof we be made; he remembreth that we are but dust. Wherefore, look how high the Heaven is in comparison of the Earth, so great is his Mercy towards them which fear him. Look how wide the East is from the West, so far hath he set our sins for us. Yea, like as a Father, pitieth his own Children, even so is the Lord merciful unto them that fear him. Oh! what great cause of rejoycing have we in our most Gracious God? we cannot but burst forth in the praising of such a bountiful Benefactor, and say with the same Psalmist; Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me Praise his holy Name. Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all his benefits.

Psal. 103.

Dear Wife, Riches I have none to leave behind me, wherewith to endow you after the Worldly manner: But, that Treasure of tasting how sweet Christ is unto hungry Consciences, (whereof, I thank my Christ, I do feel part, and would feel more) that I bequeath unto you, and to the rest of my beloved in Christ, to retain the same in sense of heart always. Pray, pray. I am merry, and I trust I shall be merry, maugre the teeth of all the Devils in Hell. I utterly refuse my self, and resign my self unto my Christ, in whom I know I shall be strong, as he seeth needful. Pray, pray, pray.

Sanders Godly bequest to his Wife.

Experience of the comforts of Christ in Prison.

Laurence Sanders.

As the said Master Sanders was in Prison, straight charge was given to the Keeper that no Person should speak with him. His Wife yet came to the Prison Gate with her young Child in her Arms, to visit her Husband. The Keeper, though for his charge he durst not suffer her to come into the Prison, yet did he take the little Babe out of her Arms, and brought him unto his Father: Laurence Sanders seeing him, rejoyced greatly, saying, that he rejoyced more to have such a Boy, than he should if two Thousands pounds were given him. And unto the standers by, which praised the goodliness of the Child; he said, What man fearing God, would not lose this Life present, rather than by prolonging it here, he should adjudge this Boy to be a Bastard, his Wife a Whore, and himself a Whoremonger? Yea, if there were no other cause, for which a man of my Estate should lose his Life, yet who would not give it, to avouch this Child to be legitimate, and his marriage to be lawful and holy?

M. Sanders wife not suffered to speak with him in Prison.

I do, good Reader, recite this saying, not only to let thee see what be thought of Priests marriage: but chiefly to let all married Couples and Parents learn to bear in their bosom true affections: natural, but yet seasoned with the true Salt of the Spirit, unfeignedly and throughly mortified to do the Natural Works and Offices of married Couples and Parents, so long as with their doing they may keep Christ with a free confessing Faith in a Conscience unfoil: Otherwise both they and their own Lives are so to be forsaken, as Christ required them to be denied, and given in his cause.

M. Sanders brought to Examination.

And now to come to the Examination of this good man, after that the Bishops had kept him one whole year and a quarter in Prison, at length they called him, as they did the rest of his fellows, openly to be examined. Of the which his first Examination the effect and purport thus followeth.

The Examination of Laurence Sanders.

The first Examination of M. Sanders.

PRaised be our Gracious God who preserveth his from evil, and doth give them Grace to avoid all such offences as might hinder his Honour, or hurt his Church, Amen.

Being convented before the Queens most Honourable Councel, sundry Bishops being present, the L. Chancellor began to speak in such form as followeth:

L. Chan. It is not unknown that you have been a Prisoner, for such abominable Heresies and false Doctrine as hath been sown by you; and now it is thought good that mercy be shewed to such as seek for it. Wherefore if now you will shew your self conformable, and come home again, mercy is ready. We must say that we have fallen in manner all: but now we be risen again, and returned to the Catholick Church; you must rise with us, and come home unto it. Give us forthwith a direct answer.

Sand. My Lord, and my Lords all, may it please your Honours to give me leave to answer with deliberation.

Chan. Leave of your painting and pride of speech: For such is the fashion of you all, to please your selves in your glorious words. Answer yea, or nay:

Sand. My Lord, it is no time for me now to paint. And as for Pride, there is no great cause why it should be in me; My learning I confess to be but small: and as for riches or wordly wealth I have none at all. Notwithstanding, it standeth me in hand to answer to your demand circumspectly, consideriug that one of these two extream perils are like to fall upon me: the losing of a good Conscience, or the losing of this my Body and Life. And I tell you truth, I love both Life and Liberty, if I could enjoy them without the hurt of my Conscience.

M. Sanders standeth upon his Conscience.

Chan. Conscience? You have none at all, but pride and arrogancy, (a) dividing your selves by singularity from the Church.

(a) Of this dividing speaketh S. Paul. 2 Cor. 6. & Jer. 50. Come out and divide your selves from them, &c.

Sand. The Lord is the knower of all mens Consciences. And where your Lordship layeth to my charge this dividing my self from the Church (as you do mean, and is now among you concluded upon, and I do understand) I do assure you, that I live in the Faith wherein I have been brought up since I was fourteen years old: being taught that the Power of the Bishop of Rome is but usurped, with many other abuses springing thereof. Yea, this I have received even at your hands that are here present, as a thing agreed upon by the Catholick Church and Publick Authority.

Argument. Conscience ought never to stand upon things uncertain.

Chan. Yea marry, but I pray you, have you received by conſent and authority all your Hereſies of the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar.

Sand. My Lord, it is leſs offence to cut off an arm, hand, or joynt of man, than to cut off the head. For the man may live though he do lack an arm, hand, or joynt, and ſo he cannot without his head. But you, all the whole ſort of you, have agreed to cut off the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, whom now you will have to be the Head of the Church again.

B. of Lond. And if it like your Lordſhip, I have his hand againſt the Bleſſed Sacrament. How ſay you to that?

Sanders. What I have written, that I have written, and farther I will not accuſe my ſelf. Nothing have you to burden me withal, for breaking of your Laws ſince they were in force.

A lawful requeſt, but it could not be heard.

Chan. Well, you be obſtinate, and refuſe liberty.

Sand. My Lord, I may not buy liberty at ſuch a price: but I beſeech your Honours to be means to the Queens Majeſty for ſuch a pardon for us, that we may live and keep our Conſciences unclogged, and we ſhall live as moſt obedient Subjects. Otherwiſe, I muſt ſay for my ſelf, that by Gods Grace I will abide the moſt extremity that man may do againſt me, rather than to do againſt my Conſcience.

To live as the Scripture leadeth us, is not to live as we liſt. The Papiſts deſire the Pope, the proteſtants Chriſt only to be their Head: Now which of theſe two be moſt like the Donatiſts?

Chan. Ah Sirra, you will live as you liſt. The Donatiſts did deſire to live in ſingularity; but indeed they were not meet to live on Earth: No more be you, and that ſhall you underſtand within theſe ſeven days; and therefore away with him.

Sand. Welcome be it, whatſoever the will of God ſhall be, either Life or Death. And I tell you truly, I have learned to dye. But I exhort you to beware of ſhedding of innocent Blood. Truly it will cry. The Spirit of God reſt upon all your Honours, Amen. Thus is the ſum and form of my firſt Examination, Pray, &c.

This Examination being ended, the Officers led him out of the place, and ſo ſtayed until the reſt of his fellows were likewiſe handled; that they might have them altogether to priſon. Laurence Sanders ſtanding among the Officers, ſeeing there a great multitude of people, opened his mouth and ſpake freely, warning them all of that which by their falling from Chriſt to Antichriſt they did deſerve; and therefore exhorting them by Repentance to riſe again, and to embrace Chriſt with ſtronger Faith, to confeſs him to the end, in the defiance of Antichriſt, Sin, Death, and the Devil: So ſhould they retain the Lords favour and bleſſing.

M. Sanders freely preacheth Chriſt. The ſecond examination whereof lacketh.

The Copies of his other Examination and Excommunication came to the hands of ſuch as do keep them ſtill in ſecret. But in them, as he defended Chriſts cauſe ſtoutly, ſo warned he the Phariſaical Biſhops and Papiſts of their Hypocriſie and Tyranny freely, and cleared himſelf of their unjuſt quarrellings truly. After he was excommunicate and delivered to the Secular Power, he was brought by the Sheriff of London to the Priſon called the Compter, in his own Pariſh in Breadſtreet: whereat he rejoyced greatly, both becauſe he found there a Fellow-priſoner, M. Cardmaker, with whom he had Chriſtian and comfortable conference, and alſo becauſe out of Priſon, as before out of a Pulpit, he might preach to his Pariſhioners; as by his Letter hereafter ſhall be declared.

M. Sanders delivered to the Secular Power.

THe fourth day of February, the Biſhop of London did come to the Priſon where he was, to degrade him: which when he had done, Laurence Sanders ſaid to him, I thank God I am none of your Church.

M. Sanders degraded by B. Bonner.

The day following in the morning, the Sheriff of London delivered him to certain of the Queens Guard, which were appointed to carry him to the City of Coventry, there to be burned. The firſt night they came to S. Albans, where Mr. Grimoald (a man who had more ſtore of good gifts, than of great conſtancy) did ſpeak with him.

M. Sanders carried to Coventry.

After Mr. Sanders had given him a leſſon meet for his lightneſs, he took a Cup in his hand, and asked him if he would pledge him of that Cup, of which he would begin to him. Grimoald. by his ſhrugging and ſhrinking ſhewing what he was, ſaid, Of that Cup which is in your hand I will pledge you: But of that other which you mean, I will not promiſe you. Well, ſaid Maſter Sanders, my dear Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath begun to me of a more bitter Cup than mine ſhall be, and ſhall I not pledge my moſt ſweet Saviour? Yes, I hope.

A good Shoomaker of Coventry.

After they were come to Coventry, the ſame night a poor Shoomaker, which was wont to ſerve him of ſhoes, came to him after this manner, and ſaid; O my good Maſter, God ſtrengthen and comfort you. Gramercies good Shoomaker, quoth Maſter Sanders, and I pray thee to pray for me; for I am the unmeeteſt man for this high office, that ever was appointed to it: but my Gracious God and dear Father is able to make me ſtrong enough. That ſame night he was put into the Common Goal among other Priſoners, where he ſlept little, but ſpent the night in Prayer, and inſtructing of others.

M. Sanders put to the Common Goal in Coventry.

The

Anno 1555.

February 8. M. Sanders brought to the place of Execution.

The next day, which was the eighth day of February, he was led to the place of Execution in the Park without the City, going in an old gown and a ſhirt, bare-footed, and oft times fell flat on the ground, and prayed. When he was come nigh to the place, the Officer, appointed to ſee the execution done, ſaid to Mr. Sanders, that he was one of them which marred the Queens Realm with falſe Doctrine and Hereſie, wherefore thou haſt deſerved death, quoth he, but yet if thou wilt revoke thine Hereſies, the Queen hath pardoned thee: if not, yonder fire is prepared for thee. To whom Mr. Sanders anſwered; it is not I, nor my fellow Preachers of Gods Truth that have hurt the Queens Realm, but it is your ſelf, and ſuch as you are, which have always reſiſted Gods holy Word; it is you which have and do marr the Queens Realm. I do hold no Hereſies; but the Doctrine of God, the bleſſed Goſpel of Chriſt; that hold I, that believe I, that have I taught, and that will I never revoke. With that, this Tormentor cryed, Away with him. And away from him went M. Sanders with a merry courage towards the fire. He fell to the ground, and prayed: he roſe up again and took the ſtake to which he ſhould be chained, in his Arms, and kiſſed it, ſaying: Welcome the Croſs of Chriſt, welcome everlaſting Life: and being faſtned to the ſtake, and fire put to him, full ſweetly he ſlept in the Lord.

Achab accuſeth Elias for troubling Iſrael.

A Compariſon between Laurence Sanders and S. Laurence.

And thus have ye the full Hiſtory of Laurence Sanders, whom I may well compare to S. Laurence, or any other of the Old Martyrs of Chriſts Church; both for the fervent zeal of the truth and Goſpel of Chriſt, and the moſt conſtant patience in his ſuffering, as alſo for the cruel torments that he in his patient Body did ſuſtain in the flame of fire. For ſo his cruel enemies handled him, that they burned him with green wood, and other ſmoothering rather than burning fewel, which put him to much more pain, but that the Grace and moſt plentiful Conſolation of Chriſt, which never forſaketh his ſervants, and gave ſtrength to S. Laurence, gave alſo patience to this Laurence, above all that his torments could work againſt: which well appeared by his quiet ſtanding, and ſweet ſleeping in the fire, as is above declared.

Strength to ſtand in Chriſt cometh not of our ſelves, but it is the Gift of God.

And to the intent to give the Reader to underſtand the better, what the Grace of Chriſt worketh in his ſervants; and again, how feeble and weak man is of himſelf without this Grace given from above, though he ſeem otherwiſe never ſo ſtout in himſelf: here therefore have we added to the foreſaid ſtory of Laurence Sanders, the Communication which in the beginning of his trouble was between him and Doctor Pendleton, by the example whereof, ſuch as ſtand, may learn to underſtand to take heed with due fear, and not to brag; to lean to the Grace of the Lord, and not to preſume in themſelves.

A certain Communication between Laurence Sanders and Dr. Pendleton, in the beginning of Queen Maries time.

Talk between M. Sanders and Doctor Pendleton.

D. Pendleton a ſtout Preacher of the Goſpel in King Edwards time.

AT the change of Religion in this Realm, and the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, Doctor Pendleton and Maſter Sanders, men known to the World, not only to be learned, but alſo earneſt Preachers of Gods Word in the time of bleſſed King Edward, met together in the Countrey, where by occaſion they were at that time, and as the caſe required (by reaſon of the Perſecution that was then at hand) fell to debate what was beſt for them to do in ſo dangerous a ſeaſon. Whereunto Mr. Sanders, whether through very frailty of his weak fleſh, that was loth to taſte the bitter Cup, though his Spirit were ready thereunto; or whether it were upon the miſtruſt of his own ſtrength, that he might receive the greater power from above; or whether it were not for any one of the ſaid cauſes alone, but for both together, or ſuch like; ſeemed ſo fearful and feeble ſpirited, that he ſhewed himſelf in appearance, like either to fall quite from God and his Word, which he had taught, or at leaſt to betake him to his heels, and to fly the Land, rather than to ſtick to his Profeſſion and abide by his Tackle: So as Doctor Pendleton (who on the contrary ſide appeared not ſo big of Body, but as bold in courage, nor ſo earneſt before in Pulpit, but as ready now to ſeal the ſame with his Blood) took upon him to comfort M. Sanders all that he might, admoniſhing him, as he could do it very well, not to forſake cowardly his flock when he had moſt need to defend them from the Wolf; neither having put his hand to Gods Plough, to ſtart now aſide and give it over, nor yet (that is worſt of all) having once forſaken Antichriſt, to fall either himſelf, or ſuffer others by his example to return to their vomit again.

M. Sanders timerous in Chriſts cauſe at the firſt beginning.

After which and ſuch like perſwaſions bidding him be of good comfort, and to take a good heart unto him; What man, quoth he, there is a great deal more cauſe in me to be afraid than in you, foraſmuch as you ſee, I carry a greater maſs of Fleſh upon my back than you do, and being ſo laden with a heavier lump of this vile carcaſe, ought therefore of Nature to be more frail than you: and yet, ſaid he, I will ſee the uttermoſt drop of this greaſe of mine molten away, and the laſt gobbet of this Fleſh conſumed to aſhes, before I will forſake God and his Truth. Whereunto the other anſwering but little, and wiſhing that Almighty God would give him more ſtrength than he preſently felt in himſelf, acknowledging his own weakneſs, conſented notwithſtanding, though it were ſomewhat faintly, to joyn with him in the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and ſo to go up to London, and ſet forth the ſame: whereupon they gave each other their hands.

The ſtout brags of D. Pendleton at the firſt beginning.

God giveth ſtrength where feebleneſs is.

Now when they were come to London, Lord, what a great change was there between theſe two perſons! The poor feeble faint-hearted Sanders, by the goodneſs of Almighty God, taking heart of Grace to him, ſeeking the ſame in humility, boldly and ſtoutly confirmed his Flock out of the Pulpit, where his charge lay, mightily beating down Antichriſt, and luſtily Preaching Chriſt his Maſter, for the which he afterward ſuffered moſt willingly, as is before declared. Whereas on the other ſide, Pendleton the proud (who as it appeared by the ſequele, had been more ſtout in words than conſtant in deeds, and a greater bragger than a good Warriour) followed Peter ſo juſtly in cracks, howſoever he did in Repentance (which God only knoweth) that he came not ſo ſoon to London but he changed his tippet, and played the Apoſtata, preaching in ſtead of ſound Doctrine nothing almoſt but Errors and Lies, advancing Antichriſt, and overthrowing poor Chriſt with all his main: ſo his former boldneſs come to nothing, unleſs it were a contrary key, becomming of a Faithful Paſtor a falſe Runnagate, and of a true Preacher a ſworn Enemy to Gods everlaſting Teſtament, to the great offence of his Brethren, the hurt of his Flock, and the utter undoing, without Gods greater Mercy, of his own Soul. Wherein are ſpecially to be conſidered the deep and marvellous Judgment of God, who as he can and doth make ſtrong whom it pleaſeth him, when he ſeeth his time, and moſt commonly ſuch as appear moſt feeble: even ſo contrariwiſe, throweth he down other ſome, ſeem they never ſo ſtout, ſtand they never ſo much in their own conceits. Wherefore let him that ſtandeth take heed he fall not, and let us pray continually to Almighty God, though we have Faith, that he will help and increaſe our Faith, that in him it may be made ſtrong, which of it ſelf is ſo weak, that it is ſoon overthrown.

Example how feeble man is of himſelf, without the Lord ſupport him.

He that ſtandeth let him take heed he fall not. Rom. 11.

M. Sanders diligent in writing Letters out of Priſon.

This bleſſed Man of God induring long time in Priſon, did not paſs all this time in unfruitful Idleneſs, but ſtill from time to time did viſit his friends (as is ſaid) and eſpecially his wife, with many Letters full of Godly Inſtruction and Conſolation. All which Letters it ſhall not be greatly needful here to inſert, partly becauſe they are to be found in the Book of Letters, partly becauſe we intend alſo (if God will) to proſecute the ſame more at large. In the mean time it ſhall not be out of place here preſently to comprehend certain of them as in order followeth.

Yours as you know, L. Sanders.

A Letter which Laurence Sanders did write to his Wife, and others of the Faithful, after his Condemnation to the Fire, written the last of January, An. 1555. out of the Compter in Breadstreet.

THE Grace of Christ, with the Consolation of the Holy Ghost, to the keeping of the Faith and a good Conscience, confirm and keep you for ever Vessels to Gods Glory, Amen.

A comfortable Letter of Mr. Sanders to his Wife and other of the faithful Flock.

Oh! what worthy thanks can be given to our gracious God for his unmeasurable Mercies plentifully poured upon us? And I most unworthy Wretch cannot but pour forth at this present, even from the bottom of my heart, the bewailing of my great ingratitude and unkindness towards so gracious a good God and loving Father. I beseech you all, as for my other many sins, so specially for that sin of my unthankfulness, crave pardon for me in your earnest Prayers, commending me to Gods great Mercies in Christ.

To number these Mercies in particular, were to number the drops of water which are in the Sea, the Sands on the shore, the Stars in the Skie. O my dear Wife, and ye the rest of my Friends, rejoyce with me, I say rejoyce with Thanksgiving for this my present Promotion, in that I am made worthy to magnifie my God, not only in my life, by my flow mouth and uncircumcised lips, bearing witness unto his Truth, and also by my blood to seal the same, to the glory of my God, and confirming of his true Church: And as yet I testifie unto you, that the comfort of my sweet Christ doth drive from my fantasie the fear of death. But if my dear Husband Christ doth for my trial leave me alone a little to my self, alas, I know in what case I shall be then: but if for my proof he do so, yet I am sure he will not be long or far from me. Though he stand behind the Wall and hide himself (as Solomon saith in his Mystical Ballet) yet will he peep in by a cleft to see how I do. He is a very tender-hearted Joseph; though he speak roughly to his Brethren, and handle them hardly; yea, threaten grievous Bondage to his best beloved Brother Benjamin: yet can he not contain himself from weeping with us and upon us, with falling on our necks, and sweetly kissing us. Such, such a Brother is our Christ unto all. Wherefore hasten to go unto him as Jacob did with his Sons and Family, leaving their Countrey and Acquaintance. Yea, this our Joseph hath obtained for us, that Pharaoh the Infidel shall minister unto us Chariots, wherein at ease we may be carried to come unto him: as we have experience how our very Adversaries do help us unto our everlasting Bliss by their speedy dispatch; yea, and how all things have been helpings hereunto; blessed be our God. Be not afraid of Fray-bugs which lye in the way. Fear rather the Everlasting Fire: fear the Serpent which hath that deadly sting, of which by bodily death they shall be brought to taste which are not grafted in Christ, wanting Faith and a good Conscience, and so are not acquainted with Christ the killer of death. But oh my dear Wife and Friends! we, we whom God hath delivered from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son, by putting off the Old Man, and by Faith putting on the New, even our Lord Jesus Christ, his Wisdom, Holiness, Righteousness and Redemption; we, I say, have to triumph against the terrible spiteful Serpent the Devil, Sin, Hell, Death, and Damnation. For Christ our brazen Serpent hath pulled away the sting of this Serpent, so that now we may boldly, in beholding it spoiled of sting triumph, and with our Christ, and all his Elect, say, Death, where is thy sting? Hell, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, who hath given (Us) the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The sweet comfort of Christ taketh away the fear of death from Sanders, Cant. 22.

The sting of death plucked out. 1 Cor. 15.

Wherefore be merry, my dear Wife, and all my dear fellow Heirs of the everlasting Kingdom, always remember the Lord. Rejoyce in Hope, be patient in Tribulation, continue in Prayer, and pray for us now appointed to the slaughter, that we may be unto our Heavenly Father a fat Offering, and an acceptable Sacrifice. I may hardly write to you. Wherefore let these few words be a Witness of my Commendations to you and all them which love us in the Faith; and namely, unto my Flock, among whom I am resident by Gods Providence, but as a Prisoner.

To this his Flock the Parish of Allhallowes in Bread-street, he wrote also a fruitful Letter, exhorting and charging them to beware of the Romish Religion, and constantly to stick to the Truth which they had confessed.

And although I am not so among them, as I have been to preach to them out of a Pulpit, yet doth God now preach unto them by me, by this my Imprisonment and Captivity which now I suffer among them for Christs Gospel sake, bidding them to beware of the Romish Antichristian Religion and Kingdom, requiring and charging them to abide in the Truth of Christ, which is shortly to be sealed with the Blood of their Pastor; who though he be unworthy of such a Ministry, yet Christ their high Pastor is to be regarded, whose Truth hath been taught them by me, is witnessed by my Chains, and shall be by my Death, through the power of that high Pastor. Be not careful, good Wife, cast your care upon the Lord, and commend me, unto him in repentant Prayer, as I do you and our Samuel; whom, even at the Stake, I will offer as my self unto God. Fare ye well all in Christ, in hope to be joyned with you in Joy everlasting. This hope is put up in my bosom, Amen, Amen, Amen, Pray, pray.

Another Letter to Mrs. Lucie Harrington, a godly Gentlewoman, and friendly to him in his Troubles.

Another comfortable Letter of Mr. Sanders.

YOur most gentle Commendations, whereof this Messenger made remembrance unto me, was for two Causes very comfortable: First, For that thereby I understood of the state of your health and bodily welfare, for the which I give thanks unto God, who grant the long continuance thereof to his honour and fatherly good will, whereunto I will daily say, Amen. And further, I was refreshed by the expressing of your mindful friendship towards me far unworthy thereof. Wherein I take occasion of much rejoycing in our so gracious a God and merciful Father, who as he hath in his immeasurable mercy by Faith hand-fasted us his chosen Children unto his dear Son our Christ, as the Spiritual Spouse of such an Heavenly Husband: so he linketh us by love one unto another, being by that Bond compact together with charitable readiness to do good one to another: so that first to the glory of our God and his Christ, then to our own joying in the testimony of a good Conscience, and last of all to the stopping of the mouths and confusion of our Adversaries, we bear the Badge as the right Spouse of our Christ, which himself noted in this saying; Herein shall all men know that ye be my Disciples, if ye love one another. Then farther, by this Bond of mutual Love is set forth the Fatherly Providence of God towards us his Children; that though it be he that careth for us, in whom we live, move, and be, who feedeth all Flesh with bodily sustenance, yet hath he appointed us in these present necessities to stand in his stead one unto another. Wherein is not only set forth our dignity, but also that unspeakable accord and unity among the the many Members of his Mystical Body. And though that either for lack of ability, or else through distance of place, power and opportunity of helping one another do fail: yet wonderful is the working of Gods Children through the ſpirit of Prayer, as whereby they fetch all heavenly influence from Chriſt their Celeſtial Head by his Spirit, to be meaſured ſeverally, as may ſerve to the maintenance of the whole Body.

John 15. Prayer diſtributeth God's Bleſſings from one to another.

Thus doth our faithful Prayer, which we make one for another, diſtribute and ſcatter Gods bountiful Bleſſings, both ghoſtly and bodily, when ordinary ability lacketh, and when the arm may not reach forth ſuch Gods riches. According hereunto I well perceive and underſtand your readineſs to do good unto all, and eſpecially I have experience of your ready good will towards me in your hearty deſire to ſtretch out your helping hand to relieve my lack: and of your help to be extended to me in the other ſpiritual ſort, by your good prayer, I doubt not; as alſo therein aſſure you of my help, being all that I may do, and yet the ſame not ſo much as I would do.

My need concerning bodily neceſſaries is as yet furniſhed by Gods proviſion, ſo that I am not driven to any extremity, wherefore to be burbenous to you, as your gentle benevolence provoketh me, the Lord reward you therefore. If God make me worthy to be his witneſs at this preſent, in giving this corruptible body to burn for the teſtimony of his Truth, it is enough for me to ſay to you that I have a poor Wife and Child, whom I love in the Lord, and whom I know for my ſake you will tender when I am departed hence, &c.

Another Letter of Mr. Sanders:

GRace and Mercy, &c. It happeneth oftentimes that abundance of matter bringeth with it much vehemency of friendly affection, maketh men dumb, and even then chiefly, when there is moſt eager purpoſe of ſpeaking, ſilence doth ſuppreſs, and cauſeth the party ſo affected unperfectly to expreſs that he goeth about to utter. Such impediment by much matter, mingled with fervency of affection, feel I ſometimes in my ſelf, letting the utterance, either by tongue or writing, of the abundance of the heart. The love of our moſt gracious God and heavenly Father, beſtowed upon us in the Merits of Chriſt our Saviour, who may by conceit of mind comprehend, paſſing indeed all underſtanding? Much leſs may the ſame by any means be expreſly uttered. And as ſuch heavenly bleſſings, which by faith we fetch from above, be inexplicable, ſo is it hard to utter, when the faithful are ſet on fire by love, their readineſs to reach forth and to give by Charity, as by Faith they have received. But (alas!) we carry this Treaſure in Earthen Veſſels. Many times Faith is feeble, and then Love looſeth her favour. Pray we therefore, Lord increaſe our Faith, and Love forthwith will be on fire. And immortal thanks be given unto our God, who in our Chriſt hath beſtowed upon us the firſt fruits of his Spirit, who crieth in our hearts, Abba, Father. And (as S. Paul ſaith) ſeeing we have the ſame ſpirit of faith, according as it is written; I believed, and therefore I have ſpoken: we alſo believe, and therefore we ſpeak. Yea, God knoweth, this ſpirit putteth in us a mind to ſpeak, but in attempting thereof we are driven with Moſes to ſay; O Lord, I am ſlow mouthed and of uncircumciſed lips: and with Jeremy, O Lord, I cannot ſpeak.

2 Cor. 4. Faith many times in us is feeble.

Rom. 8. 2 Cor. 4.

Exod. 6. Jer. 1.

Albeit, that this infancy reſtraineth the opening of ſuch abundance of heart in my tender Chriſtian Duty to be declared towards you, yet I beſeech you, let this be ſetled in your underſtanding; that as S. Paul expreſſeth unto his Corinthians, that they were in his heart either to live or to dye, with many other ſuch Sayings uttered unto them and the Galathians, expreſſing his vehement affection towards them: ſo in ſome part I would be like affected towards all Gods Children, and eſpecially towards you whom I know in Chriſt, and to whom I will not ſay how much I am indebted. I thank you for your great friendſhip and tender good will towards my Wife: yea, that good gracious God recompence you, which may worthily with the more countervail the ſame, and fulfill that which lacketh of thankful duty in us. And becauſe of that which heretofore I have conceived of you, and of your more than natural Love towards me and mine; I make my ſelf thus bold to lay this burden upon you, even the care and charge of my ſaid poor Wife; I mean, to be unto her a Mother and Miſtreſs to rule and direct her by your diſcreet counſel. I know ſhe conceiveth of you the ſame that I do, and is thankful unto God with me for ſuch a Friend; and therefore I beſeech you even for Chriſts ſake, put never from you this friendly charge over her, whether I live longer, or ſhortly depart. But to charge you otherwiſe, thanks be to God, neither I, neither ſhe have any ſuch extream need: if we had, I would be as bold with you as mine own Mother, I beſeech you give my hearty Salutations unto Mr. Fitz-Williams, and my good Lady, with thanks alſo for my poor Wife and Child, the Lord recompence them.

L. Sanders.

Mr. Sanders commendeth the care of his Wife to Mrs. Harrington.

Furthermore, as touching his Fatherly care and affection to his Wife and his little Child, the ſame is lively ſet forth in another Letter which he did write to his Wife: wherein he admoniſhed her that ſhe would not reſort much to the Priſon where he was, for danger of trouble that might inſue, the tenor of whoſe Letter here followeth.

Another Letter to his Wife, with a certain Remembrance to Mr. Harrington, and Mr. Hurland.

Another Letter of Mr. Sanders to his Wife.

GRace and Comfort, &c. Wife, you ſhall do beſt not to come often unto the Grate where the Porter may ſee you. Put not your ſelf in danger where it needs not: you ſhall, I think, ſhortly come far enough into danger by keeping Faith and a good Conſcience: which (dear Wife) I truſt you do not ſlack to make reckoning and account upon, by exerciſing your inward man in meditation of Gods moſt Holy Word, being the Suſtenance of the Soul, and alſo by giving your ſelf to humble Prayer: for theſe two things be the very means how to be made Members of our Chriſt, meet to inherit his Kingdom.

Do this, dear Wife, in earneſt, and not leaving off, and ſo we two ſhall with our Chriſt and all his choſen Children, enjoy the merry World in that everlaſting immortality, whereas here will nothing elſe be found but extream miſery, even of them which moſt greedily ſeek this worldly wealth: and ſo, if we two continue Gods children graffed in our Chriſt, the ſame Gods bleſſing which we receive ſhall alſo ſettle upon our Samuel. Though we do ſhortly depart hence and leave the poor Infant (to our ſeeming) at all adventures, yet ſhall he have our gracious God to be his God: for ſo hath he ſaid, and he cannot lye; I will be thy God, ſaith he and the God of thy Seed. Yea, if you leave him in the wilderneſs deſtitute of all help, being called of God to do his will, either to dye for the Confeſſion of Chriſt, either any work of Obedience: that God which heard the cry of the little poor Infant of Agar, Sarah's Hand-maiden, and did ſuccour it, will do the like to the Child of you or any other fearing him, and putting your truſt in him.

Care of Children in time of neceſſity ought to be left to God, who will not ſee them forſaken. What it is to follow Chriſt.

And if we lack Faith, as we do indeed many times, let us call for it, and we ſhall have the increaſe both of it, and alſo of any other good Grace needful for us: and be merry in God, in whom alſo I am very merry and joyful. O Lord, what great cauſe of rejoycing have we, to think upon that Kingdom, which he voucheth ſafe for his Chriſts ſake freely to give us, forſaking our ſelves and following him? Dear Wife, this is truly to follow him, even to take up our Croſs and follow him; and then as we ſuffer with him, ſo ſhall we reign with him everlaſtingly, ſhortly, Amen.

Another Letter of M. Sanders to his Wife and other Friends.

GRace and Comfort, &c. Dear Wife, rejoyce in our gracious God, and his and our Chriſt; and give thanks moſt humbly and heartily to him for this days work, that in any part I moſt unworthy Wretch ſhould be made worthy to bear witneſs unto his everlaſting Verity, which Antichriſt with his, by main force (I perceive) and by moſt impudent Pride and Boaſting will go about to ſuppreſs. Remember God alway, my dear Wife, and ſo ſhall Gods Bleſſing light upon you and your Samuel. O remember always my words for Chriſts ſake, be merry, and grudge not againſt God, and pray, pray. We be all merry here, thanks be unto our God, who in his Chriſt hath given us great cauſe to be merry, by whom he hath prepared for us ſuch a Kingdom, and doth and will give unto us ſome little taſte thereof, even in this life, and to all ſuch as are deſirous to take it. Bleſſed (ſaith our Chriſt) Matth. 5. 6. be they which hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, for ſuch ſhall be ſatisfied. Let us go, yea, let us run to ſeek ſuch Treaſure, and that with whole purpoſe of heart to cleave unto the Lord, to find ſuch Riches in his heavenly Word through his Spirit obtained by Prayer. My dear Friends and Brethren, Mr. Harrington and Mr. Hurland, pray, pray. Spiritus quidem promptus eſt, caro autem infirma; that is, The Spirit is ready, but the Fleſh is weak. When I look upon my ſelf, Quid ego ſtupidus & attonitus habeo quod dicam, niſi illud Petri, Exi à me Domine, quia homo peccator ſum? i. Being aſtoniſhed and confounded, what have I elſe to ſay but thoſe Luke 5. words of Peter, Lord go from me, for I am a ſinful man? But then feel I that ſweet comfort, Lucerna pedibus meis Pſal. 119. verbum Domini, lumen ſemitis meis, & hæc mea eſt conſolatio in humilitate mea; i. The Word of the Lord is a Lanthorn unto my feet, and a Light unto my paths; and this is my comfort in my trouble. Then wax I bold with the ſame Peter to ſay, Domine, ad quem ibimus? John 6. Verba vitæ æternæ habes; i. Lord, to whom ſhall we go? Thou haſt the words of Everlaſting Life. This comfort have I when the giver thereof doth give it. But I look for Battails, which the root of unfaithfulneſs, the which I feel in me, will moſt eagerly give unto my Conſcience, when we come once to the Combate. We be (I ween) within the ſound of the Trump of our Enemies. Play ye that be abroad the part of Moſes, Orantes in omni 1 Tim. 2. loco, ſuſtollentes puras manus; i. Praying in all places, Wiſd. 5. lifting up pure hands; and Gods People ſhall prevail: yea, our blood ſhall be their perdition who do moſt triumphantly ſpill it, and we then being in the hands of our God, ſhall ſhine in his Kingdom, and ſhall ſtand in great ſtedfaſtneſs againſt them which have dealt extremely with us: And when theſe our Enemies ſhall thus ſee us, they ſhall be vexed with horrible fear, and ſhall wonder at the haſtineſs of the ſudden health; and ſhall ſay with themſelves, having inward ſorrow and mourning for very anguiſh of mind: Theſe are they whom we ſometime Wiſd. 5. had in deriſion and jeſted upon: we Fools thought their lives to be very madneſs, and their end to be without honour, but lo how they are accounted among the Children of God, The Bleſſing of God be with you all, &c.

A Letter of Laurence Sanders to his Wife.

GRace and Comfort in Chriſt, Amen. Dear Wife, be merry in the Mercies of our Chriſt, and alſo ye my dear Friends. Pray, pray for us every body. We be ſhortly to be diſpatched hence unto our good Chriſt, Amen, Amen.

He writeth for a ſhirt wherein he ſhould be burned.

Wife, I would you ſent me my ſhirt, which you know whereunto it is conſecrated. Let it be ſewed down on both ſides, and not open. O my heavenly Father, look upon me in the face of thy Chriſt, or elſe I ſhall not be able to abide thy Countenance; ſuch is my filthineſs. He will do ſo, and therefore I will not be afraid what ſin, death, hell and damnation can do againſt me. O Wife, always remember the Lord. God bleſs you, yea, he will bleſs thee, good Wife, and thy poor Boy alſo: only cleave thou unto him, and he will give thee all things. Pray, pray, pray.

Another Letter to Mr. Robert and John Glover, written the ſame morning that he was burnt.

GRace and Conſolation in our ſweet Saviour Chriſt. Oh my dear Brethren whom I love in the Lord, being loved of you alſo in the Lord, be merry and rejoyce for me, now ready to go up to that mine Inheritance, which I my ſelf indeed am moſt unworthy of, but my dear Chriſt is worthy, who hath purchaſed the ſame for me with ſo dear a price. Make haſte my dear Brethren to come unto me, that we may be merry, Eo gaudio quod nemo tollet à nobis; i. with that joy which no man ſhall take from us. O wretched ſinner, that I am not thankful unto this my Father, who hath vouchſafed me worthy to be a Veſſel unto his honour. But, O Lord, now accept my thanks, though they proceed out of a not enough circumciſed heart. Salute my good Siſters your Wives; and good Siſters fear the Lord. Salute all other that love us in the Truth. Gods Bleſſing be with you always, Amen. Even now towards the Offering of a burnt Sacrifice. O my Chriſt help, or elſe I periſh.

After theſe godly Letters of Mr. Sanders diverſly diſperſed and ſent abroad to divers of the faithful Congregation of Chriſt, as is afore to be ſeen; now in the latter end we will adjoyn two other Letters not written by Mr. Sanders the Martyr, but by Mr. Ed. Sanders the Juſtice, his Brother, ſent to this our Sanders in Priſon, although containing no great matter worthy to be known, yet to this intent that the Reader may ſee in theſe two Brethren ſo joyned in Nature, and ſo divided in Religion, that word of the Lord verified, truly ſaying; Brother ſhall be Matth. 10. againſt Brother, &c. as by the Contents of theſe two Letters following may appear.

The Life and Martyrdom of Mr. John Hooper Bishop of Worcester and Gloucester, burnt for the Defence of the Gospel at Gloucester, An. 1555. Febr. 9.

The Story, Life, and Martyrdom of Mr. John Hooper Martyr.

JOhn Hooper Student and Graduate in the University of Oxford, after the Study of the Sciences, wherein he had abundantly profited and proceeded, through Gods secret Vocation was stirred with fervent desire to the love and knowledge of the Scriptures. In the reading and searching whereof, as there lacked in him no diligence joyned with earnest Prayer; so neither wanted unto him the Grace of the Holy Ghost to satisfie his desire, and to open unto him the light of true Divinity.

Thus Mr. Hooper growing more and more, by Gods Grace, in ripeness of Spiritual Understanding, and shewing withal some sparkles of his fervent Spirit, being then about the beginning of the six Articles, in the time of King Henry the Eighth, fell eftsoons into displeasure and hatred of certain Rabbines in Oxford, who by and by began to stir Coals against him, whereby, and especially by the procurement of Dr. Smith, he was compelled to void the University; and so removing from thence, was retained in the House of Sir Thomas Arundel, and there was his Steward, till the time that Sir Thomas Arundel, having intelligence of his Opinions and Religion, which he in no case did favour, and yet exceedingly favouring the Person and Conditions of the man, found the means to send him in a Message to the Bishop of Winchester, writing his Letter privily to the Bishop, by conference of Learning to do some good upon him, but in any case requiring him to send home his Servant to him again.

Mr. Hooper sent to the Bishop of Winchester.

Winchester, after long Conference with Mr. Hooper, four or five days together, when he at length perceived, that neither he could do that good which he thought to him, nor that he would take any good at his hand, according to Mr. Arundel's Request, he sent home his Servant again, right-well commending his Learning and Wit, but yet bearing in his Breast a grudging stomack against Mr. Hooper still.

Mr. Hooper forced to avoid the House of Sir Thomas Arundel.

It followed not long after this, as Malice is always working mischief, that Intelligence was given to Mr. Hooper to provide for himself, for danger that was working against him. Whereupon Mr. Hooper leaving Mr. Arundel's House, and borrowing an Horse of a certain Friend (whose Life he had saved a little before from the Gallows) took his journey to the Sea side to go to France, sending back the Horse again by one, which indeed did not deliver him to the Owner. Mr. Hooper being at Paris, tarried there not long, but in short time returned into England again, and was retained of Mr. Sentlow, till the time that he was again molested and laid for: whereby he was compelled (under the pretence of being Captain of a Ship going to Ireland) to take the Seas, and so escaped he (although not without extream peril of drowning) through France to the higher parts of Germany. Where he, entring acquaintance with the Learned men, was of them friendly and lovingly entertained, both at Basil, and especially at Zurick of Mr. Bullinger, being his singular Friend. Where also he married his Wife, which was a Burgonian, and applyed very studiously the Hebrew Tongue.

Mr. Hooper flieth out of England.

Great friendship between Mr. Bullinger and Mr. Hooper.

At length, when God saw it good to stay the bloody time of the six Articles, and to give us King Edward to Reign over this Realm, with some peace and rest unto the Gospel, amongst many other English Exiles, which then repaired homeward, Mr. Hooper also, moved in Conscience, thought not to absent himself, but seeing such a time and occasion, offered to help forward the Lords Work, to the uttermost of his ability. And so coming to Mr. Bullinger, and other of his Acquaintance in Zurick, (as duty required) to give them thanks for their singular kindness and humanity toward him manifold ways declared, with like humanity again purposed to take his leave of them at his departing, and so did. Unto whom Mr. Bullinger again (who had always a special favour to Mr. Hooper) spake on this wise; Mr. Hooper, said he, although we are sorry to part with your Company for our own Cause, yet much greater Causes have we to rejoyce, both for your sake, and especially for the Cause of Christs true Religion, that you shall now return out of long Banishment into your Native Country again, where not only you may enjoy your own private Liberty, but also the cause and state of Christs Church by you may fare the better, as we doubt not but it shall.

Mr. Bullinger's words to Mr. Hooper at his departing from Zurich.

Another Cause moreover why we rejoyce with you and for you, is this, that you shall remove not only out of Exile into Liberty: but you shall leave here a barren, a fowre, and an unpleasant Country, rude and savage, and shall go into a Land flowing with Milk and Honey, replenished with all Pleasure and Fertility. Notwithstanding with this our rejoycing one fear and care we have, lest you being absent, and so far distant from us, or else coming to such abundance of wealth and felicity, in your new welfare and plenty of all things, and in your flourishing honours, where ye shall come, peradventure to be a Bishop, and where ye shall find so many new Friends, you will forget us your old Acquaintance and Well-willers. Nevertheless, howsoever you shall forget and shake us off, yet this perswade your self, that we will not forget our old Friend and Fellow Mr. Hooper. And if you will please not to forget us again, then I pray you let us hear from you.

The answer of Mr. Hooper to Mr. Bullinger.

Whereunto Mr. Hooper answering again, first gave to Mr. Bullinger and the rest right hearty thanks, for that their singular good will, and undeserved affection, appearing not only now, but at all times towards him: declaring moreover, that as the principal Cause of his removing to his Country was the matter of Religion; so touching the unpleasantness and barrenness of that Country of theirs, there was no cause therein, why he could not find in his heart to continue his Life there, as soon as in any place in the World, and rather than in his own Native Country, if there were nothing else in his Conscience that moved him so to do. And as touching the forgetting of his old Friends; although, said he, the remembrance of a mans Country naturally doth delight him, neither could he deny, but God had blessed his Country of England with many great Commodities: yet neither the nature of Country, nor pleasure of Commodities, nor newness of Friends should ever induce him to the oblivion of such Friends and Benefactors, whom he was so intirely bound unto: and therefore you shall be sure, said he, from time to time to hear from me, and I will write unto you how it goeth with me. But the last News of all I shall not be able to write: for there, said he, (taking Mr. Bullinger by the hand) where I shall take most pains, there shall you hear of me to be burned to ashes; and that shall be the last News, which I shall not be able to write unto you, but you shall hear of me, &c.

Mr. Hooper prophesieth of himself.

To this also may be added another like Prophetical Demonstration, foreshewing before the manner of his Martyrdom wherewith he should glorifie God, which was this: When Mr. Hooper being made Bishop of Worcester and Gloucester, should have his Arms given him by the Herald, as the manner is here in England, every Bishop to have his Arms assigned unto him (whether by the appointment of Mr. Hooper, or by the Herald, I have not certainly to say) but the Arms which were to him allotted was this, A Lamb in a fiery Bush, and the Sun Beams from Heaven descended down upon the Lamb, rightly denoting, as it seemed, the order of his Suffering, which afterward followed.

A Note of Mr. Hooper's Arms prefigurying his Martyrdom.

But now to the purpose of our Story again. Thus when Mr. Hooper had taken his farewel of Mr. Bullinger and his Friends in Zurich, he made his repair again into England in the Reign of King Edward the sixth, where he coming to London used continually to preach, most times twice, at least once every day, and never failed.

Mr. Hooper returneth again into England.

In his Sermons, according to his accustomed manner, he corrected sin, and sharply inveighed against the iniquity of the World, and corrupt abuses of the Church: the People in great Flocks and Companies daily came

The notable diligence of Mr. Hooper in preaching to hear his voice, as the moſt melodious ſound and tune of Orpheus's Harp, as the Proverb ſaith; Inſomuch, that oftentimes when he was preaching, the Church would be ſo full, that none could enter further than the doors thereof. In his Doctrine he was earneſt, in Tongue eloquent, in the Scriptures perfect, in Pains indefatigable.

The ſingular Vertues of Mr. Hooper deſcribed.

Moreover, Beſides other his Gifts and Qualities, this is in him to be marvelled, that even as he began, ſo he continued ſtill unto his lifes end. For neither could his labour and pain-taking break him, neither promotion change him, neither dainty fare corrupt him. His Life was ſo pure and good, that no kind of ſlander (although divers went about to reprove it) could faſten any fault upon him. He was of Body ſtrong, his Health whole and ſound, his Wit very pregnant, his invincible Patience able to ſuſtain whatſoever ſiniſter Fortune and Adverſity could do. He was conſtant of Judgment, a good Juſtice, ſpare of Diet, ſparer of Words, and ſpareſt of Time. In Houſe-keeping very liberal, and ſometime more free than his Living would extend unto. Briefly, of all thoſe Vertues and Qualities required of S. Paul in a good Biſhop, in his Epiſtle to Timothy, I know not one in this good Biſhop lacking. He bare in countenance and talk always a certain ſevere and grave Grace, which might peradventure be wiſhed ſometime to have been a little more Popular and Vulgar-like in him; but he knew what he had to do beſt himſelf.

This by the way I thought to note, for that there was once an honeſt Citizen, and to me not unknown, which having in himſelf a certain conflict of Conſcience, came to his door for counſel, but being abaſhed at his auſtere behaviour, durſt not come in, but departed, ſeeking Remedy of his troubled Mind at other men hands, which he afterward, by the help of Almighty God, did find and obtain. Therefore, in my Judgment, ſuch as are appointed and made Governours over the Flock of Chriſt, to teach and inſtruct them, ought ſo to frame their Life, Manners, Countenance, and External Behaviour, as neither they ſhew themſelves too familiar and light; whereby to be brought into Contempt, nor on the other ſide again, that they appear more lofty and rigorous, than appertaineth to the edifying of the ſimple Flock of Chriſt. Nevertheleſs, as every man hath his peculiar Gift wrought in him by Nature, ſo this diſpoſition of Fatherly Gravity in this man neither was exceſſive, neither did he bear that Perſonage that was in him, without great conſideration. For it ſeemed to him peradventure, that this licentious and unbridled Life of the Common ſort ought to be chaſtened, not only with words and diſcipline, but alſo with the grave and ſevere countenance of good men.

Direction how Miniſters and Preachers ought to behave themſelves.

After he had thus practiſed himſelf in this popular and common kind of Preaching; at length, and that not without the great profit of many, he was called to preach before the King's Majeſty, and ſoon after made Biſhop of Gloceſter by the Kings Commandment. In that Office he continued two years, and behaved himſelf ſo well, that his very Enemies (except it were for his good doings, and ſharp correcting of ſin) could find no fault with him; and after that he was made Biſhop of Worceſter.

Mr. Hooper made Bp. of Gloceſter and Worceſter.

But I cannot tell what ſiniſter and unluckie Contention concerning the Ordering and Conſecration of Biſhops, and of their Apparel, with ſuch other like Trifles, began to diſturb the good and luckie beginning of the godly Biſhop. For notwithſtanding that godly Reformation of Religion that begun in the Church of England, beſides other Ceremonies more ambitious than profitable, or tending to edification, they uſed to wear ſuch Garments and Apparel as the Popiſh Biſhops were wont to do: Firſt a Chymere, and under that a white Rochet, then a Mathematical Cap with four Angles, dividing the whole World into four parts. Theſe Trifles, tending more to Superſtition than otherwiſe, as he could never abide, ſo in no wiſe could he be perſwaded to wear them. For this cauſe he made Supplication to the Kings Majeſty, moſt humbly deſiring his Highneſs, either to diſcharge him of the Biſhoprick, or elſe to diſpenſe with him for ſuch Ceremonial Orders. Whoſe Petition the King granted immediately, writing his Letter to the Archbiſhop after this tenor.

A Popiſh Attire.

The Kings Letters or Grant for the Diſpenſation of John Hooper elected Biſhop of Gloceſter, written to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and other Biſhops.

The Kings Letter to the Archbiſhop in behalf of Mr. Hooper.

Right Reverend Father, and right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well. Whereas we, by the advice of our Councel, have called and choſen our right welbelcived and well worthy, Mr. John Hooper, Profeſſor of Divinity, to be our Biſhop of Gloceſter, as well for his great Knowledge, deep Judgment, and long Study both in the Scriptures, and other Prophane Learning, as alſo for his good Diſcretion, ready Utterance, and honeſt Life for that kind of Vocation: To the intent all our loving Subjects, which are in his ſaid Charge, and elſewhere, might by his ſound and true Doctrine learn the better their duty towards God, their Obedience towards Us, and love towards their Neighbours: from Conſecrating of whom we underſtand you do ſtay, becauſe he would have you omit and let paſs certain Rites and Ceremonies offenſive to his Conſcience, whereby ye think ye ſhould fall in Premunire of Laws; we have thought good, by the advice aforeſaid, to diſpenſe and diſcharge you of all manner of Dangers, Penalties and Forfeitures you ſhall run and be in any manner of way, by omitting any of the ſame. And theſe our Letters ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant and Diſcharge therefore.

Beſides this Letter of the King, alſo the Earl of Warwick (which was afterward Duke of Northumberland) adjoyned his Letter to the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury to this purpoſe and effect, that Mr. Hooper might not be burdened with the Oath uſed then commonly in the Conſecration of Biſhops, which was againſt his Conſcience, as by the purport of the Letter here is to be ſeen, as followeth.

A Letter of the Earl of Warwick to the Archbiſhop in the behalf of Mr. Hooper.

After my moſt hearty Commendations to your Grace, theſe may be to deſire the ſame, that in ſuch reaſonable things, wherein this Bearer, my Lord elect of Gloceſter, craveth to be borne withal at your hands, you would vouchſafe to ſhew him your Graces favour, the rather at this my inſtance: which thing partly, I have taken in hand by the Kings Majeſties own motion. The matter is weighed by his Highneſs, none other but that your Grace may facily condeſcend unto. The principal cauſe is, that you would not charge this ſaid Bearer with an Oath burdenous to his Conſcience. And ſo for lack of time I commit your Grace to the tuition of Almighty God. From Weſtminſter the 23. of July, 1550.

Your Graces moſt aſſured loving Friend,

J. Warwick.

Both this Grant of the King, and alſo the Earls Letters aforeſaid notwithſtanding, the Biſhops ſtill ſtood earneſtly in the Defence of the aforeſaid Ceremonies, ſaying it was but a ſmall matter, and that the fault was in the abuſe of the things, and not in the things themſelves: adding moreover, That he ought not to be ſo ſtubborn in ſo light a matter, and that his wilfulneſs therein was not to be ſuffered.

Neither the Kings requeſt nor the Earls could take effect.

To be ſhort, whilſt both Parties thus contended about this matter more than reaſon would, in the mean time occaſion was given, as to the true Chriſtians to lament, ſo to the Adverſaries to rejoyce. In Concluſion, this Theological contention came to this end, that the Biſhops having the upper hand, Mr. Hooper was fain to agree to this Condition, That ſometimes he ſhould in his Sermon ſhew himſelf apparelled as the other Biſhops were. Wherefore, appointed to preach before the King, as a new Player in Diſcord about Ritual Garments of Churchmen. Mr Hooper fain to agree to the Biſhops.

Ann. 1554. M. Hooper compelled to Poul's before the King in Bishops Apparel.

in a strange Apparel, he cometh forth on the Stage. His upper Garment was a long Scarlet Chymere down to the foot, and under that a white Linnen Rochet that covered all his Shoulders. Upon his head he had a Geometrical, that is, a four-squared Cap, albeit that his Head was round. What cause of Shame the strangeness hereof was that day to that good Preacher, every man may easily judge. But this private contumely and reproach, in respect of the publick profit of the Church, which he only sought, he bare and suffered patiently. And I would to God in like manner, they, which took upon them the other part of that Tragedy, had yielded their private cause, whatsoever it was, to the publick concord and edifying of the Church: for no man in all the City was one hair the better for that hot contention.

The Cross maketh Peace.

I will name no body, partly for that his Oppugners being afterwards joyned in the most sure bond of friendship with him, in one and for one cause suffered Martyrdom; and partly for that I commonly use, according to my accustomed manner, to keep my Pen from presumptuous judging of any person, yet I thought to note the thing for this consideration, to admonish the Reader hereby, how wholsom and necessary the Cross of Christ is sometime in the Church of Christ, as by the sequel hereof afterward did appear. For as in a civil Governance and Commonwealth, nothing is more occasion of war, than overmuch peace: so in the Church and among Churchmen, as nothing is more pernicious than too much quietness; so nothing more ceaseth private Contentions oftentimes rising amongst them, than the publick Cross of Persecution.

The Fall and Infirmities of holy Saints and Martyrs, left for our Consolation.

Furthermore, so I perswaded my self, the same not to be unexpedient, to have extant such Examples of holy and blessed men. For if it do not a little appertain to our publick consolation and comfort, when we read in the Scriptures of the foul dissention between Paul and Barnaby; of the Fall of Peter, and of Davids Murder and Adultery: why may or should it not be as well profitable for our Posterity, to hear and know the Falls of these godly Martyrs, whereby we may the less despair in our infirmity, considering the same or greater infirmities to reign in the holy Saints of God, both Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs?

Note, how Discord and conciliation happeneth many times amongst good men.

And thus by the way thou hast heard, good Reader, hitherto the weakness of these good men, plainly and simply, as the Truth was, declared unto thee, to the end their Fall may minister occasion to us either of eschewing the like, or else to take heart and comfort in the like fall and frailness of ours. Now again on the other part it remaineth to record, after the foresaid discord, the godly Reconciliations of these good men in time of Persecution, who afterward, being in Prison for the Truths sake, reconciled themselves again with most godly agreement, as appeareth by this Letter sent by B. Ridley to the said Bishop of Glocester. The Copy whereof, as it was written with his own hand in Latin, hereafter followeth translated into English.

To my dear Brother and Reverend fellow Elder in Christ John Hooper, Grace and Peace.

A Letter of Reconciliation sent by D. Ridley to B. Hooper.

MY dearly beloved Brother and fellow Elder, whom I reverence in the Lord, pardon me, I beseech you, that hitherto since your Captivity and mine, I have not saluted you by my Letters: whereas I do indeed confess, I have received from you (such was your gentleness) two Letters at sundry times: but yet at such time as I could not be suffered to write to you again; or if I might, yet was I in doubt how my Letters might safely come into your hands. But now, my dear Brother, forasmuch as I understand by your works, which I have but superficially seen, that we throughly agree and wholly consent together in those things which are the grounds and substantial points of our Religion, against the which the World so furiously rageth in these our days, howsoever in time past by certain by-matters and circumstances of Religion, your wisdom and my simplicity (I grant) hath a little jarred, each of us following the abundance of his own sense and judgment; now, I say, be you assured, that even with my whole heart, God is my witness, in the bowels of Christ I love you in the Truth and for the Truths sake, which abideth in us, and, as I am perswaded, shall, by the grace of God, abide in us for evermore.

And because the World, as I perceive, Brother, ceaseth not to play his Pageant, and busily conspireth against Christ our Saviour, with all possible force and power, Exalting high things against the knowledge of God; let us 1 Cor. 10. joyn hands together in Christ, and, if we cannot overthrow, B. Ridley and B. Hooper joyn hands together yet to our power, and as much as in us lieth, let us shake those high Altitudes, not with carnal, but with spiritual Weapons: and withal, Brother, let us prepare our selves to the day of our dissolution, by the which, after the short time of this bodily affliction, by the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we shall triumph together with him in Eternal glory.

I pray you, Brother, salute in my name your Reverend fellow Prisoner, and venerable Father D.C. by whom, since the first day that I heard of his most godly and fatherly Constancy, in confessing the truth of the Gospel, I have conceived great consolation and joy in the Lord. For the integrity and uprightness of that man, his gravity and innocency, all England, I think, hath known long ago. Blessed be God therefore, which in such abundance of iniquity and decay of all godliness, hath given unto us, in this Reverend Old age, such a witness for the Truth of his Gospel. Miserable and hard-hearted is he, whom the godliness and constant Confession of so worthy, so grave and innocent a Man, will not move to acknowledge and confess the Truth of God.

I do not now, Brother, require you to write any thing to me again: for I stand much in fear, lest your Letters should be intercepted before they can come to my hands. Nevertheless know you, that it shall be to me great joy to hear of your constancy and fortitude in the Lords quarrel. And albeit I have not hitherto written unto you, yet have I twice, as I could, sent unto you my mind touching the matter which in your Letters you required to know. Neither can I yet, Brother, be otherwise perswaded: I see me thinks so many perils, whereby I am earnestly moved to counsel you not to hasten the publishing of your Works, especially under the title of your own Name. For I fear greatly, lest by this occasion both your mouth should be stopped hereafter, and all things taken away from the rest of the Prisoners, whereby otherwise, if it so please God, they may be able to do good to many. Farewel in the Lord, my most dear Brother; and if there be any mo in prison with you for Christs sake, I beseech you, as you may, salute them in my Name. To whose Prayers I do most humbly and heartily commend my self and my fellow Prisoners and Concaptives in the Lord, and yet once again, and for ever in Christ, my most dear Brother. Farewel.

N. Ridley.

M. Hooper, after all these tumults and vexations sustain'd, about his Investing and Princely Vestures, at length entring into his Diocess, did there imploy his time which the Lord lent him under King Edward's Reign, with such diligence, as may be a Spectacle to all Bishops which shall ever hereafter succeed him, not only in that place, but in whatsoever Diocess through the whole Realm of England: so careful was he in his Cure, that he left neither pains untaken, nor ways unsought, how to train up the Flock of Christ in the true Word of Salvation, continually labouring in the same. Other men commonly are wont, for lucre or promotions sake, to aspire to Bishopricks, some hunting for them, and some purchasing or buying them, as men use to purchase Lordships; and when they have them are loth to leave them, and thereupon also loth to commit that thing by worldly Laws, whereby to lose them.

The diligent care of B. Hooper.

To this sort of Men M. Hooper was clean contrary, who abhorred nothing more than gain, labouring always to save and preserve the Souls of his Flock. Who, being Bishop of two Dioceses, so ruled and guided either of them, and both together, as though he had in Charge but one Family. No Father in his Houshold, no Gardiner in his Garden, nor Husbandman in his Vineyard, was more or better occupied, than he in his Diocess amongst his Flock, going about his Towns and Villages in Teaching and Preaching to the People there.

M. Hooper Bishop of two Dioceses.

That time that he had to spare from Preaching, he bestowed either in hearing publick Causes, or else in private study, Prayer, and visiting of Schools: with his continual Doctrine he adjoyned due and discreet Correction, not so much severe to any, as to them which for abundance of riches, and wealthy state, thought they might do what they listed. And doubtless he spared no kind of People, but was indifferent to all men, as well Rich as Poor, to the great shame of no small number of men now-adays. Whereof many we see so addicted to the pleasing of great and rich Men, that in the mean time they have no regard to the meaner sort of Poor people, whom Christ hath bought as dearly as the other.

M. Hooper a Light to all Churchmen.

But now again we will return our talk to M. Hooper, all whose Life, in fine, was such, that to the Church and all Churchmen, it might be a Light and Example, to the rest a perpetual Lesson and Sermon. Finally, how vertuous and good a Bishop he was, ye may conceive and know evidently by this, That even as he was hated of none but of them which were evil, so yet the worst of them all could not reprove his Life in any one jot.

The order and governance of M. Hooper's House.

I have now declared his usage and behaviour abroad in the publick Affairs of the Church: and certainly there appeared in him at home no less Example of a worthy Prelates life. For though he bestowed and converted the most part of his care upon the publick Flock and Congregation of Christ, for the which also he spent his Blood: yet nevertheless there lacked no provision in him, to bring up his own Children in Learning and good Manners; insomuch that ye could not discern whether he deserved more praise for his Fatherly usage at home, or for his Bishoplike doings abroad. For every where he kept one Religion in one uniform Doctrine and Integrity. So that if you entred into the Bishops-Palace, you would suppose your self to have entred into some Church or Temple. In every corner thereof there was some smell of Vertue, good Example, honest Conversation, and reading of Holy Scriptures. There was not to be seen in his House any courtly Rioting or Idleness: no Pomp at all, no dishonest Word, no Swearing could there be heard.

The care of M. Hooper in instructing his Family.

As for the Revenues of both his Bishopricks, although they did not greatly exceed, as the matter was handled, yet if any thing surmounted thereof, he pursed nothing, but bestowed it in hospitality. Twice I was, as I remember, in his House in Worcester, where, in his common Hall, I saw a Table spread with good store of Meat, and beset full of Beggars and poor Folk: and I asking his Servants what this meant, they told me, That every day their Lord and Masters manner was, to have customably to Dinner a certain number of poor Folk of the said City by course, who were served by four at a Mess, with whole and wholsom Meats: and when they were served (being before examined by him or his Deputies, of the Lords Prayer, the Articles of their Faith, and Ten Commandments) then he himself sate down to Dinner, and not before.

The Hospitality of M. Hooper.

After this sort and manner M. Hooper executed the Office of a most careful and vigilant Pastor, by the space of two years and more, so long as the state of Religion in K. Edwards time did safely flourish and take place: And would God that all other Bishops would use the like diligence, care, and observance in their Function. After this, King Edward being dead, and Mary being Crowned Queen of England, Religion being subverted and changed, this good Bishop was one of the first that was sent for by a Pursevant to be at London: and that for two causes.

M. Hooper called up to London at Q. Maries coming in.

Two causes why Master Hooper was called up.

First, To answer to D. Heath, then appointed Bishop of that Diocess, who was before in King Edwards days deprived thereof for Papistry.

Secondarily, To render account to D. Boner Bishop of London, for that he in King Edwards time was one of his Accusers, in that he shewed himself not conformable to such Ordinances as were prescribed to him by the King and his Council, openly at Pauls-Cross. And although the said M. Hooper was not ignorant of the Evils that should happen towards them, (for he was admonished by certain of his Friends to get him away, and shift for himself) yet he would not prevent him, but tarried still, saying: Once I did flee, and take me to my feet; but now, because I am called to this Place and Vocation, I am throughly perswaded to tarry, and to live and dye with my Sheep.

M. Hooper refused to fly away.

M. Hooper cometh up to London.

And when at the day of his appearance, which was the first of September, he was come to London, before he could come to the aforesaid D. Heath and Boner, he was intercepted, and commanded violently against his will to appear before the Queen and her Council, to answer to certain Bonds and Obligations, wherein they said he was bound unto her. And when he came before them, Winchester, by and by, received him very opprobiously, and, railing and rating of him, accused him of Religion. He again freely and boldly told his Tale, and purged himself. But in fine it came to this conclusion, that by them he was commanded to Ward (it being declared unto him at his departure, that the cause of his Imprisonment was only for certain sums of Money, for which he was indebted to the Queen, and not for Religion.) This, how false and untrue it was, shall in his place more plainly appear.

Anno 1555.

M. Hooper charged to answer before the Queen.

M. Hooper commanded to Ward.

The next year, being 1554. the 19. of March, he was called again to appear before Winchester, and other the Queens Commissioners: where, what for the Bishop, and what for the unruly Multitude, when he could not be permitted to plead his Cause, he was deprived of his Bishopricks. Which how, and in what order it was done, here now followeth to be seen by the Testimony and Report of one, which, being present at the doing, committed the same to Writing.

M. Hooper deprived of his Bishopricks.

A Letter or Report of a certain godly man, declaring the order of M. Hoopers deprivation from his Bishopricks. Anno 1554. March 19.

A Letter reporting the order of M. Hoopers deprivation.

FOr somuch as a Rumor is spread abroad of the Talk had at my Lord Chancellors, between him with other Commissioners there appointed, and M. Hooper, clean contrary to the verity and truth thereof indeed, and therefore to be judged rather to be risen of Malice, for the discrediting of the Truth by false Suggestions and evil Reports, than otherwise: I thought it my duty, being present thereat my self, in Writing to set forth the whole effect of the same: partly that the Verity thereof may be known to the doubtful People; and partly also to advertize them, how uncharitably M. Hooper was handled at their hands, which with all humility used himself towards them, desiring, that with patience he might have been permitted to speak; assuring all men, that where I stood in a mammering and doubt, which of these two Relegions to have credited, either that set forth by the Kings Majesty that is dead, or else that now maintained by the Queens Majesty; their unreverend behaviour towards M. Hooper doth move me the rather to credit his Doctrine, than that which they with railing and cruel words defended, considering that Christ was so handled before. And that this which I have written here, was the effect of their Talk, as I acknowledge it to be true my self: so I appeal to all the Hearers Consciences, that there were present (so they put affection away) for the Witness of the same.

The Bishops of Winchester, of London, of Durefm, of Landaff, of Chichester, sate as Commissioners.

Lord Chancellor.

AT Master Hoopers coming in, the Lord Chancellor asked whether he was married.

M. Hooper examined before the Commissioners.

Hooper. Yea my Lord, and will not be unmarried, till Death unmarry me.

Durefm. That is matter enough to deprive you.

Hooper. That it is not, my Lord, except ye do against the Law.

The matter concerning Marriage was no more talked of then for a great space: but as well the Commissioners, as such as stood by, began to make such outcries, and laughed, and used such gesture as was unseemly for the place, and for such a matter. The Bishop of Chichester Doctor Day, called M. Hooper Hypocrite, with vehement words, and scornful countenance. B. Tonstall called him Beast; so did Smith, one of the Clerks of the Council, and divers other that stood by. At length the B. of Winchester said, that all men might live chaste that would, and brought in this Text, Castraverunt se propter regnum cælorum. That is, There be that have gelded themselves for the Kingdom of Heaven, Matth. 19.

Blessed be you when they shall speak all revyling words against you for my Names sake.

M. Hooper said, that Text proved not that all Men could live chast, but such only to whom it was given; and read that which goeth before in the Text. But there was a clamour and cry, mocking and ſcorning, with calling him Beaſt, that the Text could not be examined. Then M. Hooper ſaid, that it did appear by the old Canons, that Marriage was not forbidden unto Prieſts, and named the Decrees. But the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſent for another part, namely the Clementines, or the Extravagants. But Biſhop Hooper ſaid, that book was not it which he named.

Prieſts Marriage not forbid by the old Canons

Then cried out the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſaid; You ſhall not have any other, until ye be Judged by this. And than began ſuch a Noiſe, Tumult, and ſpeaking together of a great many that favoured not the cauſe, that nothing was done, nor ſpoken orderly, or Charitably. Afterwards Judge Morgan began to rail at Maſter Hooper a long time, with many opprobrious and foul words of his doing at Gloceſter, in puniſhing of men, and ſaid, there was never ſuch a Tyrant as he was. After that, D. Day Biſhop of Chicheſter ſaid, that the Council of Ancyra, which was before the Council of Nice, was againſt the Marriage of Prieſts.

This Morgan ſhortly after fell into a frenzy & madneſs and died of the ſame.

Then cried out my Lord Chancellor, and many with him, that M. Hooper had never read the Councils.

The Council of Nice permitteth Prieſts Marriage.

Yea my Lord, quoth Maſter Hooper, and my Lord of Chicheſter Doctor Day knoweth that the great Council of Nice, by the meanes of one Paphnutius, decreed that no Miniſter ſhould be ſeparated from his Wife. But ſuch Clamours and cries were uſed, that the Councill of Nice was not ſeen.

After this long brutiſh talk, Tonſtall Biſhop of Dureſm asked M. Hooper, whether he believed the Corporal preſence in the Sacrament. And M. Hooper ſaid plainly, that there was none ſuch, neither did he believe any ſuch thing.

The corporal preſence.

Then would the Biſhop of Dureſm have read out of a book, for his purpoſe belike (what book it was I cannot tell:) but there was ſuch a Noiſe and confuſed talk on every ſide, that he did not read it. Then asked Wincheſter of M. Hooper, what Authority moved him not to believe the Corporal preſence? He ſaid, the Authority of Gods Word, and alledged this Text, Quem oportet cælum ſuſcipere, uſque ad tempus reſtaurationis omnium: i. Whom Haven muſt hold untill the Later day.

Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter would have made that Text have ſerved nothing for his purpoſe, and he ſaid, he might be in Heaven, and in the Sacrament alſo.

Articles taken againſt M. H.

Maſter Hooper would have ſaid more to have opened the Text, but all men that ſtood next about the Biſhop, allowed ſo his ſaying with Clamors and cries, that M. Hooper was not permitted to ſay any more againſt the Biſhop. Whereupon they bad the Notaries write that he was Married, and ſaid, that he would not goe from his Wife, and that he believed not the Corporal preſence in the Sacrament, wherefore he was worthy to be deprived of his Biſhoprick.

This is the Truth of the matter (as farr as I can truly remember) of the confuſed and troubleſome talk that was between them, and except it were haſty and uncharitable words, this is the whole matter of their talk at that time. Atque hæc ille hactenus.

The true report of M. Hooper's enterainment in the Fleet, written with his own hand the ſeventh of January 1554.

M. Hooper's report of his impriſonment in the Fleet.

THe firſt of September, 1553. I was committed unto the Fleet from Richmond, to have the liberty of the Priſon: and within ſix dayes after I paid for my liberty five pounds Sterling to the Warden for Fees: who, immediately upon the payment thereof, complained unto Steven Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſo was I committed to cloſe priſon one Quarter of a Year in the Tower Chamber of the Fleet, and uſed very extremly. Then by the meanes of a good Gentlewoman, I had liberty to come down to Dinner and Supper, not ſuffered to ſpeak with any of my friends: but as ſoon as Dinner and Supper was done, to repair to my Chamber again. Notwithſtanding whilſt I came down thus to Dinner and Supper, the Warden and his Wife picked quarrels with me, and complained untruly of me to their great friend the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

This good Gentlewoman is thought to be miſtreſs Wilkinſon

After one quarter of a year and ſome what more, Babington the Warden and his Wife fell out with me for the wicked Maſs: and thereupon the Warden reſorted to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and obtained to put me in to the Wards where I have continued a long time, having nothing appointed to me for my bed, but a little pad of ſtraw and a rotten covering, with a tick and a few feathers therein, the Chamber being vile and ſtinking, untill by Gods means good People ſent me bedding to lie in. Of the one ſide of which priſon is the ſink and filth of the Houſe, and on the other ſide the Town ditch, ſo that the ſtinch of the Houſe hath infected me with ſundry diſeaſes.

Babington Warden of the Fleet, a wicked Tyrant to Gods People.

The barbarous cruelty of the Warden of the Fleet.

During which time I have been ſick; and the Doors, Bars, Haſps, and Chains being all cloſed, and made faſt upon me, I have mourned, called and cryed for help, But the Warden when he hath known me many times ready to dye, and when the poor men of the Wards have called to help me, hath commanded the Doors to be kept faſt and charged that none of his men ſhould come at me, ſaying; Let him alone, it were a good riddance of him. And, amongſt many other times, he did thus the 18. of October, 1553. as many can witneſs.

I paid alwaies like a Baron to the ſaid Warden, as well in fees, as for my Boord, which was 20. ſhillings a week, beſides my mans Table, untill I was wrongfully deprived of my Biſhoprick, and ſince that time, I have payed him as the beſt Gentleman doth in his Houſe; yet hath he uſed me worſe, and more vilely than the verieſt ſlave that ever came to the Hall Commons.

W. Downton M. Hoopers Man.

The ſaid Warden hath alſo impriſoned my man William Downton, and ſtripped him out of his clothes to ſearch for letters, and could find none but only a little remembrance of good People's names, that gave me their alms to releive me in priſon; and to undo them alſo, the Warden delivered the ſame bill unto the ſaid Steven Gardiner, Gods enemy and mine.

M. Hooper 18. Moneths in priſon. Q. Mary in detbed to M Hooper.

I have ſuffered impriſonment almoſt eighteen Months, my goods, living, friends, and comfort taken from me; the Queen owing me by juſt account 80. pounds or more. She hath put me in priſon, and giveth nothing to find me, neither is there ſuffered any one to come at me whereby I might have relieſe. I am with a wicked man and Woman, ſo that I ſee no remedy (ſaving Gods help) but I ſhall be caſt away in priſon before I come to Judgment. But I commit my Juſt cauſe to God, whoſe will be don, whether it be by life or death.

Thus much wrote he himſelf, of this matter.

Another Examination of M. Hooper.

M. Hooper again convented before the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

THe 22. of January following, 1555. Babington the Warden of the Fleet was commanded to bring M. Hooper before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, with other Biſhops and Commiſſioners at the ſaid Wincheſters Houſe at Saint Mary Overies, wereas in effect thus much was done.

Gardiner exhorteth M. Hooper to return to the Popes Church.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter in the name of himſelf and the reſt, moved Maſter Hooper earneſtly to forſake the evil and corrupt Doctrine (as he termed it) preached in the days of King Edward the ſixth, and to return to the unity of the Catholik Church, and to acknowledge the Popes Holineſs to be head of the ſame Church, according to the determination of the whole Parliament, promiſing, that as he himſelf, with other his Brethren, had received the Popes Bleſſing, and the Queens mercy; even ſo mercy was ready to be ſhewed to him and others, if he would ariſe with them, and condeſcend to the Popes Holineſs.

The Pope not worthy to be a member of Chriſts Church.

M. Hooper anſwered, that foraſmuch as the Pope taught Doctrine altogether contrary to the Doctrine of Chriſt, he was not worthy to be accounted as a member of Chriſts Church, much leſs to be head thereof, wherefore he would in no wiſe condeſcend to any ſuch uſurped Juriſdiction, neither eſteemed he the Church, whereof they call him head, to be the Catholik Church of Chriſt: for the Church only heareth the voice of her ſpouſe Chriſt, and flieth the ſtrangers. Howbeit (ſaith he) if in any point, to me unknown, I have offended the Queens Majeſty, I ſhall moſt humbly ſubmit my ſelf to her mercy, if mercy may be had with ſafety of conſcience, and without the diſpleaſure of God.

Q. Mary will ſhew no mercy but to the Popes friends.

Anſwer was made, that the Queen would ſhew no mercy to the Popes enemies. Whereupon Babington was commanded to bring him to the Fleet again: who did ſo, and ſhifted him from his former Chamber into another, near unto the Wardens own Chamber, where he remained vi dayes: and in the mean time, his former Chamber was ſearched by D. Martin and others, for Writings and Books, which Maſter Hooper was thought to have made, but none was found,

Here followeth another examination of Maſter Hooper

Another examination of M. Hooper before the B. of Wincheſter and his fellows

THe 28. of January, Wincheſter and other the Commiſſioners ſate in Judgment at S. Mary Overies, whereas M. Hooper appeared before them at Afternoon again, and there, after much reaſoning and Diſputation to and fro, he was commanded aſide, till M. Rogers (whith was then come) had been likewiſe examined. Examinations being ended, the two Sheriffs of London were commanded, about four of the Clock, to carry them to the Counter in Southwark, there to remain till the morrow at Nine a Clock, to ſee whether they would relent and come home again to the Catholick Church. So M. Hooper went before with one of the Sheriffs, , and Maſter Rogers came after with the other, and being out of Church Door, Maſter Hooper looked back, and ſtayed a little till Maſter Rogers drew near, unto whom he ſaid; Come Brother Rogers, muſt we two take this matter firſt in hand, and begin to frie theſe faggots? Yea Sir, ſaid Maſter Rogers, by Gods grace. Doubt not, ſaid M. Hooper, but God will give ſtrength. So going forwards, there was ſuch a preaſs of People in the ſtreets, which rejoyced at their conſtancy, that they had much a doe to paſs.

M. Hoopers words to Maſter Rogers.

By the way, the Sheriff ſaid to M. Hooper; I wonder that ye were ſo haſty and quick with my Lord Chancellor, and did uſe no more patience: He anſwered, M. Sheriff, I was nothing at all impatient, although I was earneſt in my Maſters cauſe, and it ſtandeth me ſo in hand, for it goeth upon life and death, not the life and death of this World onely, but alſo of the World to come. Then were they committed to the keeper of the Counter, and appointed to ſeverall Chambers, with commandment that they ſhould not be ſuffered to ſpeak one with another, neither yet any other permitted to come at them that night.

M. Hooper earneſt in his Maſters cauſe.

The third and laſt examination of M. Hooper.

Upon the next day following, the 29. of January, at the hour appointed they were brought again by the Sheriffs before the ſaid Biſhop and Commiſſioners in the Church, where they were the day before. And after long and earneſt talk, when they perceived that M. Hooper would by no means condeſcend unto them, they condemned him to be degraded, and read unto him his condemnation. That done, Maſter Rogers was brought before them, and in like manner intreated, and ſo they delivered both of them to the ſecular power, the two Sheriffs of London, who were willed to carry them to the Clink, a priſon not far from the Biſhop of Wincheſters Houſe, and there to remain till night.

M. Hooper condemned.

When it was dark, Maſter Hooper was led by one of the Sheriffs, with many bills and weapons, firſt thorow the Biſhop of Wincheſters Houſe, and ſo over London-Bridg, thorow the City to Newgate. And by the way ſome of the Sergeants were willed to goe before, and put out the Coſtermongers Candles, who uſe to ſit with lights in the ſtreets: either fearing, of likelihood, that the People would have made ſome attempt to have taken him away from them by force, if they had ſeen him go to that priſon; or elſe, being burdened with an evill conſcience they thought darkneſs to be a moſt fit ſeaſon for ſuch a buſineſs,

Darkneſs left for the Papiſts

But notwithſtanding this device, the People having ſome foreknowledge of his coming, many of them came forth of their doors with lights, and ſaluted him, praiſing God for his conſtancy in the true Doctrine which he had taught them, and deſiring God to ſtrengthen him in the ſame to the end: Maſter Hooper paſſed by, and required the People to make their earneſt prayers to God for him, and ſo went through Cheapſide to the place appointed, and was delivered as cloſe priſoner to the keeper of Newgate, where he remained ſix dayes, no Body being permitted to come to him, or talk with him, ſaving his keepers, and ſuch as ſhould be appointed thereto.

Anno 1555.

During this time, Boner Biſhop of London, and other at his appoint ment, as Fecknam, Chedſey, and Harpſfield, &c. reſorted divers times unto him to aſſay if by any means they could perſwade him to relent, and become a member of their Antichriſtian Church. All the ways they could deviſe, they attempted. For, beſides the diſputations and allegations of Teſtimonies of the Scriptures, and of ancient Writers wreſted to a wrong ſenſe, according to their accuſtomed manner, they uſed alſo all outward gentleneſs and ſignifications of friendſhip, with many great proffers and promiſes of Worldly commodities, not omitting alſo moſt grievous threatnings, if with gentleneſs they could not prevail; but they found him always the ſame man, ſtedfaſt and immoveable. When they perceived that they could by no means reclaim him to their purpoſe, with ſuch perſwaſions and offers as they uſed for his converſion, then went they about by falſe rumors and reports of recantations (for it is well known, that they and their ſervants did ſpread it firſt abroad) to bring him and the Doctrin of Chriſt which he profeſſed, out of credit with the People. So the bruit being a little ſpread abroad, and believed of ſome of the weaker ſort, by reaſon of the often reſort of the Biſhop of London and others, it increaſed more, and at the laſt came to Maſter Hoopers ears. Where-with he was not a little grieved, that the People ſhould give ſo light credit unto falſe rumors, having ſo ſimple a ground, as it may appear by a letter which he wrote upon that occaſion, the Copie whereof followeth.

B. Boner and his Chaplains reaſon with M. Hooper in priſon.

Falſe rumors of M. Hoopers recantation.

THe grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with all them that unfeignedly look for the coming of our Saviour Chriſt, Amen.

A purgation of M. Hooper againſt falſe rumors ſpread of his recantation

Dear Brethren and Siſters in the Lord, and my fellow-priſoners for the cauſe of Gods Goſpel, I do much rejoyce and give thanks unto God for your conſtancy and perſeverance in affliction, unto whom I wiſh continuance unto the end. And as I do rejoyce in your faith and conſtancy in afflictions that be in priſon; even ſo do I mourn and lament to hear of our dear Brethren that yet have not felt ſuch dangers for Gods truth, as we have, and doe feel, and be daily like to ſuffer more, yea, the very extreme and vile death of the fire: yet ſuch is the report abroad (as I am credibly informed) that I John Hooper, a condemned man for the cauſe of Chriſt, ſhould now after ſentence of death (being in Newgate priſoner, and looking daily for execution) recant and abjure that which heretofore I have preached. And this talk ariſeth of this, that the Biſhop of London and his Chaplains reſort unto me. Doubtleſs, if our Brethren were as godly as I could wiſh them, they would think, that in caſe I did refuſe to talk with them, they might have juſt occaſion to ſay that I were unlearned, and durſt not ſpeak with learned men, or elſe proud and diſdained to ſpeak with them. Therefore to avoid juſt ſuſpicion of both, I have, and do daily ſpeak with them when they come, not doubting but that they report that I am neither proud nor unlearned. And I would wiſh all men to do as I do in this point. For I fear not their Arguments, neither is death terrible unto me, praying you to make true report of the ſame, as occaſion ſhall ſerve; and that I am more confirmed in the truth which I have preached heretofore, by their coming.

The occaſion of this rumor how it riſeth.

Therefore, ye that may ſend to the weak Brethren, pray them that they trouble me not with ſuch reports of recatantions as they do. For I have hitherto left all things of the World, and ſuffered great pains and impriſonment, and I thank God I am as ready to ſuffer death, as a mortal man may be. It were better for them to pray for us, than to credit or report ſuch rumors that be untrue. We have enemies enow of ſuch as know not God truly. But yet the falſe report of weak Brethren is a double Croſs. I wiſh you eternal ſalvation in Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo require your continual prayers, that he which hath begun in us, may continue it to the end.

Falſe reports a grievous croſs.

I have taught the Truth with my tongue, and with my Pen heretofore, and hereafter ſhortly ſhall confirm the ſame by Gods Grace with my Blood. Forth of Newgate the ſecond of February, Anno 1554.

Your Brother in Chriſt,

Upon Monday morning the Biſhop of London came to Newgate, and there degraded M. Hooper, the Sentence of which his degradation here followeth.

After the Sentence of Degradation thus declared, now let us ſee the form and manner of their degrading, which here alſo followeth. But firſt here is to be noted, that they, degrading this bleſſed Biſhop, did not proceed againſt him as a Biſhop, but as only againſt a Prieſt, as they termed him; for ſuch as he was, theſe Baalamites accounted for no Biſhop.

Here followeth the form and manner uſed in the degrading of B. Hooper.

The form and manner of degrading Biſhop Hooper. Alexander Andrew Goaler of Newgate, a cruel Enomy to Gods People.

THe fourth day of February, the year above-mentioned, in the Chappel in Newgate, the Biſhop of London there ſitting with his Notary and certain other Witneſſes, came Alexander Andrew the Goaler, bringing with him M. Hooper and M. Rogers, being condemned before by the Chancellor: where the ſaid Biſhop of London, at the requeſt of the foreſaid Wincheſter, proceeded to the degradation of the parties above-mentioned, M. Hooper and M. Rogers, after this form and manner: Firſt, he put upon him all the Veſtures and Ornaments belonging to a Prieſt, with all other things to the ſame Order appertaining, as though (being reveſted) they ſhould ſolemnly execute their Office. Thus they being apparelled and reveſted, the Biſhop beginneth to pluck off, firſt the uttermoſt Veſture, and ſo by degree and order coming down to the loweſt Veſture, which they had only in taking Benet and Collet; and ſo being ſtript and depoſed, he deprived them of all order, benefit and priviledge belonging to the Clergy; and conſequently that being done, pronounced, decreed, and declared the ſaid Parties ſo degraded, to be given perſonally to the Secular Power; as the Sheriffs being for that year, M. Davy Woodroffe, and M. William Chester: who, receiving firſt the ſaid M. Rogers at the hands of the Biſhop, had him away with them, bringing him to the place of Execution where he ſuffered. The Witneſſes there preſent were M. Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, Robert Coſin, and Robert Willerton, Canons of Pauls, Thomas Mountague, and George How Clerks; Triſtram Swadock, and Richard Clunney Sumner, &c.

Davy Woodroffe and William Chester Sheriffs.

The ſame Monday at Night, being the 4. of February, his Keeper gave him an inkling that he ſhould be ſent to Glouceſter to ſuffer death, whereat he rejoyced very much, lifting up his eyes and hands unto Heaven, and praiſing God that he ſaw it good to ſend him amongſt the People, over whom he was Paſtor, there to confirm with his Death the Truth which he had before taught them; not doubting but the Lord would give him ſtrength to perform the ſame to his glory: and immediately he ſent to his Servants houſe for his Boots, Spurs, and Cloak, that he might be in a readineſs to ride when he ſhould be called.

M. Hooper glad that he ſhoul ſuffer amongſt his own flock.

The next day following, about four of the Clock in the Morning before day, the Keeper with others came to him and ſearched him, and the Bed wherein he lay, to ſee if he had written any thing, and then he was led by the Sheriffs of London and other their Officers forth of Newgate to a place appointed, not far from S. Dunſtans Church in Fleetſtreet, where ſix of the Queens Guards were appointed to receive him, and to carry him to Glouceſter, there to be delivered unto the Sheriff, who with the Lord Shandois, M. Wicks, and other Commiſſioners, were appointed to ſee Execution done. The which Guard brought him to the Angel, where he brake his Faſt with them, eating his Meat at that time more liberally than he had uſed to do a good while before. About the Break of the Day he went to Horſe, and leapt cheerfully on Horſeback without help, having a Hood upon his Head under his Hat that he ſhould not be known, and ſo he took his Journey joyfully towards Glouceſter, and always by the way the Guard learned of him where he was accuſtomed to Bait or Lodge, and ever carried him to another Inn.

M. Hooper carried to Glouceſter to be burned.

Upon the Thurſday following, he came to a Town in his Dioceſs called Ciceſter, 15 miles from Glouceſter; about eleven of the Clock, and there Dined at a Womans houſe which had always hated the Truth, and ſpoken all evil ſhe could of M. Hooper. This Woman, perceiving the cauſe of his coming, ſhewed him all the Friendſhip ſhe could, and lamented his caſe with Tears, confeſſing that ſhe before had often reported, That if he were put to the Trial, he would not ſtand to his Doctrine.

A Woman of Ciceſter confirmed by the conſtancy of M. Hooper which ſaw'd at him before.

After Dinner he rode forwards, and came to Glouceſter about five of the Clock, and a mile without the Town was much People aſſembled, which cried and lamented his eſtate. inſomuch that one of the Guard rode Poſt into the Town, to require Aid of the Mayor and Sheriffs; fearing leſt he ſhould have been taken from them. The Officers and their Retinue repaired to the Gate with Weapons, and commanded the People to keep their Houſes, &c. but there was no man that once gave any ſignification of any ſuch Reſcue or Violence. So was he lodged at one Ingram's Houſe in Glouceſter, and that Night (as he had done all the way) he did eat his Meat quietly, and ſlept his firſt ſleep ſoundly, as it was reported by them of the Guard and others. After his firſt ſleep he continued all that Night in Prayer until the Morning; and then he deſired that he might go into the next Chamber (for the Guard were alſo in the Chamber where he lay) that there being ſolitary he might pray and talk with God: ſo that all the day, ſaving a little at Meat, and when he talked at any time with ſuch as the Guard licenced to ſpeak with him, he beſtowed in Prayer.

M. Hooper cometh to Glouceſter.

The quiet mind of M. Hooper in his Troubles.

Amongſt other that ſpake with him, Sir Anthony Kingſton, Knight, was one. Who, ſeeming in time paſt his very Friend, was then appointed by the Queens Letters to be one of the Commiſſioners, to ſee Execution done upon him. M. Kingſton being brought into the Chamber found him at his Prayers: and as ſoon as he ſaw M. Hooper, he burſt forth in Tears. M. Hooper at the firſt bluſh knew him not. Then ſaid M. Kingſton, Why, my Lord, do you not know me an old Friend of yours, Anthony Kingſton?

Sir Anthony Kingſton cometh to M. Hooper.

M. Hooper and M. Rogers degraded together.

Anno 1555.

Yes, M. Kingſton, I do now know you well, and am glad to ſee you in health, and do prayſe God for the ſame.

Sir Anthony Kingſtons perſwaſions.

But I am ſorry to ſee you in this caſe; for as I underſtand you be come hither to die. But (alas) conſider that life is ſweet, and death is bitter. Therefore ſeeing life may be had, deſire to live; for life hereafter may do good.

M. Hooper replieth.

Indeed it is true, M. Kingſton, I am come hither to end this Life, and to ſuffer death here, becauſe I will not gainſay the former Truth that I have heretofore taught amongſt you in this Dioceſs, and elſewhere; and I thank you for your friendly Counſel, although it be not ſo friendly as I could have wiſhed it. True it is, M. Kingſton, that death is bitter, and life is ſweet: but (alas) conſider that the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come is more ſweet. Therefore for the deſire and love I have to the one, and the terror and fear of the other; I do not ſo much regard this death, nor eſteem this life, but have ſettled my ſelf, through the ſtrength of Gods Holy Spirit, patiently to paſs through the Torments and Extremities of the Fire now prepared for me, rather than to deny the Truth of his Word, deſiring you and others, in the mean time, to commend me to Gods Mercy in your Prayers.

Life compared with life, and death with death.

Sir Anthony Kingſton. Sir Anthony Kingſton converted by M. Hooper.

Well, my Lord, then I perceive there is no Remedy, and therefore I will take my leave of you: and I thank God that ever I knew you, for God did appoint you to call me, being a loſt Child: and by your good Inſtructions, where before I was both an Adulterer and a Fornicator, God hath brought me to the forſaking and deteſting of the ſame.

M Hooper.

If you have had the grace ſo to do, I do highly praiſe God for it: and if you have not, I pray God ye may have, and that you may continually live in his Fear. After theſe and many other words the one took leave of the other, M. Kingſton with bitter tears, M. Hooper with tears alſo trickling down his Cheeks. At which departure M. Hooper told him, that all the Troubles he had ſuſtained in Priſon, had not cauſed him to utter ſo much Sorrow.

A blind boy commeth to M. Hooper

The ſame day in the Afternoon, a blind Boy, after long interceſſion made to the Guard, obtained Licenſe to be brought unto M. Hoopers Speech. The ſame Boy not long afore had ſuffered Impriſonment at Gloceſter for confeſſing of the Truth. M. Hooper, after he had examined him of his Faith, and the Cauſe of his Impriſonment, beheld him ſtedfaſtly, and (the water appearing in his Eyes) ſaid unto him, Ah poor Boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward ſight, for what reaſon he beſt knoweth: but he hath given thee another ſight much more precious, for he hath endued thy Soul with the eye of Knowledge and Faith. God give thee grace continually to pray unto him, that thou loſe not that ſight, for then ſhouldeſt thou be blind both in Body and Soul.

Gods grace upon a blind boy at Gloceſter.

After that another came to him, whom he knew to be a very Papiſt and a wicked Man, which appeared to be ſorry for M. Hoopers trouble, ſaying; Sir, I am ſorry to ſee you thus. To ſee me? Why, ſaid he, art thou ſorry? To ſee you, ſaith the other, in this caſe. For I hear ſay, you are come hither to die, for the which I am ſorry. Be ſorry for thy ſelf man, ſaid M. Hooper, and lament thine own wickedneſs; for I am well, I thank God, and death to me for Chriſts ſake is welcom.

M. Hooper committed to the Sheriffs of Gloceſter.

The ſame Night he was committed by the Guard, their Commiſſion being then expired, unto the cuſtody of the Sheriffs of Gloceſter. The Name of the one was Jenkins, the other Bond, who with the Mayor and Aldermen repaired to M. Hoopers Lodging, and at the firſt meeting ſaluted him, and took him by the Hand. Unto whom Hooper ſpake on this manner. Mr. Mayor, I give moſt hearty thanks to you, and to the reſt of your Brethren, that you have vouchſafed to take me a Priſoner and a condemned man by the hand; whereby to my rejoycing it is ſome deal apparent that your old Love and Friendſhip towards me is not altogether extinguiſhed: and I truſt alſo that all the things I have taught you in times paſt are not utterly forgotten, when I was here, by the godly King that dead is, appointed to be your Biſhop and Paſtor. For the which moſt true and ſincere Doctrine, becauſe I will not now account it Falſhood and Hereſie, as many other men do, I am ſent hither (as I am ſure you know) by the Queens Commandment, to die, and am come where I taught it, to confirm it with my Blood. And now Mr. Sheriffs, I underſtand by theſe good Men, and my very Friends (meaning the Guard) at whoſe hands I have found ſo much favour and gentleneſs by the way hitherward, as a Priſoner could reaſonably require (for the which alſo I moſt heartily thank them) that I am committed to your cuſtody, as unto them that muſt ſee me brought to morrow to the place of Execution. My Requeſt therefore to you ſhall be only, that there may be a quick Fire, ſhortly to make an end; and in the mean time I will be as obedient unto you, as your ſelves would wiſh. If you think I do amiſs in any thing, hold up your Finger, and I have done. For I am not come hither as one inforced or compelled to die: For it is well known, I might have had my Life with worldly gain; but as one willing to offer and give my Life for the Truth, rather than to conſent to the wicked Papiſtical Religion of the Biſhop of Rome, received and ſet forth by the Magiſtrates in England, to Gods high Diſpleaſure and Diſhonour; and I truſt by Gods Grace to morrow to die a Faithful Servant of God, and a true obedient Subject to the Queen.

M. Hoopers petition to the Sheriffs

The words of M. Hooper to the Maior and the Sheriffs of Gloceſter.

Theſe and ſuch-like words in effect uſed Mr. Hooper to the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, whereat many of them mourned and lamented. Notwithſtanding the two Sheriffs went aſide to conſult, and were determined to have lodged him in the common Goal of the Town, called Northgate, if the Guard had not made earneſt Interceſſion for him: who declared at large, how quietly, mildly and patiently he had behaved himſelf in the way, adding thereto, that any Child might keep him well enough, and that they themſelves would rather take pains to watch with him, than that we ſhould be ſent to the common Priſon. So it was determined at the length he ſhould ſtill remain in Robert Ingram's Houſe; and the Sheriffs and the Serjeants and other Officers did appoint to watch with him that Night themſelves. His deſire was, that he might go to bed that Night betimes, ſaying, that he had many things to remember: and ſo he did at five of the Clock, and ſlept one ſleep ſoundly, and beſtowed the reſt of the Night in Prayer. After he got up in the morning, he deſired that no Man ſhould be ſuffered to come into the Chamber, that he might be ſolitary till the hour of Execution.

The Guard ſpeaketh for M. Hooper.

M Hooper ſpendeth the night in prayer.

About eight of the Clock came Sir John Bridges Lord Shandoys, with a great band of men, Sir Antony Kingſton, Sir Edmund Bridges, and other Commiſſioners appointed to ſee Execution done. At nine of the Clock Mr. Hooper was willed to prepare himſelf to be in a readineſs, for the time was at hand. Immediately he was brought down from his Chamber by the Sheriffs, who were accompanied with Bills, Glieves and Weapons. When he ſaw the multitude of Weapons, he ſpake to the Sheriffs on this wiſe; M. Sheriffs (ſaid he) I am no Traitor, neither needed you to have made ſuch a buſineſs to bring me to the place where I muſt ſuffer: For if ye had willed me, I would have gone alone to the Stake, and have troubled none of you all. Afterward looking upon the multitude of people that were aſſembled, being by eſtimation to the Number of 7000 (for it was Market-day, and many alſo came to ſee his Behaviour towards death) he ſpake unto thoſe that were about him, ſaying; Alas, why be theſe people aſſembled and come together? Peradventure they think to hear ſomething of me now, as they have in times paſt, but alas Speech is prohibited me. Notwithſtanding the cauſe of my death is well known unto them. When I was appointed here to be their Paſtor, I preached unto them true and ſincere Doctrine, and that out of the word of God: Becauſe I will not now account the ſame to be Hereſie and Untruth, this kind of death is prepared for me.

Sir John Bridges, L. Shandoys, Sir Edmund Bridges, Sir Anthony Kingſton, Commiſſioners.

M. Hooper forpreaching true doctrine put to death.

So he went forward led between the two Sheriffs (as it were a Lamb to the place of Slaughter) in a Gown of his Hoſts, his Hat upon his Head, and a Staff in his Hand to ſtay himſelf withal. For the grief of the Sciatica, which he had taken in Priſon, cauſed him ſomewhat to halt. All the way, being ſtraitly charged not to ſpeak, he could not be perceived once to open his Mouth, but beholding the People all the way, which mourned bitterly for him; he would ſometimes lift up his Eyes towards Heaven, and look very chearfully upon ſuch as he knew: and he was never known, during the time of his being amongſt them, to look with ſo chearful and ruddy a Countenance as he did at that preſent. When he came to the

M. Hooper brought to the place of Martyrdom.

the place appointed where he ſhould dye, ſmilingly he beheld the Stake and preparation made for him, which was near unto the great Elm-Tree over againſt the Colledge of Prieſts, where he was wont to Preach. The place round about the Houſes, and the Boughs of the Tree were replenifhed with People; and in the Chamber over the Colledge Gate ſtood the Prieſts of the Colledge. Then kneeled he down (foraſmuch as he could not be ſuffered to ſpeak unto the People) to Prayer, and beckned ſix or ſeven times unto one whom he knew well, to hear the ſaid Prayer, to make report thereof in time to come (pouring Tears upon his Shoulders and in his Boſom) who gave attentive Ears unto the ſame: the which Prayer he made upon the whole Creed, wherein he continued the ſpace of half an hour. Now after he was ſomewhat entred into his Prayer, a Box was brought and laid before him upon a Stool, with his Pardon (or at leaſt-wiſe it was fained to be his Pardon) from the Queen, if he would turn. At the ſight whereof he cried, If you love my Soul, away with it; if you love my Soul, away with it. The Box being taken away, the Lord Shandois ſaid, Seeing there is no remedy, diſpatch him quickly. Maſter Hooper ſaid, Good my Lord, I truſt your Lordſhip will give me leave to make an end of my Prayers.

M. Hooper refuſeth the Queens Pardon.

Then ſaid the Lord Shandois to Sir Edmund Bridges Son, which gave ear before to M. Hoopers Prayer at his requeſt: Edmund, take heed that he do nothing elſe but Pray: if he do, tell me, and I ſhall quickly diſpatch him. Whiles this Talk was, there ſtepped one or two uncalled, which heard him ſpeak theſe words following:

M. Hoopers Prayer.

LOrd, ſaid he, I am Hell, but thou art Heaven; I am ſwill and a ſink of Sin, but thou art a gracious God and a merciful Redeemer. Have mercy therefore upon me moſt miſerable and wretched Offender, after thy great mercy, and according to thine ineſtimable goodneſs. Thou art aſcended into Heaven, receive me Hell to be partakers of thy Joys, where thou ſitteſt is equal glory with thy Father. For well knoweſt thou, Lord, wherefore I am come hither to ſuffer, and why the wicked do perſecute this thy poor Servant; not for my ſins and tranſgreſſions committed againſt thee, but becauſe I will not allow their wicked doings, to the contaminating of thy Blood, and to the denial of the knowledge of thy Truth, wherewith it did pleaſe thee by thy Holy Spirit to inſtruct me: the which with as much diligence as a poor Wretch might (being thereto called) I have ſet forth to thy glory. And well ſeeſt thou, my Lord and God, what terrible Pains and cruel Torments be prepared for thy Creature: ſuch, Lord, as without thy ſtrength none is able to bear, or patiently to paſs. But all things, that are impoſſible with man, are poſſible with thee. Therefore ſtrengthen me of thy goodneſs, that in the Fire I break not the rules of Patience; or elſe aſſwage the terror of the Pains, as ſhall ſeem moſt to thy glory.

As ſoon as the Mayor had eſpied theſe men which made report of the former words, they were commanded away, and could not be ſuffered to hear any more. Prayer being done, he prepared himſelf to the Stake, and put off his Hoſts Gown, and delivered it to the Sheriffs, requiring them to ſee it reſtored unto the Owner, and put off the reſt of his Geer, unto his Doublet and Hoſe, wherein he would have burned. But the Sheriffs would not permit that, (ſuch was their greedineſs) unto whoſe pleaſures (good Man) he very obediently ſubmitted himſelf; and his Doublet, Hoſe and Waſtcoat were taken off. Then being in his Shirt, he took a Point from his Hoſe himſelf, and truſſed his Shirt between his Legs, where he had a pound of Gun-powder in a Bladder, and under each Arm the like quantity delivered him by the Guard. So deſiring the People to ſay the Lords Prayer with him, and to pray for him (who performed it with Tears, during the time of his Pains) he went up to the Stake. Now when he was at the Stake, three Irons, made to bind him to the Stake, were brought; one for his Neck, another for his Middle, and the third for his Legs. But he refuſing them ſaid, Ye have no need thus to trouble your ſelves. For I doubt not, but God will give ſtrength ſufficient to abide the extremity of the Fire, without Bands: notwithſtanding, ſuſpecting the frailty and weakneſs of the Fleſh, but having aſſured confidence in Gods ſtrength, I am content ye do as ye ſhall think good.

M. Hooper undreſſeth himſelf to the Fire.

M. Hooper bound to the Stake.

So the Hoop of Iron prepared for his Middle was brought, which being made ſome what too ſhort (for his Belly was ſwoln with Impriſonment) he ſhrank and put in his Belly with his hand, until it was faſtened: and when they offered to have bound his Neck and Legs with the other two Hoops of Iron; he utterly refuſed them, and would have none, ſaying, I am well aſſured I ſhall not trouble you.

The weeping the People at M. Hoopers Burning.

Thus being ready, he looked upon the People, of whom he might be well ſeen (for he was both tall, and ſtood alſo on an high Stool) and beheld round about him: and in every corner there was nothing to be ſeen but weeping and ſorrowful People. Then lifting up his eyes and hands unto Heaven, he prayed to himſelf. By and by, he that was appointed to make the Fire, came to him, and did ask him forgiveneſs. Of whom he asked why he ſhould forgive him, ſaying, that he knew never any offence he had committed againſt him. O Sir, (ſaid the Man) I am appointed to make the Fire. Therein (ſaid Mr. Hooper) thou doſt nothing offend me; God forgive thee thy ſins, and do thine office I pray thee. Then the Reeds were caſt up, and he received two bundles of them in his own hands, embraced them, kiſſed them, and put under either Arm one of them, and ſhewed with his hand how the reſt ſhould be beſtowed, and pointed to the place where any did lack.

He forgiveth his Executioner.

Anon commandment was given that the fire ſhould be ſet to, and ſo it was. But becauſe there were put to no fewer green Fagots than two Horſes could carry upon their backs, it kindled not by and by, and was a pretty while alſo before it took the Reeds upon the Fagots. At length it burned about him, but the Wind having full ſtrength in that place (it was a lowring and cold Morning) it blew the flame from him, ſo that he was in a manner no more but toucht by the Fire.

Fire put to M. Hooper.

Within a ſpace after, a few dry Fagots were brought, and a new Fire kindled with Faggots (for there were no more Reeds) and that burned at the Nether parts, but had ſmall power above, becauſe of the Wind, ſaving that it did burn his Hair, and ſcorch his Skin a little. In the time of which Fire, even as at the firſt flame, he prayed, ſaying mildly and not very loud (but as one without pains) O Jeſus the Son of David, have mercy upon me, and receive my Soul. After the ſecond was ſpent, he did wipe both his Eyes with his hands, and beholding the People, he ſaid with an indifferent loud voice; For Gods love (good People) let me have more Fire. And all this while his Nether parts did burn: for the Faggots were ſo few, that the flame did not burn ſtrongly at his Upper Parts.

A new Fire made to M. Hooper.

M. Hooper called for more Fire.

The third Fire was kindled within a while after, which was more extream than the other two: and then the Bladders of Gun-powder brake, which did him ſmall good, they were ſo placed, and the Wind had ſuch power. In the which Fire he prayed with ſomewhat a loud voice, Lord Jeſus have mercy upon me, Lord Jeſus have mercy upon me: Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit. And theſe were the laſt Words he was heard to utter. But when he was black in the Mouth, and his Tongue ſwoln, that he could not ſpeak, yet his Lips went till they were ſhrunk to the Gums: and he knocked his Breaſt with his hands, until one of his Arms fell off, and then knocked ſtill with the other, what time the Fat, Water and Blood dropped out at his Fingers ends, until by renewing of the Fire his ſtrength was gone, and his hand did cleave faſt in knocking to the Iron upon his Breaſt. So immediately, bowing forwards, he yielded up his Spirit.

Anno 1555.

The burning of M. Iohn Hooper, at Gloceſter. Anno 1555. February 9.

The patient end of this holy Martyr.

Thus was he three quarters of an hour or more in the Fire. Even as a Lamb, patiently he abode the extremity thereof, neither moving forwards, backwards, or to any ſide: but having his Nether parts burned, and his Bowels fallen out, he died as quietly as a Child in his Bed: and he now reigneth as a bleſſed Martyr, in the Joys of Heaven prepared for the Faithful in Chriſt, before the foundations of the World: for whoſe Conſtancy all Chriſtians are bound to praiſe God.

A Letter which M. Hooper did write out of Priſon to certain of his Friends.

A Letter exhortatory of M. Hooper to certain of his Friends.

THe Grace of God be with you. Amen. I did write unto you of late, and told you what extremity the Parliament had concluded upon concerning Religion, ſuppreſſing the Truth, and ſetting forth the Untruth, intending to cauſe all men by extremity to forſwear themſelves, and to take again, for the Head of the Church, him that is neither Head nor Member of it, but a very Enemy, as the Word of God and all ancient Writers do record: and for lack of Law and Authority, they will uſe force and extremity, which have been the Arguments to defend the Pope and Popery, ſince their Authority firſt began in the World. But now is the time of Trial, to ſee whether we fear more God or Man. It was an eaſie thing to hold with Chriſt whilſt the Prince and World held with him: but now the World hateth him, it is the true Trial who be his.

The Popes Religion ſtandeth only by force and extremity.

Wherefore in the name, and in the vertue, ſtrength and power of his Holy Spirit, prepare your ſelves in any caſe to Adverſity and Conſtancy. Let us not run away when it is moſt time to fight; Remember none ſhall be crowned, but ſuch as fight manfully; and he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved. Ye muſt now turn all your Cogitations from the peril you ſee, and mark the felicity that followeth the peril; either victory in this World of your Enemies, or elſe a ſurrender of this life to inherit the everlaſting Kingdom. Beware of beholding too much the felicity or miſery of this World, for the conſideration and too earneſt love or fear of either of them draweth from God.

Neither the felicity nor the miſery of this World to be looked upon.

Wherefore think with your ſelves as touching the felicity of the World, it is good: but yet none otherwiſe than it ſtandeth with the favour of God. It is to be kept; but yet ſo far forth as by keeping of it we loſe not God. It is good abiding and tarring ſtill among our friends here: but yet ſo, that we tarry not therewithal in Gods diſpleaſure, and hereafter dwell with the Devils in fire everlaſting. There is nothing under God but may be kept, ſo that God, being above all things we have, be not loſt.

Of Adverſity judge the ſame. Impriſonment is painful, but yet liberty upon evil conditions is more painful. The Priſons ſtink; but yet not ſo much as ſweet Houſes, whereas the fear and true honour of God lacketh. I muſt be alone and ſolitary: it is better ſo to be and have God with me, than to be in company with the wicked. Loſs of Goods is great: but loſs of Gods grace and favour is greater. I am a poor ſimple Creature, and cannot tell how to anſwer before ſuch a great ſort of Noble, Learned and Wiſe men: it is better to make anſwer before the Pomp and Pride of wicked Men, than to ſtand naked in the ſight of all Heaven and Earth before the juſt God at the latter day. I ſhall dye then by the hands of the Cruel man: he is bleſſed that loſeth his life full of miſeries, and findeth the life of eternal Joys. It is pain and grief to depart from Goods and Friends: but yet not ſo much, as to depart from Grace and Heaven it ſelf. Wherefore there is neither felicity nor adverſity of this World, that can appear to be great, if it be weighed with the joys or pains in the World to come.

Adverſity compared with Adverſity.

Antitheſis between Joys and Pains in this World and in the World to come.

I can do no more, but pray for you; do the ſame for me, for Gods ſake. For my part (I thank the heavenly Father) I have made mine accounts, and appointed my ſelf unto the will of the heavenly Father: as he will, ſo I will by his Grace. For Gods ſake, as ſoon as ye can, ſend my poor Wife and Children ſome Letter from you, and my Letter alſo which I ſent of late to D. As it was told me ſhe never had Letter from me ſithence the coming of M.S. unto her, the more to blame the Meſſengers, for I have written divers times. The Lord comfort them, and provide for them; for I am able to do nothing in worldly things. She is a godly and wise Woman. If my meaning had been accomplished, she should have had necessary things: but what I meant, God can perform, to whom I commend both her and you all. I am a precious Jewel, now and daintily kept, never so daintily: for neither mine own man, nor any of the servants of the house may come to me, but my Keeper alone, a simple ride man, God knoweth; but I am nothing careful thereof. Fare you well. The 21 of January 1555.

Your bounden,

John Hooper

AMongst many other memorable Acts and Notes worthy to be remembred in the History of Mr. Hooper, this also is not to be forgotten which hapned between him, and a bragging Frier, a little after the beginning of his Imprisonment: The Story whereof here followeth.

Talk between Mr. Hoopir and a Frier in the Prison.

A Frier came from France to England with great vaunt, asking who was the greatest Heretick in England? thinking belike to do some great act upon him. To whom answer was made, that Mr. Hooper had then the greatest name to be the chiefest Ringleader, who was then in the Fleet. The Frier coming to him, asked why he was committed to Prison. He said for Debt. Nay, said he, it was for Heresie, which when the other had denied. What saist thou, quoth he, to Hoc est Corpus meum? Mr. Hooper, being partly moved at the sudden question, desired that he might ask of him another question, which was this; What remained after the Consecration in the Sacrament, any Bread or no? No Bread at all, saith he. And when ye break it, what do you break; whether Bread or the Body, said Mr. Hooper? No Bread, said the Frier, but the Body only. If ye do so, said Mr. Hooper, ye do great injury, not only to the Body of Christ, but also ye break the Scriptures, which say, Ye shall not break of him one bone, &c. With that the Frier, having nothing belike to answer, recoyled back, and with his Circles and his Crosses began to use Exorcism against Mr. Hooper, as though, &c.

If the material Body of Christ be broken in the Sacrament, then is the Commandment of Gods Word broken.

This and more wrote Mr. Hooper to Mrs. Wilkinson in a Letter, which Letter was read unto her by John Kelke.

Comparison between Mr. Hooper and Polycarpus.

A comparison between Mr. Hooper and Polycarpus.

WHen I see and behold the great patience of these blessed Martyrs in our days, in their Sufferings so quietly and constantly abiding the Torments that are ministred unto them of Princes for Gods cause: methinks I may well and worthily compare them unto the old Martyrs of the Primitive Church. In the number of whom, if comparison be to be made between Saint and Saint, Martyr and Martyr: with whom might I better match this blessed Martyr John Hooper, through the whole Catalogue of the old Martyrs, than with Polycarpus the ancient B. of Smyrna, of whom Eusebius maketh mention in the Ecclesiastical Story? For as both agreed together in one kind of punishment, being both put to the fire, so which of them shewed more patience and constancy in the time of their suffering, it is hard to be said.

Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 15.

And though Polycarpus being set in the flame (as the story saith) was kept by miracle from the torment of the fire, till he was stricken down with weapon, and so dispatched: yet Hooper by no less miracle, armed with patience and fervent spirit of Gods comfort, so quietly despised the violence thereof, as though he had felt little more than did Polycarpus in the fire flaming round about him.

Of this Polycarpus read before.

Moreover, as it is written of Polycarpus when he should have been tied to the Stake, he required to stand untied, saying these words; Sinite me, qui namq; ignem ferre posse dedit, dabit etiam ut sine vestra cavorum cautione immotus in rogo permaneam. That is, Let me alone I pray you, for he that gave me strength to come to this fire, will also give me patience to abide in the same without your tying. So likewise Hooper, with the like spirit, when he should have been tied with three Chains to the Stake, requiring them to have no such mistrust of him, was tied but with one; who, if he had not been tied at all, yet (no doubt) would have no less answered to that great Patience of Polycarpus.

Mr. Hooper compared to Polycarpus in life.

And as the end of them was both much agreeing, so the life of them both was such, as might seem not far discrepant. In teaching, like diligent both, in zeal fervent, in life unspotted, in manners and conversation inculpable, Bishops and also Martyrs both. Briefly, in teaching so pithy and fruitful, that as they both were joyned together in one Spirit, so might they be joyned in one Name together, Πολύκαρπος, to wit, much fruitful; to which name also ὕπαρος πολύκαρπος is not much unlike. In this the Martyrdom of Mr. Hooper may seem in suffering to go before, though in time it followed the Martyrdom of Polycarpus, for that he was both longer in Prison, and there also so cruelly handled by the malice of his Keepers, as I think none of the old Martyrs ever suffered the like. To this also add, how he was depraved by Boner, with such contumelies and reproaches, as I think in Polycarpus time was not used to any.

ὕπαρος.

The cruel handling of Mr. Hooper.

The enemies of Mr. Hooper and of Polycarpus compared together.

And as we have hitherto compared these two good Martyrs together, so now if we should compare the Enemies and Authors of their Death one with the other, we should find no inequality betwixt them both, but that the Adversaries of Mr. Hooper seemed to be more cruel and unmerciful. For they that put Polycarpus to death, yet ministred to him a quick dispatch, moved belike by some compassion not to have him stand in the torment: where the tormentors of Mr. Hooper suffered him without all compassion to stand three quarters of an hour in the fire. And as touching the chief doers and authors of his Martyrdom, what Consul or Proconsul was there to be conferred with the Chancellor here, which brought this Martyr to burning? Let this suffice.

Books and Treatises written by Mr. Hooper.

This good Bishop and Servant of God, being in Prison, wrote divers Books and Treatises, to the number of xxiv. whereof some he wrote to the Parliament in Latin, and one to the Bishop of Chichester Dr. Day: besides he wrote of the Sacraments, of the Lords Prayer, and of the Ten Commandments, with divers others.

Here follow certain of Mr. Hooper's Letters.

More of his Letters ye shall read in the Book of Letters of the Martyrs.

AS you have heard the whole Story of the Life and Martyrdom of this good man declared; so now let us consequently adjoyn some part of his Letters, written in the time of his Imprisonment, most fruitful and worthy to be read, especially in these dangerous days, of all true Christians, which by true Mortification seek to serve and follow the Lord through all Tempests and Storms of this malignant World, as by the reading and perusing of the said Letters, you shall better feel and understand.

A Letter of Mr. Hooper to certain godly Professors and Lovers of the Truth, instructing them how to behave themselves in that woful Alteration and Change of Religion.

A Letter of Mr. Hooper.

THe Grace, Mercy, and Peace of God the Father through our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you my dear Brethren, and with all those that unfeignedly love and imbrace his holy Gospel, Amen.

It is told me, That the wicked Idol, the Mass, is established again by Law, and passed in the Parliament House. Learn the truth of it, I pray you, and what Penalty is appointed in the Act to such as speak against it: Also whether there be any compulsion to constrain men to be at it. The Statute throughly known, such as be abroad and at liberty may provide for themselves, and avoid the danger the better. Doubtless there hath not been seen before our time such a Parliament as this is, that as many as were suspected to be favourers of Gods Word, should be banished out of both Houses. But we must give God thanks for that truth he hath opened in the time of his blessed Servant K. Edward the sixth, and pray unto him that we deny it not, nor dishonour it with Idolatry; but that we may have strength and patience rather to die ten times than to deny him once. Blessed shall we be, if ever God make us worthy of that honour to ſhed our Blood for his Names ſake: and bleſſed then ſhall we think the Parents which brought us into the World, that we ſhould from this Mortality be carried into Immortality. If we follow the commandment of S. Paul, that ſaith, If ye then be riſen again with Chriſt, ſeek theſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God. We ſhall neither depart from the vain tranſitory goods of this World, nor from this wretched and mortal life, with ſo great pains as others do.

The favourers of Gods Word secluded out of the Parliament both in the higher house and lower, against all right and reason.

Coloſ. 3.

Let us pray to our heavenly Father, that we may know and love his bleſſed will, and the glorious Joy prepared for us in time to come, and that we may know and hate all things contrary to his bleſſed Will, and alſo the Pain prepared for the wicked in the World to come.

He exhorteth the Brethren to reſort and confer among themſelves together.

There is no better way to be uſed in this troubleſom time for your conſolation, than many times to have Aſſemblies together of ſuch Men and Women as be of your Religion in Chriſt, and there to take and renew amongſt your ſelves the truth of your Religion, to ſee what ye be by the Word of God, and to remember what ye were before ye came to the knowledge thereof, to weigh and confer the Dreams and falſe Lies of the Preachers, that now preach, with the Word of God that retaineth all Truth: and by ſuch talk and familiar reſorting together, ye ſhall the better find out all their Lies that now go about to deceive you, and alſo both know and love the Truth that God hath opened to us. It is much requiſite, that the Members of Chriſt comfort one another, make Prayers together, confer one with another; ſo ſhall ye be the ſtronger, and Gods Spirit ſhall not be abſent from you, but in the midſt of you, to teach you, to comfort you, to make you wiſe in all godly things, patient in Adverſity, and ſtrong in Perſecution.

Conference among Brethren comfortable.

Ye ſee how the Congregation of the wicked by helping one another, make their wicked Religion and themſelves ſtrong againſt Gods Truth and his People. If ye may have ſome Learned man, that can out of the Scriptures ſpeak unto you of Faith, and true honouring of God, alſo that can ſhew you the deſcent of Chriſts Church from the beginning of it until this day, that ye may perceive by the life of our Fore-fathers theſe two things: the one, that Chriſts words, which ſaid that all his muſt ſuffer perſecution and trouble in the world, be true: the other, that none of all his, before our time, eſcaped trouble; then ſhall ye perceive that it is but a folly for one that profeſſeth Chriſt truly, to look for the love of the World.

Thus ſhall ye learn to bear Trouble, and to exerciſe your Religion, and feel indeed that Chriſts words be true, In the world ye ſhall ſuffer perſecution. And when ye ſhall feel your Religion indeed, ſay, Ye be no better than your Fore-fathers; but be glad, that ye may be counted Souldiers for this War: and pray to God when ye come together, that he will uſe and order you and your doings in theſe three ends, which ye muſt take heed to: the firſt, that ye glorifie God; the next, that ye edifie the Church and Congregation; the third, that ye profit your own Souls.

John 16.

Three things to be taken heed to.

In all your doings beware ye be not deceived. For although this time be not yet ſo Bloody and Tyrannous as the time of our Fore-fathers, that could not bear the Name of Chriſt, without danger of life and goods; yet is our time more perillous both for Body and Soul. Therefore of us Chriſt ſaid, Think ye when the Son of man cometh, ſhall find Faith upon the Earth? He ſaid not, Think ye he ſhall find any Man or Woman Chriſtened, and in Name a Chriſtian? but he ſpake of the Faith that ſaveth the Chriſtian man in Chriſt: and doubtleſs the ſcarcity of Faith is now more (and will, I fear, increaſe) than it was in the time of the greateſt Tyrants that ever were; and no marvel why. Read the ſixth Chapter of St. Johns Revelation, and ye ſhall perceive amongſt other things, that at the opening of the fourth Seal came out a pale Horſe, and he that ſate upon him was called Death, and Hell followed him. This Horſe is the time wherein Hypocrites and Diſſemblers entred into the Church under the pretence of true Religion, as Monks, Friers, Nuns, Maſſing-Prieſts, with ſuch others, that hath killed more Souls with Hereſie and Superſtition, than all the Tyrants, that ever, were killed Bodies by Fire, Sword, or Baniſhment, as it appeareth by his name that ſitteth upon the Horſe, who is called Death: for all Souls that love Chriſt, and truſt to theſe Hypocrites, live to the Devil in everlaſting pain, as is declared by him that followeth the pale Horſe which is Hell.

Luke 18.

Faith more ſcarce now than in the old time under Tyrants.

Mo Souls ſlain by Monks and Friers, &c. than Bodies by Tyrants.

Anno 1555.

The 6. Chapter of the Apocalyps opened.

These pretenced and pale Hypocrites have ſtirred the Earth-quakes, that is to wit, the Princes of the World, againſt Chriſts Church, and have alſo darkened the Sun, and made the Moon bloody, and have cauſed the Stars to fall from Heaven, that is to ſay, have darkened with Miſts, and daily do darken (as ye hear by their Sermons) the clear Sun of Gods moſt pure Word; the Moon, which be Gods true Preachers, which fetch only light at the Sun of Gods Word, are turned into Blood, Priſons, and Chains, that their Light cannot ſhine unto the World as they would: whereupon it cometh to paſs, that the Stars, that is to ſay, Chriſtian People fall from Heaven, that is to wit, from Gods moſt true Word to Hypocriſie, moſt deviliſh Superſtition and Idolatry. Let ſome Learned man ſhew you all the Articles of your Belief and monument of Chriſtian Faith, from the time of Chriſt hitherto, and ye ſhall perceive that there was never mention of ſuch Articles as theſe Hypocrites teach. God bleſs you, and pray for me as I do for you.

John Hooper.

Another Letter of M. Hoopers.

THE Grace of God be with you, Amen. I am adverti ſed by divers, as well ſuch as love the Truth, as alſo by ſuch as yet be not come unto it, that ye and I ſhall be carried ſhortly to Cambridge, there to diſpute for the Faith, and for the Religion of Chriſt (which is moſt true) that we have and do profeſs. I am (as I doubt not ye be) in Chriſt ready, not only to go to Cambridge, but alſo to ſuffer, by Gods help, Death it ſelf in the maintenance thereof. Weſton and his Complices have obtained forth the Commiſſion already, and ſpeedily (moſt like) he will put it in execution. Wherefore, dear Brethren, I do advertiſe you of the thing before for divers cauſes. The one to comfort you in the Lord, that the time draweth near and is at hand, that we ſhall teſtifie before Gods Enemies Gods Truth. The next, that ye ſhould prepare your ſelves the better for it. The third, to ſhew you what ways I think our ſelves were beſt to uſe in this matter, and alſo to hear of you your better advice, if mine be not good. Ye know ſuch as ſhall be Cenſors and Judges over us breath and thirſt for our Blood, and whether we, by Gods help, overcome after the Word of God, or by force and ſubtilty of our Adverſaries be overcome, this will be the concluſion; our Adverſaries will ſay, they overcome, and ye perceive how they report of thoſe great Learned men and godly Perſonages at Oxford.

Commiſſion given out for M. Hooper and other to Diſpute at Cambridge.

Wherefore I mind never to anſwer them, except I have Books preſent, becauſe they uſe not only falſe Allegation of the Doctors, but alſo a piece of the Doctors againſt the whole courſe of the Doctors mind. The next, that we may have ſworn Notaries, to take things ſpoken indifferently: which will be very hard to have, for the Adverſaries will have the overſight of all things, and then make theirs better than it was; and ours worſe than it was. Then if we ſee that two or three, or more will ſpeak together, or with Scoffs and Taunts illude and mock us: I ſuppoſe it were beſt to appeal, to be heard before the Queen and the whole Council, and that would much ſet forth the glory of God. For many of them know already the Truth, many of them err rather of Zeal than Malice, and the others that be indurate ſhould be anſwered fully to their ſhame (I doubt not) although to our ſmart and blood-ſhedding. For of this I am aſſured, that the Commiſſioners appointed to hear us and judge us, mean nothing leſs than to hear the cauſe indifferently; for they be Enemies unto us and our cauſe, and be at a point already to give Sentence againſt us: ſo that if it were poſſible with St. Stephen to ſpeak ſo that they could not reſiſt us, or to uſe ſuch ſilence and patience as Chriſt did, they will proceed to revenging.

The counſel of M. Hooper, how and upon what Cautions to diſpute with the Adverſaries.

Anno 1555.

Wherefore, my dear Brethren; in the mercy of Jesus Christ, I would be glad to know your advice this day or to morrow; for shortly we shall be gone, and I verily suppose that we shall not company together, but be kept one abroad from another. They will deny our Appeal, yet let us challenge the Appeal, and take witness thereof, of such as be present, and require for indifferency of hearing and judgment, to be heard either before the Queen and the Councel, or else before all the Parliament, as they were used in King Edwards days. Further, for my part I will require both Books and time to answer. We have been Prisoners now three quarters of a year, and have lacked our Books; and our Memories, by close keeping and ingratitude of their Parts, be not so present and quick as theirs be. I trust God will be with us, yea, I doubt not but he will, and teach us to do all things in his cause godly and constantly. If our Adversaries, that shall be our Judges, may have their purpose, we shall dispute one day, be condemned the next day, and suffer the third day. And yet is there no Law to condemn us (as far as I know) and so one of the Convocation-House said this Week to Doctor Weston. To whom Weston made this Answer, It forceth not (quoth he) for a Law, we have Commission to proceed with them; when they be dispatched let their Friends sue the Law.

Note, how the Papists proceed against all Order and Law.

Now how soon a man may have such a Commission at my Lord Chancellors hand, you know. It is as hard to be obtained as an Indictment for Christ at Caiphas hand. Besides that the Bishops having the Queen so upon their sides, may do all things both without the advice, and also the knowledge of the rest of the Lords of the Temporality; who at this present have found out the mark that the Bishops shot at, and doubtless be not pleased with their doings. I pray you help, that our Brother Sanders and the rest in the Marshalsey may understand these things, and send me your Answer betime. Judas non dormit; nec scimus diem neque horam. Judas sleepeth not; neither know we the day nor the hour. Dominus Jesus Christus suo sancto numine nos omnes consoletur & adjuvet. Amen. The Lord Jesus Christ with his Holy Spirit comfort and strengthen us all. Amen. May 6. An. 1554.

Yours, and with you unto death in Christ,
John Hooper.

An Exhortation to Patience, sent to his godly Wife Anne Hooper: whereby all the true Members of Christ may take comfort and courage to suffer Trouble and Affliction for the Profession of his holy Gospel.

Matth. 18. An effectual Letter of M. Hooper sent to his Wife.

OUr Saviour Jesus Christ (dearly Beloved, and my godly Wife) in S. Matthews Gospel said to his Disciples, That it was necessary, Scandals should come: and that they could not be avoided, he perceived as well by the condition of those that should perish and be lost for ever in the World to come, as also by their Affliction that should be saved. For he saw the greatest part of the people should contemn and neglect whatsoever true Doctrine or Godly ways should be shewed unto them, or else receive and use it as they thought good to serve their pleasures, without any profit to their Souls at all, not caring whether they lived as they were commanded by Gods Word or not; but would think it sufficient to be counted to have the name of a Christian man, with such works and fruits of his Profession and Christianity, as his Fathers and Elders, after their custom and manner, esteem and take to be good Fruits and faithful Works, and will not try them by the Word of God at all. These men, Matth. 24. by the just Judgment of God, be delivered unto the craft and subtilty of the Devil, that they may be kept by one scandalous Stumbling-block or other, that they never come unto Christ, who came to save those that were lost; as ye may see how God delivereth wicked men up unto their own Lusts, to do one mischief after another, careless, until they come into a reprobate mind, that forgetteth it self, and cannot know what is expedient to be done, or to be left undone, because they close their eyes, and will not see the light of Gods Word offered unto them: and being thus blinded, they prefer their own Vanities before the truth of Gods Word. Where such corrupt Minds be, there is also corrupt election and choice of Gods honour: Rom. 1. 24. 1 Thes. 2. so that the mind of Man taketh Falshood for Truth, Superstition for true Religion, Death for Life, Damnation for Salvation, Hell for Heaven, and persecution of Christs Members for Gods Service and Honour. And as these men wilfully and voluntarily reject the Word of God; even so God most justly delivereth them into the blindness of Mind and hardness of Heart, that they cannot understand, nor yet consent to any thing that God would have preached, and set forth to his glory, after his own Will and Word: wherefore they hate it mortally, and of all things most detest Gods holy Word. And as the Devil hath entred into their hearts, that they themselves cannot nor will not come to Christ, to be instructed by his holy Word: even so can they not abide any other man to be a Christian man, and to lead his life after the Word of God, but hate him, persecute him, rob him; imprison him, yea, and kill him; whether he be Man or Woman, if God suffer it. And so much are these wicked men blinded, that they pass off no Law, whether it be Gods or Mans, but persecute such as never offended, yea, do evil to those that have prayed daily for them, and wish them Gods Grace.

Error taken for Truth, and Persecution for Gods Service.

John 8. 9.

In their Pharaonical and blind fury they have no respect to Nature. For the Brother persecuteth the Brother, the Father the Son; and most dear Friends, in deviliſh slander and offence, are become most mortal Enemies. And no marvel; for when they have chosen sundry Masters, the one the Devil, the other God, the one shall agree with the other, as God and the Devil agree between themselves. For this cause (that the more part of the World doth use to serve the Devil under cloaked Hypocrisie of Gods title) Christ said, It is expedient and necessary, that Scandals should come, and many means be devised to keep the little Babes of Christ from the heavenly Father. But Christ saith, Wo be unto him by whom the Offence cometh: Yet is there no remedy, Man being of such corruption and hatred towards God, but that the evil shall be deceived, and persecute the good; and the good shall understand the Truth, and suffer Persecution for it unto the Worlds end. For as he that was born after the Flesh, persecuted in times past him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Therefore forsomuch as we live in this life amongst so many great perils and dangers, we must be well assured by Gods Word how to bear them, and how patiently to take them as they be sent to us from God. We must also assure our selves, that there is no other remedy for Christians in the time of trouble, than Christ himself hath appointed us. In S. Luke he giveth us this commandment, Ye shall possess your lives in patience, saith he. In the which words he giveth us both commandment what to do, and also great comfort and consolation in all Troubles. He sheweth what is to be done, and what is to be hoped for in troubles: and, when troubles happen, he biddeth us be patient; and in no case violently nor seditiously to resist our Persecutors, because God hath such care and charge of us, that he will keep in the midst of all troubles the very hairs of our head, so that one of them shall not fall away without the will and pleasure of our heavenly Father. Whether the Hair therefore tarry on the head, or fall from the head, it is the will of the Father. And seeing he hath such care for the hairs of our head, how much more doth he care for our life it self? Wherefore let Gods Adversaries do what they list, whether they take life or take it not, they can do us no hurt: for their cruelty hath no further power than God permitteth them; and that which cometh unto us by the will of our heavenly Father can be no harm, no loss, neither destruction unto us, but rather gain, wealth, and felicity. For all troubles and adversity that chance to such as be of God, by the will of the heavenly Father, can be none other but gain and advantage.

No respect of Nature with the persecuting Adversaries.

Rom. 8.

That the Spirit of man may feel these Consolations, the giver of them the heavenly Father must be prayed unto for the merits of Christs Passion: for it is not the nature of man that can be contented, until it be regenerated and possessed with Gods Spirit, to bear patiently the troubles of the mind or of the body. When the mind and heart of a man seeth on every side sorrow and heaviness, and the worldly eye beholdeth nothing but such things as be troublous and wholly bent to rob the Poor of that he hath, and also to take from him his life: except the man weigh theſe brittle and uncertain treaſures that be taken from him, with the riches of the life to come, and this Life of the Body, with the Life in Chriſts Blood, and ſo for the love and certainty of the Heavenly Joys contemn all things preſent, doubtleſs he ſhall never be able to bear the loſs of good's, Life, or any other thing of this World.

Therefore S. Paul giveth a godly and neceſſary Leſſon to all men in this ſhort and tranſitory Life, and therein ſheweth how a man may beſt bear the iniquities and troubles of this World; If ye be riſen again with Chriſt (ſaith he) ſeek the things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right Hand of God the Father. Wherfore, the Chriſtian mans Faith muſt be always upon the Reſurrection of Chriſt, when he is in trouble; and in that Glorious Reſurrection he ſhall not only ſee continual and perpetual Joy and conſolation, but alſo the Victory and Triumph over all Perſecution, Trouble, Sin, Death, Hell the Divel, and all other Tyrants and Perſecutors of Chriſt and of Chriſts People, the teares und weeping of the faithfull dried up, their wounds healed, their Bodies made immortal in Joy, their Souls for ever prayſing the Lord, in conjunction and ſociety everlaſting with the bleſſed company of Gods elect in perpetual Joy. But the Words of Saint Paul in that place, if they be not marked, ſhall doe little profit to the reader or hearer, and give him no patience at all in this impatient and cruel World.

Coloſ. 3. Aleſſon how to bear trouble.

In this firſt part S. Paul commandeth us, to think or ſet our affections on things that are above. When he biddeth us ſeek the things that are above, he requireth that our minds never ceaſe from prayer and ſtudy in Gods Word, untill we ſee, know, and underſtand the vanities of this World, the ſhortneſs and miſery of this Life, and the Treaſures of the World to come, the Immortality thereof, the Joys of that Life, and ſo never ceaſe ſeeking, untill ſuch time as we know certainly and be perſwaded, what a bleſſed man he is, that ſeeketh the one and findeth it, and careth not for the other though he loſe it; and in ſeeking, to have right Judgment between the Life preſent and the Life to come, we ſhall find how little the pains, impriſonment, ſlanders, lies, and death it ſelf is in this World, in reſpect of pains everlaſting, the priſon infernal, and Dungeon of Hell, the ſentence of Gods juſt Judgment, and everlaſting Death,

Two things commanded by S. Paul. writing to the Coloſſ. The firſt is, to ſee and know what things are above, and what things are beneath, and to diſcern rightly between them,

When a man hath, by ſeeking the Word of God, found out what the things above be: then muſt he (as S. Paul ſaith) ſet his affections upon them. And this commandment is more hard than the other. For mans knowledge many times ſeeth the beſt, and knoweth that there is a life to come, better than this Life preſent, (as you may ſee how daily men and women can praiſe and commend, yea, and wiſh for Heaven, and to be at reſt there) yet they ſet not their affection upon it: they doe more affect and love indeed a trifle of nothing in this World that pleaſeth their affection, than the Treaſure of all Treaſures in Heaven, which their own Judgment ſaith is better than all Worldly things. Wherfore we muſt ſet our affections upon the things that be above; that is to ſay, when any thing, worſe than Heaven, upon the earth, offereth it ſelf to be ours, if we will give our good wils to it, and love it in our hearts, then ought we to ſee by the Judgment of Gods Word, whether we may have the World without offence of God, and ſuch things as be for this Worldly Life without his diſpleaſure. If we cannot, S. Pauls commandment muſt take place, ſet your affections on things that are above. If the riches of this World may not be gotten nor kept by Gods Law, neither our lives be continued without the denyal of his Honor, we muſt ſet our affection upon the Riches and Life that is above, and not upon things that be on the earth. Therefore this ſecond commandment of Saint Paul raquireth, that our minds Judge heavenly things to be better than things upon the earth, and the Life to come better than the Life preſent; ſo we ſhould chuſe them before other, and prefer them, and have ſuch affection to the beſt, that in no caſe we ſet the worſt before it, as the moſt part of the World doth and hath done, for they chuſe the beſt and approve it, and yet follow the worſt.

The ſecond is to ſet our affection upon them that are above, and not upon the other. And this leſſon is harder than the other.

How things of this World may be poſſeſſed, and how not.

But theſe things (my godly Wife) require rather cogitation, meditation, and prayer; than words or talk. They be eaſie to be ſpoken of, but not ſo eaſie to be uſed and practiſed. Wherfore ſeeing they be Gods gifts, and none of ours, to have as our own when we would, we muſt ſeek them at our Heavenly Fathers Hand, who ſeeth, and is privy how poor and wretched we be, and how naked, how ſpoiled, and deſtitute of all his bleſſed gifts we be by reaſon of ſin. He did command therfore his Diſciples, when he ſhewed them that they ſhould take patiently the ſtate of this preſent Life full of troubles and perſecution, to pray that they might well eſcape thoſe troubles that were to come, and be able to ſtand before the Son of man. When you find your ſelf too much oppreſſed (as every man ſhall be ſometimes with the fear of Gods Judgment) uſe the 77. Pſalm that beginneth, I will cry unto God with my voice, and he ſhall hearken unto me. In which Pſalm is both godly doctrine and great conſolation unto the man or woman that is in anguiſh of mind.

Pſal. 77. Read alſo M. Hoopers expoſition upon this Pſalm, moſt comfortable for all broken and afflicted hearts.

Uſe alſo in ſuch trouble the 88. Pſalm, wherein is contained the prayer of a man, that was brought into extreme anguiſh and miſery, and being vexed with adverſaries and perſecutions, ſaw nothing but Death and Hell. And although he felt in himſelf, that he had not only man, but alſo God angry towards him: yet he by prayer humbly reſorted unto God, as the only port of conſolation, and in the midſt of his deſperate ſtate of trouble, put the hope of his ſalvation in him, whom he felt his enemy. Howbe it, no man of himſelf can do this but the ſpirit of God, that ſtriketh the mans heart with fear, prayeth for the man ſtricken and feared, with unſpeakable gronings. And when you feel your ſelf or know any other oppreſſed after ſuch ſort, be glad; For after that God hath made you to know what you be of your ſelf, he will doubtleſs ſhew you comfort, and declare unto you what you be in Chriſt his only Son; And uſe prayer often, for that is the means whereby God will be ſought unto for his gifts. Theſe Pſalms be for the purpoſe, when the mind can take no underſtanding, nor the heart any Joy of Gods promiſes: and therefore were the Pſalms alſo made, 6. 22. 30. 31. 38. 69. from the which you ſhall learn both patience and conſolation. Remember, that although your life (as all Chriſtian mens be) be hid, and appeareth not what it is, yet it is ſafe (as S. Paul ſaith) with God in Chriſt: and when Chriſt ſhall appear, then ſhall our lives be made open with him in glory. But in the mean time with ſeeking and ſetting our affections upon the things that he above, we muſt patiently ſuffer what ſoever God ſhall ſend unto us in this Mortal life. Notwithſtanding, it might fortune ſome would ſay, who is ſo perfect, that can let all things paſs as they come, and have no care of them; ſuffer all things, and feel nothing, be tempted of the Divel, the World, and the Fleſh, and be not troubled? Verily no man living. But this I ſay, that, in the ſtrength of Jeſus Chriſt things that come may paſs with care, for we be worldly, and yet are we not carried with them from Chriſt, for we be in him godly. We may ſuffer things, and feel them as Mortal men, yet bear them and overcome them as Chriſtian men. We may be tempted of the Divel, the fleſh, and the world: but yet although thoſe things pinch, they doe not pierce, and although they work ſin in us, yet in Chriſt no damnation to thoſe that be grafted in him. Hereof may the Chriſtian man learn both conſolation and patience. Conſolation, in that he is compelled both in his Body and goods to feel pain and loſs, and in the ſoul heavineſs and anguiſh of mind: howbeit none of them both ſhall ſeparate him from the love that God beareth him in Chriſt. He may learn patience, foraſmuch as his enemies both of Body and Soul, and the pains alſo they vex us withal for the time, if they tarry with us as long as we live, yet when death cometh, they ſhall avoid, and give place to ſuch Joys as be prepared for us in Chriſt: for no pains of the world be perpetual, and whether they ſhall afflict us for all the time of our mortal life, we know not; for they be ſervants of God to go and come, as he commandeth them. But we muſt take heed we meddle not forcibly nor ſeditiouſly to put away the perſecution appointed unto us by God, remember Chriſts ſaying, Poſſeſs you your lives by your patience. And in this commandment God requireth of every man and Woman this patient obedience. He ſaith not, it is ſufficient that other Holy Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts and Martyrs

Luk. 21.

Scriptures would be muſed upon rather than talked upon.

Anno 1555.

Martyrs continued their lives in patience, and patient ſuffering the trouble of this World: but Chriſt ſaith to every one of his People, By your own patience ye ſhall continue your life; not that man hath Patience in himſelf, but that he muſt have it for himſelf of God, the only giver of it, if he purpoſe to be a godly man. Now therefore as our Profeſſion and Religion requireth patience outwardly, without reſiſtance and force; ſo requireth it patience of the Mind, and not to be angry with God, although he uſe us, that be his own Creatures, as him liſteth.

Patience the gift of God only.

We may not alſo murmur againſt God, but ſay always, his Judgments be right and juſt, and rejoyce that it pleaſeth him by troubles to uſe us, as he uſed heretofore ſuch as he moſt loved in this World, and have a ſingular care to this Commandment, Gaudete & exultate, Be glad and rejoyce; for he ſheweth great cauſe why, Your reward (ſaith he) is great in Heaven. Theſe Promiſes of him that is the Truth it ſelf ſhall (by Gods Grace) work both Conſolation and Patience in the afflicted Chriſtian perſon. And when our Saviour Chriſt hath willed men in trouble to be content and patient, becauſe God in the end of trouble in Chriſt hath ordained eternal Conſolation; he uſeth alſo to take from us all ſhame and rebuke, as though it were not an honour to ſuffer for Chriſt, becauſe the wicked World doth curſe and abhor ſuch poor troubled Chriſtians. Wherefore Chriſt placeth all his honourably, and ſaith, Even ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you. We may alſo ſee with whom the Afflicted for Chriſts ſake be eſteemed, by S. Paul to the Hebrews, where as the number of the bleſſed and glorious company of Saints appear now to our Faith in Heaven, in Joy; yet in the Letter, for the time of this life, in ſuch pains and contempt as was never more. Let us therefore conſider both them and all other things of the World ſince the Fall of Man, and we ſhall perceive nothing to come to perfection, but with ſuch confuſion and diſorder to the eye of the World, as though things were rather loſt for ever, than like to come to any perfection at all. For of godly men, who ever came to Heaven (no not Chriſt himſelf) until ſuch time as the World had thought verily, that both he, and all his had been clean deſtroyed, and caſt away? as the Wiſe man ſaith of the wicked People, We thought them to be fools, but they be in peace.

Matt. 7.

To ſuffer for Chriſt is honourable. Matth. 5. Heb. 11.

Wiſd. 5.

We may learn by things that nouriſh and maintain us, both Meat and Drink, what lothſomneſs and (in manner) abhorring they come unto, before they work their perfection in us. From life they are brought to the fire, and clean altered from that they were when they were alive; from the Fire to the Trencher and Knife, and all to hacked; from the Trencher to the mouth, and as ſmall ground as the Teeth can grind them; and from the Mouth into the Stomach, and there ſo boiled and digeſted before they nouriſh, that whoſoever ſaw the ſame, would loath and abhor his own nouriſhment, before it come to his perfection.

Example taken out of our meat and drink, how things never come to their perfection before they be utterly waſted.

Is it then any marvel if ſuch Chriſtians as God delighteth in, be ſo mangled and defaced in this World, which is the Kitchin and Mill to boil and grind the fleſh of Gods People in, till they atchieve their perfection in the World to come? And as a man looketh for the nutriment of his Meat when it is full digeſted, and not before: So muſt he look for his Salvation when he hath paſſed this troublous World, and not before. Raw-fleſh is not Meat wholſom for man: and unmortified Men and Women be not Creatures meet for God. Therefore Chriſt ſaith, that his People muſt be broken, and all to be torn in the Mill of this world, and ſo ſhall they be moſt fine Meal unto the heavenly Father. And it ſhall be a Chriſtian mans part, and the duty of a mind repleniſhed with the Spirit of God, to mark the order of God in all his things, how he dealeth with them, and how they ſuffer, and be content to let God do his will upon them, as S. Paul ſaith, They wait until the number of the Elect be fulfilled, and never be at reſt, but look for the time when Gods People ſhall appear in Glory.

Unmortified men be no People of God. Matth. 10.

Rom. 8.

We muſt therefore patiently ſuffer, and willingly attend upon Gods doings, although they ſeem clean contrary, after our Judgment, to our wealth and ſalvation: As Abraham did, when he was bid to offer his Son Iſaak, in whom God promiſed the bleſſing and multiplying of his Seed. Joſeph at the laſt came to that which God promiſed him, although in the mean time, after the Judgment of the world, he was never like to be (as God ſaith he ſhould be) Lord over his Brethren. When Chriſt would make the Blind man to ſee, he put Clay upon his Eyes, which after the Judgment of Man, was a means rather to make him double blind, than to give him his ſight; but he obeyed, and knew that God could work his deſire, what means ſoever he uſed contrary to mans Reaſon: and as touching this World, he uſeth all his after the ſame ſort. If any ſmart, his People be the firſt; if any ſuffer ſhame they begin; if any be ſubject to ſlander, it is thoſe that he loveth; ſo that he ſheweth no face or favour, nor love almoſt in this world outwardly to them; but layeth Clay upon their ſore Eyes that be ſorrowful: yet the Patient man ſeeth (as S. Paul ſaith) Life hid under theſe miſeries and adverſities, and Sight under foul Clay; and in the mean time he hath the teſtimony of a good Conſcience, and believeth Gods Promiſes to be his Conſolation in the world to come, which is more worthy unto him, than all the world is worth beſides: and bleſſed is that man in whom Gods Spirit beareth record that he is the Son of God, whatſoever troubles he ſuffer in this troubleſom world.

Rom. 8.

And to judge things indifferently (my good Wife) the Troubles be not yet generally, as they were in our good Fathers time, ſoon after the Death and Reſurrection of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whereof he ſpake in S. Matthew. Of the which place you and I have taken many times great conſolation, and eſpecially of the latter part of the Chapter, wherein is contained the laſt Day and end of all troubles (I doubt not) both for you and me, and for ſuch as love the coming of our Saviour Chriſt to Judgment. Remember therefore that place, and mark it again, and ye ſhall in this time ſee this great Conſolation, and alſo learn much patience. Was there ever ſuch Troubles, as Chriſt threatned upon Jeruſalem? was there ſince the beginning of the world ſuch affliction? who was then beſt at eaſe? The Apoſtles that ſuffered in body Perſecution, and gathered of it eaſe and quietneſs in the Promiſes of God. And no marvel, for Chriſt ſaith, Lift up your heads, for your Redemption is at hand, that is to ſay, Your eternal Reſt approacheth and draweth near. The World is ſtark blind, and more fooliſh than Fooliſhneſs it ſelf, and ſo be the People of the World. For when God ſaith, trouble ſhall come, they will have eaſe. And when God ſaith, Be merry and rejoyce in trouble, we lament and mourn, as though we were Caſt-aways. But this our fleſh (which is never merry with Vertue, nor ſorry with Vice; never laugheth with Grace, nor ever weepeth with Sin) holdeth faſt with the World, and letteth God ſlip. But (my dearly beloved Wife) you know how to perceive and to beware of the vanity and crafts of the Devil well enough in Chriſt. And that ye may the better have patience in the Spirit of God, read again the 24. Chapter of S. Matthew, and mark what difference is between the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the deſtruction of the whole World, and you ſhall ſee, that then here were left alive many Offenders to repent: but at the later Day there ſhall be abſolute Judgment, and Sentence (never to be revoked) of Eternal life and Eternal death upon all men; and yet towards the end of the World we have nothing ſo much extremity as they had then, but even as we be able to bear. So doth the merciful Father lay upon us now Impriſonment, (and I ſuppoſe for my part ſhortly Death) now ſpoil of Goods, loſs of Friends, and the greateſt loſs of all, the knowledge of Gods Word. Gods will be done. I wiſh in Chriſt Jeſus our only Mediatour and Saviour, your Conſtancy and Conſolation, that you may live for ever and ever, whereof in Chriſt I doubt not; to whom, for his moſt bleſſed and painful Paſſion, I commit you. Amen.

Dearly beloved in Chriſt, remember theſe words, for you ſhall find thereby great joy and comfort, if you change your ſtate. Another Letter of M. Hooper to his Friends in London.

THe Grace of God be with you, Amen. I have received from you (dearly Beloved in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) by the hands of my Servant William Downton, your liberality, for the which I moſt heartily thank you, and I praiſe God highly in you for you, who hath moved your hearts to ſhew this kindneſs towards me, praying him to preſerve you from all famine, ſcarcity, and lack of the Truth of his Word, which is the lively food of your Souls, as you preſerve my Body from hunger, and other neceſſities which ſhould happen unto me; were it not cared for by the benevolence and charity of godly People. Such as have taken all worldly Goods and Lands from me, and ſpoiled me of all that I had, have impriſoned my Body, and appointed not one half-penny to feed or relieve me withal: but I do forgive them and pray for them daily in my poor Prayer unto God, and from my heart I wiſh their Salvation, and quietly and patiently bear their Injuries, wiſhing no farther extremity to be uſed towards us. Yet if the contrary ſeem beſt unto our Heavenly Father, I have made my reckoning, and fully reſolved my ſelf to ſuffer the uttermoſt that they are able to do againſt me, yea, Death it ſelf, by the aid of Chriſt Jeſus, who died the moſt vile death of the Croſs for us Wretches and miſerable Sinners. But of this I am aſſured, that the wicked World, with all his force and power, ſhall not touch one of the hairs of our Heads without leave and licence of our heavenly Father, whoſe will be done in all things. If he will life, Life be it: if he will death, Death be it. Only we pray, that our wills may be ſubject unto his will, and then although both we and all the World ſee none other thing but death, yet if he think life beſt, we ſhall not die, no, although the Sword be drawn out over our heads: as Abraham thought to kill his Son Iſaak, yet when God perceived that Abraham had ſurrendred his will to Gods will, and was content to kill his Son, God then ſaved his Son.

The Chriſtian Charity of Mr. Hooper to his Enemies.

M. Hooper fully reſolved to ſuffer.

Dearly beloved, if we be contented to obey Gods will, and for his commandments ſake to ſurrender our Goods and our Lives to be at his pleaſure, it maketh no matter whether we keep Goods and Life, or loſe them. Nothing can hurt us that is taken from us for Gods cauſe, nor can any thing at length do us good, that is preſerved contrary unto Gods Commandment. Let us wholly ſuffer God to uſe us and ours after his holy wiſdom, and beware we neither uſe nor govern our ſelves contrary to his will by our own wiſdom: for if we do, our wiſdom will at length prove fooliſhneſs. It is kept to no good purpoſe, that we keep contrary unto his Commandments. It can by no means be taken from us, that he would ſhould tarry with us. He is no good Chriſtian that ruleth himſelf and his, as worldly means ſerveth: for he that ſo doth ſhall have as many changes as chanceth in the World. To day with the World he ſhall like and praiſe the Truth of God, to morrow as the World will, ſo will he like and praiſe the falſhood of man; to day with Chriſt, and to morrow with Antichriſt. Wherefore, dear Brethren, as touching your behaviour towards God, uſe both your inward Spirits and your outward Bodies, your inward and your outward Man (I ſay) not after the manners of Men, but after the infallible Word of God.

Gods will to be obeyed in all things.

Anno 1555.

Difference between the true Chriſtian, and the Worldling.

Reſtrain from Evil in both; and glorifie your heavenly Father in both. For if ye think ye can inwardly in the heart ſerve him, and yet outwardly ſerve with the world in external Service the thing that is not God, ye deceive your ſelves; for both the Body and the Soul muſt together concur in the honour of God, as S. Paul plainly teacheth, 1 Cor. 6. For if an honeſt wife be bound to give both Heart and Body to faith and ſervice in Marriage, and if an honeſt Wifes Faith in the heart cannot ſtand with an whoriſh or defiled Body outwardly; much leſs can the true Faith of a Chriſtian, in the ſervice of Chriſtianity, ſtand with the bodily ſervice of external Idolatry: for the myſtery of Marriage is not ſo honourable between Man and Wife, as it is between Chriſt and every Chriſtian man, as S. Paul ſaith.

Both inward man and outward man muſt concur in the honour of God.

Therefore (dear Brethren) pray to the heavenly Father, that as he ſpared not the Soul nor the Body of his dearly Beloved Son, but applied both of them with extreme pain, to work our Salvation both of Body and Soul; ſo he will give us all grace to apply our Bodies and Souls to be Servants unto him: for doubtleſs he requireth as well the one as the other, and cannot be diſcontented with the one and well pleaſed with the other. Either he hateth both, or loveth both; he divideth not his love to one, and his hatred to the other. Let not us therefore, good Brethren, divide our ſelves, and ſay our Souls ſerve him, whatſoever our Bodies do to the contrary for civil Order and Policy.

But (alas) I know, by my ſelf, what troubleth you, that is, the great danger of the World, that will revenge (ye think) your Service to God with Sword and Fire, with loſs of Goods and Lands. But (dear Brethren) weigh of the other ſide, that your Enemies and Gods Enemies ſhall not do ſo much as they would, but as much as God ſhall ſuffer them, who can trap them in their own counſels, and deſtroy them in the midſt of their furies. Remember ye be the Workmen of the Lord, and called into his Vineyard, there to labour till evening-tide, that you may receive your penny, which is more worth than all the Kingdoms of the Earth. But he that calleth us into his Vineyard, hath not told us how ſore and how fervently the Sun ſhall trouble us in our labour: but hath bid us labour, and commit the bitterneſs thereof unto him; who can and will ſo moderate all Afflictions, that no man ſhall have more laid upon him, than in Chriſt he ſhall be able to bear. Unto whoſe merciful tuition and defence I commend both your Souls and Bodies. Septemb. 2. Anno 1554.

I thank God and you for the great help and conſolation I have received in the time of adverſity by your charitable means; but moſt rejoyce that you be not altered from Truth, although Falſhood cruelly ſeeketh to diſtain her. Judge not, my Brother, Truth by outward appearance; for Truth now worſe appeareth, and more vilely is rejected than Falſhood. Leave the outward ſhew, and ſee by the Word of God what Truth is, and accept Truth, and diſlike her not, though man call her Falſhood. As it is now, ſo it hath been heretofore, the Truth rejected and Falſhood received. Such as have profeſſed Truth, for Truth have ſmarted, and the friends of Falſhood laughed them to ſcorn. The trial of both hath been by contrary ſucceſs: the one having the commendation of Truth by man, but the condemnation of Falſhood by God, flouriſhing for a time, with endleſs deſtruction; the other afflicted a little ſeaſon, but ending with immortal Joys. Cry, call, pray, and in Chriſt daily require help, ſuccour, mercy, wiſdom, grace and defence, that the wickedneſs of this World prevail not againſt us. We began well, God preſerve us until the end. I would write more often unto you, but I do perceive you be at ſo much Charges with me, that I fear you would think when I write, I Crave. Send me nothing till I ſend to you for it; and ſo tell the good Men, your Partners: and when I need, I will be bold with you. Decemb. 3. An. 1554.

Yours with my Prayer, John Hooper.

To Mrs. Wilkinſon, a Woman hearty in Gods Cauſe, and comfortable to his afflicted Members.

This Mrs. Wilkinſon afterward lyed in Exile at Frankford.

THe grace of God, and the comfort of his Holy Spirit be with you. Amen.

I am very glad to hear of your health, and do thank you for your loving Tokens. But I am a great deal more glad to hear how Chriſtianly you avoid Idolatry, and prepare your ſelf to ſuffer the extremity of the World; rather than to endanger your ſelf to God. You do as you ought to do in this behalf, and in ſuffering of tranſitory Pains, you ſhall avoid permanent Torments in the World to come. Uſe your life, and keep it with as much quietneſs as you can, ſo that you offend not God. The eaſe that cometh of his diſpleaſure, turneth at length to unſpeakable Pains; and the gains of the World, with the loſs of his Favour, is beggary and wretchedneſs. Reaſon is to be amended in this Cauſe of Religion: For it will chuſe and follow an Error with the Multitude, if it may be allowed, rather than turn to Faith and follow the Truth with the People of God. Moſes found the ſame fault in himſelf, and did amend it, chuſing rather to be afflicted with the People of God, than to uſe the liberty of the Kings Daughter, that accounted him as her Son. Pray for Contentation and Peace of the Spirit, and rejoyce in ſuch Troubles as ſhall happen to you for the Truths ſake: for in that part Chriſt ſaith, you be happy. Pray alſo for me, I pray you, that I may do in all things the will of our heavenly Father: to whoſe tuition and defence I commend you.

Gains with Gods diſpleaſure is Beggary.

Another Letter exhorting to ſtand faſt in the Truth.

THe Grace of God be with you, Amen. I thank you for your loving and gentle friendſhip at all times, praying to God to ſhew unto you ſuch favour, that whatſoever trouble and adverſity happen, ye go not back from him. Theſe days be dangerous and full of peril; but yet let us comfort our ſelves in calling to remembrance the days of our Forefathers, upon whom the Lord ſent ſuch troubles, that many hundreds, yea, many thouſands died for the Teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, both Men and Women, ſuffering with patience and conſtancy as much Cruelty as Tyrants could deviſe, and ſo departed out of this miſerable World to the Bliſs everlaſting, whereas now they remain for ever, looking always for the end of this ſinful World, when they ſhall receive their Bodies again to Immortality, and ſee the number of the Elect aſſociated with them in full and conſummate Joys: and as vertuous Men ſuffering Martyrdom, and tarrying a little while in this World with pains, by and by, reſted in Joys everlaſting; and as their pains ended their ſorrows and began eaſe; ſo did their conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs animate and confirm all good People in the Truth, and gave them encouragement and luſt to ſuffer the like, rather than to fall with the World to conſent unto wickedneſs and Idolatry. Wherefore, my dear Friends, ſeeing God of his part hath illuminated you with the ſame gift and knowledge of true Faith, wherein the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, and all Martyrs ſuffered moſt cruel death; thank him for his grace in knowledge, and pray unto him for ſtrength and perſeverance, that through your own fault ye be not aſhamed or afraid to confeſs it. Yet ye be in the Truth and the gates of Hell ſhall never prevail againſt it, nor Antichriſt with all his Imps can prove it to be falſe. They may kill and perſecute, but never overcome. Be of good comfort, and fear God more than man. This life is ſhort and miſerable; happy be they that can ſpend it to the glory of God. Pray for me, as I do for you, and commend me to all good Men and Women. Decemb. 22. Anno 1554.

Heb. 11. Conſolation taken by the Example of ancient Martyrs.

To my dearly Beloved Siſter in the Lord, Mrs. Anne Warcop.

THe Grace of God be with you, Amen. I thank you for your loving Token. I pray you burthen not your ſelf too much. It were meet for me rather to bear a pain, than to be a hindrance to many. I did rejoyce at the coming of this Bearer, to underſtand of your Conſtancy, and how that you be fully reſolved, by Gods Grace, rather to ſuffer extremity than to go from the Truth of God which you have profeſſed. He that gave you Grace to begin ſo infallible a Truth, will follow you in the ſame unto the end. But, my loving Siſter, as you be travelling this perillous Journey, take this Leſſon with you, practiſed by wiſe men; whereof you may read in the ſecond of S. Matthews Goſpel. Such as travelled to find Chriſt, followed only the Star, and as long as they ſaw it, they were aſſured they were in the right way, and had great mirth in their Journey. But when they entred into Jeruſalem, whereas the Star led them not thither, but unto Bethelem, and there asked the Citizens the thing that the Star ſhewed before: as long as they tarried in Jeruſalem, and would be inſtructed where Chriſt was born; they were not only ignorant of Bethelem, but alſo loſt the ſight of the Star that led them before. Whereof we learn, in any caſe, whilſt we be going in this life to ſeek Chriſt that is above, to beware that we loſe not the Star of Gods Word, that only is the mark that ſheweth us where Chriſt is, and which way we may come unto him. But as Jeruſalem ſtood in the way, and was an impediment to theſe Wiſe men: ſo doth the Synagogue of Antichriſt, that beareth the name of Jeruſalem, which by interpretation is called the Viſion of Peace, and amongſt the People now is called the Catholick Church, ſtand in the way that Pilgrims muſt go by through this world to Bethelem, the Houſe of ſaturity and plentifulneſs, and is an impediment to all Chriſtian Travellers; yea, and except the more grace of God be, will keep the Pilgrims ſtill in her, that they ſhall not come where Chriſt is at all. And to ſtay them indeed, they take away the Star of Light, which is Gods Word, that it cannot be ſeen: as you may ſee how the Celeſtial Star was hid from the Wiſe men, when they asked of the Phariſees at Jeruſalem, where Chriſt was born. Ye may ſee what great dangers happened unto theſe VViſe men, whilſt they were learning of Liars, where Chriſt was. Firſt, they were out of their way, and next they loſt their Guide and Conductor, the heavenly Star. Chriſt is mounted from us into Heaven, and there we ſeek him (as we ſay) and let us go thitherward by the Star of his VVord, beware we happen not to come into Jeruſalem, the Church of Men, and ask for him. If we do, we go out of the way, and loſe alſo our Conductor and Guide that only leadeth us ſtrait thither.

The ſureſt way is ever to follow the Star.

The Poets write in Fables, that Jaſon, when he fought with the Dragon in the Iſle of Colchis, was preſerved by the Medicines of Medea, and ſo wan the Golden Fleece. And they write alſo that Phaeton, whom they feign to be the Son and Heir of the high god Jupiter, would needs upon a day have the conduction of the Sun round about the VVorld; but, as they feigned, he miſſed of the accuſtomed courſe: whereupon when he went too high, he burned Heaven; and when he went too low, he burned the Earth and the Water. Theſe prophane Hiſtories do ſhame us that be Chriſtian men. Jaſon againſt the poyſon of the Dragon uſed only the Medicine of Medea. Hereſie and Sin, to uſe any other remedy than Chriſt and his Word? Phaeton, for lack of Knowledge, was afraid of every Sign of the Zodiack, that the Sun paſſeth by: wherefore he went now too low, and now too high, and at length fell down and drowned himſelf in the Sea. Chriſtian men for lack of knowledge, and for fear of ſuch dangers as Chriſtian men muſt needs paſs by, go clean out of order, and at length fall into the Pit of Hell.

Lets in the way to the Kingdom of Heaven.

Siſter, take heed; you ſhall in your Journey towards Heaven meet with many a monſtrous Beaſt: have ſalve of Gods Word therefore ready. You ſhall meet Huſband, Children, Lovers and Friends, that ſhall, if God be not with them (as God be praiſed he is, I would it were with all other alike) be very lets and impediments to your purpoſe. You ſhall meet with ſlander and contempt of the World, and be accounted ungracious and ungodly; you ſhall hear and meet with cruel Tyranny to do you all extremities; you ſhall now and then ſee the troubles of your own Conſcience, and feel your own weakneſs; you ſhall hear that you be curſed by the Sentence of the Catholick Church, with ſuch like Terrors: but pray to God, and follow the Star of his Word, and you ſhall arrive at the Port of eternal Salvation, by the Merits only of Jeſus Chriſt: to whom I commend you and all yours moſt heartily.

Yours in Chriſt, John Hooper.

¶ Unto theſe Letters of M. Hooper heretofore recited, we thought not inconvenient to annex alſo another certain Epiſtle, not of M.Hoopers, but written to him by a famous Learned man Henry Bullinger, chief Superintendent in the City of Zurick. Of whoſe ſingular love and tender affection toward M. Hooper ye heard before in the beginning of M.Hoopers Life diſcourſed. Now how loving he writeth unto him, ye ſhall hear by this preſent Letter, as followeth.

To the moſt Reverend Father, Mr. John Hooper, Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, and now Priſoner for the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, my fellow-Elder, and moſt dear Brother in England.

A Letter of M. Bullinger to M. Hooper, tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh.

THE Heavenly Father grant unto you, and to all thoſe which are in Bands and Captivity for his Names ſake, Grace and Peace through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, with wiſdom, patience, and fortitude of the Holy Ghoſt.

I have received from you two Letters, my moſt dear Brother, the former in the Month of September of the year paſt, the later in the Month of May of this preſent year, both written out of Priſon. But I doubting leſt I ſhould make Anſwer to you in vain, whilſt I feared that my Letters ſhould never come into your hands, or elſe increaſe and double your Sorrow, did refrain from the duty of writing. In the which thing I doubt not but you will have me excuſed, eſpecially ſeeing you did not vouchſafe, no not once in a whole year, to anſwer to my whole Libels rather than Letters, whereas I continued ſtill notwithſtanding in writing unto you: as alſo at this preſent, after I heard you were caſt in Priſon, I did not refrain from continual Prayer, beſeeching our heavenly Father, through our only Mediator Jeſus Chriſt, to grant unto you and to your fellow-Priſoners Faith and Conſtancy unto the end. Now is that thing happened unto you (my Brother) the which we did oftentimes prophecy unto our ſelves, at your being with us, ſhould come to paſs, eſpecially when we did talk of the power of Antichriſt, and of his felicity and victories. For you know the ſaying of Daniel, His power ſhall be mighty, but not in his ſtrength, and he ſhall wonderfully deſtroy and make havock of all things, and ſhall proſper and practice, and he ſhall deſtroy the mighty and the holy People after his own will. You know what the Lord warned us of before-hand by Matthew, in the 10. Chapter, by John in the 15. Chapter, and the 16. and alſo what that choſen Veſſel S. Paul hath written in the ſecond of Timothy and the third Chapter. Wherefore I do nothing doubt (by Gods Grace) of your Faith and Patience, whilſt you know that thoſe things which you ſuffer are not looked for, or come by chance; but that you ſuffer them in the beſt, trueſt, and moſt holy quarrel: for what can be more true and holy than our Doctrine, which the Papiſts, thoſe worſhippers of Antichriſt, do perſecute? All things touching Salvation we attribute unto Chriſt alone, and to his holy Inſtitutions, as we have been taught of him and of his Diſciples: but they would have even the ſame things to be communicated as well to their Antichriſt, and to his Inſtitutions. Such we ought no leſs to withſtand than we read that Elias withſtood the Baalites. For if Jeſus be Chriſt, then let them know, that he is the fulneſs of his Church, and that perfectly: but if Antichriſt be King and Prieſt, then let them exhibit unto him that honour. How long do they halt on both ſides? Can they give unto us any one that is better than Chriſt? or who ſhall be equal with Chriſt, that may be compared with him, except it be he whom the Apoſtle calleth the Adverſary? But if Chriſt be ſufficient for his Church, what needeth this patching and piecing? But I know well enough, I need not to uſe theſe Diſputations with you which are ſincerely taught, and have taken root in Chriſt, being perſwaded that you have all things in him, and that we in him are made perfect.

The Doctrine of the Proteſtants what it is, wherefore they are perſecuted.

Ephes. 1. 2 Theſſa. Chriſt is ſufficient, and needs not be patched with the Pope.

Go forwards therefore conſtantly to confeſs Chriſt, and to defie Antichriſt, being mindful of this moſt holy and moſt true ſaying of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; He that overcometh ſhall poſſeſs all things, and I will be his God and he ſhall be my Son: but the fearful, and the unbelieving, and the murtherers, and whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, ſhall have their part in the Lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. The firſt Death is ſoon overcome, although a Man muſt burn for the Lords ſake: for they ſay well that do affirm this our Fire to be ſcarcely a ſhadow of that which is prepared for Unbelievers, and them that fall from the Truth. Moreover, the Lord granteth unto us, that we may eaſily overcome by his power the firſt Death, the which he himſelf did taſte and overcome; promiſing withal ſuch Joys as never ſhall have end, unſpeakable, and paſſing all underſtanding, the which we ſhall poſſeſs ſo ſoon as ever we do depart hence. For ſo again ſaith the Angel of the Lord; If any man worſhip the Beaſt and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or on his hand, the ſame ſhall drink of the wrath of God; yea, of the wine which is poured into the Cup of his wrath, and he ſhall be tormented in fire and brimſtone before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb: and the ſmoak of their Torment ſhall aſcend evermore, and they ſhall have no reſt day nor night which worſhip the Beaſt and his Image, and whoſoever receiveth the print of his Name. Here is the patience of Saints; here are they that keep the Commandments of God, and the Faith of Jeſus. To this he addeth by and by; I heard a voice ſaying to me, write, Bleſſed be the Dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth, or ſpeedily, they be bleſſed, John 5. even ſo ſaith the Spirit; for they reſt from their labours, but their works follow them: for our labour ſhall not be fruſtrate or in vain.

Revel 14. Gods wrath upon the Beaſt, and them that take his Mark.

Therefore ſeeing you have ſuch a large Promiſe, be ſtrong in the Lord, fight a good fight, be faithful to the Lord unto the end: conſider that Chriſt the Son of God is your Captain, and fighteth for you, and that all the Prophets, Apoſtles and Martyrs, are your fellow Souldiers. They that perſecute and trouble us, are Men finful and mortal, whoſe favour a wiſe Man would not buy with the value of a Farthing: and beſides, that our Life is frail, ſhort, brittle and tranſitory. Happy are we, if we depart in the Lord, who grant unto you, and to all your fellow Priſoners, Faith and Conſtancy. Commend me to the moſt Reverend Fathers and holy Confeſſors of Chriſt, Dr. Cranmer Biſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Ridley Biſhop of London, and the good Old Father Dr. Latimer. Them and all the reſt of the Priſoners with you for the Lords Cauſe, ſalute in my name, and in the name of all my fellow Miniſters, the which do ſpeak unto you the Grace of God, and conſtancy in the Truth.

The Hiſtory of Doctor Rowland Taylor, which ſuffered for the truth of Gods Word, under the Tyranny of the Roman Biſhop, Anno 1555. The 9. day of February

Hadley Town commended

THe Town of Hadley was one of the firſt that received the Word of God in all England, at the preaching of Maſter Thomas Bilney: by whoſe induſtry the Goſpel of Chriſt had ſuch gracious ſucceſs, and took ſuch root there, that a great number in that Pariſh became exceeding well learned in the Holy Scriptures, as well Women as men, ſo that a man might have found among them many, that had often read the whole Bible through, and that could have ſaid a great ſort of S. Pauls Epiſtles by heart, and very well and readily have given a godly learned ſentence in any matter of controverſie. Their Children and Servants were alſo brought up and trained ſo diligently in the right knowledge of Gods Word, that the whole Town ſeemed rather an Univerſity of the learned, than a Town of Cloth-making or labouring People. And that moſt is to be commended, they were for the more part faithful followers of Gods Word in their living.

Thes. Bilney.

D. Taylor a Doctor in both lawes, and a Divine

In this Town was Doctor Rowland Taylor, Doctor in both the Civil and Canon Laws, and a right perfect Divine, Parſon. Who at his firſt entring into his Benefice, did not, as the common ſort of Beneficed men do, let out his Benefice to a Farmer, that ſhall gather up the Profits, and ſet in an ignorant unlearned prieſt to ſerve the Cure, and ſo they have the fleece, little or nothing care for feeding the flock: But contrarily, he for-ſook Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, with whom he before was in Houſhold, and made his perſonal abode and dwelling in Hadley among the People committed to his charge. Where he as a good Shephard, abiding and dwelling among his Sheep, gave himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of Holy Scriptures, moſt faithfully endeavouring himſelf to fulfill that Charge, which the Lord gave unto Peter ſaying; Peter loveſt thou me? Feed my Lambs, Feed my Sheep, Feed my ſheep. This love of Chriſt ſo wrought in him, that no Sunday nor Holy-day paſſed, nor other time when he might get the People together, but he preached to them the Word of God, the Doctrine of their ſalvation.

The. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury

A good Shephard and his conditions. John 20. Feed with word.

Feed with example.

Not only was his Word a preaching unto them but all his life and converſation was an example of unfeigned Chriſtian life and true holineſs. He was void of all pride, humble and meek, as any Child: ſo that none were ſo poor but they might boldly, as unto their Father, reſort unto him, neither was his Lowlineſs childiſh or fearful, but as occaſion time and place required, he would be ſtout in rebuking the ſinfull and evill Doers, ſo that none was ſo rich but he would tell him plainly his fault, with ſuch earneſt and grave rebukes as became a good Curate and Paſtor. He was a man very mild, void of all rancour, grudge or evill will, ready to do good to all men, readily forgiving his enemies, and never ſought to do evill to any.

Feed with alms.

To the poor that where blind, lame, ſick, bedrid, or that had many Children, he was a very Father, a careful Patron, and diligent provider; inſomuch that he cauſed the Pariſhioners to make a general proviſion for them: and he himſelf (beſide the continual relief that they always found at his Houſe) gave an honeſt portion yearly to the common almes box. His Wife alſo an honeſt diſcreet, and ſober Matron, and his Children well nurtured, brought up in the fear of God and good learning.

Comendation of D. Taylors Wife and his Children.

To conclude, he was a right and lively image or pattern of all thoſe vertuous qualities deſcribed by S. Paul in a true Biſhop, a good ſalt of the earth, ſavourly biting the corrupt manners of evil men, a light in Gods Houſe ſet upon a Candleſtick for all good men to imitate and follow.

Thus continued this good Shephard among his flock, governing and leading them thorow the wilderneſs of this wicked World, all the days of the moſt innocent and Holy King of bleſſed memory, Edward the ſixth. But after it pleaſed God to take King Edward from this vale of miſery unto his moſt bleſſed reſt, the Papiſts, who ever ſembled and diſſembled, both with King Henry the eighth, and King Edward his Son, now ſeeing the time convenient for their purpoſe uttered their falſe hypocriſie, openly refuſing all good reformation made by the ſaid two moſt godly Kings: and contrary to that they had all theſe two Kings days preached, taught, written and ſworn, they violently overthrew the true Doctrin of the Goſpel, and perſecuted with ſword and fire all thoſe that would not agree to receive again the Roman Biſhop as Supream Head of the Univerſal Church, and allow all the Errors, Superſtitions, and Idolatries, that before by Gods Word were diſproved and juſtly condemned, as though now they were good Doctrin, vertuous, and true Religion.

The Papiſts and their nature

In the beginning of this rage of Antichriſt, a certain pettie Gentleman after the ſort of a Lawyer, called Foſter, being a Steward and Keeper of Courts, a man of no great skill, but a bitter perſecutor in thoſe days, with one John Clerk of Hadley, which Foſter had ever been a ſecret favourer of all Romiſh Idolatry, conſpired with the ſaid Clerk to bring in the Pope and his maumetrie again into Hadley Church. For as yet D. Taylor, as a good Shephard, had retained and kept in his Church the godly Church Service and Reformation made by K. Edward, and moſt faithfully and earneſtly preached againſt the Popiſh corruptions, which had infected the whole Countrey round about.

Foſter a Lawyer, and John Clerk of Hadley, two notorious Papiſts

Therefore the foreſaid Foſter and Clerk hired one John Averth, Parſon of Aldam, a very money Mammoniſt, a blind leader of the blind, a Popiſh Idolater, and an open Advouterer and Whoremonger, a very fit Miniſter for their purpoſe to come to Hadley, and there to give the onſet to begin again the Popiſh Maſs.

John Averth a right Popiſh Prieſt

To this purpoſe they builded up with all haſt poſſible the Altar, intending to bring in their Maſs again, about the Palm Monday. But this their device took none effect: for in the night the Altar was beaten down. Wherefore they built it up again the ſecond time, and laid diligent watch, leſt any ſhould again break it down.

Mark how unwilling the People were to receive the Papacy again.

On the day following came Foſter and John Clerk, bringing with them their Popiſh Sacrificer, who brought with him all his implements and garments to play his Popiſh pageant, whom they and their men guarded with ſwords and bucklers, leſt any man ſhould diſturb him in his Miſſall Sacrifice.

When Doctor Taylor, who (according to his cuſtom) ſat at his book ſtudying the Word of God, heard the Bels ring, he aroſe and went into the Church, ſuppoſing ſomething had been there to be done, according to his Paſtoral office: and comming to the Church, he found the Church Doors ſhut and faſt barred, ſaving the Chancel door, which was only latched. Where he entring in, and coming in the Chancel, ſaw a Popiſh Sacrificer in his robes, with a broad new ſhaven Crown, ready to begin his Popiſh ſacrifice, beſet round about with drawn ſwords and bucklers, leaſt any man ſhould approach to diſturb him.

D. Taylor rebuketh the Divel. The Papiſts call all their trumpery, the Queens proceedings. For you muſt remember that Antichriſt reigneth by another arm and not by his own power. Read Daniel, of the King of Faces, the 8. Chapter. D. Taylor there playeth a right Elias 3 Reg. 18.

Then ſaid Doctor Taylor, Thou Divel, who made thee ſo bold to enter into this Church of Chriſt to prophane and defile it with this abominable Idolatry? With that ſtart up Foſter, and with an irefull and furious countenance ſaid to Doctor Taylor; Thou Traitor, what doeſt thou here, to let and diſturb the Queens proceedings? Doctor Taylor anſwered, I am no Traitor, but I am the Shephard that God my Lord Chriſt hath appointed to feed this his flock: wherefore I have good Authority to be here; and I command thee thou Popiſh Wolf, in the Name of God to avoid hence, and not to preſume here with ſuch Popiſh Idolatry to poiſon Chriſts flock.

Then ſaid Foſter, Wilt thou traitorouſly, Heretick, make a commotion, and reſiſt violently the Queens proceedings?

D. Taylor anſwerd, I make no commotion, but it is you Papiſts that make commotions and Tumults. I reſiſt onely with Gods Word againſt your Popiſh Idolatries, which are againſt Gods Word, the Queens honour, and tend to the utter ſubverſion of this Realm of England. And further, thou doſt againſt the law, which commandeth, that no Maſs be ſaid but at a conſecrate Altar.

When the Parſon of Aldam heard that, he began to ſhrink back, and would have left his ſaying of Maſs: then ſtart up John Clerk, and ſaid, Maſter Averth; be not affraid, you have a "ſuperaltare, Goe forth with your buſineſs man.

"Super altare is a ſtone conſecrated by the Biſhops, commonly of a foot long, which the Papiſts carry inſtead of an altar, when they Maſs for mony in Gentlemens houſes.

Then Foſter, with his armed men, took D. Taylor, and led him with ſtrong hand out of the Church, and the Popiſh Prelate proceeded in his Romiſh Idolatry. D. Taylors Wife, who followed her Husband into the Church, when ſhe ſaw her Huſband thus violently thruſt out of his Church, ſhe kneeled down and held up her hands, and with a loud voice ſaid; I beſeech God the righteous Judge to avenge this injury, that this Popiſh Idolater to this day doth to the Blood of Chriſt. Then they thruſt her out of the Church alſo, and ſhut the Doors; for they feared that the People would have rent their Sacrificer in pieces. Notwithſtanding one or two threw in great ſtones at the Windows, and miſſed very little the Popiſh Maſſer.

The Papiſts Arguments wherewith they Maintain their Doctrin.

Thus you ſee, how without conſent of the People the Popiſh Maſs was again ſet up with battel array, with ſwords and bucklers, with violence and Tyranny: which practice the Papiſts have ever yet uſed. As for reaſon, law, or Scripture, they have none on their part. Therefore they are the ſame that ſay; The law of unrighteouſneſs is your ſtrength: Come, let us oppreſs the righteous without any fear, &c.

Within a day or two after, with all haſt poſſible, this Foſter and Clerk made a complaint of D. Taylor, by a letter written to Ste. Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, and L. Chancellor.

D. Taylor cited by a letter miſſive

When the Biſhop heard this, he ſent a letter miſſive to D. Taylor, commanding him within certain days to come and to appear before him upon his allegiance, to anſwer ſuch complaints as were made againſt him.

When Doctor Taylors friends heard of this they were exceeding ſorry and agrieved in mind: which when foreſeeing to what end the ſame matter would come, ſeeing alſo all Truth and Juſtice were trodden under foot, and falſhood with cruel Tyranny were ſet aloft and ruled all the whole rout: his friends, I ſay, came to him and earneſtly counſelled him to depart and fly, alledging and declaring unto him, that he could neither be indifferently heard to ſpeak his conſcience and mind, nor yet look for Juſtice or favor at the ſaid Chancellors hands, who, as it was well known, was moſt fierce and cruel; but muſt needs (if he went up to him) wait for impriſonment and cruel death at his hands.

D. Taylors Friend would have him to flie.

The valiant courage of D. Taylor in Chriſts cauſe.

Then ſaid D. Taylor to his friends, Dear friends, I moſt heartily thank you, for that you have ſo tender a care over me. And although I know that there is neither Juſtice nor Truth to be looked for at my Adverſaries hands, but rather impriſonment and cruel death: yet know I my cauſe to be ſo good and righteous, and the truth ſo ſtrong upon my ſide, that I will by Gods grace go and appear before them, and to their beards reſiſt their falſe doing.

Anno 1555.

Then ſaid his friends, Maſter Doctor, we think it not beſt ſo to do. You have ſufficiently done your duty, and teſtified the truth both by your godly Sermons, and alſo in reſiſting the Parſon of Aldam, with other that came hither to bring again the Popiſh Maſs. And foraſmuch as our Saviour Chriſt willeth and biddeth us, that when thy perſecute us in one City, we ſhould fly into another: we think, in flying at this time ye ſhould do beſt, keeping your ſelf againſt another time, when the Church ſhall have great need of ſuch diligent Teachers, and godly Paſtors. Mat. 10.

Oh (quoth D. Taylor) what will ye have me to do? I am old, and have already lived too long to ſee theſe terrible and moſt wicked days. Fly you, and do as your conſcience leadeth you; I am fully determined (with Gods grace) to go to the Biſhop, and to his beard to tell him that he doth naught, God ſhall well hereafter raiſe up Teachers of his People, which ſhall with much more diligence and fruit teach them, than I have done. For God will not forſake his Church, though now for a time he trieth and correcteth us, and not without a juſt cauſe. D. Taylor refuſeth to fly.

As for me, I believe before God, I ſhall never be able to do God ſo good ſervice, as I may do now; nor I ſhall ever have ſo glorious a calling as I now have, nor ſo great mercy of God profered me, as is now at this preſent. For what Chriſtian man would not gladly dye againſt the Pope and his Adherents? I know that the Papacy is the Kingdom of Antichriſt, altogether full of Lies, altogether full of falſhood, ſo that all their Doctrin, even from Chriſts Croſs be my ſpeed, and Saint Nicholas unto the end of their Apocalypſe, is nothing but Idolatry, Superſtition, Errors, Hypocriſie and Lies. The Papacie a Kingdom of lyes.

Wherefore I beſeech you, and all other my friends, to pray for me, and I doubt not but God will give me ſtrength and his Holy Spirit, that all mine Adverſaries ſhall have ſhame of their doings.

When his friends ſaw him ſo conſtant, and fully determined to go, they with weeping eyes commended him unto God; and he within a day or two prepared himſelf to his Journey, leaving his Cure with a godly old Prieſt, named Sir Richard Yeoman, who afterwards for Gods Truth was burnt at Norwich. Sir Richard Yeoman, D. Taylors Curate and Martyr of Chriſt.

There was alſo in Hadley one Alcocke, a very godly man, well learned in the Holy Scriptures, who after Sir Rich Yeoman was driven away) uſed daily to read a Chapter, and to ſay the Engliſh Litany in Hadley Church But him they fetcht up to London, and caſt him in priſon in Newgate; where after a years impriſonment he died. John Alcock of Hadley troubled for Gods truth, and died in priſon.

But let us return to Doctor Taylor again, who being accompanied with a ſervant of his own, named John Hull, took his Journey towards London. By the way, this John Hull laboured to Counſel and perſwade him very earneſtly to fly, and not come to the Biſhop, and profered himſelf to go with him to ſerve him, and in all perils to venture his life for him, and with him. D. Taylors journey. John Hull a faithful Servant to D. Taylor.

But in no wiſe would Doctor Taylor conſent or agree thereunto, but ſaid, Oh John, ſhall I give place to this thy counſil and Worldly perſwaſion, and leave my flock in this danger? Remember the good Shepheard Chriſt, which not alone fed his flock, but alſo died for his flock. Him muſt I follow, and with Gods grace will do, D. Taylor examined to lie, but he ſet ted to do Therefore good John pray for me and if thou ſeeſt me weak at any time, comfort me, and diſcourage me not in this my godly enterpriſe and purpoſe. Thus they came up to London, and ſhortly after D. Taylor preſented himſelf to the Biſhop of Wincheſter Steven Gardiner, then Lord Chancelor of England. The firſt meeting between Winchester and D. Taylor.

For this hath been one great abuſe in England theſe many years that ſuch offices as have been of moſt importance and weight, have commonly been committed to Biſhops and other ſpiritual men, whereby a diveliſh miſchiefs and inconveniences have hapned in this Realm, to the great diſhonour of God, and utter neglecting of the flock of Chriſt; the which three be theſe. A generation in England and three miſchiefs coming thereof. The firſt miſchief.

Firſt, they have had ſmall leiſure to attend to their Paſtoral Cures, which thereby have been utterly neglected and undone.

Secondly,

Anno 1555.

Secondly, it hath alſo puft up many Biſhops and other ſpritual perſons into ſuch haughtineſs and pride, that they have thought no Noble man in the Realm worthy to be their equal and fellow.

The third miſchief.

Thirdly, where they by this means knew the very ſecrets of Princes, they being in ſuch high offices, have cauſed the ſame to be known in Rome, afore the Kings could accompliſh and bring their intents to paſs in England. By this means hath the Papacy been ſo maintained, and things ordered after their wils and pleaſures, that much miſchief hath happened in this Realm and others, ſomtime to the Deſtruction of Princes, and ſometime to the utter undoing of many Commonwealths.

Now when Gardiner ſaw Dr. Taylor, he according to his common cuſtom, all to reviled him, calling him Knave, Traitor, Heretick, with many other villanous reproaches; which all Dr. Taylor heard patiently, and at the laſt ſaid unto him:

Dr Taylors patience and magnanimity.

My Lord; quoth he, I am neither Traitor nor Heretick, but a true Subject, and a faithful Chriſtian man, and am come, according to your commandment, to know what is the cauſe that your Lordſhip hath ſent for me.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Art thou come, thou Villain? How dareſt thou look me in the face for ſhame? Knoweſt thou not who I am?

Steven Gardiners Lordly looks.

Yes, quoth Dr. Taylor, I know who you are. Ye are Doctor Steven Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellor, and yet but a Mortal man I trow. But if I ſhould be affraid of your Lordly looks, why fear you not God, the Lord of us all? How dare ye for ſhame look any Chriſtian man in the face, ſeeing ye have forſaken the Truth, denied our Saviour Chriſt and his word and done contrary to your own Oath and writing? With what countenance will ye appear before the Judgment ſeat of Chriſt, and anſwer to your Oath made firſt unto that bleſſed K. Henry the eighth of famous Memory, and afterward unto bleſſed King Edward the ſixth his Son?

The notable anſwer of Dr. Taylor to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Herods oath. Here the Biſhop confeſſeth unlawful oaths ought not to be kept.

The Biſhop anſwered, Tuſh, tuſh, that was Herods Oath, unlawful; and therefore worthy to be broken: I have done well in breaking it; and I thank God, I am come home again to our Mother the Catholik Church of Rome, and ſo I would thou ſhouldeſt do.

Dr. Taylor anſwered, Should I forſake the Church of Chriſt, which is founded upon the true foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, to approve thoſe Lies, Errours, Superſtition and Idolatries, that the Popes and their company at this day ſo blaſphemouſly do approve? Nay, God forbid.

The true Church of Chriſt, whereunto all men ought to [illegible].

Let the Pope and his return to our Saviour Chriſt and his word, and thruſt out of the Church ſuch abominable Idolatries as he maintaineth, and then will Chriſtian men turn unto him. You wiote truly againſt him, and were ſworn againſt him.

I tell thee, quoth the Biſhop of Wincheſter, it was Herods Oath, unlawful; and therfore ought to be broken, and not kept: and our holy Father the Pope hath diſcharged me of it.

Chriſt will require lawfull oaths and promiſes.

Then ſaid D. Taylor, But you ſhall not ſo be diſcharged before Chriſt, who doubtleſs will require it at your hands, as a lawful Oath made to our Leige and Soveraign Lord the King, from whoſe obedience no man can aſſoile you, neither the Pope nor any of his.

Gardiner againſt railing. Railing words become not a Magiſtrate. Mat. 5.

I ſee, quoth the Biſhop, thou art an Arrogant Knave, and a very fool.

My Lord, quoth Doctor Taylor, leave your unſeemly railing at mee, which is not ſeemly for ſuch an one in Authority as you are. For I am a Chriſtian man, and you know, that he that ſaith to his Brother, Racha, is in danger of a Councel, and he that ſaith, Thou Fool, is in danger of Hell Fire.

The Biſhop anſwered, Ye are falſe, and lyars all the ſort of you. Nay quoth Doctor Taylor, we are true men, and know that it is written, Os quod mentitur, occidit animam: And again, Perdes omnes qui loquuntur mendacium, i. The mouth that lieth, ſlayeth the ſoul: And again, Lord God thou ſhalt deſtroy all that ſpeak Lies. And therefore we abide by the truth of Gods Word which ye contrary to your own conſciences deny and forſake.

Marriage obiected to D. Taylor. Marriage defended.

Thou art married (quoth the Biſhop.) Yea, (quoth Doctor Taylor) that I thank God I am, and have nine Children, and all in lawful Matrimony, and bleſſed be God that ordained Matrimony and commanded that every man, that hath not the gift of continency, ſhould Marry a Wife of his own, and not live in Adultery or Whoredom.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Thou haſt reſiſted the Queens proceedings, and wouldeſt not ſuffer the Parſon of Aldam, a very vertuous and devout Prieſt, to ſay Maſs in Hadley. Dr. Taylor anſwered, My Lord, I am Parſon of Hadley, and it is againſt all Right, Conſcience and Laws, that any man ſhould come into my charge, and preſume to infect the Flock committed unto me, with venom of the Popiſh Idolatrous Maſs.

One Idolater holdeth with another

With that the Biſhop waxed very angry, and ſaid, Thou art a blaſphemous Heretick indeed, that blaſphemeſt the bleſſed Sacrament (and put off his cap) and ſpeakeſt againſt the holy Maſs, which is made a Sacrifice for the quick and the dead. Dr. Taylor anſwered, Nay, I blaſpheme not the bleſſed Sacrament which Chriſt inſtituted, but I reverence it is as a true Chriſtan man ought to do, and confeſs, that Chriſt ordained the holy Communion in the remembrance of his death and paſſion, which when we keep according to his ordinance, we (through faith) eat the Body of Chriſt, and drink his Blood, giving thanks for our redemption, and this is our Sacrifice for the quick and the dead, to give thanks for his merciful goodneſs ſhewed to us, in that he gave his Son Chriſt unto the death for us.

The Maſs.

The Comunion.

The true ſacrifice for the quick and dead what it is.

Thou ſayſt well (quoth the Biſhop,) It is all that thou haſt ſaid, and more too; for it is a propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead. Then anſwered Dr. Taylor, Chriſt gave himſelf to die for our redemption upon the Croſs, whoſe Body there offered was the propitiatory Sacrifice full, prefect and ſufficient unto Salvation for all them that believe in him. And this Sacrifice did our Saviour Chriſt offer in his own perſon himſelf once for all, neither can any Prieſt any more offer him; nor we need any more propitiatory Sacrifice; and therefore I ſay with Chryſoſtom, and all the Doctors: Our Sacrifice is only Memorative, in the remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a Sacrifice of thankſgiving; and therefore the Fathers called it Euchariſtia: And other Sacrifice hath the Church of God none.

Propitiatory Sacrifice offered never more than once. Our Sacrifice is only Memorative.

It is true, quoth the Biſhop, the Sacrament is called Euchariſtia, a thankſgiving, becauſe we there give thanks for our redemption, and it is alſo a Sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, which thou ſhalt confeſs e're thou and I have done. Then called the Biſhop his men, and ſaid, Have this fellow hence, and carry him to the Kings Bench, and charge the Keeper he be ſtreightly kept.

Wincheſters ſtrong argument, Carry him to priſon.

D. Taylors prayer againſt the Pope and his deteſtable enormities.

Then kneeled Dr. Taylor down, and held up both his hands, and ſaid, Good Lord I thank thee; and from the Tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable errours, Idolatries, and abominations, good Lord deliver us: And God be praiſed for good King Edward. So they carried him to priſon to the Kings Bench where might he lay priſoner almoſt two years.

This is the ſum of that firſt talk, as I ſaw it mentioned in a Letter that Dr. Taylor wrote to a friend of his, thanking God for his grace, that he had confeſſed his Truth, and was found worthy for Truth to ſuffer priſon and bands, beſeeching his friends to pray for him, that he perſevere conſtant unto the end.

The godly behaviour and converſation of D. Taylor in priſon.

Being in priſon, Doctor Taylor ſpent all his time in prayer, reading the holy Scriptures, and writing, and preaching, and exhorting the priſoners, and ſuch as reſorted to him, to repentance and amendment of life.

Priſons turned into Churches and Churches into dens of Theeves.

Within a few days after, were divers other learned and godly men in ſundry countries of England committed to priſon for Religion, ſo that almoſt all the priſons in England where become right Chriſtian Schools and Churches; ſo that there was no greater comfort for Chriſtian hearts, than to come to the priſons to behold their vertuous converſation, and to hear their prayers, preachings, moſt godly exhortations, and conſolations.

Now were placed in Churches blind and ignorant Maſs mongers, with their Latin bablings and Apiſh ceremonies; who like cruel Wolves ſpared not to murther all ſuch, as any thing at all but once whiſpered againſt their Popery. As for the godly Preachers which were in King Edwards time, they were either fled the Realm, or elſe as the Prophets did in King Achabs days, they were privily kept in corners. As many as the Papiſts could lay hold on, they were ſent into priſon, there as Lambs waiting when the Butchers would call them to the ſlaughter.

to

The lamentable diſtreſs of Gods true Worſhippers in thoſe days.

John Bradford and D. Taylor priſon-fellows in the Kings Bench.

When Doctor Taylor was come into the priſon called the Kings Bench he found therein the vertuous and vigilant Preacher of Gods Word, M. Bradford; which man for his innocent and godly living, his devout and vertuous preaching, was worthily counted a miracle of our time, as even his Adverſaries muſt needs confeſs. Finding this man in priſon, he began to exhort him to faith, ſtrength and patience, and to perſevere conſtant unto the end. M. Bradford hearing this, thanked God that he had provided him ſuch a comfortable priſon-fellow: and ſo they both together lauded God, and continued in prayer, reading, and exhorting one the other: Inſomuch that Doctor Taylor told his friends that came to viſit him, that God had moſt graciouſly provided for him, to ſend him to that priſon where he found ſuch an Angel of God, to be in his company to comfort him.

Doctor Taylor brought forth to be deprived.

After that Doctor Taylor had lain in priſon a while, he was cited to appear in the Arches at Bow-Church, to anſwer unto ſuch matter as there ſhould be objected againſt him. At the day appointed he was led thither, his Keeper waiting upon him. Where when he came, he ſtoutly and ſtrongly defended his Marriage, affirming by the Scriptures of God, by the Doctors of the Primitive Church, by both Laws Civill and Canon, that it is lawful for Prieſts to Marry, and that ſuch as have not the gift of continency are bound in pain of Damnation to marry. This did he ſo plainly prove, that the Judge could give no ſentence of Divorce againſt him, but gave ſentence he ſhould be deprived of his Benefice, becauſe he was Married

D. Taylor defendeth Marriage of Prieſts.

D Taylor deprived of his Benefice becauſe of his Marriage.

You do me wrong then (quoth Doctor Taylor) and alledged many Laws and Conſtitutions for himſelf, but all prevailed not. For he was again carried into priſon, and his Livings taken away, and given to other. As for Hadley Benefice, it was given or ſold, I wot not whether, to one Maſter Newealle, whoſe great vertues were altogether unlike to Doctor Taylor his predeceſſor, as the poor Pariſhioners full well have found.

Doctor Taylor brought again before Wincheſter, and other Biſhops.

The Papiſts rule and reign.

After a Year and three Quarters, or there about, in the which time, the Papiſts got certain old Tyranous Laws, which were put down by King Henry the Eighth; and by King Edward, to be again revived by Parliament: ſo that now they might, Ex officio, cite whom they would, upon their own ſuſpition, and charge him with what Articles they luſted, and except they in all things agreed to their purpoſe, burn them: When theſe Laws were once eſtabliſhed, they ſent for Doctor Taylor with certain other priſoners, which were again conuented before the Chancellor and other Commiſſioners about the 22. of January. The purport and effect of which talk between them, becauſe it is ſufficiently deſcribed by himſelf in his own Letter written to a friend of his, I have annexed the ſaid Letter here under, as followeth.

A Letter of Dr. Taylor, conteining and reporting the talk had between him and the Lord Chancellor and other Commiſſioners the 22. of January.

WHereas you would have me to write the talke between the King and Queens moſt Honourable Council and me on Tueſday, 22. of January, ſo far as I remember: Firſt, my L. Chancellor ſaid, You among other are at this preſent time ſent for, to enjoy the Kings and Queens Majeſties favour and mercy, if you will now riſe again with us from the fall which we generally have received in this Realm, from the which (God be praied) we are now clearly delivered, miraculouſly. If you will not riſe with us now, and receive mercy now offered, you ſhall have Judgement according to your demerit. To this I anſwered, that ſo to riſe, ſhould be the greateſt fall that ever I could receive: for I ſhould ſo fall from my dear Saviour Chriſt to Antichriſt. For I do believe, that the Religion ſet forth in King Edwards days, was according to the vein of the Holy Scripture, which containeth fully all the rules of our Chriſtian Religion, from the which I do not intend to decline ſo long as I live, by Gods grace.

The pardon is proffered.

Anno 1555.

Note this anſwer.

The Religion ſet forth in K. Edwards days.

Then Maſter Secretary Bourn ſaid, Which of the Religions mean ye of in King Edwards days? For ye know there were diverſe Books of Religion ſet forth in his days. There was a Religion ſet forth in a Catechiſm by my Lord of Canterbury. Do you mean that you will ſtick to that?

Secretary Bourn cavilleth againſt the Religion ſet forth in K. Edwards days.

I anſwered, My Lord of Canterbury made a Catechiſm to be tranſlated into Engliſh, which Book was not of his own making: yet he ſet it forth in his own name; and truly that Book for the time did much good. But there was after that ſet forth by the moſt innocent King Edward (for whom God be praiſed everlaſtingly) the whole Church-ſervice, with great deliberation, and the advice of the beſt learned men in the Realm, and authoriſed by the whole Parliament, and received and publiſhed gladly by the whole Realm: which Book was never reformed but once, and yet by that one reformation it was ſo fully perfected, according to the rules of our Chriſtian Religion in every behalf, that no Chriſtian conſcience could be offended with any thing therein contained; I mean of that Book reformed.

A teſtimony of the book of Service ſet out in K. Edwards days.

Then my Lord Chancellour ſaid, Didſt thou never read the Book that I ſet forth of the Sacrament?

I anſwered, that I had read it.

Then he ſaid, How likeſt thou that Book? With that one of the Council (whoſe name I know not) ſaid, My Lord, that is a good queſtion: for I am ſure, that Book ſtoppeth all their mouths. Then ſaid I, My Lord, I think many things be far wide from the truth of Gods Word in that Book.

His right name might be Sir John Clawback.

Then my Lord ſaid, Thou art a very varlet. To that I anſwered, That is as ill as Racha or Fame. Then my Lord ſaid, Thou art an ignorant Beetle-brow.

Matth 5.

To that I anſwered, I have read over and over again the holy Scriptures, and S. Auguſtines works through, S. Cyprian, Euſebius, Origen, Gregory Nazianzene, with divers other Booоks through; once therefore, I thank God, I am not utterly ignorant. Beſides theſe, my Lord, I profeſſed the Civil Laws, as your Lordſhip did, and I have read over the Canon Law alſo.

D. Taylor learned in Diviniry, and alſo in the Civil law.

Then my Lord ſaid, With a corrupt Judgement thou readeſt all things: Touching my profeſſion, it is Divinity, in which I have written divers Books. Then ſaid I, My Lord, ye did write one Book, De vera obedientia; I would you had been conſtant in that: for indeed you never did declare a good conſcience that I heard of, but in that one Book.

Gardiners book de vera obedientia.

Then my Lord ſaid, Tut, tut, tut, I wrote againſt Bucer in Prieſts Marriages: but ſuch Books pleaſe not ſuch wretches as thou art; which haſt been Married many yeers.

To that I anſwered, I am Married indeed, and I have had nine Children in Holy Matrimony, I thank God: and this I am ſure of, that your proceedings now at this preſent in this Realm againſt Prieſts Marriages, is the maintenance of the Doctrine of Divels, againſt Natural law, Civil law, Canon law, general Councils, Canons of the Apoſtles, ancient Doctors, and Gods Laws.

Prieſts Marriage confirmed by D. Taylor.

Then ſpake my Lord of Dureſm, ſaying, You have profeſſed the Civil law, as you ſay. Then you know that Juſtinian writeth, that Prieſts ſhould at their taking of Orders ſwear, that they were never Married; and he bringeth in to prove that, Canones Apoſtolorum.

To that I anſwered, That I did not remember any ſuch law of Juſtiniam. But I am ſure, that Juſtiniam writeth in Titulo de indicta viduitate, in God. That if one would bequeath to his Wife in his Teſtament a legacie, under a condition that ſhe ſhould never Marry again, and take an oath of her for accompliſhing the ſame, yet ſhe may Marry again

Juſtinians law approveth Matriage, and condemneth oths againſt it again if he die, notwithſtanding the aforeſaid Conditions, and Oath taken and made againſt Marriage: and an Oath is another manner of Obligation made to God, than is a Papiſtical Vow made to man.

Anno 1555.

Tonſtal throughly anſwered by the Civil law.

Moreover, in the Pandects it is contained, that if a man doth manumit his Handmaid, under a condition that ſhe ſhall never marry; yet ſhe may marry, and her Patron ſhall loſe Jus Patronatus, for his adding of the unnatural and unlawful Condition againſt Matrimony.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Thou ſayeſt that Prieſts may be married by Gods Law. How proveſt thou that?

Scripture approveth Prieſts Marriage, but the Pope muſt be heard before the Scripture. Chryſoſtom calleth it an Hereſie to ſay that a Prieſt may not be Married.

I anſwered, By the plain words and ſentences of S. Paul. both to Timothy, and to Titus, where he ſpeaks moſt evidently of the Marriage of Prieſts, Deacons and Biſhops. And Chryſoſtom writing upon the Epiſtle to Timothy, ſaith, It is an Hereſie to ſay that a Biſhop may not be Married.

Then ſaid my Lord Chancellor, Thou Lieſt of Chryſoſtom. But thou doſt, as all they Companions do be-ly ever without ſhame both the Scriptures and the Doctors. Didſt thou not alſo ſay, that by the Canon Law Prieſts may be Married? which is moſt untrue, and the contrary is moſt True.

Canon Law approveth Prieſts Marriages.

I anſwered, We read in the Decrees, that the four general Councels, Nicene, Conſtantinopolitane Epheſine Chalcedone have the ſame Authority that the four Evangeliſts have. And we read in the ſame Decrees (which is one of the chief books of the Canon Law) that the Councel of Nice, by the means of one Paphnutius, did allow Prieſts and Biſhops Marriages: Therefore by the beſt part of the Canon Law, Prieſts may be Married.

Winchester believeth the Councel

Then my Lord Chancellor, ſaid Thou falſifieſt the generall Councell. For there is expreſs mention in the ſaid decree, that Prieſts ſhould be divorced from their wives, which be married.

Then ſaid I, if thoſe words be there, as you ſay, then am I content to loſe this great head of mine, Let the book be fetched.

Tonſtal helpeth Winchester at need.

Then ſpake my Lord of Dureſme; Though they be not there, yet they may be in Eccleſiaſtica Hiſtoria, which Euſebius wrote, out of which book the Decree was taken.

To that ſaid I, It is not like that the Pope would leave out any ſuch ſentence, having ſuch Authority, and making ſo much for his purpoſe.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Gratian was but a patcher, and thou art glad to ſnatch up ſuch a patch as maketh for thy purpoſe.

I anſwered, my Lord, I cannot but marvel that you do call one of the chief Papiſts that ever was, but a patcher.

Gardiner denieth his own Canoniſts and calleth them patched law

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Nay I call thee a ſnatcher and patcher. To make an end, Wilt thou not return again with us to the Catholick Church; and wiſh that he roſe.

And I ſaid, by Gods grace I will never depart from Chriſts Church. Then I required that I might have ſome of my friends to come to me in priſon: and my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Thou ſhalt have Judgment within this week: and ſo was I delivered again unto my Keeper. My Lord of Dureſme would that I ſhould believe as my Father and my Mother did. I alledged S. Auguſtin, that we ought to prefer Gods Word before all men.

Dr. Taylor ſent again to priſon

And thus much was contained in the foreſaid letter of Dr. Taylor for that matter.

Beſides this Letter, moreover he directed another writing in like manner to another friend of his concerning the cauſes wherefore he was condemned, which we thought likewiſe here to expreſs as followeth.

The Copie of another Letter to his friend touching his Aſſertions of the Marriage of Prieſts, and other cauſes for the which he was condemned.

The Biſhop of Winchester and his fellowsproved to be open Hereticks by Scripture and by the true Definition of Hereſie.

IT is Hereſie to defend any Doctrine againſt the holy Scripture. Therefore the Lord Chancellor and Biſhops conſenting to his ſentence againſt me, be Hereticks. For they have given ſentence againſt the Marriage of Prieſts, knowing that St. Paul to Timothy and Titus writeth plainly, that Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons may be married; knowing alſo that, by S. Pauls Doctine it is the Doctine of Divels to inhibit Matrimony. And S. Paul willeth every faithful Miniſter to teach the People ſo, leſt they be deceived by the marked Merchants, 1 Tim. 4. B Tim. 4.

Biſhops ſin againſt their own Conſcience and that for 9. or 10. cauſes

Theſe Biſhops are not ignorant, that it is not onely Saint Pauls Counſel, and lawful, but Gods commandment alſo to marry, for ſuch as cannot otherwiſe live chaſt, neither avoid fornication.

They know that ſuch as do marry do not ſin. 1 Cor. 7.

They know that God, before ſin was, ordained Matrimony, and that in Paradiſe, between two of his principal Creatures, Man and Woman. Gen. 2.

They know what ſpirit they have, which ſay it is evill to marry (ſeeing God ſaid, It is not good for Man to be alone without a Wife) having no ſpecial gift, contrary to the general commandment and ordinance, divers times repeated in the book of Geneſis, which is, To Increaſe and Multiply. Gen. 1.

Marriage is no impediment for a good man to walk in the obedience of Gods commandment

They know that Abraham carried into the Land of Canaan his old and yet Barren Wife, the Vertuous Woman Sara with him, leaving Father and Mother, and Countrey the while, at Gods commandment. For though Father and Mother and other Friends are dear and near, yet none are ſo dearly and nearly joyned together, as Man and Wife in Matrimony, which muſt needs be holy, for that is a figure and ſimilitude of Chriſt and his Church. Gen. 12.

They know that S. Paul giveth a great praiſe to Matrimony, calling it honourable, and that not only to and among many, but to and among all men without exception, whoſoever have need of that Gods remedy, for Mans and Womans infirmity. Epheſ. 5. Heb. 14.

They know that if there were any Sin in Matrimony, it were chiefly to be thought to be in the Bed-company. But S. Paul ſaith, that the Bed-company is undefiled.

They know that the having of a Wife was not an impediment for Abraham, Moſes, Iſaac, Jacob, David, &c. to talk with God, neither to the Levites, Biſhops, and Prieſts office in the time of the old Teſtament or the new. Gen. 18. Exod. 18. Gen. 25. Gen. 31. 2 Reg. 7. Matth. 1.

They know that Chriſt would not be conceived, or born of his bleſſed Mother, the Virgin Mary, before ſhe was eſpouſed in Marriage, his own ordinance.

It is Hereſie to deny Prieſts Marriage. Chryſoſtom.

They know, by S. Cyprian and S. Auguſtin, that a Vow is not an impediment ſufficient to let Matrimony or to divorce the ſame.

Ambroſe 3. Quæ integri-tas.

They know that S. Chryſoſtom ſaith, it is Hereſie to affirm that a Biſhop may not have a Wife.

They know that Ambroſe will have no commandment but Counſel only to be given, touching the obſerving of Virginity.

They know that Chriſt with his bleſſed Mother and the Apoſtles were at a Marriage, and beautified and honoured the ſame with his preſence, and firſt miracle.

To be ſhort, they know that all that I have here written touching the Marriage of Prieſts, is true: and they know that the Papiſts themſelves do not obſerve, touching that matter, their own Laws and Canons, and yet they continue marked in conſcience with an hot-iron, as deteſtable Hereticks in this behalf. The Lord give them grace to repent, if it be his good will, Amen.

The ſecond cauſe of Dr. Taylors condemnation.

My ſecond cauſe why I was condemned an Heretick is, that I denied Tranſubſtantiation and Concomitation, two jugling words of the Papiſts by the which they do believe and will compel all other to believe, that Chriſts Natural Body is made of Bread, and the Godhead by and by to be joyned thereunto, ſo that immediatly after the words (called the words of Conſecration) there is no more Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, but the ſubſtance onely of the Body and Blood of Chriſt together with his Godhead: ſo that the ſame being now Chriſt, both God and man, ought to be Worſhipped with godly Honour, and to be offered to God, both for the quick and the dead, as a Sacrifice propitiatory and ſatisfactory for the ſame. This matter was not long debated in words: but becauſe I denied the foreſaid Papiſticall Doctrine (yea rather, plain, moſt wicked Idolatry, Blaſphemy and Hereſie) I was judged an Heretick. Tranſubſtantiation and Concomitation, two jugling words of the Papiſts.

I did alſo affirm the Pope to be Antichriſt, and Popery Antichriſtianity.

And I confeſſed the Doctrine of the Bible to be ſufficient Doctrine, touching all and ſingular matters of Chriſtian Religion, and of Salvation.

I alſo alledged, that the Oath againſt the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, was a lawful Oath, and ſo was the Oath made by us all, touching the Kings or Queens preheminence. For Chryſoſtom ſaith, that Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, and all men in every Realm were ever, and ought to be ever, touching both Body and Goods, in ſubjection to the Kingly Authority, who hath the Sword in his hand, as Gods principal Officer and Governour in every Realm. I defired the Biſhops to repent for bringing the Realm from Chriſt to Antichriſt, from light to darkneſs, from verity to vanity.

All men muſt obey Kings.

Thus you know the ſum of my laſt Examination and Condemnation. Pray for me, and I will pray for you.

D. Taylor never afraid of Death.

God be praiſed, ſince my Condemnation I was never afraid to dye; Gods will be done. If I ſhrink from Gods Truth, I am ſure of another manner of death than had Judge Hales. But God be praiſed, even from the bottom of heart, I am unmovably ſetled upon the Rock, nothing doubting, but that my dear God will perform and finiſh the work that he hath begun in me and others. To him be all honour both now and ever, through Chriſt our only and whole Saviour. Amen.

And thus much wrote D. Taylor, concerning this matter, to his Friend.

You heard in the former Anſwers a little before, certain Allegations touched of D. Taylor out of S. Cyprian, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtom, and Ambroſe, touching the lawfulneſs of Prieſts marriage. Now ye ſhall hear the places of the ſaid Doctors cited and produced out of their own Books, as here enſueth.

The places of the Doctors alledged before in Doctor Taylor's Letter.

Cyprian. l. 1. Epiſt 11. A Deacon or Virgin, or any other that hath dedicated himſelf to Virginity, if he cannot live chaſte, by S. Cyprians Judgment ought to marry.

THis queſtion was asked of S. Cyprian, What ſhould be done with thoſe Religious perſons, that could not keep their Chaſtity as they had vowed. He anſwered thus, Thou doſt ask what we do judge of Virgins, which, after they had decreed to live chaſtly, are afterward found in Bed with a Man. Of which thou ſaiſt, that one of them was a Deacon. We do with great ſorrow ſee the great ruine of many Perſons, which cometh by the reaſon of ſuch unlawful and perillous companying together. Wherefore, if they have dedicated themſelves unto Chriſt in Faith, to live purely and chaſtly, then let them ſo remain without any Fable, and ſtrongly and ſtedfaſtly abide the reward of Virginity. But if they will not abide, or elſe cannot abide; then it is better to marry, than to fall into the fire of Concupiſcence: And let them give to them, to the Brethren and Siſters, none occaſion of ſlander; &c. Cyprian in his 11. Epiſtle, Lib. 1.

Aug. de bono conjugali ad Julianum.

CErtain men do affirm, Thoſe men to be Advowterers, that do marry after that they have vowed Chaſtity. But I do affirm, that thoſe Men do grievouſly ſin, the which do ſeparate them, &c. Auguſtine, in his Book, De bono conjugali, ad Julianum.

The Pope and his Biſhops commandeth and counſelleth not to marry, yea, and to burn men for marrying.

CHaſtity of the Body ought to be deſired of us: which thing I do give for a Counſel, and do not command it imperiouſly. For Virginity is a thing which alonely ought to be counſelled, but not to be commanded: it is rather a thing of voluntary will, and not a Precept. Ambroſe 32. Queſt. 1. Cap. Integritas.

A brief Recapitulation out of Dr. Taylors Cauſes aforetouched, for the Reader more evidently to ſee how the Papiſts do againſt their own knowledge in forbidding Prieſt's Marriage.

THe Popes Clergy, forbidding Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to marry, do againſt their Conſcience and Knowledge, as may well be proved by theſe Cauſes here-under following.

1. They know that Matrimony in the Old Teſtament, De jure inſtituticnis, is indifferently permitted to all Men without any exception. Anno 1555.

2. Secondly, they know that in the Old Teſtament, De facto, both Prieſts, Levites, Prophets, Patriarchs, and all others had their Wives.

3. Thirdly, they know that Matrimony was permitted and inſtituted of God for two principal ends; to wit, for Procreation, and avoiding of Sin.

4. Fourthly, they know that in the Old Teſtament God not only inſtituted and permitted Matrimony to be free, but alſo induceth and appointeth Men to marry and take Wives, in theſe words, It is not good for a man to be alone, &c.

5. Fifthly, they know that in the New Teſtament St. Paul permitteth the ſtate of Matrimony free to all men, having not the gift of Continency, and forbiddeth none.

6. Sixthly, they know that in the New Teſtament the ſaid S. Paul not only permitteth, but alſo expreſly willeth and chargeth Men, having not the gift, to marry, ſaying, For avoiding Fornication, let every man have his Wife, &c.

7. Seventhly, they know that in the New Teſtament the ſaid S. Paul not only permitteth and commandeth, but alſo commendeth and praiſeth the ſtate of Matrimony, Heb. 13. Calling it honourable, and the Bed-company to be undefiled, &c.

8. Eighthly, they know that in the New Teſtament Chriſt himſelf not only was not conceived nor born of the Virgin before ſhe was eſpouſed in Matrimony, but alſo that both he and his bleſſed Mother did beatifie and honour the ſtate of Matrimony with their preſence: yea, in the ſame began his firſt Miracle.

9. Ninthly, they know both by the Old Teſtament and New, that Marriage is no impediment to walk in the obedience of Gods Commandment; for both Abraham carried into the Land of Canaan his old, yea and barren Wife, the vertuous woman Sarah, with him: and alſo to Iſaak, Jacob, Moſes, David, and others, their Marriage was no impediment to them to talk with God; neither to other Levites, Biſhops and Prieſts, in the time of both the Old Teſtament, and of the New. Again, neither was it a let to Peter, Philip, and others, both to have their Wives with them, and alſo to ſupply the Office of Apoſtleſhip.

10. Tenthly, they know both by the Old Teſtament and New, that ſinful Fornication and Adultery depriveth Man of Gods Favour and Graces of the Holy Ghoſt, which Graces eſpecially be requiſite in the Men of the Church.

11. Eleventhly, they know in their own ſecret Conſcience, and by experience, that neither they which enjoyn this Vow of Chaſtity, nor they which take it, do obſerve the Vow of Chaſtity. Whereupon riſe inconveniences more than can be expreſſed: but the Lord above knoweth all, beſides the ſecret murders, peradventure, of many a poor Infant, &c.

12. Twelfthly, they know by S. Cyprian, Epiſt. 11. and S. Auguſtine, Lib. de bono Conjugali, ad Julianum, that a Vow is no impediment ſufficient to let Matrimony, or to divorce the ſame.

13. Thirteenthly, they know that Chryſoſtom affirmeth it to be an Hereſie to ſay, that a Biſhop may not have a Wife.

14. Fourteenthly, they know that S. Ambroſe, 32. q. 1. Integritas, will have no commandment, but counſel only to be given touching the obſerving of Virginity.

15. Fifteenthly, they know that before the time of Pope Hildebrand, that is, during the time of 1000 years after Chriſt, marriage was never reſtrained, by any forcible neceſſity of Vow, from Men of the Church.

16. Sixteenthly, they know that S. Paul calleth it the Doctrine of Devils, to forbid Meats and Marriage, which God hath left free, with Thankſgiving, for neceſſity of Man and Woman.

After that D. Taylor thus with great ſpirit and courage had anſwered for himſelf, and ſtoutly rebuked his Adverſaries, for breaking their Oath made before to King Henry and to King Edward his Son, and for betraying the the Realm into the power of the Roman Biſhop; they perceiving that in no caſe he could be ſtirred to their wills and purpoſe, that is, to turn with them from Chriſt to Antichriſt, committed him thereupon to Priſon again, where he endured till the laſt of January.

D. Taylor the fourth time, with M. Bradford, and M. Sanders, brought before Wincheſter and other Biſhops.

Gardiner. Hepton. Boner. Capon. Tonſtall.

UPon which day and year aforeſaid, Doctor Taylor and M. Bradford, and M. Sanders were again called to appear before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Biſhops of Norwich, of London, of Salisbury, and of Dureſm, and there were charged again with Hereſie and Schiſm, and therefore a determinate Anſwer was required; Whether they would ſubmit themſelves to the Roman Biſhop, and abjure their Errors, or elſe they would according to their Laws proceed to their condemnation.

The Conſtancy of theſe men.

When D. Taylor and his Fellows, M. Bradford and M. Sanders heard this, they anſwered ſtoutly and boldly, that they would not depart from the Truth which they had preached in King Edwards days, neither would they ſubmit themſelves to the Romiſh Antichriſt; but they thanked God for ſo great Mercy, that he would call them to be worthy to ſuffer for his Word and Truth.

Sentence of Death given upon Innocents.

When the Biſhops ſaw them ſo boldly, conſtantly, and unmoveably fixed in the Truth, they read the Sentence of Death upon them, which when they had heard, they moſt joyfully gave God thanks, and ſtoutly ſaid unto the Biſhops; We doubt not, but God the Righteous Judge will require our Blood at your hands, and the proudeſt of you all ſhall repent this receiving again of Antichriſt; and your Tyranny that ye now ſhew againſt the flock of Chriſt.

D. Taylor Condemned.

So was D. Taylor now condemned, committed to the Clink, and the Keepers charged ſtraitly to keep him: for ye have now another manner of Charge (quoth the Lord Chancellor) than they had before: therefore look ye, take heed to it.

D. Taylor removed from the Clink to the Counter by Night.

When the Keeper brought him toward the Priſon, the People flocked about to gaze upon him: unto whom he ſaid, God be praiſed (good People) I am come away from them undefiled, and will confirm the Truth with my Blood. So was he beſtowed in the Clink till it was toward Night, and then he was removed to the Counter by the Poultry.

When D. Taylor had lain in the ſaid Counter in the Poultry a Seven-night or thereabouts Priſoner, the fourth day of February, Anno 1555. Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, with others, came to the ſaid Counter to degrade him, bringing with them ſuch Ornaments as do appertain to their Maſſing-Mummery. Now being come, he called for the ſaid D. Taylor to be brought unto him; the Biſhop being then in the Chamber where the Keeper of the Counter and his Wife lay. So D. Taylor was brought down from the Chamber above that, to the ſaid Boner. And at his coming, the Biſhop ſaid, Maſter Doctor, I would you would remember your ſelf, and turn to your Mother holy Church; ſo may you do well enough, and I will ſue for your Pardon. Whereunto M. Taylor anſwered, I would you and your Fellows would turn to Chriſt. As for me, I will not turn to Antichriſt. Well, quoth the Biſhop, I am come to degrade you: wherefore put on theſe Veſtures. No, quoth D. Taylor, I will not. Wilt thou not, ſaid the Biſhop? I ſhall make thee e're I go. Quoth D. Taylor, You ſhall not, by the Grace of God. Then he charged him upon his Obedience to do it, but he would not do it for him.

Boner cometh to the Counter to degrade D. Taylor.

Boner perſwading D. Taylor to return.

D. Taylor refuſeth to turn from Chriſt to Antichriſt.

D. Taylor and Boner ſtriving for putting on the Maſſing-Garments.

So he willed another to put them upon his back, and when he was throughly furniſhed therewith, he ſet his hands to his ſide, walking up and down, and ſaid; How ſay you, my Lord, am not I a goodly Fool? How ſay you, my Maſters? If I were in Cheap, ſhould I not have Boys enow to laugh at theſe apiſh Toys, and toying Tyumpery? So the Biſhop ſcraped his Fingers, Thumbs, and the Crown of his Head, and did the reſt of ſuch like deviliſh Obſervances.

D. Taylor derideth the Popes Maſſing Toys.

At the laſt, when he ſhould have given D. Taylor a ſtroke on the Breaſt with his Croſier-Staff, the Biſhops Chaplain ſaid. My Lord, ſtrike him not, for he will ſure ſtrike again. Yea, by S. Peter will I, quoth D. Taylor. The Cauſe is Chriſts, and I were no good Chriſtian, if I would not fight in my Maſters quarrel. So the Biſhop laid his Curſe upon him, but ſtruck him not. Then D. Taylor ſaid, Though you do curſe me, yet God doth bleſs me. I have the witneſs of my Conſcience, that ye have done me wrong and violence: And yet I pray God, if it be his will, forgive you. But from the Tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and his deteſtable Enormities, good Lord deliver us. And in going up to his Chamber, he ſtill ſaid, God deliver me from you, God deliver me from you. And when he came up, he told M. Bradford (for they both lay in one Chamber) that he had made the Biſhop of London afraid: for, ſaith he laughingly, his Chaplain gave him counſel not to ſtrike me with his Croſier-Staff, for that I would ſtrike again; and, by my Troth, ſaid he, rubbing his hands, I made him believe I would do ſo indeed.

D. Taylor prayeth againſt the Pope and his deteſtable Enormities.

Boner afraid of D. Taylor.

Keepers of Priſon.

The Night after that he was degraded, his Wife and his Son Thomas reſorted unto him, and were by the gentleneſs of the Keepers permitted to ſup with him. For this difference was ever found between the Keepers of the Biſhops Priſons, and the Keepers of the Kings Priſons: That the Biſhops Keepers were ever cruel, blaſphemous, and tyrannous like their Maſters: but the Keepers of the Kings Priſons ſhewed, for the moſt part, as much Favour as they poſſibly might.

So came D. Taylor's Wife, his Son, and John Hull his Servant, to Sup with him: and at their coming in afore-Supper, they kneeled down and prayed, ſaying the Litany.

After Supper walking up and down, he gave God Thanks for his Grace, that had ſo called him, and given him ſtrength to abide by his holy Word: and turning to his Son Thomas, My dear Son (ſaid he) Almighty God bleſs thee, and give thee his Holy Spirit, to be a true Servant of Chriſt, to learn his Word, and conſtantly to ſtand by his Truth all thy life long. And, my Son, ſee that thou fear God always. Flee from all Sin, and wicked living: be vertuous, ſerve God with daily Prayer, and apply thy Book. In any wiſe ſee that thou be obedient to thy Mother, love her and ſerve her: be ruled by her now in thy Youth, and follow her good Counſel in all things. Beware of lewd Company, of Young men that fear not God, but follow their lewd Luſts and vain Appetites. Fly from Whoredom, and hate all filthy living, remembring, that I thy Father do die in the defence of holy Marriage. Another day, when God ſhall bleſs thee, love and cheriſh the Poor people, and count that thy chief Riches is, to be rich in Alms: and when thy Mother is waxed old, forſake her not; but provide for her to thy power, and ſee that ſhe lack nothing: For ſo will God bleſs thee, and give thee long life upon Earth and proſperity: which I pray God to grant thee.

D. Taylor bleſſeth his Son.

D. Taylor's godly Exhortation to his Son, worthy of all Youth to be marked.

Then turning to his Wife, My dear Wife, quoth he, continue ſtedfaſt in the fear and love of God; keep your ſelf undefiled from their Popiſh Idolatries and Superſtitions. I have been unto you a faithful Yoke-fellow, and ſo have you been unto me; for the which I pray God to reward you, and doubt not, dear Wife, but God will reward it.

D. Taylor counſelleth his Wife.

Now the time is come that I ſhall be taken from you, and you diſcharged of the Wedlock-Bond towards me: therefore I will give you my Counſel what I think moſt expedient for you. You are yet a Child-bearing Woman, and therefore it will be moſt convenient for you to marry. For doubtleſs you ſhall never be at a convenient ſtay for your ſelf and our poor Children, nor out of Trouble till you be married. Therefore as ſoon as God will provide it, marry with ſome honeſt faithful Man that feareth God. Doubt you not, God will provide an honeſt Husband for you, and he will be a merciful Father to you and to my Children: whom I pray you bring up in the Fear of God, and in Learning, to the uttermoſt of your power, and keep them from this Romiſh Idolatry. When he had thus ſaid, they with weeping Tears prayed together, and kiſſed one the other: and he gave to his Wife a Book of the Church-Service, ſet out by King Edward, which he in the time of his Impriſonment daily uſed. And unto his Son Thomas he gave a Latin Book containing the notable Sayings of

I Say to my Wife, and to my Children; The Lord gave you unto me, and the Lord hath taken me from you, and you from me: bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. I believe that they are bleſſed which die in the Lord. God careth for Sparrows, and for the Hairs of our heads. I have ever found him more faithful and favourable, than is any Father or Husband. Truſt ye therefore in him by the means of our dear Saviour Chriſts Merits: believe, love, fear and obey him: pray to him, for he hath promiſed to help. Count me not dead, for I ſhall certainly live, and never dye. I go before, and you ſhall follow after, to our long home. D.Taylor led from the Counter by Night toward Hadley.

On the next Morrow, after that D.Taylor had Supped with his Wife in the Counter, as is before expreſſed, which was the fifth day of February, the Sheriff of London with his Officers came to the Counter by Two of the Clock in the Morning, and ſo brought forth D. Taylor, and without any Light led him to the Woolſack, an Inn without Aldgate. Dr. Taylors Wife, ſuſpecting that her Huſband ſhould that Night be carried away, watching all Night in S. Butolphs Church-Porch beſide Algate, having with her two Children, the one named Elizabeth, of 13. years of Age (whom being left without Father or Mother, D.Taylor had brought up of Alms from three years old,) the other named Mary, Doctor Taylors own Daughter.

Now, when the Sheriff and his Company came againſt S. Butolphs Church, Elizabeth cried, ſaying, O my dear Father; Mother, Mother, here is my Father led away. Then cried his Wife, Rowland, Rowland, where art thou? for it was a very dark Morning, that the one could not ſee the other. D. Taylor anſwered, Dear Wife, I am here, and ſtayed. The Sheriffs Men would have led him forth; but the Sheriff ſaid, Stay a little Maſters, I pray you, and let him ſpeak to his Wife, and ſo they ſtayed. Anno 1555.

The laſt meeting and leave-taking with his Wife and Children.

This Sheriff was M. Chefter.

Then came ſhe to him, and he took his Daughter Mary in his Arms: and he, his Wife and Elizabeth kneeled down and ſaid the Lords Prayer. At which ſight the Sheriff wept apace, and ſo did divers others of the Company. After they had prayed, he roſe up and kiſſed his Wife, and ſhook her by the hand, and ſaid, Farewel my dear Wife, be of good comfort, for I am quiet in my Conſcience. God ſhall ſtir up a Father for my Children. And then he kiſſed his Daughter Mary, and ſaid, God bleſs thee and make thee his Servant: and kiſſing Elizabeth, he ſaid, God bleſs thee. I pray you all ſtand ſtrong and ſtedfaſt unto Chriſt and his Word, and keep you from Idolatry. Then ſaid his Wife, God be with thee, dear Rowland, I will with Gods grace meet thee at Hadley.

Dr. Taylor brought to the Sign of the Woolſack.

And ſo was he led forth to the Woolſack, and his Wife followed him. As ſoon as they came to the Woolſack, he was put into a Chamber, wherein he was kept with four Yeomen of the Guard and the Sheriffs Men. D. Taylor, as ſoon as he was come into the Chamber, fell down on his Knees and gave himſelf wholly to Prayer. The Sheriff then, ſeeing D. Taylors Wife there, would in no caſe grant her to ſpeak any more with her Husband, but gently deſired her to go to his Houſe and take it as her own, and promiſed her he ſhould lack nothing, and ſent two Officers to conduct her thither. Notwithſtanding ſhe deſired to go to her Mothers, whither the Officers led her, and charged her Mother to keep her there till they came again.

The Sheriffs gentleneſs ſhewed to the Woman.

Thus remained D.Taylor in the Woolſack, kept by the Sheriff and his Company, till 11. of the Clock. At which time the Sheriff of Eſſex was ready to receive: and ſo they ſet him on Horſeback within the Inn, the Gates being ſhut.

At the coming out of the Gates, John Hull, before ſpoken of, ſtood at the Rails with Thomas, D.Taylors Son. When D.Taylor ſaw them, he called them, ſaying, Come hither my Son Thomas. And John Hull lifted the Child up, and ſet him on the Horſe before his Father: and D.Taylor put off his Hat, and ſaid to the People that ſtood there looking on him, Good People this is mine own Son, begotten of my body in lawful Matrimony; And God be bleſſed for lawful Matrimony. Then lifted he up his eyes towards Heaven and prayed for his Son, laid his Hat upon the Childs Head and bleſſed him; and ſo delivered the Child to John Hull, whom he took by the hand and ſaid, Farewel John Hull, the faithfulleſt Servant that ever man had. And ſo they rode forth, the Sheriff of Eſſex, with four Yeomen of the Guard, and the Sheriffs Men leading him.

D.Taylor taketh his leave of his Son Thomas, and J.Hull.

A good Teſtimony for all Servants to mark.

When they were come almoſt at Burntwood, one Arthur Fayſie, a Man of Hadley, who before time had been D.Taylor's Servant, met with them, and he, ſuppoſing him to have been at liberty, ſaid, Maſter Doctor, I am glad to ſee you again at liberty, and came to him and took him by the hand. Soft Sir, quoth the Sheriff, he is a Priſoner; what haſt thou to do with him? I cry you mercy, ſaid Arthur, I knew not ſo much, and I thought it no offence to talk to a true Man. The Sheriff was very angry with this, and threatned to carry Arthur with him to Priſon; notwithſtanding, he bade him get quickly away, and ſo they rode forth to Burntwood: where they cauſed to be made for D.Taylor a cloſe Hood, with two holes for his Eyes to look out at, and a ſlit for his Mouth to breath at. This they did, that no man ſhould know him, nor he ſpeak to any man. Which practice they uſed alſo with others. Their own Conſciences told them, that they led innocent Lambs to the ſlaughter. Wherefore they feared, leſt if the People ſhould have heard them ſpeak, or have ſeen them, they might have been much more more ſtrengthned by their godly Exhortations, to ſtand ſtedfaſt in Gods Word, and to flie the Superſtitions and Idolatries of the Papacy.

D. Taylor is joyful in his way.

All the way D. Taylor was joyful and merry, as one that accounted himſelf going to a moſt pleaſant banquet or bridal. He ſpake many notable things to the Sheriff and Yeomen of the Guard that conducted him, and often moved them to weep through his much earneſt calling upon them to repent, and to amend their evil and wicked living. Oftentimes alſo he cauſed them to wonder and rejoyce, to ſee him ſo conſtant and ſtedfaſt, void of all fear, joyful in heart, and glad to dye. Of theſe Yeomen of the Guard, three uſed D. Taylor friendly, but the fourth (whoſe name was Homes) uſed him very homely, unkindly, and churliſhly.

Homes a notorious Adverſary to D. Taylor.

The Sheriff of Eſſex laboureth D. Taylor to return to Papiſm.

At Chelmsford met them the Sheriff of Suffolk, there to receive him, and to carry him forth into Suffolk. And being at ſupper, the Sheriff of Eſſex very earneſtly laboured him to return to the Popiſh Religion, thinking with fair words to perſwade him, and ſaid, Good Maſter Doctor, we are right ſorry for you, conſidering what the loſs is of ſuch a one as ye might be, if ye would: God hath given you great Learning and Wiſdom, wherefore ye have been in great favour and reputation in times paſt with the Councel and Higheſt of this Realm. Beſides this, ye are a man of goodly perſonage, in your beſt ſtrength, and by nature like to live many years, and without doubt, ye ſhould in time to come be in as good reputation as ever ye were, or rather better. For ye are well beloved of all men, as well for your vertues as for your learning: and me think it were great pity you ſhould caſt away your ſelf willingly, and ſo come to ſuch a painful and ſhameful death. Ye ſhould do much better to revoke your Opinions, and return to the Catholick Univerſal Church of Rome, acknowledge the Popes Holineſs to be the Supream Head of the Church, and reconcile your ſelf to him. You may do well yet, if you will: doubt ye not but ye ſhall find favour at the Queens hands, I and all theſe your friends will be ſuters for your Pardon: which no doubt, ye ſhall obtain. this Counſel I give you, good M. Doctor, of a good Heart, and Good-will toward you: and thereupon I drink to you. In like manner ſaid all the Yeomen of the Guard: upon that condition, M. Doctor, we will all drink to you.

D. Taylor maketh a jeſt of Death, with a meet anſwer for ſuch Doctors and Counſellors.

When they had all drank to him, and the Cup was come to him, he ſtayed a little, as one ſtudying what anſwer he might give. At the laſt thus he anſwered and ſaid, M. Sheriff, and my Maſters all, I heartily thank you for your good will, I have hearkned to your words, and marked well your Counſels. And to be plain with you, I do perceive that I have been deceived my ſelf, and am like to deceive a great many of Hadley of their expectation. With that word they all rejoyced. Yea, good Maſter Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, Gods Bleſſing on your heart: hold you there ſtill. It is the comfortableſt word that we heard you ſpeak yet. What? ſhould ye caſt away your ſelf in vain? Play a wiſe mans part, and I dare warrant it, ye ſhall find favour. Thus they rejoyced very much at the word, and were very merry.

At the laſt, good Mr. Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, what meant ye by this, that ye ſay ye think ye have been deceived your ſelf, and think ye ſhall deceive many one in Hadley? Would ye know my meaning plainly, quoth he? Yea, quoth the Sheriff, good Mr. Doctor tell it us plainly.

Then ſaid Doctor Taylor, I will tell you how I have been deceived, and as I think, I ſhall deceive a great many. I am, as you ſee, a man that hath a very great Carcaſs, which I thought ſhould have been buried in Hadley Church-yard, if I had died in my Bed, as I well hoped I ſhould have done; but herein I ſee I was deceived: and there are a great number of worms in Hadley Church-yard, which ſhould have had jolly feeding upon this Carrion, which they have looked for many a day. But now I know we be deceived, both I and they, for this Carcaſs muſt be burnt to aſhes, and ſo ſhall they loſe their bait and feeding, that they looked to have had of it.

Apophthegma of D. Taylor.

When the Sheriff and his Company heard him ſay ſo, they were amazed and looked one on another, marvelling at the mans conſtant mind, that thus without all fear made but a jeſt at the cruel Torment, and death now at hand prepared for him. Thus was their expectation clean diſappointed. And in this appeareth what was his meditation in his chiefeſt Wealth and Proſperity; namely, that he ſhould ſhortly dye, and feed worms in his grave: which meditation if all our Biſhops, and Spiritual men had uſed, they had not for a little Worldly Glory forſaken the Word of God and Truth, which they in King Edwards days had Preached and ſet forth, nor yet, to maintain the Biſhop of Romes Authority, have committed ſo many to the fire as they did.

A good meditation.

But let us return to Doctor Taylor, who at Chelmsford was delivered to the Sheriff of Suffolk, and by him conducted to Hadley, where he ſuffered. When they were come to Lanham, the Sheriff ſtayed there two days; and thither came to him a great number of Gentlemen and Juſtices upon great horſes, which all were appointed to aid the Sheriff. Theſe Gentlemen laboured Doctor Taylor very ſore to reduce him to the Romiſh Religion, promiſing him his Pardon, which, ſaid they, we have here for you. They promiſed him great promotions, yea a Biſhoprick if he would take it: but all their labour and flattering words were in vain. For he had not built his houſe upon the ſand in peril of falling at every puff of wind, but upon the ſure and unmovable Rock, Chriſt. Wherefore he abode conſtant and unmovable unto the end.

Lanham is a Town in Suffolk.

After two days, the Sheriff and his Company led D. Taylor towards Hadley, and coming within two miles of Hadley, he deſired to light off his horſe to make water: which done, he leapt, and ſet a friſk or twain, as men commonly do in dauncing. Why Maſter Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, how do you now? He anſwered: Well, God be praiſed, good Maſter Sheriff. Never better: for now I know I am almoſt at home. I lack not paſt two ſtiles to go over, and I am even at my Fathers Houſe. But Maſter Sheriff, ſaid he, ſhall we not go thorow Hadley? Yes, ſaid the Sheriff, you ſhall go thorow Hadley. Then ſaid he, O good Lord, I thank thee, I ſhall yet once ere I dye ſee my Flock, whom thou Lord knoweſt I have moſt heartily loved, and truly taught. Good Lord bleſs them, and keep them ſtedfaſt in thy Word and Truth.

D. Taylor rejoyceth that he is ſo nigh home.

Another Apothegma of D. Taylor.

D. Taylor deſirous to ſee his Flock.

When they were now come to Hadley, and came riding over the Bridge, at the Bridge foot waited a poor man with five ſmall Children: who when he ſaw Doctor Taylor, he and his Children fell down upon their knees, and held up their hands, and cried with a loud Voice, and ſaid, O dear Father and good Shepheard, Doctor Taylor, God help and ſuccour thee, as thou haſt many a time ſuccoured me and my poor Children. Such witneſs had the Servant of God of his vertuous and Charitable Alms given in his Life-time. For God would now the poor ſhould teſtifie of his good deeds to his ſingular comfort, to the example of others, and Confuſion of his Perſecutors and Tyrannous Adverſaries. For the Sheriff and other that led him to death, were wonderfully aſtonied at this: and the Sheriff ſore rebuked the poor man for ſo crying. The ſtreets of Hadley were beſet on both ſides the way with Men and Women of the Town and Countrey, who waited to ſee him: whom when they beheld ſo led to Death, with weeping Eyes and lamentable Voices they cried, ſaying one to another, Ah good Lord! there goeth our good Shepheard from us, that ſo faithfully hath taught us, ſo Fatherly hath cared for us, and ſo godly hath governed us; O Merciful God! what ſhall we poor ſcattered Lambs do? What ſhall come of this moſt Wicked World, Good Lord ſtrengthen him, and comfort him: with ſuch other moſt lamentable and piteous Voices. Wherefore the People were ſore rebuked by the Sheriff and Catchpoles his men, that led him. And D. Taylor evermore ſaid to the people; I have Preached to you Gods Word and Truth, and am come this day to Seal it with my Blood.

A poor man with five Children comforted D. Taylor.

The People lament Doctor Taylor.

D. Taylor confeſſeth the Truth, and confirmeth the ſame with his Blood.

Coming againſt the Almſhouſes, which he well knew, he caſt to the poor People Mony, which remained of that good People had given him in time of his Impriſonment. As for his Living, they took it from him at his firſt going to Priſon, ſo that he was ſuſtained all the time of his Impriſonment by the Charitable Alms of good People that viſited him.

Therefore the Money that now remained he put in a glove ready for the ſame purpoſe, and (as is ſaid) gave it to the poor Almeſmen ſtanding at their doors to ſee him.

D. Taylor lived of Alms, and gave Alms.

The Martyrdome of Doctor Taylor, burned at Hadley for the Testimony of the Gospell. February 9. Anno 1555.

And coming to the laſt of the Almſhouſes, and not ſeeing the poor that there dwelt, ready at their doors, as the other were, he asked: Is the blind man and blind woman, that dwelt here, alive? It was anſwered, Yea, they are there within. Then threw he glove and all in at the window, and ſo rode forth.

Note this cuſtom.

Thus this good Father and Provider for the poor now took his leave of thoſe, for whom all his Life he had a ſingular care and ſtudy. For this was his cuſtom, once in a fortnight at the leaſt, to call upon Sir Anthony Doyl, and others the rich Cloth-makers, to go with him to the Almſhouſes, and there to ſee how the poor lived; what they lacked in meat, drink, clothing, bedding, or any other neceſſaries. The like did he alſo to other poor men that had many Children, or were ſick. Then would he exhort and comfort them, and where he found cauſe, rebuke the unruly, and what they lacked, that gave he after his power: and what he was not able, he cauſed the rich and wealthy men to miniſter unto them. Thus ſhewed he himſelf in all things an example to his Flock, worthy to be followed; and taught by his deed, what a great treaſure Alms is to all ſuch as cheerfully for Chriſts ſake do it.

Aldham Common.

At the laſt, coming to Aldham Common, the place aſſigned where he ſhould ſuffer, and ſeeing a great multitude of people gathered thither, he asked, What place is this, and what meaneth it that ſo much people are gathered hither? It was anſwered, It is Aldham Common, the place where you muſt ſuffer: and the people are come to look upon you. Then ſaid he, Thanked be God, I am even at home, and ſo light from his horſe, and with both his hands rent the hood from his Head.

D. Taylor is come home.

B. Boners coſt and liberality upon D. Taylor.

Now was his head notted evil favouredly, and clipped much like as a man would clip a fools head; which coſt the good Biſhop Boner had beſtowed upon him, when he degraded him. But when the people ſaw his reverend and ancient face, with a long white Beard, they burſt out with weeping tears, and cried, ſaying, God ſave thee, good D. Taylor, Jeſus Chriſt ſtrengthen thee, and help thee, The Holy Ghoſt comfort thee; with ſuch other like godly wiſhes. Then would he have ſpoken to the people, but the Yeomen of the Guard were ſo buſie about him, that as ſoon as he opened his mouth, one or other thruſt a Tipſtaff into his mouth, and would in no wiſe permit him to ſpeak.

The people wiſh God to help him.

D. Taylor could not be ſuffered to ſpeak to the people.

Then deſired he Licence of the Sheriff to ſpeak; but the Sheriff denied it to him, and bad him remember his promiſe to the Counſel.

Well, quoth Doctor Taylor, promiſe muſt be kept. What this promiſe was, it is unknown: but the Common fame was, that after he and others were condemned, the Counſel ſent for them, and threatned them they would cut their Tongues out of their Heads, except they would promiſe, that at their deaths they would keep ſilence, and not ſpeak to the people. Wherefore they deſirous to have the uſe of their Tongues, to call upon God as long as they might live, promiſed ſileace. For the Papiſts feared much, leſt this mutation of Religion, from Truth to Lies, from Chriſts Ordinances to the Popiſh Traditions, ſhould not ſo quietly have been received as it was, eſpecially this burning of the Preachers: but they, meaſuring others minds by their own, feared leſt any Tumult or Uprore might have been ſtirred, the people having ſo juſt a cauſe not to be contented with their doings, or elſe (that they moſt feared) the people ſhould more have been confirmed by their godly Exhortations to ſtand ſtedfaſt againſt their vain Popiſh Doctrine and Idolatry. But thanks be to God, which gave to his Witneſſes Faith and Patience, with ſtout and manly hearts to diſpiſe all Torments: neither was there ſo much as any one man that once ſhewed any ſign of diſobedience towards the Magiſtrates. They ſhed their Bloods gladly in the defence of the Truth, ſo leaving example unto all men of true and perfect Obedience: which is to obey God more than men, and if need require it, to ſhed their own Blood rather than to depart from Gods truth.

The Goſpellers are not ſeditious as the Papiſts commonly be.

Doctor Taylor perceiving that he could not be ſuffered to ſpake, ſat down, and ſeeing one named Soyce, he called him, and ſaid, Soyce, I pray thee come and pull off my Boots and take them for thy labour. Thou haſt long looked for them, now take them. Then roſe he up, and put off his Clothes unto his ſhirt, and gave them away. Which done, he ſaid with a loud voice, Good people, I have taught you nothing but Gods Holy Word, and thoſe Leſſons that I have taken out of Gods Bleſſed Book, the Holy Bible: and I am come hither this day to ſeal it with my Blood. With that Word, Homes, Yeoman of the Guard aforeſaid, who had uſed Doctor Taylor very cruelly all the way, gave him a great ſtroke upon the head with a waſter, and ſaid, Is that the keeping of thy promiſe, thou Heretick? Then he, ſeeing they would not permit him to ſpeak, kneeled down and prayed, and a poor woman that was among the people ſtepped in, and prayed with him: but her they thruſt away, and threatned to tread her her down with Hoes: notwithſtanding ſhe would not remove, but abode and prayed with him. When he had prayed, he went to the Stake, and kiſſed it, and ſet himſelf into a Pitch-barrel, which they had ſet for him to ſtand in, and ſo ſtood with his back upright againſt the Stake, with his Hands folded together, and his Eyes toward Heaven, and ſo he continually prayed.

Soyce pulleth of his Boots.

Richard Donningham.

Then they bound him with Chains, and the Sheriff called one Richard Donningham a Butcher, and commanded him to ſet up Fagots: But he refuſed to do it, and ſaid, I am lame Sir, and not able to lift a Fagot. The Sheriff threatned to ſend him to Priſon; notwithſtanding he would not do it.

The Tormentors. Warwick a cruel Tormentor. This Kyng was alſo one of them which went with his Halberd to bring them to death which were burnt at Bury.

Then appointed he one Mulleine of Carſey, a man for his Vertues fit to be a Hangman, and Soyce a very Drunkard, and Warwick, who, in the Commotion time in King Edwards days, loſt one of his Ears for his Seditious talk, amongſt whom alſo was one Robert King a deviſer of Enterludes, who albeit was there preſent, and had doing there with the Gun-powder; what he meant and did therein (he himſelf ſaith he did it for the beſt, and for quick diſpatch) the Lord knoweth, which ſhall judge all: More of this I have not to ſay.

These four were appointed to ſet up the Fagots, and to make the Fire, which they moſt diligently did: and this Warwick cruelly caſt a Fagot at him, which light upon his head, and brake his face, that the blood ran down his Viſage. Then ſaid Dr. Taylor, O Friend, I have harm enough, what needed that?

Dr. Taylor is patient.

Sir John Shelton.

Furthermore, Sir John Shelton there ſtanding by, as Dr. Taylor was ſpeaking, and ſaying the Pſalm Miſerere in Engliſh, ſtruck him on the Lips; Ye Knave, ſaid he, ſpeak Latin, I will make thee. At the laſt they ſet to fire; and Dr. Taylor, holding up both his hands, called upon God, and ſaid, Merciful Father of Heaven, for Jeſus Chriſt my Saviours ſake, receive my Soul into thy hands. So ſtood he ſtill without either crying or moving, with his hands folded together, till Soyce with a Halberd ſtruck him on the head that the brains fell out, and the dead Corps fell down into the Fire.

Dr. Taylors laſt words.

Soyce ſtriketh him down with an Halberd.

Thus rendred the Man of God his bleſſed Soul into the hands of his merciful Father, and to his moſt dear and certain Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whom he moſt intirely loved, faithfully and earneſtly preached, obediently followed in living, and conſtantly glorified in death.

Dr. Taylor careleſs of his death.

They that were preſent and familiarly converſant with this Doctor Taylor, reported of him, that they never did ſee in him any fear of death, but eſpecially and above all the reſt, which beſides him ſuffered at the ſame time, always ſhewed himſelf merry and chearful, in time of his Impriſonment, as well before his Condemnation, as after; he kept one Countenance and like Behaviour. Whereunto he was the rather confirmed by the Company and Preſence of Mr. John Bradford, who then was in Priſon and Chamber with him.

The ſame Morning, when he was called up by the Sheriff to go to his burning (about three of the Clock in the Morning) being ſuddenly awaked out of his ſound ſleep, he ſate up in his Bed, and putting on his Shirt, had theſe words, ſpeaking ſomewhat thick after his accuſtomed manner, Ah horſon Thieves, ah horſon Thieves, rob God of his honour, rob God of his honour? Afterward being riſen and tying his Points, he caſt his Arms about a Balk which was in the Chamber between Mr. Bradfords Bed and his: and there hanging by the hands, ſaid to Mr. Bradford; O Mr. Bradford, quoth he, what a notable ſway ſhould I give if I were hanged? meaning for that he was a corpulent and big man. Theſe things I thought good here to note, to ſet forth and declare to thoſe that ſhall read this Hiſtory, what a notable and ſingular gift of ſpirit and courage God had given to this godly and bleſſed Martyr.

An example of ſingular Courage in Dr. Taylor.

At what time Dr. Taylor was deprived of his Benefice of Hadley, there was one called Sir Robert Bracher, a faſe pretended Proteſtant in King Edwards days, and afterward a deadly Enemy to the ſame Religion; who was alſo one of them that ſo unmercifully thruſt Dr. Taylors Wife and Children out of the doors, as ſhe her ſelf yet can teſtifie: and notwithſtanding the ſame now ſince became a Proteſtant again.

This Sir Robert Bracher aforeſaid, coming to Hadley to the Burial of a certain Friend of his, and Gods great Enemy, one Walter Clark; albeit he came ſomwhat too late to the Market (as he ſaid) yet deſirous to utter ſuch Popiſh pelf and pack-ware as he brought with him, he opened there his Baggage of Peſtilent Doctrine, preaching in the ſame Town of Hadley againſt Juſtification by Faith, of the Corporal Preſence, of Praying for the Dead, and Auricular Confeſſion. Whereof Dr. Taylor having underſtanding by Letters, writeth again to them of Hadley, directing his Letter to his Wife in confutation of the ſaid Popiſh poyſoned Sermon; the Copy of which Letter we thought not unworthy here in the end of this Story to be annexed; as under followeth.

Sir Robert Brachers coming to Hedley.

A Popiſh Sermon of Sir Robert Bracher.

A Letter of Dr. Taylor of Hadley, written to his Wife.

DEar Wife, I pray God be ever with us through Chriſt our only Mediator, Amen.

This Cap was a round Cap ſent by Miles Coverdale to Dr. Taylor by his Wife.

I thank you for my Cap; I am ſomewhat proud of it; for it is one ſtep from the Clergy in theſe days. I thank God, my heart is clean divided from their Proceedings: for I know that no man can ſerve two Maſters, ſpecially if they agree no better than Chriſt and Antichriſt do. I am glad that Hadley can skill of ſuch packing ware as was brought thither the firſt day of May laſt paſt. Chriſts Sheep can diſcern Chriſts voice from the voice of Strangers, Thieves, or Hirelings. The Pack-bringer was ſorry that he came too late to the Funeral Market of his faithful Friend. But here I will leave them both to Gods Judgment, and ſomthing touch the matter whereof the Packer made mention on his opening day. At the firſt he called the Scripture (as I hear) full of dark Sentences, but indeed it is called of David, A Candle to our feet, and a Light to our paths. Our Saviour Chriſt calleth his Word, the Light which evil doers do flee from and hate, leſt their deeds ſhould be reproved thereby. S. Paul would have us to walk as Children of Light, and in any wiſe not to continue in Ignorance or Darkneſs. But all we in the World pertain to two Princes, either to the Father of Light and Truth, or elſe to the Prince of Darkneſs and Lies.

This Packer was Sir Rob. Bracher preaching Popiſh Doctrine at Hadley.

The Scripture falſly accuſed of the Catholicks to be obſcure darkneſs.

In theſe days Preachers declare evidently of whom they are ſent, and with what ſpirit they ſpeak, and to what Prince they belong. For they cry out againſt Gods Lights, Sun, Moon, Stars, Torches, Lamps, Lanthorns, Creſſets, and Candles in Gods Book the Bible, provided of Gods great goodneſs and mercy to avoid all foul darkneſs, clouds and myſts, or dangerous doubtful ways in this our Journey to our Heavenly Father, Long-home, Manſion-houſes, and dearly purchaſed Heritage. Eſay, Gods faithful Meſſenger, ſaith, Wo be unto them that call ſweet ſowre, good evil, and light darkneſs. Therefore cometh my People into Captivity, becauſe they have no underſtanding. Our Saviour Chriſt pronounceth Error and Hereſies to remain among the People, ſo long as ignorance of the Scriptures remaineth. And hereby it appeareth to all good Conſciences, what they mean, which defame or accuſe Gods bleſſed Word being full of light, as though it were full of darkneſs. Theſe Owls would have all day-lights ſcraped out of Books, Hearts, and Churches. O Lord turn their hearts and tongues; bow them from the way of darkneſs, leſt they go to the Prince of Darkneſs, and be caſt into the Pit of utter darkneſs, where is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

The Popes Pack-ware. Juſtification by Works, Corporal Preſence, Prayers for Souls, Auricular Confeſſion.

Now touching the Packs of Wooll, and the Packs of Cloth, I fear they were as all other Wares be, tranſubſtantiate into ſtocks, even his very fineſt packing ſtuff againſt only Faith juſtifying, and for the Corporal Preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, for praying for Souls departed, and for Auricular Confeſſion. Abrahams Juſtification by Faith, by Grace, by Promiſe, and not by Works, is plainly ſet forth both in the Epiſtle to the Romans, c. 4. and to the Galath. cap. 3. and Abrahams works of Obedience, in offering up his Son ſo long after his Juſtification, muſt needs be taken as a Fruit of a good Tree juſtifying before men, and not of juſtification before God; for then had man to glory in, then did Chriſt dye in vain.

Againſt the Corporal Preſence. Chriſts Body given in the Supper Spiritually, upon the Croſs Corporally.

And whereas Chap. 6. of John was alledged, to prove that Chriſt did give his Body Corporally in his Supper, even as he had promiſed in the ſaid Chapter, it is moſt untrue. For only he gave his Body Sacramentally, Spiritually, and effectually in his ſupper to the Faithful Apoſtles, and corporally he gave it in a Bloody Sacrifice for the Life of the World upon the Croſs once for all. There in his own Perſon, in his own Natural Body he bare all our ſins. By whoſe ſtripes we are healed, as S. Peter proceedeth, 1 Pet. 2. and Eſay 53. Indeed receiving Chriſts Sacrament accordingly as it was inſtituted, we receive Chriſts Body and Chriſts Blood, even as I ſaid before the Apoſtles did.

Againſt the Maſs. The Maſs the Popes youngeſt Daughter. Deſcription of the Popes Kingdom.

But the Popiſh Maſs is another matter. The Maſs as it is now, is but one of Antichriſts youngeſt daughters, in the which the Devil is rather preſent and received, than our Saviour, the Second Perſon in Trinity, God and Man. O Lord God Heavenly Father, for Chriſts ſake, we beſeech thee to turn again England to the right way it was in in K. Edwards time, from this Babylonical, Jewiſh, ſpiritual whoredom, conſpiracy, tyranny, deteſtable enormities, Falſe Doctrine, Hereſie, hardneſs of Heart, and contempt of thy Word and Commandments, from this evident and open Idolatry, Sacriledge, Symonie, Blaſphemy, Superſtition, Hypocriſie, Tranſubſtantiate Angel of Light, and day-Devil, Kingdom of Lies, foul vain Schiſms, Sects, Sedition, Apoſtaſie, gay ſweet Poyſon, honied and ſugered viperous venome, wily wolfiſhneſs, Satanical ſubtility, and abomination in the ſight of God and all ſuch as put on the true Spectacles of Holy Scripture. I am the more plain now in this matter, becauſe I fear greatly, that many will be too much ready to go from Chriſt to Antichriſt, from the Bible, Gods true Service and Religion, to Latine lying Legends, Portuities, Maſs Books, and Superſtition. They ſay their Church cannot err in any point, when indeed they be not of Gods Church, and therefore they can do nothing but err, even as they do almoſt in all Caſes of true Faith.

Chryſoſt. Popiſhly applied.

But to come again to the Packer rather than Preacher, he bringeth S. Chryſoſtom, writing Ad populum Antiochenum, where he maketh a compariſon between Chriſts Fleſh and Elias Cloak caſt down to Elizeus, when Elias was taken up in the fiery Chariot; at length he ſaith, that Chriſt, aſcending up to Heaven, took his Fleſh with him, and alſo left his Fleſh behind him in Earth.

The meaning of Chryſoſtom ſightly expounded concerning Elias Cloak. Of this memorial Cloak read before in D. Ridleys diſputations.

The meaning of it is, he did aſcend with his Fleſh, and left a memorial Cloak of the ſame Body and Fleſh, which he calleth his Fleſh, as he in the Sacramental Phraſe calleth Bread his Body, becauſe it repreſenteth his Body: & as in like manner of Sacramental ſpeech, a Lamb was called the Paſſover, the Circumciſion, Gods Covenant. He took up his Fleſh corporally, and left his Fleſh in Myſtery and Sacrament Spiritually. Or it may be ſaid, that he left his Fleſh upon Earth, that is, his Myſtical Body, his Faithful People; whom S. Paul calleth the Members of his Body, of his Fleſh, of his Bones, Epheſ. 5.

The place of Geneſis 49.

In the 49. Chapter of Geneſis, there is no word of Chriſts Sacrament, but there is a prophecy of Chriſts Paſſion wherein his ſole was bound, that is, his Body. And where he ſpeaketh there of Grapes and Wine, it is as that is ſpoken of Chriſt in another place, where he ſaith, Ergo ſolus torcular calcavi, I alone did tread the Wine-preſs, meaning thereby, that Chriſt alone ſuffered painful Paſſion for the Remiſſion of Sins, and for the conſolation of his Faithful Souldiers.

Chriſts Natural Body cannot be divided.

It is not true that the Packer ſaid, that Chriſts infinite power may make his Body to be in a thouſand places at once, as a Loaf to be in a thouſand Bellies: for then may Chriſt divide the parts of his Body, as a Loaf is divided, and ſo conſumed, and then might Scripture be falſe, appointing Chriſts Body to be but in one place. Acts 3. Phil. 3. Heb. 3. The Articles of our Faith tell us ſufficiently where Chriſts Body is.

Chriſts Body was never in two places at once.

It was never in two places at once, neither ever ſhall be, neither ever can be corporally and naturally, neither ever was, is, can, or ſhall be eaten ſo with any corporal Mouths, as the Capernaites and the Papiſts moſt erroneouſly and heretically do judge. If our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt hath no other Body natural than is made of the Subſtance of Bread, and is in a thouſand places at once, as I have often ſaid in Hadley, we are not yet redeemed, neither ſhall our Bodies riſe again, and be made like unto his Glorious Body. We are ſure that our Saviour Chriſts Body is made of none other ſubſtance than of his Mother the Bleſſed Virgin Maries ſubſtance. We are ſure that he taketh not the nature of Angels, much leſs of Bread. Only he taketh on him the ſeed of Abraham, Heb. 2. In all things like unto us, Sin only except.

Heb. 2.

And this is a comfortable Doctrine to us Chriſtians, believing ſtedfaſtly, as the true Catholick Faith is, that Chriſt hath but two Natures, perfect God, and perfect Man. Upon this Rock Chriſts Church is builded, and the Gates of Hell ſhall never prevail againſt it, Matth. 16.

Anno 1555.

Auricular confeſſion. Praying for the dead.

I ſpeak nothing now of Auricular Confeſſion, and praying for Souls departed, becauſe I do not hear what Authors the packer brought in for this purpoſe. Sure I am that he can bring no Authentical and Canonical Warrant for ſuch his packware. He may ſay what he will of Hebriciaus and Grecians, and Fleſh under forms, and not above forms, or above the board. He may conjure and conveigh, paſs and repaſs, even what he will in ſuch Clouds and Myſts. He reproved the Scriptures as full of darkneſs, and yet is full of darkneſs himſelf. He did wittily, to bring proofs out of Jewry, Turkey, and other ſtrange places, for his round white Cake, for that ſuch his pedlary pelf-pack is contrary to the plain ſimplicity of Chriſts Supper. He glanced at Prieſts marriage. He might againſt that have brought as ancient a Doctor as any be alledged out of Hebrew, for his Maſs and Wafer Cake, that is Dr. Divel, 1 Tim. 4.

He meaneth by the place 1 Tim. 4. Where S. Paul ſpeaketh of the Doctrine of Devils, &c.

I marvel that he did not confute and confound S. Paul for the ſentences written above the Altar, of the which he made mention in the Pulpit. For he and his Fellows of Oxford be ſo profound, ſo excellent, ſo glorious, and Triumphant Clerks, that they can eaſily prove a man an Aſs, and writers in the Bible ignorant, ſimple, full of Errors, full of Hereſies, and beggarly Fools. Yet they will be called Catholicks, Faithfull and true Chriſtian People, Defenders of the Holy Mother the Church: but truly they take part with the Prince of darkneſs, with Antichriſt, with Jezabel, Apoc. 2. They will not be called Papiſts, Phariſees, Jews, Turks, Hereticks, and ſo forth: but whatſoever they will be called, Gods Religion had never more evident Adverſaries, and that in all the chief points of it; no not then, when our Saviour Chriſt whipt ſuch Merchants out of the Temple, calling them a company of Thieves, Mat. 21. God give them Grace to repent. God be thanked that the Nobility ſomething of late hath ſpied and ſtopped their Tyranny. O unhappy England! O more ungrateful People! ſooner bewitched than the fooliſh Galathians. We have now no excuſe.

Engliſh People likened to the Galathians

We have undoubtedly ſeen the true trace of the Prophetical, Apoſtolical, primitive Catholick Church. We are warned to beware, leſt we be led out of that way, ſociety, and Rule of Religion. Now we ſhall ſhew what Country Men we be, whether ſpiritual and Heavenly, or carnal and Worldly. We had as true knowledge as ever was in any Country, or at any time, ſince the beginning of the World, God be praiſed therefore. If Hadley, being ſo many years perſwaded in ſuch Truth, will now willingly and wittingly forſake the ſame, and defile it ſelf with the Cake-God, Idolatry, and other Antichriſtianity thereunto belonging, let it ſurely look for many and wonderful plagues of God ſhortly. Though another have the Benefice, yet as God knoweth, I cannot but be careful for my dear Hadley. And therefore as I could not but ſpeak, after the firſt abominable Maſs begun there, I being preſent no more, I cannot but write now being abſent, hearing of the wicked prophanation of my late Pulpit by ſuch a wily wolf. Gods love, mercy, goodneſs and favour hath been unſpeakable, in teaching us the right way of Salvation and Juſtification, let us all have ſome zeal, ſome care how to ſerve him according to his good will written. The God of Love and peace be ever in Hadley, through Chriſt our only Advocate. Amen.

The proceedings of the Pope-Catholicks in maintaining their Religion.

After that Steven Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, had got the Laws, and the ſecular Arm on his ſide, as ye have heard, with full Power and Authority to reign and rule as he liſted, and had brought theſe godly Biſhops and reverend Preachers aforeſaid under foot, namely, the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Ridley Biſhop of London, Maſter Latimer, Mr. Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Sanders, Doctor Taylor, and Maſter Bradford, all which he had now preſently condemned, and ſome alſo burned; he ſuppoſed now all had been cock-ſure, and that Chriſt had been conquered for ever, ſo that the People, being terrified with example of theſe great Learned men condemned, never would, nor durſt once rout againſt their violent Religion: not much unlike in this behalf, to the manner of the Turks, who when they cannot maintain their Sect by good Learning and Truth of Gods Word, think by violence of Sword to force whom they can to their Belief; and that done, afterward make Laws, no man under pain of Hereſie to diſpute, or once to call in queſtion any of their Proceedings. Even ſo, Steven Gardiner and his Fellows, when they ſee they cannot prevail by trial of Gods Word, and Diſcourſe of Learning, neither are diſpoſed ſimply to ſeek for Truth where it is to be found, they take Exceptions againſt Gods Word, affirming it to be intricate, obſcure, and inſufficient to be his own Judge, and therefore that of neceſſity it muſt be judged by the Popes Church; and ſo having Kings and Queens on their ſide, they ſeek not to perſwade by the Word of God, nor to win by Charity, but inſtead of the Law of God, they uſe (as the Proverb ſaith) τῷ νόμῳ χείρων, compelling men by Death, Fire, and Sword (as the Turks do) to believe that in very deed they think not. And indeed after Fleſh and Blood this ſeemeth to be a ſure way. Neither peradventure are they ignorant how gaily this way thriveth with the Turks: and therefore think they to practiſe the ſame, at leaſt wiſe ſo they do, upon what example ſoever they do it. And thus condemned they theſe godly Learned Preachers and Biſhops aforeſaid, ſuppoſing, as I ſaid, that all the reſt would ſoon be quailed by their example. But they were deceived: for within eight or nine days after that Steven Gardiner had given Sentence againſt Maſter Hooper, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Sanders, Dr. Taylor, and Mr. Bradford, being the eighth of February, ſix other good men were brought likewiſe before the Biſhops for the ſame cauſe of Religion, to be examined, whoſe Names were William Pigot Butcher, Steven Knight Barber, Thomas Tomkins Weaver, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, John Laurence Prieſt, William Hunter Apprentice.

The manner of proceeding like in the Catholicks and the Turks.

February.

Six men converted before Bp. Boner for Hereſie.

Steven Gardiner ſeeing thus his Device diſappointed, and that Cruelty in this caſe would not ſerve to his Expectation, gave over the matter as utterly diſcouraged, and from that day medled no more in ſuch kind of condemnations, but referred the whole doing thereof to Boner Biſhop of London: who ſupplyed that part right doubtily, as in the further Proceſs of this Hiſtory hereafter evidently and too much may appear. Thus Biſhop Boner, taking the matter in hand, called before him in his Conſiſtory at Pauls, the Lord Maior, and certain Aldermen ſitting with him, the ſix Perſons afore-named, upon the eighth day of February in the year aforeſaid, and on the next day, being the ninth of February, read the Sentence of Condemnation upon them, as appeareth in Boners own Regiſters: ſuch quick ſpeed theſe men could make in diſpatching their Buſineſs at once. Notwithſtanding, becauſe the Death of theſe Condemned Martyrs did not follow incontinently before the next Month of March, I will defer the proſecuting of their matter, till I come by the Grace of the Lord, to the time and day of their Suffering.

February 9. Ex Regiſt. Boneri London.

Six men condemned by B. Boner.

In the mean time, what was the cauſe that their execution was ſo long deferred after their Condemnation, I have not preciſely to ſay, unleſs peradventure the Sermon of Alphonſus the Spaniſh Frier, and the Kings Confeſſor, did ſome good. For ſo I find, that when thoſe ſix Perſons aforeſaid were caſt upon Saturday the ninth of February, upon Sunday following, which was the tenth of February, the ſaid Alphonſus a Gray Frier preached before the King: in which Sermon he did earneſtly inveigh againſt the Biſhops for burning of men, ſaying plainly that they learned it not in Scripture, to burn any for his Conſcience: But the contrary, that they ſhould live and be converted, with many other things more to the ſame purport. But touching the lingring of theſe mens death, as I have not certainly to affirm, ſo let it paſs.

Febr. 19. Alphonſus K. Philips Confeſſor, preaching againſt the burning of Hereticks.

Upon the 14. of February Mr. Robert Ferrar, Bp. of S. Davids, was ſent towards S. Davids, there to be condemned and executed. Touching whoſe Martyrdom, forſomuch as it fell not before the Month of March, we will defer the Hiſtory thereof till we come to the day and time of his Suffering.

Febr. 14.

Furthermore, this foreſaid 14. day of February, the Lord Chancellor, and other his Fellow Biſhops, cauſed the Image of Thomas Becket, that old Romiſh Traytor, to be ſet up over the Mercers Chappel door in Cheapſide in London, in the Form and Shape of a Biſhop, with Miter and Croſier. Howbeit within two days after his Erection, his two Bleſſing Fingers were firſt broken away, and on the next day (being the ſeventeenth of February) his Head alſo was ſtriken off: whereupon aroſe great trouble, and many were ſuſpected: among whom one Mr. John Barnes Mercer, dwelling over againſt the ſame Chappel, was vehemently by the Lord Chancellor charged withal, as the doer thereof, and the rather, for that he was a Profeſſor of the Truth. Wherefore he and three of his Servants were committed to Priſon; and at his delivery (although it could not be proved upon him) he was bound in a great ſum of Money as well to build it up again as often as it ſhould be broken down, as alſo to watch and keep the ſame. And therefore at this his compelled charges the Image was again ſet up the ſecond day of March then next enſuing: but (for lack belike of careful watching) the fourteenth day of the ſame Month in the night, the Head of that dangerous Beaſt, over whom there was ſuch Charge given, was again the ſecond time broken off: which thing was ſo heinouſly taken, that the next day, being the 15. day, there was a Pooclamation made in London, that whoſoever would tell who did ſtrike off his Head (though he were of counſel, and not the principal doer) he ſhould have not only his pardon, but alſo one hundred Crowns of Gold, with hearty thanks. But it was not known who did it.

Tho. Becket's Image ſet up at Mercers Chappel.

Febr. 17. Mr. I. Barnes troubled for Becket's Image.

Becket's Image again broken down.

The 18. of February, Queen Mary at length, after long delay, made full Anſwer to the King of Denmark's Letters, who had written before two Letters to the ſaid Queen, in the behalf of Mr. Coverdale, for his deliverance, who at that time went under Sureties, and was in great danger, had he not been reſcued by the great ſuit and Letters of the ſaid King of Denmark.

Febr. 18. Q. Mary anſwereth to the K. of Denmarks Letters touching M. Coverdale.

The Matter and Copy of which his Suit and Letters, as they came to our hands, we have here ſet forth and expreſt, whereby the ſingular love of this good King, towards the Truth of Gods Word, and the Profeſſors thereof, might the better appear to the World.

First, This vertuous and godly King Chriſtianus, hearing of the Captivity of Miles Coverdale, of whom he had had ſome knowledge before (being there in Denmark in King Henry the Eighths time) and lamenting his dangerous caſe, and partly through the Interceſſion of Mr. Machabæus, Superintendent in Denmark, who was partly of * Kin to Mr. Coverdale's Wife, made Interceſſion by Letters to Q. Mary, deſiring and requeſting the ſaid Miles Coverdale to be ſent unto him. The date of which his Letters was about the Kalends of May, Anno Dom. 1554. The Copy whereof here followeth.

Q. Maries ſlender anſwer to the Kings firſt Letter.

To theſe Letters of the King, Queen Mary anſwering again, declared that the ſaid Miles Coverdale was in no ſuch Captivity for any Religion, but for certain Debt: ſo neither plainly granting, or expreſly denying his Requeſt, but uſing a colourable excuſe for ſhifting off the matter, as appeareth by his ſecond Letter ſent to the Queen, dated the four and twentieth day of September, as followeth.

Chriſtianus Dei gratia Daniæ, Norwegiæ, Gottorum, & Vandalorem Rex: Sleſwici, Holſatiæ, Stormariæ, ac Dithmerſiæ Dux; Comes in Oldenburgh & Delmenhorſt, Sereniſ. Principi Dominæ Mariæ, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Reginæ, fidei defenſ. &c. Sorori & conſanguineæ noſtræ chariſſimæ ſalutem, & omnium rerum optatos & fauſtos ſucceſſus.

REdditæ ſunt nobis literæ Serenitatis veſtræ, quibus benigne admodum ad deprecationem noſtram, qua pro D. Milonis Coverdali Eccleſiæ Exonienſis nuper nominati Epiſcopi incolumitate uſi ſumus, reſpondetur: ita ut intelligamus, licet alterius cauſæ quam quæ nobis innotuerat, periculum ſuſtineat, tamen Serenitatem veſtram noſtræ interceſſionis eam rationem habituram eſſe, ut illam ſibi profuiſſe ipſe Coverdalus ſentiat. Cui quidem promiſſioni regiæ cum tantum meritum tribuamus, ut ea freti non dubitaverimus ejus captivi propinquos (nobis imprimis charos) à mœrore ac ſolicitudine ad ſpem atque expectationem certæ ſalutis vocare, facere non potuimus, quin & gratias Serenitati veſtræ pro tam prompta ac benigne voluntate, non modo hujus beneficij, ſed etiam perpetuæ inter nos ac regna noſtra conſervandæ ac colendæ amicitiæ ageremus, & quantum in nobis eſſet, quod ad amplectanda perſequendaque hæc auſpicata initia pertineret, nihil prætermitteremus. Neque vero nobis de clementia ac moderatione Serenitatis veſtræ unquam dubium fuit, quam Deus optimus maximus ad gloriam ſui nominis & fructum publicæ utilitatis ut magis ac magis efflorescere velit, ex animo optamus. Proinde cum ob rationes ærarias, neque aliud gravius delictum D. Coverdal. teneri Serenitas veſtra ſcribat, eſt ſanè ut ipſius cauſa lætemur, eoque minus ambigamus, liberationem incolumitatemque ejus noſtris precibus liberaliter donari. Nam & accepimus ipſum Epiſcopatu, cujus nomine ærario obſtrictus fuerat, ceſſiſſe, ut inde ſatisfactio peteretur: maximè cum neque diu eo potitus fuiſſe, neque tantum emolumenti inde percepiſſe dicatur. Quinetiam ſiqua rationum perplexitas, aut alia forte cauſa reperiri poſſet: tamen ſolicitudinem ac dubitationem nobis Serenitatis veſtræ tam amice atque officioſe deferentes literæ omnem exemerunt: ut exiſtimemus Serenitatem veſtram, quoad ejus fieri poſſet, magis honorem noſtrum, quam quid ab eo exigi poſſit, conſideraturam: Itaque Seren. veſtram repetitis precibus urgere non conſtituimus: ſed potius teſtatum facere, quam accepta nobis Seren. veſt. gratificatio ſit, cujus talem eventum omnino ſperamus, ut ipſe Coverd. coram nobis ſuæ incolumitatis à Seren. veſt. exoratæ beneficium propediem repræſentare poſſit. Illud vero imprimis Seren. veſt. viciſſim perſuaſum eſſe cupimus, nos non ſolum referendæ gratiæ, ſed etiam ſtabiliendæ provehendæque inter nos ac regna utrinque noſtra amicitiæ ac neceſſitudinis mutuæ occaſionem aut facultatem nullam eſſe prætermiſſuros. Deus opt. max. Seren. veſt. diu feliciter ac beatè incolumem eſſe velit. Datæ ex oppido noſtro Ottonienſi, 24 Sept. Anno 1554.

To the moſt noble Princeſs and Lady* Mary, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. Our moſt dearly beloved Siſter and Coſin, wiſheth proſperity with good and lucky ſucceß of all things.

Anno 1555.

WE have received your Majeſties Letter, whereby anſwer is rendered, and that very graciouſly unto our Petition, which we made for the ſafeguard of Mr. Coverdale, late called Biſhop of Exon. So that we perceive, though he be in danger for another cauſe than was ſignified unto us afore, yet your Majeſty will ſo regard our Interceſſion, that Coverdale himſelf ſhall underſtand it to have done him good. To the which Regal Promiſe, ſeeing we (as reaſon would we ſhould do) attribute ſo much, that truſting unto the ſame, we doubt not, whereas he being in Captivity, his Friends, whom we ſpecially tender, are therefore in heavineſs and care, your good Promiſe doth call them from ſuch ſorrow, and ſolicitude, to the hope and expectation of his aſſured welfare: we could not do otherwiſe, but render thanks unto your Majeſty for ſuch your ready and gracious good will, not only in reſpect of this benefit, but alſo of the conſervation and keeping of perpetual Amity betwaen us and our Realms, and ſo, as much as in us lieth, to omit nothing that to the nouriſhing and continuance of theſe fortunate beginnings might appertain. Neither had we ever any doubt concerning the clemency and moderation of your goodneſs, whom we heartily beſeech Almighty God ever more and more to proſper, unto the glory of his Name, and profit of the Commonweal. Wherefore ſeeing your Majeſty writeth, that Mr. Coverdale is in danger for certain Accompts of Mony, and not for any other more grievous Offence, we have cauſe on his behalf to rejoyce: and therefore we doubt ſo much the leſs, that at our requeſt he ſhall graciouſly have his deliverance given him, and be out of danger. For as touching the Biſhoprick, by reaſon whereof he came in Debt, we underſtand he yielded it up, that no Payment might thereof be required, ſpecially ſeeing he is reputed neither to have injoyed it long, neither to have had at any time ſo great Commodity of it. Moreover, though it be poſſible to find ſome perplexity in the Accompt, or haply ſome other cauſe, yet your Majeſties Letters, offering ſuch favour and benignity, have taken from us all carefulneſs and doubt: Inſomuch, that we think your Majeſty, as much as may be, will have more reſpect unto our honour, than to that which might of him be required. And therefore we purpoſe not to trouble your Majeſty by repeating of our Petition, but to declare how greatly we eſteem it, that your Majeſty would gratifie us herein: whereof we plainly hope for an end, that Coverdale himſelf ſhall ſhortly in our Preſence make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare obtain'd of your Majeſty. And of this we deſire your Majeſty to be ſpecially aſſured again,

that

Anno 1555. that we will not only omit no occasion or opportunity to requite this benefit but also to establish and amplifie our mutual love and amity between us and our Realms on either side. M. Coverdale delivered and sent to the King of Denmark.

February 19. The effect of Bishop Boners intimation sent into his Dioces, to receive the Cardinals Absolution, and to be reconciled to the Pope in Lent next following.

The same Month, the 19. day, was a certain intimation set forth and Printed in the name of Boner, wherein was contained a general monition, and streight charge given to every Man and Woman within his Dioces, to prepare themselves against Lent then near approaching; to receive the glad tidings of Peace and Reconciliation sent from the Pope Julius the third, by Pool his Cardinal and Legate de Latere, and so receive also the joyful benefit of Absolution, being sent first from the Cardinal to Boner, and from him to every of his Archdeacons to be Ministred to every Private Person within his Dioces, that would come the said holy time of Lent to his Pastor or Curate to be confessed, and to receive of him wholesom Counsel, Penance, and Absolution. Signifying moreover, that as he was authorised by the foresaid Cardinal, so he for the same purpose had indued with the like Authority all and singular Pastors and Curates within his Dioces, to reconcile and assoil from their former Heresie and Schism, and from the Censures of the Church, such as would resort unto them. And lest any scruple or doubt, rising peradventure in their Consciences, should be any stay or let in this behalf, he hath assigned and deputed therefore through his Dioces certain learned men, to whom they might resort, or else might open their griefs to any of his Archdeacons, or else come to his own person, and so should be resolved.

And therefore all manner of doubts and obstacles set aside, he straitly willed and commanded every Man and Woman to come to Confession, and to enjoy this benefit of Reconciliation, and Absolution, against the first Sunday next after Easter insuing, and not to fail. For the which purpose he had specially commanded the Pastors and Curates of every Parish to certifie up in writing the names of every Man and Woman so reconciled, and so forth: The Copy of which intimation here under followeth.

The Declaration of the Bishop of London to be published to the Lay-people of his Dioces, concerning their Reconciliation.

EDmund by the permission of God, Bishop of London, unto all and singular the Lay-people of his Dioces, doth send greeting in our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Whereas this noble Realm of England, divided it self from the Unity of the Catholick Church, and from the agreement in Religion with all other Christian Realms, hath been, besides many other miseries and plagues, which Gods indignation hath powred upon it grievously also vexed, and sore infected with many and sundry sorts of Sects of Hereticks, as Arrians, Anabaptists, Libertines, Zuinglians, Lutherans, and many other, all which Sects be most repugnant, and contrary one against another, and all against Gods Truth, and Christs Catholick Faith; whereupon hath grown such slander to the Realm, such malice and disagreement among our selves, the Inhabitants thereof, such Treasons, Tumults, and Insurrections against our Prince, such Blasphemy and dishonour unto God, as no mans Tongue or Pen is able to express: It hath pleased the goodness of God to cast his eye of mercy and clemency upon us, and to move the Popes Holiness to send his most Godly Messenger, the most reverend Father in God, the Lord Cardinal Poole Legate de Latere, to bring us the glad tidings of Peace and Reconciliation, and to reduce and bring home unto the fold the lost sheep that were gone astray: whose message, as it hath been honourably received of the King and Queens Majesties, even so the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons at the last Parliament have received it, revoking all Laws the which in the time of Schism were promulgate against the Authority of the Popes Holiness, and restoring the same and the Church of Rome to all that Power which they had in this Realm before the said Schism, the which Reconciliation was also most gladly and joyfully embraced, as well of all the Clergy and Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, as also of many other Persons; and being so great and necessary to be extended to every Person of the Realm, it hath pleased the said Lord Legates Grace to give and impart unto me the said Bishop of London, for my said Dioces, and to all such as I shall appoint in that behalf, Power and Authority to absolve and reconcile all and every Person thereof, as well of the Clergy as of the Laity, and as well Men as Women, the which will renounce their Errors and (being penitent) will humbly require to be restored to the Unity of the Catholick Church, as by the Letters of the said Lord Legates Grace sent unto me, and from me sent unto every of the Archdeacons within my Dioces, more at large may and doth appear. And forasmuch as in mine own person, as well for the multitude of People, as distance of places, I cannot Minister this benefit unto every private Person my self, and for that also the holy time of Lent is now at hand, in which every true Christian Man ought to come unto his own Pastor and Curate, to be of him confessed, and to receive at his hand wholesom Counsel, Penance, and Absolution: these are therefore as well to give knowledge unto every one of you, as also to signifie and declare, that for that purpose, I have by the said Authority chosen, named, and deputed, and so by these presents do chuse and depute all and singular Pastors and Curates having Cure of Souls within my Dioces, and being themselves reconciled herein, that they and every of them by Authority hereof, shall have full Power and Authority to absolve all such as be Lay-persons of their Parishes from Heresie and Schism, and from the Censures of the Church, into which they be faln by occasion thereof also, & to reconcile to the Church all such which shall declare themselves penitent, and desirous to enjoy the benefit of the said reconciliation. And whereas divers Pastors and Curates in Sundry Parishes peradventure be not able to satisfie themselves, and to appease the Consciences of some of their Parishioners in Cases that shall trouble them, I have therefore given also Authority to every Arch-Deacon of my Dioces within his Archdeaconry, to name and appoint certain of the best learned in every Deanary of their Archdeaconry, to supply that lack, so that every man so troubled may repair to any one of them within the said Deanary, whom he shall like best, to be instructed and appeased in that behalf. And also I have appointed, that if this being done, there shall yet remain any scruple in the parties Conscience, and himself not satisfied, then the said party shall repair unto one of mine Archdeacons or Chaplains, unto whom his mind shall be most inclined, or else to repair unto mine own self, to be resolved in his said scruple or doubt, and to receive and take ſuch order therein, as to one of the ſaid Archdeacons, or unto me ſhall therein appear to be moſt expedient.

Further certifying and declaring unto you, that I have given commandment herein to all my Archdeacons, that they moniſh and command every Paſtor and Curate within their Archdeaconries, that they, having knowledge hereof, do on the firſt Holiday next then following, at the Maſs time, when the Multitude of People is preſent, declare all theſe things unto their Pariſhioners, and exhort them that they eſteem this Grace accordingly, and reconcile themſelves to the Church before the firſt Sunday after Eaſter next inſuing: which thing I alſo do command by the tenor hereof, with intimation that the ſaid time being once paſt, and they not ſo reconciled, every one of them ſhall have Proceſs made againſt him, according to the Canons, as the cauſe ſhall require: for which purpoſe the Paſtors and Curates of every Pariſh ſhall be commanded by their Archdeacon, to certifie me in writing of every man and womans name that is not ſo reconciled.

Further, herewith I do ſignifie and declare unto you, that our holy Father the Pope Julius the Third of that Name, like a moſt tender and natural Father, hearing of the return and recovery of his Prodigal Child this Realm of England, hath himſelf made much joy and gladneſs hereat, and alſo all other true Chriſtian Realms have done the like. Exhorting you therefore in our Lord not to be unthankful your ſelves, or negligent in this behalf, but diligently to ſeek for it, joyfully to imbrace it, and fruitfully to uſe it, remembring withal the monition and charge which came from me the laſt year, concerning your coming to Confeſſion in Lent, and receiving the Sacrament at Eaſter: which monition to all effects and purpoſes I have now here repeated and renewed, charging you, and alſo all your Curates therewith. And becauſe all our duties is earneſtly and devoutly to pray for the proſperous eſtate of our Soveraigns, the King and the Queen of this Realm, I do finally require and pray you, as heartily as I can, to pray for their Majeſties accordingly; and ſpecially that it may pleaſe Almighty God, to ſend unto her Grace a good time, and to make her a glad Mother, which cannot be but unto us all great joy, much comfort and ineſtimable profit. Given at London the 19. day of the Month of February, in the year of our Lord God, after the computation of the Church of England, 1554. and of my Tranſlation the 16th.

The Form of Abſolution to be kept by the Paſtors and Curates in private Confeſſions, concerning this Reconciliation.

The Abſolution of B. Boner to be uſed in his Diocels.

OUr Lord Jeſus Chriſt abſolve you, and by the Apoſtolick Authority to me granted and committed, I abſolve you from the Sentences of Excommunication, and from all other Cenſures and Pains, into the which you be fallen by reaſon of Hereſie, or Schiſm, or any other ways: and I reſtore you unto the unity of our holy Mother the Church, and the Communion of all Sacraments, diſpenſing with you for all manner of irregularity; and by the ſame Authority I abſolve you from all your ſins, In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Amen.

The Hiſtory of Judge Hales.

IN the Hiſtory of Mr. Hooper mention was touched a little before of Judge Hales, wherefore ſomething would be ſaid more in this place touching that matter. But becauſe the Story of that man, and of his end, is ſufficiently comprehended in our firſt Book of Acts & Monuments, we ſhall not greatly need to ſtand upon rehearſal of every particular matter touching the whole, but only taking the chiefeſt, and leaving the reſt, we will report ſomewhat of the Communication between the Biſhop of Wincheſter and him; declaring withal how falſe and untrue the excuſe is of our Adverſaries, which ſo preciſely by the Law defend themſelves, and ſay, that in all their doings they did nothing but by the Law, to bear them out. Which if it be ſo, how did they then to Anne Askew? What Law had they, when they had condemned her firſt for a dead woman, then afterward to rack her? By what Law did they call up Mr. Hooper, and priſon him for the Queens Debt, when the Queen in very deed did owe him fourſcore pounds, and kept him a year and a half in Priſon, and gave him never a peny? By what Law did B. Boner condemn and burn Richard Mekins, a Lad of 15. years, when the firſt Jury had quit him, and he at the Stake revoked all Hereſies, and praiſed the ſaid Boner to be a good man; and alſo having him in Priſon, would not ſuffer his Father and Mother to come to him, to comfort their own Child? What Law had they to put Mr. Rogers in Priſon, when he did neither preach nor read Lecture after the time of the Queens Inhibition, and when they had kept him in his own Houſe half a year, being not deprived of any Living, yet would not let him have an half peny of his own Livings to relieve him, his Wife and eleven Children? By what Law was Thomas Tomkins hand burnt, and afterward his Body conſumed to Aſhes? What good Law or Honeſty was there to burn the three poor Women at Garnſey, with the Infant Child falling out of the Mothers Womb, when as they all before their death recanted their words and opinions, and were never abjured before? So here likewiſe in this caſe, what order or right of Law did Steven Gardiner follow in troubling and impriſoning Judge Hales, when he had done nothing neither againſt Gods Law, nor Mans Law, in proceeding by Order of Law againſt certain preſumptuous perſons, which both before the Law, and againſt the Law then in force, took upon them to ſay their Maſs? as ye ſhall hear in theſe his Anſwers and Communication had with Steven Gardiner here under inſuing.

Anno 1555.

The Catholicks proved to do againſt the Law in Q. Maries time.

The Communication between the Lord Chancellor and Judge Hales, being there among other Judges, to take his Oath in Weſtminſter-Hall, An. 1553. Octob. 6.

Communication between Judge Hales and the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

MAſter Hales, ye ſhall underſtand, that like as the Queens Highneſs hath heretofore conceived good opinion of you, eſpecially for that ye ſtood both faithfully and lawfully in her Cauſe of juſt Succeſſion, refuſing to ſet your Hand to the Book among others that were againſt her Grace in that behalf: ſo now, through your own late deſerts againſt certain her Highneſſes doings, ye ſtand not well in her Graces favor; and therefore before ye take any Oath, it ſhall be neceſſary for you to make your purgation.

Hales. I pray you my Lord what is the cauſe?

Chan. Information is given, that ye have indited certain Prieſts in Kent for ſaying Maſs.

Hales. My Lord, it is not ſo, I indited none; but indeed certain Indictments of like matter were brought before me at the laſt Aſſizes there holden, and I gave order therein as the Law required. For I have profeſſed the Law, againſt which in caſes of Juſtice I will never, God willing, proceed, nor in any wiſe diſſemble, but with the ſame ſhew forth my Conſcience, and if it were to do again, I would do no leſs than I did.

Cha. Yea, Mr. Hales, your Conſcience is known well enough, I know you lack no Conſcience.

Hales. My Lord, you may do well to ſearch your own Conſcience; for mine is better known to my ſelf than to you: and to be plain, I did as well uſe Juſtice in your ſaid Maſs-caſe by my Conſcience, as by Law, wherein I am fully bent to ſtand in trial to the uttermoſt that can be objected. And if I have therein done any injury or wrong, let me be judged by the Law; for I will ſeek no better defence, conſidering chiefly that it is my Profeſſion.

Juſtice Hales for Juſtice ſake troubled.

Chan. Why Mr. Hales, although you had the rigour of the Law on your ſide, yet ye might have had regard to the Queens Highneſs preſent doings in that caſe. And further, although ye ſeem to be more than preciſe in the Law, yet I think ye would be very loth to yield to the extremity of ſuch advantage as might be gathered againſt your proceedings in the Law, as ye have ſometime taken upon you in place of Juſtice, and if it were well tried, I believe ye ſhould not be well able to ſtand honeſtly thereto.

Hales. My Lord, I am not ſo perfect, but I may err for lack of knowledge. But both in Conſcience, and ſuch Knowledge of the Law as God hath given me, I will do nothing but I will maintain it, and abide in it: and if my goods and all that I have be not able to counterpoiſe the case, my Body shall be ready to serve the turn; for they be all at the Queens Highness pleasure.

Winchester quarrelleth with M. Hales Religion.

Cha. Ah Sir, ye be very quick and stout in your answers. But as it should seem, that which you did was more of a will favouring the Opinion of your Religion against the Service now used, than for any occasion or zeal of Justice, seeing the Queens Highness doth set it forth as yet, wishing all her Faithful Subjects to imbrace it accordingly: and where you offer both Body and Goods in your Trial, there is no such matter required at your Hands, and yet ye shall not have your own will neither.

Hales. My Lord, I seek not wilful will, but to shew my self as I am bound in love to God and Obedience to the Queens Majesty, in whose Cause willingly for Justice sake, all other respects set apart, I did of late, as your Lordship knoweth, adventure as much as I had. And as for my Religion, I trust it be such as pleaseth God, wherein I am ready to adventure as well my Life as my Substance, if I be called thereunto. And so in lack of mine own Power and will, the Lords will be fulfilled.

Chan. Seeing you be at this point M. Hales, I will presently make an end with you. The Queens Highness shall be informed of your Opinion and Declaration. And as her Grace shall thereupon determine, ye shall have knowledge. Until such time as ye may depart as ye came, without your Oath, for as it appeareth, ye are scarce worthy the place appointed.

Hales. I thank your Lordship: and as for my Vocation, being both a Burden and a Charge more than ever I desired to take upon me; whensoever it shall please the Queens Highness to ease me thereof, I shall most humbly with due contentation obey the same; and so he departed from the Barr.

M. Hales committed to the Kings Bench.

Not many days after this Communication or Colloquy in Westminster-Hall, which was October 6. Anno 1553. M. Hales at the commandment of the Bishop was committed to the Kings Bench, where he remained constant until Lent: then was he removed to the Counter in Breadstreet, and afterward from thence was carried to the Fleet.

Being in the Fleet, what it was that he had granted unto the Bishops, by their fraudulent assaults and perswasions; namely, of D. Day Bishop of Chichester, and of Judge Portman (as it is thought) overcome at last, I have not to say.

This is certain, that shortly after, calling himself better to remembrance, he was brought to great repentance and Terrour of Conscience. Insomuch, that for very anguish of Heart he was ready with his Penknife to kill himself there in the Prison, and had (no doubt) so done, had not the Merciful Providence of the Lord rescued him miraculously, as ye shall hear.

It hapned when supper time came that he should be called down, M. Hales having little mind either to eat or to drink, gate him straightway to Bed, where he lay all the Night sobbing and groaning, and took (God knoweth) little rest or sleep. At length when morning came, about 6. of the Clock he sent his Servant for a Cup of beer, under pretence as though he were thirsty and desirous to drink; whether this Cause were true or feigned it is unknown: but this followed, that his man was scarce out of the Chamber, when he with his Penknife had wounded himself in divers places of his Body, and was purposed (no doubt) to have destroyed himself, had not the goodness of the Lord given present help in time of opportunity. Whereby it is evident for all men to understand, how Gods favour was not absent from the man, although he thought himself utterly forsaken for his denial, as by the sequel may well appear.

M. Hales about to kill himself in Prison.

Gods Merciful Providence in rescuing M. Hales.

For as soon as he had sent his man out of his Chamber (see what God would have done) even afore the Chamber door eftsoons the Butler met him; who being desired to fill the drink, and taking the Cup, the other returned again unto his Master, at the same very time when he was working his own Destruction: whereby M. Hales at that time was stopt of his purpose, and preserved, not without Gods manifest good will and providence. When Winchester had knowledge of it, straightway he taketh occasion thereby to Blaspheme the Doctrine of the Gospel, which he openly in the Star-chamber called Doctrine of Desperation. Master Hales being within a while after recovered of those wounds, and delivered out of Prison, getteth himself home unto his House: where he, either for the greatness of his sorrow, or for lack of good Counsel, or for that he would avoid the necessity of hearing Mass, having all things set in order, a good while before that, pertaining to his Testament, casting himself into a shallow River, was drowned therein; which was about the beginning of the Month of February, or in the Month of January before Anno 1555.

Winchester might rather have said how their cruel dealing worketh desperation.

Judge Hale drowned himself.

The unhappy chance of this so worthy a Judge was surely the Cause of great sorrow and grief unto all good men, and it gave occasion besides unto certain Divines to stand something in doubt with themselves, whether he were reprobate or saved, about which matter it is not for me to determine either this way or that: for he that is our Judge, the same shall be his Judge; and he it is that will lay all things open when the time cometh. This in the mean time is certain and sure, that the Deed of the man in my mind ought in no wise to be allowed, which if he did wittingly, then do I discommend the mans reason. But if he did it in phrensie, and as being out of his wits, then do I greatly pity his Case.

The cause of Judge Hales drowning considered.

Yet notwithstanding, seeing Gods Judgments be secret and we likewise in doubt upon what intent he did thus punish himself, neither again is any man certain, whether he did repent or no before the last Breath went out of his Body; me thinketh, their Opinion is more Indifferent herein, which do rather disallow the example of the Deed, than despair of his Salvation.

Examples in the time of the first persecution.

Otherwise, if we will adjudge all those to Hell that have departed the World after this sort, how many examples have we in the first Persecutions of the Church, of those Men and Women, who being registred in the works of worthy Writers, have notwithstanding their praise and Commendation?

Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 8.

For what shall I think of those young men, who being sought for to do Sacrifice to Heathen Idols, did cast down themselves head-long, and break their own Necks, to avoid such horrible pollution of themselves? What shall I say of those Virgins of Antioch, who to the end they might not defile themselves with uncleanness, and with Idolatry, through the perswasion of their Mother, casting themselves head-long into a River together with their Mother, did foredo themselves, although not in the same water, yet after the same manner of drowning as this Master Hales did? What shall I say of the other two Sisters, which for the self-same quarter did violently throw themselves head-long into the Sea, as Eusebius doth record? In whom, though perchance there was no less confidence to bear out the pains which should be ministred of the wicked unto them, yet that their good desire to keep their Faith and Religion unspotted was commended and praised.

Nicephi. lib. 2. c. 13. Brassilia Dyrrachina.

Another like example of Death is mentioned by Nicephorus, and that in another Virgin likewise, whose name is expressed in Hierom to be Brassil Dyrrachina, who to keep her Virginity feigned her self to be a Witch, and so conventing with the young man which went about to deflowr her, pretended that she would give him an herb which should preserve him from all kind of Weapons; and so to prove it in her self, laid the herb upon her own throat, bidding him smite, whereby she was slain, and so with the loss of her Life her Virginity was saved.

Hereunto may be joyned the like Death of Sophronia, a Matron of Rome, who when she was required of Mazentius the Tyrant to be defiled, and saw her Husband more slack than he ought to have been in saving her honesty, bidding them that were sent for her to tarry a while till she made her ready, went into her Chamber, and with a Weapon thrust her self through the Breast, and dyed. Now who is he that would reprehend the worthy Act of Achetes, which biting off his own Tongue spit it out into the Harlots Face?

These Examples I do not here infer, as going about either to excuse, or to maintain the hainous fact of Mr. Hales, which I would wish rather by silence might be drowned in oblivion; but yet notwithstanding, as touching the Person of the man, whatsoever his fact, was because we are not sure whether he at the last Breath repented: again, because we do not know, nor are able to comprehend the bottomless depth of the Graces and Mercies cies which are in Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour; we will leave therefore the final Judgment of him, to the determination of him who is only appointed Judge both of the quick and the dead.

The Hiſtory of Thomas Tomkins, who having firſt his hand burned, after was burned himſelf by Biſhop Boner, for the conſtant teſtimony of Chriſt's true Profeſſion.

March 18. The Hiſtory of Thomas Tomkins Martyr.

MEntion was made before of ſix Priſoners, brought and examined before Biſhop Boner the 8. of February, whoſe names were Tomkins, Pigot, Knight, Haukes, Laurence, and Hunter. All which, though they received their Condemnation together the next day after, yet becauſe the time of their Execution was then driven off from February till the next Month of March, I did therefore refer the Story of them to this preſent Month of March aforeſaid, wherein now remaineth ſeverally to intreat of the Martyrdom of theſe ſix Perſons, as the order and time of their Sufferings ſeverally do require. Of the which ſix aforenamed Martyrs, the firſt was Thomas Tomkins burned in Smithfield, the 16. day of March, Anno 1555.

The godly life and diſpoſition of Tho. Tomkins.

This Thomas Tomkins, a Weaver by his Occupation, dwelling in Shoreditch, and of the Dioceſs of London, was of ſuch Converſation and Diſpoſition ſo godly, that if any woman had come to him with her Webb, as ſometime they did, three or four in a day, he would always begin with Prayer. Or if any other had come to talk of any matter, he would likewiſe firſt begin with Prayer. And if any had ſought unto him to borrow Money, he would ſhew him ſuch Money as he had in his Purſe, and bid him take it. Anno 1555.

And when they came to repay it again, ſo far off was he from ſeeking any Uſury at their hand, or from ſtreight exaction of his due, that he would bid them keep it longer, while they were better able. And theſe were the Conditions of Thomas Tomkins, teſtified yet to this preſent day by the moſt part of all his Neighbours, and almoſt of all his Pariſh which knew him, as Mr. Skinner, Mr. Leeke, and other more. Of whom more than half a dozen at once came to me, diſcreet and ſubſtantial men, reporting the ſame unto me, recordiug moreover as followeth: That Dr. Boner Biſhop of London, kept the ſaid Tomkins with him in Priſon half a year: during which time the ſaid Biſhop was ſo rigorous unto him, that he beat him bitterly about the face, whereby his face was ſwelled. Whereupon the Biſhop cauſed his Beard to be ſhaven, and gave the Barber Twelve pence.

Tomkins maketh the Biſhops hay.

Touching which ſhaving of Thomas Tomkins Beard, this is more to be added; Biſhop Boner having Tomkins with him Priſoner at Fulham, in the Month of July, did ſet him with his other Work-folks to make Hay. And ſeeing him to labour ſo well, the Biſhop ſitting him down, ſaid, Well, I like thee well, for thou laboureſt well: I truſt thou wilt be a good Catholick. My Lord, ſaid he, S. Paul ſaith, He that doth not labour, is not worthy to eat. Boner ſaid, Ah, S. Paul is a * great man with thee. And ſo after ſuch other talk, the Biſhop inferring moreover, wiſhed his Beard off, ſaying, that ſo he would look like a Catholick. My Lord, ſaid Tomkins, before my Beard grew, I was, I truſt, a good Chriſtian, and ſo I truſt to be, my Beard being on. But Boner in fine ſent for the Barber, and cauſed his Beard to be ſhaven off. The very cauſe was for that Boner had pluckt off a piece of his Beard before.

* And ſo ſhould he be with you, if you were a right Biſhop.

The burning of Thomas Tomkins hand by Biſhop Boner.

The burning of the bleſſed Martyr Thomas Tomkins.

The notable Conſtancy in a true Chriſtian Souldier.

The rage of this Biſhop was not ſo great againſt him, but the Conſtancy of the Party was much greater with Patience to bear it: who, although he had not the Learning as other have, yet he was ſo indued with Gods mighty Spirit, and ſo conſtantly planted in the perfect knowledge of Gods Truth, that by no means he could be removed from the Confeſſion of Truth, to Impiety and Error. Whereupon, Boner the Biſhop being greatly vexed againſt the poor man, when he ſaw that by no Perſwaſions he could prevail with him, deviſed another practice not ſo ſtrange as cruel, further to try his Conſtancy, to the intent, that ſeeing he could not otherwiſe convince him by Doctrine of Scriptures, yet he might overthrow him by ſome forefeeling and terror of death. So having with him Mr. Harpsfield, Mr. Pembleton, Doctor Chedſey, Maſter Willerton, and other other ſtanding by, he called for Thomas Tomkini, who coming before the Biſhop, and ſtanding as he was wont in defence of his Faith, the Biſhop fell from beating to burning. Who, having there a taper or wax candle of three or four wicks ſtanding upon the Table, thought there to repreſent unto us as it were, the old Image of King Porſenna. For as he burned the hand of Scævola, ſo this Catholick Biſhop took Tomkins by the fingers, and held his hand directly over the flame, ſuppoſing that by the ſmart and pain of the fire being terrified, he would leave off the defence of his Doctrine, which he had received.

Anno 1555.

Biſhop Boner playeth King Porſenna in burning the hand of Scævola.

Tomkins thinking no otherwiſe, but there preſently to dye, began to commend himſelf unto the Lord, ſaying, O Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit, &c. In the time that his hand was in burning, the ſame Tomkins afterward reported to one James Hinſe, that his Spirit was ſo wrapt, that he felt no pain. In the which burning he never ſhrunk, till the veins ſhrunk, and the ſinews burſt, and the water did ſpirt in Maſter Harpsfields face: Inſomuch that the ſaid M. Harpsfield, moved with pity, deſired the Biſhop to ſtay, ſaying, that he had tryed him enough. This burning was in the Hall at Fulham.

Tomkins compared to Scævola. Boner more cruel than Porſenna the Hetruſcan.

And where the Biſhop thought by that means to drive him from his Opinions, it proved much otherwiſe: for this Chriſtian Scævola ſo valiantly did deſpiſe, abide, and indure that burning, that we have leſs Cauſe hereafter to marvail at the manfulneſs of that Roman Scævola: I would to God the other had aſwell followed the example of that Hetruſcan Tyrant. For he, after the left hand of Scævola was half burned, either ſatisfied with his puniſhment, or overcome by his manhood, or driven away by fear, ſent him home ſafe unto his people: whereas Boner, hitherto not contented with the burning of his Hand, reſted not until he had conſumed his whole Body into aſhes, at London in Smithfield.

But before we come to his Suffering, we will firſt intreat of ſome part of his Examination and Articles, with his anſwers and confeſſion thereunto annexed, as it is credibly in Regiſter recorded.

The firſt Examination of Thomas Tomkins.

The firſt examination of Thomas Tomkins before Boner Biſhop of London.

THis Faithful and valiant Souldier of God Thomas Tomkins, after he had remained the ſpace (as is ſaid) of half a year in priſon, about the 8. day of February was brought with certain other before Boner ſitting in his Conſiſtory, to be examined. To whom firſt was brought forth a certain Bill or Schedule ſubſcribed (as appeareth) with his own hand, the fifth day of the ſame Month laſt before, containing theſe words following.

The confeſſion of Tomkins ſubſcribed with his own hand.

THomas Tomkins of Shoreditch, and of the Dioceſs of London, hath believed and doth believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in Subſtance, but only a token and remembrance thereof, the very Body and Blood of Chriſt being only in Heaven, and no where elſe.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

Tomkins conſtant in his Faith.

Whereupon he was asked, whether he did acknowledge the ſame ſubſcription to be of his own hand. To the which he granted, confeſſing it ſo to be. This being done the Biſhop went about to perſwade him (with words, rather than with reaſons) to relinquiſh his opinions, and to return again to the unity of the Catholick Church, promiſing if he would ſo do, to remit all that was paſt. But he conſtantly denied ſo to do. When the Biſhop ſaw he could not ſo convince him, he brought forth and read to him another writing, containing Articles and Interrogatories, whereunto he ſhould come the next day and anſwer: in the mean time he ſhould deliberate with himſelf what to do, and ſo the next day, being the 9. day of March, at eight of the Clock in the morning to be preſent in the ſame place again, to give his determinate anſwer what he would do in the premiſes, and then either to revoke and reclaim himſelf, or elſe in the afternoon the ſame day to come again and have Juſtice (as he called it) miniſtred unto him. The Copy of which Articles here followeth.

Articles objected and miniſtred the 8. day of February againſt Thomas Tomkins, with his own hand ſubſcribing to the ſame.

Articles miniſtred againſt T. Tomkins.

THou doſt believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not, by the Omnipotent power of Almighty God, and his holy Word, really, truly and in very deed, the very true and natural Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, as touching the Subſtance thereof, which was conceived in the Womb of the Virgin Mary, and hanged upon the Croſs, ſuffering paſſion and death there for the life of the World.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

I do ſo believe.

Thou doſt believe, that after the Conſecration of the Bread & Wine prepared for the uſe of the Sacrament of the Altar, there doth remain the Subſtance of material Bread and material Wine, not changed nor altered in Subſtance by the Power of Almighty God, but remaining as it did before.

Subſtance of Bread remained in the Sacrament.

I do ſo believe.

Thou doſt believe, that it is an untrue Doctrine, and a falſe Belief, to think or ſay, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is, after Conſecration of the Bread and Wine, the Subſtance of Chriſts Natural Body and Blood, by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God, and his Holy Word.

The Naturall Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament denied.

I do ſo believe.

Thou doſt believe, that thy Parents, Kinſfolks, Friends, and Acquaintance, and alſo thy Godfathers and Godmother, and all People did err, and were deceived, if they did believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there was, after the Conſecration, the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and that there did not remain the Subſtance of material Bread and Wine.

The errour of the Forefathers touching the Sacrament.

I do ſo believe.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

The ſecond Examination of Thomas Tomkins.

The ſecond Examination.

THe next day being the 9. of February, at 8. of the Clock before noon, the ſaid T. Tomkins (according to the former Commandment) was brought again into the place aforenamed, before the Biſhop and other his Aſſiſtants, where the foreſaid Articles were propounded unto him: whereunto he anſwered as followeth:

Anſwer of Tomkins to the Articles.

To the firſt he ſaid, that he did ſo believe, as in the ſame is contained.

To the ſecond he ſaid, that it was only Bread and a participation of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſo do the Scriptures teach.

To the third he ſaid and did believe, it was a falſe Doctrine, to believe and think as is contained in this Article.

To the fourth, he did alſo believe the ſame.

After this anſwer, he did alſo ſubſcribe his name to the ſaid Articles. Whereupon, the Biſhop drawing out of his boſom another confeſſion ſubſcribed with Tomkins's own hand, and alſo that Article that was the firſt day objected againſt him, cauſed the ſame to be openly read, and then willed him to revoke and deny his ſaid opinions; the which he utterly refuſed to do; and therefore was commanded to appear before the Biſhop again in the ſame place at two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

The Biſhop repeateth again the confeſſion of Thomas Tomkins, written before by the ſaid Biſhop of London, and ſubſcribed by the ſaid Tomkins, the 26. of September, Anno, 1554. which is this.

The firſt confeſſion of Tomkins offered to T. Boner, and now here again repeated.

I Thomas Tomkins of the Pariſh of Shoreditch, in the Dioceſs of London, having confeſſed and declared openly heretofore to Edmund Biſhop of London mine Ordinary, that my belief hath been many years paſt, and is at this preſent; that the Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt

Chriſt is not truly and in very deed in the Sacrament of the Altar, but only in Heaven, and ſo in Heaven, that it cannot now indeed be really and truly in the Sacrament of the Altar.

The Maſs full of Superſtition & Idolatry.

And moreover, having likewiſe confeſſed and declared to my ſaid Ordinary openly many times, that although the Church, called the Catholick Church, hath allowed, and doth allow the Maſs and Sacrifice made and done therein, as a wholeſom, profitable, and a godly thing; yet my belief hath been many years paſt, and is at this preſent, that the ſaid Maſs is full of Superſtition, plain Idolatry, and unprofitable for my Soul, and ſo have I called it many times, and take it at this preſent.

Baptiſm ought to be miniſtred in the Vulgar Tongue.

Having alſo likewiſe confeſſed and declared to my ſaid Ordinary, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm ought to be only in the Vulgar Tongue, and not otherwiſe miniſtred, and alſo without any ſuch Ceremonies, as accuſtomably are uſed in the Latin Church, and otherwiſe not to be allowed.

Tomkins conſtantly ſtandeth to the Truth of the Goſpel.

Finally, being many times and oft called openly before my ſaid Ordinary, and talked withal touching all my ſaid Confeſſions and Declarations, both by the ſaid mine Ordinary and divers other Learned men, as well his Chaplains as other, and counſelled by all them to embrace the Truth, and to recant mine Error in the Premiſſes, which they told me was plain Hereſie and manifeſt Error; do teſtifie and declare hereby, that I do and will continually ſtand to my ſaid Confeſſion, Declaration, and Belief, in all the Premiſſes, and every part thereof, and in no wiſe recant or go from any part of the ſame. In witneſs whereof I have ſubſcribed, and paſſed this writing the 26. day of September the year aforeſaid.

By me Tho. Tompkins aforeſaid.

The Name of them that ſate upon Thomas Tomkins at this Seſſion, were theſe; Edmund Boner, John Feckenam Dean of Pauls, John Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, John Morwen Maſter of Arts, Thomas Morton Parſon of Fulham, Triſtram Swadell, Thomas More, Thomas Bekinſaw, James Cline, Clerks.

The laſt Appearance of Thomas Tomkins before Boner and the Commiſſioners.

The laſt appearance and condemnation of T. Tomkins, Martyr.

THe ſame day and place, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon, he was (the laſt time) brought before the Biſhops of London, Bathe, and St. Davids, with others; where he was earneſtly exhorted by the ſaid Biſhop of Bathe to revoke and leave off his Opinions. Unto whom he anſwered, My Lord, I was born and brought up in Ignorance until now of late years; and now I know the Truth, wherein I will continue unto the death.

Then Boner cauſed all his Articles and Confeſſion to be again openly read, and ſo in his accuſtomed manner perſwaded with him to recant. To whom he finally ſaid, My Lord, I cannot ſee but that you would have me forſake the Truth, and to fall into Error and Hereſie.

Sentence read againſt Thomas Tomkins, March 16.

The Biſhop ſeeing he would not recant, did proceed in his Law, and ſo gave Sentence of Condemnation upon him.

Then he delivered him to the Sheriff of London, who carried him ſtrait unto Newgate, where he remained moſt joyous and conſtant until the 16. day of March next after: on which day, he was by the ſaid Sheriff conveyed into Smithfield, and there ſealed up his Faith in the flaming Fire, to the Glory of Gods holy Name, and Confirmation of the Weak.

The Martyrdom of Th. Tomkins in Smithfield, Anno 1555. March 16.

A notable Hiſtory of William Hunter, a young man of 19 years, purſued to death by Juſtice Brown for the Goſpels ſake, worthy of all young Men and Parents to be read.

Will. Hunter an Apprentice and Martyr.

THe 26. day of the ſaid Month of March, the year aforeſaid, followed the Martyrdom of William Hunter a right godly young man, of the Age of 19. years, and born of like godly Parents: by whom he was not only inſtructed in true Religion and Godlineſs, but alſo confirmed by them unto death, after a rare and ſtrange example worthy to be noted and had in admiration of all Parents. Wherein may appear a ſingular Spectacle, not only of a marvellous Fortitude in the party ſo young, but alſo in his Parents, to behold Nature in them ſtriving with Religion, and overcome of the ſame. Whereby Chriſtian Parents may learn what is to be done, not only in their Children, but alſo in themſelves, if need at any time do require, or godlineſs ſhould demand the duty of a Chriſtian man againſt natural Affection. Example whereof in the ſequel of this Hiſtory we have here preſent before our eyes. Which Hiſtory, as it was faithfully drawn out by Robert Hunter his own Brother (who being preſent with his Brother William, and never left him till his death, ſent the true Report unto us) we have here with like faithfulneſs placed and recorded the ſame, as followeth.

Anno 1555.

Will. Hunter Apprentice in Coleman-ſtreet with Tho. Taylor.

William Hunter, being an Apprentice in London in the firſt year of Queen Mary, was commanded at the Eaſter next following to receive the Communion at a Maſs, by the Prieſt of the Pariſh where he dwelt, called Coleman-ſtreet; which becauſe he refuſed to do, he was very much threatned that he ſhould be therefore brought before the Biſhop of London. Wherefore William Hunters Maſter, one Thomas Taylor, a Silkweaver, required William Hunter to go and depart from him, leſt that he ſhould come in danger becauſe of him, if he continued in his Houſe. For the which cauſes, William Hunter took leave of his ſaid Maſter, and thence came to Burntwood where his Father dwelt, with whom he afterward remained about the ſpace of half a quarter of a year.

Will. Hunter threatned for not receiving at a Maſs.

Will. Hunter willed of his Maſter to depart.

Will. Hunter cometh to his Father to Burntwood.

After this it hapned within five or ſix weeks, that William going into the Chappel of Burntwood, and finding there a Bible lying on a Deſk, did read therein. In the mean time there came in one Father Atwell a Sumner, which hearing William read in the Bible, ſaid to him, What meddleſt thou with the Bible? Knoweſt thou what thou readeſt? and canſt thou expound the Scriptures?

Father Atwell a Sumner or Promotor.

To whom William anſwered and ſaid, Father Atwell, I take not upon me to expound the Scriptures, except I were diſpenſed withal; but I, finding the Bible here when I came, read in it to my comfort. To whom Father Atwell ſaid, It was never merry world ſince the Bible came abroad in Engliſh.

Talk between Atwell and Will. Hunter concerning the Bible.

To the which words William anſwered, ſaying, Father Atwell, ſay not ſo for Gods ſake: for it is Gods Book, out of the which every one that hath Grace may learn to know both what things pleaſe God, and alſo what diſpleaſeth him. Then ſaid Father Atwell, Could we not tell before this time as well as now, how God was ſerved? William anſwered, No, Father Atwell, nothing ſo well, as we may now, if that we might have his bleſſed Word amongſt us ſtill as we have had. It is true, ſaid Father Atwell, if it be as you ſay.

The Catholicks cannot abide the Bible.

Well, ſaid William Hunter, it liketh me very well, and I pray God that we may have the bleſſed Bible amongſt us continually. To the which words Father Atwell ſaid, I perceive your mind well enough; you are one of them that miſliketh the Queens Laws: and therefore you came from London, I hear ſay. You learned theſe ways at London: but for all that, ſaid Father Atwell, you muſt turn another Leaf, or elſe you, and a great ſort more Hereticks will broil for this gear, I warrant you. To the which words William ſaid, God give me Grace, that I may believe his Word, and confeſs his Name, whatſoever come thereof. Confeſs his Name, quoth old Atwell? No, no, ye will go to the Devil all of you, and confeſs his Name.

Atwell not able to reaſon, but he is able to accuſe the innocent.

What, ſaid William? You ſay not well Father Atwell: At the which words he went out of the Chappel in a great fury, ſaying, I am not able to reaſon with thee: but I will fetch one ſtreight way which ſhall talk with thee, I warrant thee, thou Heretick. And he leaving William Hunter reading in the Bible, ſtreight-ways brought one Thomas Wood, who was then Vicar of Southwell, which was at an Alehouſe even over againſt the ſaid Chappel; who, hearing old Atwell ſay, that William Hunter was reading of the Bible in the Chappel, came by and by to him, and finding him reading in the Bible, took the matter very heinouſly, ſaying; Sirra, who gave thee leave to read in the Bible, and to expound it?

The Vicar of Southwell angry with Will. Hunter for reading in the Bible

Then

Anno 1555.

Then William anſwered, I expound not the Scriptures, Sir, but read them for my comfort. What medleſt thou with them at all, ſaid the Vicar? It becometh not thee, nor none ſuch to meddle with the Scriptures.

But William anſwered, I will read the Scriptures (God willing) while I live; and you ought, Maſter Vicar, not to diſcourage any man for that matter, but rather exhort men diligently to read the Scriptures for your diſcharge and their own.

Unto the which the Vicar anſwered, It becometh thee well to tell me what I have to do. I ſee thou art an Heretick by thy words. William ſaid, I am no Heretick for ſpeaking the Truth. But the Vicar ſaid, It is a merry World when ſuch as thou art ſhall teach us what is the Truth. Thou art medling, Father Atwell tells me, with the ſixth of John, wherein thou maiſt perceive how Chriſt ſaith, Except that ye eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. William ſaid, I read the ſixth of John indeed; howbeit, I made no expoſition on it.

The Catholicks in no wiſe will be controled.

Then ſaid Father Atwell, When you read it, I ſaid, that you there might underſtand how that in the Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very natural Body and Blood: unto the which you anſwered, how that you would take the Scriptures as they are, and that you would meddle with no great Expoſition, except that ye were diſpenſed withal.

W. Hunter examined of the Sacrament.

Ah, ſaid the Vicar, What ſay you to the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar? Believeſt thou not in it, and that the Bread and Wine is tranſubſtantiated into the very Body and Blood of Chriſt? William anſwered, I learn no ſuch thing in the ſixth of John as you ſpeak of. Why, ſaid the Vicar, doſt thou not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar? I believe, ſaid William Hunter all that Gods Word teacheth. Why, ſaid the Vicar, thou maiſt learn this which I ſay, plainly in the ſixth of John.

The Catholicks like to the Capernaites.

Then ſaid William, You underſtand Chriſts words much like the carnal Capernaites, which thought, that Chriſt would have given them his fleſh to feed upon: which opinion our Saviour Chriſt corrected, when he ſaid, The words which I ſpeak to you, are ſpirit and life.

Hereſie miſtaken with the Papiſts.

Now, quoth the Vicar, I have found you out: now I ſee that thou art an Heretick indeed, and that thou doſt not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then ſaid William Hunter, whereas you doubt my belief, I would it were tried whether that you or I would ſtand faſter in our Faith. Yea, thou Heretick (ſaid the Vicar) wouldſt thou have it ſo tried? William Hunter anſwered, That which you call Hereſie, I ſerve my Lord God withal.

Then ſaid the Vicar, Canſt thou ſerve God with Hereſie? But William anſwered, I would that you and I were even now faſt tied to a Stake, to prove whether that I or you would ſtand ſtrongeſt to our Faith. But the Vicar anſwered, It ſhall not be ſo tried. No, quoth William, I think ſo: for if I might, I think I know who would ſooneſt recant; for I durſt ſet my foot againſt yours, even to the death. That we ſhall ſee, quoth the Vicar, and ſo they departed; the Vicar threatning William much, how that he would complain of him; with other much Communication which they had together.

The Vicar complaineth to Juſtice Brown of W. Hunter. Juſtice Brown ſendeth for Hunters Father.

Immediately after, this Vicar of Welde told Mr. Brown of the Communication which William Hunter and he had together. Which when Mr. Brown underſtood, immediately he ſent for Williams Father and the Conſtable, one Robert Salmon. For immediately after William Hunter and the Vicar had reaſoned together, he took his leave of his Father and fled, becauſe Wood the Vicar threatned him. Now when the Conſtable and Williams Father were come, and were before Mr. Brown, he asked where William Hunter was. His Father anſwered, ſaying, If it pleaſe you, Sir, I know not where he is become: No, quoth Maſter Brown? I will make thee tell where he is, and fetch him forth alſo e're I have done with thee. Sir, ſaid Williams Father, I know not where he is become, nor where to ſeek for him.

The fruit of the Popes Doctrine to ſet the Father againſt the ſon.

Then ſaid Mr. Brown, Why didſt thou not bring him when thou hadſt him? I promiſe thee if thou wilt not fetch him, I will ſend thee to Priſon, till I ſhall get him. Wherefore ſee that thou promiſe me to fetch him, or elſe it is not beſt to look me in the face any more, nor yet to reſt in Burntwood. Well, quoth M. Brown to Williams Father, ſee that thou ſeek him forth, and bring him to me.

An unreaſonable requeſt of Juſtice Brown.

Williams Father anſwered; Sir, would you have me ſeek my Son to be burned? If thou bring him to me, quoth M. Brown, I will deal well enough for that matter; thou ſhalt not need to care for the matter. Fetch him, and thou ſhalt ſee what I will do for him.

The Father pretends to ſeek the Son.

Moreover, if thou lackeſt mony, quoth he, thou ſhalt have ſome, and bade the Conſtable M. Salmon to give him a Crown, but Williams Father took none of him. Howbeit M. Brown would never reſt, till Williams Father had promiſed him to ſeek out his Son. And thus Mr. Brown ſent the Conſtable home again, and Williams Father, commanding him to ſeek out William Hunter, and then to come again and bring him to him.

The Son meeteth with him in the way.

After that Old Father Hunter had ridden two or three days journey to ſatisfie M. Browns expectation, it happened that William met with his Father in the High way as he travelled, and firſt he ſeeing his Father came to him, and ſpake to him, and told him how that he thought that he ſought for him: and then his Father confeſſing it, wept ſore, and ſaid, that Mr. Brown charged him to ſeek him, and bring him to him; howbeit, ſaid he, I will return home again, and ſay I cannot find you. But William ſaid; Father I will go home with you, and ſave you harmleſs, whatſoever cometh of it.

The working of Nature between the Father, and the Son.

And thus they came home together; but William, as ſoon as he was come home, was taken by the ſaid Conſtable, and laid in the Stocks till the day. Maſter Brown, hearing that William Hunter was come home, ſent for him to the Conſtable, who brought him immediately to Maſter Brown.

W. Hunter brought before Juſtice Brown.

Now when William was come, Mr. Brown ſaid to him, Ah ſirra, are ye come? and then by and by he commanded the Bible to be brought and opened it, and then began to reaſon with William on this manner, ſaying; I hear ſay you are a Scripture-man, you, and can reaſon much of the ſixth of John and expound as pleaſeth you, and turned the Bible to the ſixth of S. John, and then he laid to his charge what an expoſition he made, when the Vicar and he talked together. And William ſaid, He urged me to ſay ſo much as I did.

Talk between W. Hunter and Juſtice Brown about the Sacrament.

Well quoth Mr. Brown, becauſe you can expound that place ſo well; how ſay you to another place, turning to the 22. of S. Luke? and Mr. Brown ſaid, Look here (quoth he) for Chriſt ſaith, that the Bread is his Body.

Bread broken, but not changed.

To the which William anſwered, the Text ſaith, how Chriſt took Bread, but not that he changed it into another ſubſtance, but gave that which he took, and brake that which he gave, which was Bread as is evident by the Text. For elſe he ſhould have had two Bodies, which to affirm I ſee no reaſon, ſaid William.

M. Brown in a perfect chafe.

At the which anſwer Mr. Brown was very angry, and took up the Bible and turned the leaves, and then flung it down again in ſuch a fury, that William could not well find the place again whereof they reaſoned.

Then M. Brown ſaid, Thou naughty boy, wilt thou not take things as they are, but expound them as thou wilt? Doth not Chriſt call the Bread his Body plainly, and thou wilt not believe, that the Bread is his Body after the Conſecration? Thou goeſt about to make Chriſt a lyar.

How Chriſt called Bread his Body.

But William Hunter anſwered; I mean not ſo, Sir, but rather more earneſtly to ſearch what the mind of Chriſt is in that Holy Inſtitution, wherein he commendeth unto us the remembrance of his death, paſſion, reſurrection, and coming again, ſaying; This do in the remembrance of me. And alſo though Chriſt call the Bread his Body as he doth alſo ſay, that he is a Vine, a Door, &c. yet is not his Body turned into Bread, no more than he is turned into a Door or Vine. Wherefore Chriſt called the Bread his Body by a figure.

M. Brown in a rage.

At that Word Mr. Brown ſaid, Thou art a villain indeed. Wilt thou make Chriſt a lyar yet ſtill? and was in ſuch a fury with William, and ſo raged, that William could not ſpeak a word, but he croſſed him, and ſcoffed at every word. Wherefore William ſeeing him in ſuch fury, deſired him that he would either hear him quietly, and ſuffer him to anſwer for himſelf, or elſe

M. Brown ſendeth up W. Hunter to Biſhop Boner.

ſend him away. To the which Mr. Brown anſwered; Indeed I wil ſend thee to morrow to my Lord of London, and he ſhall have thee under Examination: and thus left off the talk, and made a Letter immediately, and ſent William Hunter with the Conſtable to Boner Biſhop of London, who received William.

After that he had read the Letter, and the Conſtable returned home again, the Biſhop cauſed William to be brought into a Chamber, where he began to reaſon with him in this manner: I underſtand, William Hunter, quoth he, by Mr. Browns Letter, how that you have had certain Communication with the Vicar of the Wield, about the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and how that ye could not agree; whereupon Mr. Brown ſent for thee to bring thee to the Catholick Faith, from the which, he ſaith that thou art gone. Howbeit if thou wilt be ruled by me, thou ſhalt have no harm for any thing that thou haſt ſaid or done in this matter.

Boners words to W. Hunter.

William anſwered, ſaying; I am not fallen from the Catholick Faith of Chriſt (I am ſure) but do believe it, and confeſs it with all my heart.

Talk between W. Hunter and the Biſhop about the Sacrament.

Why, quoth the Biſhop, how ſayeſt thou to the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar? Wilt thou not recant thy ſaying, which thou confeſſedſt before Mr. Brown, how that Chriſts Body is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, the ſame that was born of the Virgin Mary?

To the which William anſwered, ſaying; My Lord, I underſtand that Mr. Brown hath certified you of the talk which he and I had together, and thereby ye know what I ſaid to him, the which I will not recant by Gods help. Then ſaid the Biſhop, I think thou art aſhamed to bear a fagot, and recant openly; but if thou wilt recant thy ſayings, I will promiſe thee that thou ſhalt not be put to open ſhame: but ſpeak the word here now between me and thee, and I will promiſe thee it ſhall go no further, and thou ſhalt go home again without any hurt.

Boners fair promiſes to W. Hunter.

William anſwered and ſaid, my Lord, if you will let me alone, and leave me to my Conſcience I will go to my Father and dwell with him, or elſe with my Maſter again, and ſo if no Body will diſquiet nor trouble my Conſcience, I will keep my Conſcience to my ſelf.

W. Hunter not ſuffered to have his Conſcience free.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, I am content, ſo that thou wilt go to the Church, and receive, and be ſhriven, and ſo continue a good Catholick Chriſtian. No, quoth William, I will not do ſo for all the good in the World.

W. Hunter denieth to recant.

Then, quoth the Biſhop, if you will not do ſo, I will make you ſure enough, I warrant you. Well, quoth William, you can do no more than God will permit you. Well, quoth the Biſhop, wilt thou not recant indeed by no means? No, quoth William, never while I live, God willing.

Then the Biſhop (this talk ended) commanded his men to put William in the Stocks in his gatehouſe, where he ſate two daies and nights, only with a cruſt of brown Bread and a Cup of Water.

Boner commandeth William Hunter to the Stocks. W. Hunter two daies and two nights in the Stocks, with a cruſt of Bread and a Cup of Water.

At the two days end the Biſhop came to him, and finding the Cup of Water and the cruſt of Bread ſtill by him upon the Stocks, ſaid to his men; Take him out of the Stocks, and let him break his faſt with you. Then they let him forth of the Stocks, but would not ſuffer him to eat with them, but called him Heretick. And he ſaid, he was as loth to be in their Company, as they were to be in his.

Hunter again refuſeth to recant his Faith in Chriſt.

After the brakefaſt the Biſhop ſent for William, and demanded whether he would recant or no. But William made him anſwer, how that he would never recant that which he had confeſſed before men, as concerning his Faith in Chriſt.

Then the Biſhop ſaid that he was no Chriſtian, but he denied the Faith in which he whs Baptized. But William anſwered; I was Baptized in the Faith of the Holy Trinity, the which I will not go from, God aſſiſting me with his Grace.

W. Hunter laid in the couvict Priſon with as many Irons as he could bear.

Then the Biſhop ſent him to the convict Priſon and commanded the Keeper to lay Irons upon him as many as he could bear: and moreover asked him, how old he was; and William ſaid that he was nineteen years old.

Well, ſaid the Biſhop, you will be burned ere you be 20. years old, if you will not yield your ſelf better than you have done yet. William anſwered, God ſtrengthen me in his Truth: and then he parted, and the Biſhop allowing him a half-penny a day to live on in Bread or drink.

Anno 1555.

Hunter allowed a half-penny a day to live on.

Thus he continued in Priſon three quarters of a year. In the which time he had been before the Biſhop five times, beſides the time when he was Condemned in the Conſiſtory in Pauls the 9. day of February: at the which time his Brother Robert Hunter was preſent, when and where I heard the Biſhop condemn him, and five other more.

These 5. were Tomkins, Piget, Knight, Hauks, and Laurence.

And then the Biſhop calling William, asked him if he would recant, and ſo read to him his Examination and confeſſion, as is above rehearſed, and then rehearſed how that William confeſſed that he did believe, that he received Chriſts Body ſpiritually, when he did receive the Communion. Doſt thou mean, quoth the Biſhop, that the Bread is Chriſts Body ſpiritually?

The Bread is Chriſts Body neither Spiritually, nor Bodily, but in receiving the Communion we feed on Chriſt ſpiritually in our Soul.

William anſwered; I mean not ſo, but rather when I receive the Holy Communion rightly and worthily, I do feed upon Chriſt ſpiritually through Faith in my Soul, and am made partaker of all the benefits which Chriſt hath brought unto all faithful Believers through his precious death, paſſion and reſurrection, and not that the Bread is his Body, either ſpiritually or corporally.

Then ſaid the Biſhop to William; Doſt thou not think (holding up his Cap) that for example here of my Cap, thou mayſt ſee the ſquarneſs and colour of it, and yet that not to be the Subſtance, which thou judgeſt by the Accidents?

The queſtion is not what God can do, but what he would have us to believe in his Holy Supper.

William anſwered; if you can ſeparate the Accidents from the Subſtance, and ſhew me the Subſtance without the Accidents, I could believe. Then ſaid the Biſhop, Thou wilt not believe that God can do any thing above mans capacity. Yes, ſaid William, I muſt needs believe that: for daily experience teacheth all men that thing plainly: but our queſtion is not what God can do, but what he will have us to learn in his holy Supper.

Then the Biſhop ſaid, I always have found thee at this point, and I ſee no hope in thee to reclaim thee unto the Catholick Faith, but thou wilt continue a corrupt number, and then pronounced Sentence upon him, how that he ſhould go from that place to Newgate for a time, and ſo from thence to Burntwood, where, ſaid he, thou ſhalt be burned.

A Sentence pronounced againſt William Hunter.

Then the Biſhop called for another, and ſo when he had condemned them all, he called for William Hunter, and perſwaded with him, ſaying if thou wilt yet recant, I will make thee a free man in the City, and give thee 40. pound in good money to ſet up thine occupation withal: or I will make thee Steward of my Houſe, and ſet thee in Office, for I like thee well, thou haſt wit enough, and I will preferr thee if thou recant.

The large Offer of B. Boner to W. Hunter.

But William anſwered, I thank you for your great offers: Notwithſtanding, my Lord, ſaid he, if you cannot perſwade my Conſcience with Scriptures, I cannot find in my heart to turn from God for the love of the World; for I count all things Worldly but loſs and dung, in reſpect of the Love of Chriſt.

W. Hunter refuſeth to come from Chriſt for the love of the World.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, if thou dieſt in this mind thou art Condemned for ever. William anſwered, God judgeth righteouſly, and juſtifieth them whom man condemneth unjuſtly.

W. Hunter ſent down to Burntwood to be burnt.

Thus William and the Biſhop departed, William and the reſt to Newgate, where they remained about a Month, which afterward were ſent down, William to Burntwood, and the others into divers places of the Countrey. Now when William was come down to Burntwood, which was the Saturday before the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary that followed on the Monday after, William remained till the Tueſday after, becauſe they would not put him to death then, for the holineſs of the day.

His Father and Mother come to comfort him.

In the mean time Williams Father and Mother came to him, and deſired heartily of God that he might continue to the end in that good way which he had begun, and his Mother ſaid to him, that ſhe was glad that ever ſhe was ſo happy to bear ſuch a Child, which could find in his heart to loſe his Life for Chriſts Names ſake.

His Father and Mother exhort him to be conſtant,

Then William ſaid to his Mother; For my little pain which I ſhall ſuffer, which is but a ſhort braid, Chriſt hath promiſed me, Mother (ſaid he) a Crown of Joy; may you not not be glad of that, Mother? With that his Mother kneeled down on her knees, ſaying, I pray God ſtrengthen thee my Son, to the end. Yea, I think thee as well beſtowed as any Child that ever I bare.

At the which words Mr. Higbed took her in his Arms, ſaying, I rejoyce (and ſo ſaid the others) to ſee you in this mind, and you have a good cauſe to rejoyce. And his Father and Mother both ſaid, that they were never of other mind, but prayed for him, that as he had begun to confeſs Chriſt before men, he likewiſe might ſo continue to the end. Williams Father ſaid, I was afraid of nothing but that my Son ſhould have been killed in the Priſon by hunger and cold, the Biſhop was ſo hard to him. But William confeſſed, after a Month that his Father was charged with his Boord, that he lacked nothing, but had meat and cloathing enough, yea, even out of the Court, both money, meat, cloaths, wood and coals, and all things neceſſary.

Mark here whether Bonner did nothing but by the Law.

Thus they continued in their Inn, being the Swan in Burntwood in a Parlor, whither reſorted many People of the Country to ſee thoſe good men which were there: and many of Williams Acquaintance came to him, and reaſoned with him, and he with them, exhorting them to come away from the abomination of Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry.

A notable thing concerning W. Hunters Dream.

Thus paſſing away Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, on Monday at night it hapned that William had a dream about two of the Clock in the Morning, which was this; How that he was at the place where the Stake was pitcht, where he ſhould be burned, which (as he thought in his Dream) was at the Towns end where the Butts ſtood, which was ſo indeed: and alſo he dreamed that he met with his Father as he went to the Stake, and alſo that there was a Prieſt at the Stake, which went about to have him recant.

To whom he ſaid (as he thought in his Dream) how that he bade him, away falſe Prophet, and how that he exhorted the People to beware of him, and ſuch as he was: which things came to paſs indeed. It hapned that William made a noiſe to himſelf in his Dream, which cauſed Mr. Higbed and the others to awake him out of his ſleep, to know what he lacked. When he awaked he told them his Dream in order, as is ſaid.

W. Hunter lead to the place of Martyrdom.

Now when it was day, the Sheriff Mr. Brocket called on to ſet forward to the burning of William Hunter. Then came the Sheriffs Son to William Hunter, and embraced him in his right Arm, ſaying, William, be not afraid of theſe men which are here preſent with Bows, Bills and Weapons, ready prepared to bring you to the place where you ſhall be burned. To whom William anſwered, I thank God I am not afraid; for I have caſt my count what it will coſt me already. Then the Sheriffs Son could ſpeak no more to him for weeping.

The Sheriffs Son giveth comfortable words to W. Hunter.

W. Hunters Dream verified.

Then William Hunter plucked up his Gown and ſtepped over the Parlor grounſeil, and went forward chearfully, the Sheriffs Servant taking him by one Arm, and his Brother by another, and thus going in the way, he met with his Father according to his Dream, and he ſpake to his Son, weeping and ſaying, God be with thee Son William: and William ſaid, God be with you good Father, and be of good comfort; for I hope we ſhall meet again when we ſhall be merry. His Father ſaid, I hope ſo William, and ſo departed. So William went to the place where the Stake ſtood, even according to his Dream, whereas all things were very unready. Then William took a wet Broom Fagot, and kneeled down thereon, and read the 51 Pſalm, till he came to theſe words, The Sacrifice of God is a contrite ſpirit, a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe.

His words to his Father.

Then ſaid Mr. Tyrill of the Braches, called William Tyrill, Thou lieſt (ſaid he) thou readeſt falſe; for the words are an humble ſpirit. But William ſaid, The Tranſlation ſaith a contrite heart. Yea, quoth Mr. Tyrill, the Tranſlation is falſe, ye tranſlate Books as ye liſt your ſelves, like Hereticks. Well, quoth William, there is no great difference in thoſe words. Then ſaid the Sheriff, Here is a Letter from the Queen. If thou wilt recant thou ſhalt live; if not, thou ſhalt be burned. No, quoth William, I will not recant, God willing. Then William roſe and went to the Stake, and ſtood upright to it. Then came one Richard Ponde a Bayliff, and made faſt the Chain about William.

Mr. William Tyrill of the Braches carpeth where he hath no cauſe.

W. Hunter refuſeth the Queens Pardon.

The burning of William Hunter, Martyr.

Then ſaid M. Brown, Here is not wood enough to burn a Leg of him. Then ſaid William, Good People pray for me; and make ſpeed and diſpatch me quickly: and pray for me while you ſee me alive, good People, and I will pray for you likewiſe.

Now, quoth Mr. Brown, pray for thee? I will pray no more for thee, than I will pray for a Dog. To whom William anſwered, Mr. Brown, now you have that which you fought for, and I pray God it be not laid to your charge in the laſt day: howbeit I forgive you. Then ſaid Mr. Brown, I ask no forgiveneſs of thee. Well, ſaid William, if God forgive you, I ſhall not require my Blood at your hands.

A dogged ſaying of Mr. Brown.

An external shew of Christs favour upon W. Hunter.

Then said William, Son of God shine upon me; and immediately the Sun in the Element shone out of a dark Cloud so full in his Face, that he was constrained to look another way: whereat the People mused, because it was so dark a little time afore. Then William took up a Fagot of Broom, and embraced it in his Arms.

The end and martyrdom of W. Hunter Anno 1555. March 26.

Williams Dream verified.

Then the Priest, which William dreamed of, came to his Brother Robert with a Popish Book to carry to William, that he might recant, which Book his Brother would not meddle withal.

Hunters words to a Popish Priest.

Then William seeing the Priest, and perceiving how he would have shewed him the Book, said, Away thou false Prophet. Beware of them, good People, and come away from their Abominations, lest that you be partakers of their Plagues. Then, quoth the Priest, look how thou burnest here, so shalt thou burn in Hell. William answered, Thou liest thou false Prophet; Away thou false Prophet, away.

Then was there a Gentleman which said, I pray God have mercy upon his Soul. The People said, Amen, Amen. Immediately fire was made.

Hunter comforted by his Brother Robert.

Then William cast his Psalter right into his Brothers hand, who said, William, think on the holy Passion of Christ, and be not afraid of Death.

And William answered, I am not afraid. Then lift he up his hands to Heaven, and said, Lord, Lord, Lord, receive my Spirit; and casting down his Head again into the smothering Smoak, he yielded up his Life for the Truth, sealing it with his Blood to the Praise of God.

Robert Hunter set in the Stocks.

Now by and by after, Mr. Brown commanded one old Hunt to take his Brother Robert Hunter, and lay him in the Stocks till he returned from the burning of Higbed at Hornden on the Hill, the same day. Which thing old Hunt did.

Robert Hunter had before Mr. Brown.

Then Mr. Brown (when Robert Hunter came before him) asked if he would do as his Brother had done. But Robert Hunter answered, If I do as my Brother hath done, I shall have as he hath had. Marry, quoth Mr. Brown, thou maist be sure of it.

Robert Hunter by Gods Providence delivered.

Then Mr. Brown said, I marvel that thy Brother stood so to his Tackling: and moreover, he asked Robert, if Williams Master of London were not at his burning. But Robert said, that he was not there; but Mr. Brown bare him in hand that his Master was there, and how that he did see him there, but Robert denied it. Then Mr. Brown commanded the Constable and Robert Hunter to go their ways home, and so had no further talk with them.

Here followeth the History of Mr. Higbed and Mr. Causton, two worthy Gentlemen of Essex, which for their sincere Confession of their Faith under Boner Bishop of London, were martyred and burned in Essex, Anno 1555.

March 26. The story of Mr. Higbed and Mr. Causton, Martyrs.

ALthough the Condemnation of Mr. Higbed and Mr. Causton followed after the Condemnation of those other Martyrs which were condemned with Tomkins and Hunter above mentioned, yet because the time of their Execution was before the burning of the foresaid four Martyrs, forsomuch that they suffered the same day that William Hunter did, which was the 26. of March, I thought therefore next after the Story of the said William Hunter, following the order of time, here to place the same.

This Master Higbed and Master Causton, two worshipful Gentlemen in the County of Essex, the one at Hornden of the Hill, the other of the Parish of Thundurst, being zealous and religious in the true Service of God; as they could not dissemble with the Lord their God, nor flatter with the World, so in time of blind Superstition and wretched Idolatry, they could not long lye hid and obscure in such a number of malignant Adversaries, Accusers, and Servants of this World, but at length they were perceived and detected to the foresaid Edmund Boner Bishop of London, peradventure not without the same organ which sent up William Hunter, as is above declared. By reason whereof, by commandment they were committed to the Officers of Colchester to be safely kept, and with them also a Servant of Thomas Causton, who in this praise of Christian Godliness was nothing inferiour to his Master.

Mr. Higbed and Mr. Causton detected to Boner.

Boner the foresaid Bishop, perceiving these two Gentlemen to be of worshipful Estate, and of great estimation in that Country, lest any tumult should thereby arise, came thither himself, accompanied with Mr. Fecknam and certain others, thinking to reclaim them to his faction and fashion: so that great labour and diligence was taken therein, as well by terrors and threatnings, as by large promises and flattering, and all fair means, to reduce them again to the Unity (as they termed it) of the Mother Church. Anno 1555.

Bp. Boner cometh himself to Colchester.

In fine, when nothing could prevail to make them assent to their doings, at length they came to this point, that they required certain respite to consult with themselves what was best to do. Which time of deliberation being expired, and they remained still constant and unmoveable in their professed Doctrine, and setting out also their confession in writing, the Bishop seeing no good to be done in tarrying any longer there, departed thence, and carried them both with him to London, and with them certain other Prisoners also, which about the same time in those quarters were apprehended.

Mr. Higbed and Mr. Causton carried to London.

It was not long after this, but these Prisoners being at London committed to streight Prison, and there attempted sundry ways by the Bishop and his Chaplains to revoke their Opinions: at length, when no perswasions would serve, they were brought forth to open examination at the Consistory in Pauls, the 17. day of February, Anno 1555. Where they were demanded as well by the said Bishop, as also by the Bishop of Bathe, and others, whether they would recant their Errors and perverse Doctrine (as they termed it) and so come to the Unity of the Popish Church. Which when they refused to do, the Bishop assigned them likewise the next day to appear again, being the 18. of February.

The first days Session.

On the which day, among many other things there said and passed, he read unto them severally certain Articles, and gave them respite until the next day to answer unto the same, and so committed them again to Prison. The Copy of which Articles hereunder followeth.

The second days Session.

Articles objected and ministred by Boner Bishop of London, severally against Thomas Causton, and Thomas Higbed of Essex.

Articles laid by Bp. Boner to Mr. Higbed and Causton.

FIrst, That thou Thomas Causton (or Thomas Higbed) hast been and art of the Diocese of London, and also of the Jurisdiction now of me Edmund Bishop of London.

Item, That thou wast in time past, according to the order of the Church of England, baptized and christened.

Item, That thou hadst Godfathers and Godmother, according to the said order.

Item, That the said Godfathers and Godmother did then promise for thee, and in thy Name, the Faith and Religion that then was used in the Realm of England.

Item, That that Faith and Religion, which they did profess and make for thee, was accounted and taken to be the Faith and Religion of the Church, and of the Christian People: And so was it in very deed.

Item, Thou coming to the age of discretion, that is to say, to the age of fourteen years, didst not mislike nor disallow that Faith, that Religion, or Promise then used and approved, and promised by the said Godfathers and Godmother, but for a time didst continue in it, as others (taking themselves for Christian people) did likewise.

Item, That at that time, and also before, it was taken for a Doctrine of the Church, Catholick and True, and every where in Christendom then allowed for Catholick and True, and to be the Profession of Christian men, to believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the Forms of Bread and Wine, after the Consecration, there was, and is by the Omnipotent Power and Will of Almighty God, and his Word, without any Substance of Bread and Wine there remaining, the true and natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ in Substance, which was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the Cross, really, truly, and in very deed.

The Real Presence.

Item, That at that time thy Father and Mother, all thine Ancestors, all thy Kindred, Acquaintance, and Friends, and thy said Godfathers and Godmother did then so believe believe, and think in all the ſame as the ſaid Church did therein believe.

Item, That thy ſelf haſt had no juſt cauſe or lawful ground to depart or ſwerve from the ſaid Religion or Faith, nor any occaſion at all, except thou wilt follow and believe the erroneous Opinion or Belief, that hath been againſt the common order of the Church, brought in by certain diſordered perſons of late, at the uttermoſt within theſe thirty or forty years laſt paſt.

Item, That thou doſt know, or credibly haſt heard, and doſt believe, that Dr. Robert Barnes, John Frith, Thomas Gerrard, Hierome Laſſels, Anne Askew, John Hooper late Biſhop of Gloceſter, Sir Laurence Sanders Prieſt, John Bradford, Sir John Rogers Prieſt, Sir Rowland Taylor Prieſt, Sir John Laurence Prieſt, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have been heretofore reputed, taken, and accounted as Hereticks, and alſo condemned as Hereticks, and ſo pronounced openly and manifeſtly; ſpecially in holding and believing certain damnable Opinions, againſt the Verity of Chriſts Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and all the ſame perſons, ſaving John Bradford, Sir John Laurence, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have ſuffered Pains of Death by Fire, for the maintenance and defence of their ſaid Opinions and Miſbelief.

Alſo Sir Edmund Boner Prieſt, before the death of Cromwel, to be of that opinion and was ſworn twice againſt the Pope.

Item, That thou doſt know, or credibly haſt heard, and doſt believe, that Thomas Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Nicholas Ridley, naming himſelf Biſhop of London, Robert Farrar late Biſhop of S. Davids, and Hugh Latimer ſometime Biſhop of Worceſter; have been, and are at this preſent reputed, accounted, and taken as Hereticks and Miſbelievers, in maintaining and holding certain damnable Opinions againſt the Verity of Chriſts Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Verity taken for Hereſie of miſbelieving Hereticks.

Item, That thou haſt commended and praiſed all the ſaid perſons, ſo erring and believing (or at the leaſtwiſe ſome of them) ſecretly, and alſo openly, taking and believing them to be Faithful and Catholick People, and their ſaid Opinions to be good and true, and the ſame to the beſt and uttermoſt of thy power thou haſt allowed, maintained, and defended at ſundry times.

Item, That thou having heard, known, and underſtood all the Premiſſes, thus to be as is aforeſaid, haſt not regarded all or any part thereof, but contrary to the ſame and every part thereof, haſt attempted and done, condemning, tranſgreſſing, and breaking the Promiſe, Faith, Religion, Order, and Cuſtome aforeſaid, and haſt become, and art an Heretick and Miſbeliever in the Premiſſes, denying the Verity of Chriſt Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and obſtinately affirming, That the Subſtance of the Material Bread and Wine are there remaining, and that the Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood, taken of the Virgin Mary, are not there in the ſaid Sacrament really and truly being.

Item, That all the Premiſſes be true, notorious, famous, and manifeſt, and that upon all the ſame, there have and be amongſt the ſad and good People of the City of London, and Dioceſs of the ſame, in great Multitude, commonly and publickly, a common and publick fame and opinion, and alſo in all places where thou haſt been, within the ſaid Dioceſs of London.

¶ Theſe Articles being given to them in writing by the Biſhop, the next day following was aſſigned to them to give up and exhibit their Anſwers unto the ſame.

The third days Seſſion upon the Examination of Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed.

The third Seſſion.

Upon the which day, being the firſt day of March, the ſaid Thomas Cauſton and Thomas Highed Gentlemen, being brought before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory, there exhibited their Anſwers to the Articles aforeſaid; the tenor of which Anſwers here followeth.

The Anſwers of Thomas Cauſton and Thomas Higbed; ſeverally made to the foreſaid Articles objected as before.

The Anſwers of the Martyrs to the Articles.

TO the firſt, they anſwer and confeſs the ſame to be true.

To the ſecond, they anſwer and believe the ſame to be true.

To the third, they anſwer and believe the ſame to be true.

To the fourth, they anſwer and think the ſame to be true.

To the fifth, until this clauſe (and ſo was it in very deed) they anſwer and believe the ſame to be true. And unto that clauſe (and ſo was it in very deed) they anſwer negatively, and believe that it was not in very deed.

To the ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth, they anſwer and believe the ſame to be true.

To the ninth, they anſwer and ſay, that they think they have a juſt and lawful cauſe and ground to ſwerve and go from the ſaid Faith and Religion, becauſe they have now read more Scripture, than either themſelves, or their Parents aud Kinſfolk, Godfathers or Godmothers have read or ſeen heretofore in that behalf.

To the tenth, they anſwer, ſay, and believe, that the ſaid perſons articulate have been named, taken, and counted for Hereticks, and ſo condemned for Hereticks: yet about three years paſt, they were taken for good Chriſtian Perſons. And forſomuch as theſe Reſpondents did never hear them preach concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, they ſay that they preached well, in that they ſaid and preached that Chriſt is not preſent really and truly in the Sacrament, but that there is remaining the Subſtance of Bread and Wine.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

To the eleventh, they anſwer and ſay, that howſoever other Folks do repute and take the ſaid perſons articulate, yet theſe Reſpondents themſelves did never, nor yet do ſo account and take them. And further they ſay, that in caſe the ſaid perſons articulate named in this Article have preached, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is very material Wine, and not the Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood under the Forms of Bread and Wine, then they preached well and truly; and theſe Reſpondents themſelves do ſo believe.

To the twelfth, they anſwer and ſay, that where other folk have diſpraiſed the ſaid perſons articulate, and diſallowed their Opinions, theſe Reſpondents (for ought that they at any time have heard) did like and allow the ſaid perſons, and their ſayings.

To the thirteenth, they anſwer and ſay, that they have not broken or condemned any promiſe made by their Godfathers and Godmothers for them at their Baptiſm, and that they are no Hereticks nor Miſbelievers, in that they believe that there remaineth only Bread and Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, and that Chriſts Natural Body is not there, but in Heaven; for they ſay, that the Scriptures ſo teach them.

To the fourteenth, they anſwer and believe, that the Premiſſes before by them confeſſed be true, notorious, and manifeſt.

After theſe Anſwers exhibited and peruſed, then the Biſhop ſpeaking unto them after this ſort, beginneth firſt (as he did ever before) with Thomas Cauſton. Becauſe ye ſhall not be ſuddenly trapped, and that men ſhall not ſay that I go about to ſeek ſnares to put you away: I have hitherto reſpited you, that you ſhould weigh and conſider with your ſelf your ſtate and condition, and that you ſhould, while ye have time and ſpace, acknowledge the Truth, and return to the Unity of the Catholick Church. Then the Biſhop, reading their former Articles and Anſwers to the ſame, asked them if they would recant: which when they denied, they were again diſmiſſed and commanded to appear the Wedneſday next after, at two of the Clock at Afternoon, there to receive their definitive Sentence againſt them: which thing (as it ſeemeth) was yet deferred.

A Copy of a Catholick Charity ſhewed.

Anno 1555.

Another Examination of Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed.

Another Examination.

THe next Friday, being the 8. day of March, the ſaid Thomas Cauſton was firſt called to examination before the Biſhop, Fecknam and Dr. Stempe being in his Palace, and there had read unto him his foreſaid Articles with his Anſwers thereunto, and after certain Exhortations to recant his former Profeſſion, and to be conformable to the Unity of their Church, they promiſed him (ſo doing) willingly to receive him again thereunto. To whom he anſwered, You go about to catch us in Snares and Gins. But mark, by what meaſure ye meaſure us, look you to be meaſured with the ſame again at Gods hands. The Biſhop ſtill perſwaded with him to recant. To whom he anſwered, No, I will not abjure. Ye ſaid that the Biſhops that were lately burned be Hereticks: but I pray God make me ſuch an Heretick as they were.

This Stempe is now Warden of the Colledge in Wincheſter.

Mr. Cauſton denieth to recant.

The Biſhop then leaving Mr. Cauſton, calleth for Mr. Higbed: uſing with him the like perſwaſions that he did with the other: But he anſwered, I will not abjure. For I have been of this mind and opinion that I am now, theſe ſixteen years, and do what ye can, ye ſhall do no more than God will permit you to do, and with what meaſure you meaſure us, look for the ſame again at Gods hands.

Mr. Higbed called forth, denieth to abjure.

Then Fecknam asked him his opinion in the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom he anſwered, I do not believe that Chriſt is in the Sacrament as ye will have him, which is of mans making: Both their anſwers thus ſeverally made, they were again commanded to depart for that time, and to appear the next day in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, between the hours of one and three of the Clock at Afternoon.

Mr. Fecknam ſtill buſie with the matter of the Sacrament.

The laſt appearance of Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed before Boner.

Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed appear again before the Biſhop.

AT which day and hour, being the ninth day of March, they were both brought thither: Where the Biſhop cauſed Mr. Thomas Cauſtons Articles and Anſwers firſt to be read openly, and after perſwaded with him to recant and abjure his Heretical Opinions, and to come home now at the laſt to their Mother the Catholick Church, and ſave himſelf.

Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed do exhibit a Confeſſion of their Faith.

But Mr. Thomas Cauſton anſwered again, and ſaid, No, I will not abjure: For I came not hither for that purpoſe; and therewithal did exhibit in writing unto the Biſhop (as well in his own name, as alſo in Thomas Higbeds name) a Confeſſion of their Faith, to the which they would ſtand: and required leave to read the ſame, which (after great ſuit) was obtained, and ſo he read it openly in the hearing of the People, as followeth.

The Confeſſion and Faith of Thomas Cauſton and Thomas Higbed, which they delivered to the Biſhop of London, before the Maior and Sheriffs, and in the Preſence of all the People there aſſembled, Anno 1555. the 9. of March, and were condemned for the ſame in the ſaid Conſiſtory in Pauls Church, the year and day aboveſaid.

The Confeſſion of Mr. Cauſton.

1. FIrſt, we believe and profeſs in Baptiſm, to forſake the Devil and all his Works and Pomps, and the Vanities of the wicked World, with all the ſinful Luſts of the Fleſh.

A renouncing of the world.

The Articles of the Creed.

2. We believe all the Articles of our Chriſtian Faith.

The Commandments.

3. We believe, that we are bound to keep Gods holy Will and Commandments, and to walk in the ſame all the days of our Life.

The Lords Prayer.

4. We believe, that there is contained in the Lords Prayer all things neceſſary both for Body and Soul, and that we are taught thereby to pray to our Heavenly Father, and no other Saint or Angel.

The Catholick Church.

5. We believe, that there is a Catholick Church, even the Communion of Saints, Built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles (as S. Paul ſaith) Chriſt being the Head Corner-ſtone. For the which Church Chriſt gave himſelf, to make it to himſelf a glorious Congregation without fault in his ſight.

The Church of it ſelf is ſinful, by imputation righteous.

6. We believe, that this Church of her ſelf, and by her own merits is ſinful, and muſt needs ſay, Father forgive us our ſins: but through Chriſt and his Merits, ſhe is freely forgiven: For he in his own perſon (ſaith S. Paul) hath purged her ſins, and made her faultleſs in his ſight. Beſides whom, there is no Saviour, ſaith the Prophet: Neither is there Salvation, ſaith S. Peter, in any other Name.

Chriſt our only Mediatour.

7. We believe, as he is our only Saviour, ſo he is our only Mediator. For the Apoſtle S. Paul ſaith, There is one God, one Mediatour between God and Man, even the Man Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore ſeeing none hath this Name, God and Man, but Jeſus Chriſt, therefore there is no Mediator but Jeſus Chriſt.

The condition of the Church, to be perſecuted.

8. We believe, that this Church of Chriſt is and hath been perſecuted, by the words of Chriſt, ſaying, As they have perſecuted me, ſo ſhall they perſecute you: For the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. For it is not only given unto you to believe in Chriſt, ſaith S. Paul, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. For all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer Perſecution.

The Church only is directed by Gods word, neither adding to, nor taking from.

9. We believe, that the Church of Chriſt teacheth the Word of God truly and ſincerely, putting nothing to, nor taking any thing from: and alſo doth miniſter the Sacraments according to the Primitive Church.

The true Church forbiddeth none to read the Scriptures.

10. We believe, that this Church of Chriſt ſuffereth all men to read the Scriptures, according to Chriſts Commandment, ſaying, Search the Scriptures; for they teſtifie of me. We read alſo out of the Acts, that when St. Paul preached, the Audience daily ſearched the Scriptures, whether he preached truly or no. Alſo the Prophet David teacheth all men to pray with underſtanding: For how ſhall the unlearned, ſaith S. Paul, ſay Amen, at the giving of Thanks, when they underſtand not what is ſaid? And what is more allowed than true Faith, which, S. Paul ſaith, cometh by hearing of the Word of God?

God only to be worſhipped after his word.

11. We believe, that the Church of Chriſt teacheth, that God ought to be worſhipped according to his Word, and not after the Doctrine of Men. For in vain, ſaith Chriſt, ye worſhip me, teaching nothing but the Doctrine of Men.

Gods Precepts to be followed, and not the Conſtitutions of men.

Alſo we are commanded of God by his Prophet, ſaying, Walk not in the Traditions and Precepts of your Elders: but walk, ſaith he, in my Precepts: do that I command you: put nothing thereunto, neither take any thing from it. Likewiſe ſaith Chriſt, You ſhall forſake Father and Mother, and follow me. Whereby we learn, that if our Elders teach otherwiſe than God commanded, in that Point we muſt forſake them.

The Lords Supper is not to be changed from the Inſtitution of Chriſt.

12. We believe, that the Supper of the Lord ought not to be altered and changed, foraſmuch as Chriſt himſelf, being the Wiſdom of the Father, did inſtitute it. For it is written, Curſed is he that changeth my Ordinances, and departeth from my Commandments, or taketh any thing from them.

The Lords Supper how many ways it is abuſed.

Now we find by the Scriptures, that this holy Supper is ſore abuſed.

First, In that it is given in one kind, where Chriſt gave it in both.

The 2. abuſe.

Secondly, In that it is made a Private Maſs, where Chriſt made it a Communion: for he gave it not to one alone, but to all the Apoſtles in the name of the whole Church.

The 3. abuſe.

Thirdly, In that it is made a Sacrifice for the quick and the dead, whereas Chriſt ordained it for a remembrance of the everlaſting Sacrifice, which was his own Body offered upon the Altar of the Croſs once for all, as the holy Apoſtle ſaith, Even the full and perfect price of our Redemption: and where there is remiſſion of ſin (ſaith he) there is no more ſacrifice for ſin.

The 4. abuſe.

Fourthly, In that it is worſhipped contrary to the Commandment, ſaying, Thou ſhalt worſhip nothing that is made with hands.

The 5. abuſe.

Fifthly, In that it is given in an unknown Tongue, whereby the People are ignorant of the right uſe thereof, how Chriſt died for our ſins, and roſe again for our juſtification, by whom we be ſet at peace with God, and received to his favour and mercy by his promiſe, whereof this Sacrament is a ſure Seal and Witneſs.

The 6. abuſe.

Beſides this, it is hanged up, and ſhut in a box, yea, many times ſo long, that Worms breed in it, and ſo

Anno 1555.

ſo it putrifieth: whereby the rude People have an occaſion to ſpeak unreverently thereof, which otherwiſe would ſpeak reverently.

Therefore they that thus abuſe it, bring up the ſlander, and not we, which pray daily to God to reſtore it to the right uſe, according to Chriſts Inſtitution.

Chriſts words, Hoc eſt corpus meum not denied, but expounded.

Now concerning Chriſts words, This is my Body, we deny them not; but we ſay, that the mind of Chriſt in them muſt be ſearched out by other open Scriptures, whereby we may come to the ſpiritual underſtanding of them, which ſhall be moſt to the Glory of God: For as the H. Apoſtle ſaith; There is no Scripture that hath any private Interpretation. Beſides this, the Scriptures are full of the like figurative ſpeeches: as for example: Chriſt ſaith, This Cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood. The Rock is Chriſt (ſaith S. Paul.) Whoſoever receiveth a Child in my name (ſaith our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) receiveth me.

This phraſe of Scripture expounded by other phraſes.

Which Sentences muſt not be underſtood after the Letter, leſt we do err, as the Capernaites did, which thought that Chriſts Body ſhould have been eaten with their teeth, when he ſpake of the eating thereof. Unto whom Chriſt ſaid, Such a fleſhly eating of my Body profiteth nothing: it is the Spirit (ſaith our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) that quickneth; the Fleſh profiteth nothing: for my words are Spirit and Life.

The words of the Sacrament ought to be taken ſpiritually, and not literally. Chriſt is to be eaten ſpiritually.

Thus we ſee that Chriſts Words muſt be underſtood ſpiritually, and not literally. Therefore he that cometh to this worthy Supper of the Lord, muſt not prepare his Jaw, but his Heart, neither Tooth nor Belly; but, Believe (ſaith S. Auguſtine) and thou haſt eaten it: ſo that we muſt bring with us a ſpiritual hunger, and as the Apoſtle ſaith; Try and examine our ſelves, whether our Conſcience do teſtifie unto us, that we do truly believe in Chriſt, according to the Scriptures; whereof if we be truly certified, being new born from our old Converſation in Heart, Mind, Will, and Deed, then may we boldly with this Marriage Garment of our Faith come to the Feaſt.

The Subſtance of Bread not changed.

In Conſideration whereof we have invincible Scriptures, as of Chriſt himſelf; This do in remembrance of me. And S. Paul; As often (ſaith he) as ye eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup; ye ſhall remember the Lords death untill he come. Here is no change, but Bread ſtill. And Saint Luke affirmeth the ſame. Alſo Chriſt hath made a juſt promiſe, ſaying; Me you ſhall not have always with you; I leave the World, and go to my Father: For if I ſhould not depart, the comforter which I will ſend, cannot come unto you. So according to his promiſe he is aſcended as the Evangeliſts teſtifie. Alſo Saint Peter ſaith, That Heaven ſhall keep him untill the laſt day alſo.

Chriſts Body but in one place at once.

Now as touching his Omnipotent Power, we confeſs and ſay with S. Auguſtine, that Chriſt is both God and Man. In that he is God, he is every where; but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven, and can occupie but one place: whereunto the Scriptures do agree. For his Body was not in all places at once when he was here; for it was not in the Grave when the Woman ſought it, as the Angel ſaith: neither was it at Bethania where Lazarus died, by Chriſts own words, ſaying, I am glad I was not there. And thus we conclude with the Scriptures, that Chriſt is in his Holy Supper Sacramentally and Spiritually in all them that worthily receive it, and Corporally in Heaven, both God and Man.

Their proteſtation.

And further, we make here our Proteſtation before God (whom we call to record in this matter) that this which we have ſaid, is neither of ſtubborneſs, nor wilful mind, as ſome judge of us; but even of very Conſcience, truly (we truſt) grounded on Gods Holy Word. For before we took this matter in hand, we beſought God from the bottom of our Hearts, that we might do nothing contrary to his Holy and Bleſſed Word. And in that he hath thus ſhewed his Power in our weakneſs, we cannot worthily praiſe him, unto whom we give hearty thanks, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed conſtant to death in their Confeſſion.

When he had thus delivered and read their Confeſſion, the Biſhop ſtill perſiſting ſometime in fair promiſes, ſometime threatning to pronounce Judgment, asked them whether they would ſtand to this their Confeſſion and other Anſwers? To whom Cauſton ſaid, Yea, we will ſtand to our Anſwers written with our hands, and to our Belief therein contained. After which anſwer the Biſhop began to pronounce Sentence againſt him.

Then he ſaid, that it was much raſhneſs, and without all Love and Mercy to give Judgment without anſwering to their Confeſſion by the Truth of Gods Word, whereunto they ſubmitted themſelves moſt willingly. And therefore I, quoth Cauſton (becauſe I cannot have Juſtice at your hand, but that ye will thus raſhly condemn me) do appeal from you to my L. Cardinal.

M. Cauſton appealeth to the Cardinal.

Then D. Smith ſaid, that he would anſwer their Confeſſion. But the Biſhop (not ſuffering him to ſpeak) willed Harpsfield to ſay his mind, for the ſtay of the people; who taking their Confeſſion in his hand, neither touched nor anſwered one ſentence thereof.

D. Smith ready to anſwer their Confeſſion, but could not be ſuffered.

Which done, the Biſhop pronounced Sentence, firſt againſt the ſaid Thomas Cauſton, and then calling Thomas Higbed, cauſed his Articles and Anſwers likewiſe to be read. In the reading whereof Higbed ſaid, Ye ſpeak Blaſphemy againſt Chriſts Paſſion, and ye go about to trap us with your ſubtilties and ſnares. And though my Father and Mother, and other my Kinsfolk did believe, as you ſay, yet they were deceived in ſo believing.

Sentence pronounced againſt Mr. Cauſton and Mr. Higbed.

And further, where you ſay, that my Lord, named Cranmer (late Archbiſhop of Canterbury) and others ſpecified in the ſaid Articles, be Hereticks; I do wiſh that I were ſuch an Heretick as they were, and be. Then the Biſhop asked him again, whether he would turn from his Error, and come to the Unity of their Church? To whom he ſaid, No; I would ye ſhould recant: for I am in the Truth, and you in Error.

Well (quoth the Biſhop) if ye will return, I will gladly receive you.

No, ſaid Higbed, I will not return as you will have me, to believe in the Sacrament of the Altar your God.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed condemned and ſent to Newgate.

Whereupon the Biſhop proceeded, and gave Judgment upon him, as he had done before upon Thomas Cauſton. When all this was thus ended, they were both delivered to the Sheriffs, and ſo by them ſent to Newgate, where they remained by the ſpace of 14. days, praiſed be God, not ſo much in Afflictions as in Conſolations.

For the increaſe whereof they earneſtly deſired all their good Brethren and Siſters in Chriſt to pray, that God for his Sons ſake would go forth with that great mercy, which already he had begun in them, ſo that they might perſevere unto the end, to the praiſe of the eternal God, and comfort of all their Brethren.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed brought from Newgate into Eſſex.

Theſe 14. days (after the condemnation) once expired, they were the 23. day of this Month of March fetched from Newgate at four of the Clock in the morning, and ſo led through the City to Algate, where they were delivered unto the Sheriff of Eſſex, and there being faſt bound in a Cart, were ſhortly after brought to their ſeveral appointed places of burning: that is to ſay, Thomas Higbed to Hornden on the Hill, and Thomas Cauſton to Rayly (both in the Countrey of Eſſex) where they did moſt conſtantly, the 26. day of the ſame Month, Seal this their Faith with ſhedding of their Blood by moſt cruel fire, to the Glory of God, and great rejoycing of the Godly.

The conſtant Martyrdom of M. Thomas Cauſton, and M. Higbed, Martyrs.

At the burning of which M. Higbed Juſtice Brown was alſo preſent, as is above ſpecified, and divers Gentlemen in the Shire were commanded to be preſent, for fear belike, leſt they ſhould be taken from them. And thus much touching the Apprehenſion, Examination, Confeſſion, Condemnation, and burning of theſe two Godly and conſtant Martyrs of God.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and John Laurence, with their Examination and conſtant Martyrdom.

March 28.

IN the ſtory before of Thomas Tomkins and his fellows, mention was made of ſix which were Examined, and Condemned together by Biſhop Boner, the 9. day of February. Of the which ſix Condemned Perſons, two, which were Tomkins and William Hunter (as ye heard) were executed, the one upon the 26. of February, and the other upon the 26. day of March. Other three, to wit, William Pygot, and Stephen Knight, ſuffered upon the 28. day, and John Laurence the 29. of the ſaid Month of March.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, John Laurence, Martyrs.

Touching

Touching the which three Martyrs, now ſomthing to ſay of their Examinations: It was firſt demanded of them, what their opinion was of the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto they ſeverally anſwered, and alſo ſubſcribed, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Subſtance of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, but a ſpecial partaking of the Body and Blood of Chriſt: the very Body and Blood of Chriſt being only in Heaven, and no where elſe. This Anſwer thus made, the Biſhop cauſed certain Articles to be read unto them, tending to the ſame effect, as did the Articles before of Tomkins and of M. Cauſton. The tenor whereof here followeth.

Articles or Interrogatories objected by the Biſhop of London to William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and John Laurence, the 8. of February. 1555.

Articles objected to William Pygot and his fellows.

WHether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe, that it is a Catholick, Faithful, Chriſtian, and true Doctrine, to teach, preach, and ſay, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is without any Subſtance of Bread and Wine there remaining, by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God, and his Holy Word, really, truly, and in very deed the true and natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, the ſelf ſame in Subſtance (though not in outward form and appearance) which was born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſs, yea, or nay?

Belief of their forefathers.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe, that your Parents, Kinſfolk, Friends, and Acquaintance, here in this preſent Realm of England, before your Birth a great while, and alſo after your Birth, profeſſing and believing the ſaid Doctrine and Faith, concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, had a true Chriſtian Faith, and were Faithful and true Chriſtian People, or no?

Belief of their Godfathers and Godmothers.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe that your Godfathers and Godmother, profeſſing and believing the ſaid Doctrine and Faith, concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, had a true Chriſtian Faith, and were Faithful and true Chriſtian People, or no?

Belief of their young Age.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe, that your own ſelf in times paſt, being of the Age of 14. years, and above, did think and believe concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar in all points, as your ſaid Parents, Kinſfolks, Friends, Acquaintance, Godfathers, and Godmother, did then think and believe them, or no?

Belief of the King and Queen, and Nobility.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe, that our Soveraigns the King and the Queen of this Realm of England, and all the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realm, profeſſing and believing the ſaid Doctrine and Faith, as other Chriſtian Realms do, concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, have a true Chriſtian Faith and believe as the Catholick and true Church of Chriſt hath always believed, preached, and taught, or no?

Belief of the preſent Catholick Church.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly believe, that our Saviour Chriſt and his Holy Spirit hath been, is, and ſhall be with his Catholick Church, even to the Worlds End, governing and ruling the ſame in all things, eſpecially in the neceſſary points of Chriſtian Religion, not ſuffering the ſame to err, or to be deceived therein?

The Real Preſence and Tranſubſtantiation.

Whether is it true, that you being ſuſpected, or infamed to be culpable and faulty in ſpeaking againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and againſt the very true Preſence of Chriſts Natural Body, and the Subſtance thereof in the ſaid Sacrament, and thereupon called before me upon complaint made to me againſt you, have not been a good ſpace in my Houſe, having freely Meat and Drink, and alſo divers times inſtructed and informed, aſwell by one being our Ordinary, as alſo by my Chaplains and divers other learned men, ſome whereof were Biſhops, ſome Deans, and ſome Archdeacons, and every one of them learned in Divinity, and minding well unto you, and deſiring the ſafeguard of your Soul, and that you ſhould follow and believe the Doctrine of the Catholick Church as afore concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, and whether you did not at all times ſince your ſaid coming to me, utterly refuſe to follow and believe the ſaid Doctrine concerning the ſaid Sacrament?

Whether can you now find in your heart and conſcience to conform your ſelf in all points to the ſaid Faith and Catholick Church concerning the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, faithfully, truly, and plainly, without any diſſimulation, believing therein, as our ſaid Soveraigns, with the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realm, and other Chriſtian Realms: and other perſons aforeſaid, and alſo the ſaid Catholick Church, have and do believe in that behalf? Anno 1556.

In caſe you ſo cannot, what ground have you to maintain your opinion, and who is of the ſame opinion with you, and what conference have you had therein with any, what comfort and what relief have you had therein by any of them, and what are their Names and Surnames, and their dwelling places?

Their Anſwers to theſe Articles were not much diſcrepant from Tomkins, and other like Martyrs above mentioned, as here followeth to be ſeen.

The Anſwers of Stephen Knight, and William Pygot, to the aforeſaid Articles.

Anſwers to the Articles aforeſaid.

TO the firſt Article, they believe, that the contents of this Article is not agreeable to Scripture.

To the ſecond, they anſwer and believe, that their Parents and other expreſſed in the ſaid Article, and ſo believing as is contained in the ſame, were deceived.

To the third they anſwer, that they ſo believed, but they were deceived therein, as they now believe.

To the fourth they ſay, that they have heretofore believed as is contained in the ſaid Article, but now they do not ſo believe.

To the fifth they ſay, that if they ſo believe, they are deceived.

To the ſixth, they believe the ſame to be true.

To the ſeventh they anſwer, and believe the contents of the ſame to be true.

To the eighth they anſwer, that they can no whit conform themſelves to the Faith and Doctrine contained and ſpecified in this Article, untill it be proved by Scripture.

To the ninth they ſay, that they have no ground to maintain their ſaid opinions, but the Truth, which (as they ſaid) hath been perſwaded by Learned Men, as D. Taylor of Hadley, and ſuch other.

Theſe Anſwers being made and exhibited, they were commanded to appear again the next day, at eight of the Clock in the Morning, and in the mean while to bethink themſelves what they would do.

Another appearance of the ſaid Priſoners before Boner.

Another appearance.

THe next day in the Morning, being the 9. of February, before their open appearance, the Biſhop ſent for William Pygot, and Stephen Knight into his great Chamber in his Palace, where he perſwaded with them to recant, and deny their former Profeſſion.

Who anſwered, that they were not perſwaded in their Conſciences to return and abjure their opinions, whereunto they had ſubſcribed. Within a while after, they were all three (with Thomas Tomkins, and William Hunter aforenamed) brought openly into the Conſiſtory, the 9. day of February aforeſaid, and there had the ſame Articles propounded unto them, which were before propounded unto the foreſaid Thomas Tomkins (as appeareth in the diſcourſe of his Hiſtory) and thereto alſo ſubſcribed theſe words; I do ſo believe.

Talk between Boner and John Laurence Prieſt. John Laurence ſometime a Frier.

The Biſhop alſo uſed certain talk unto John Laurence only; Whereunto he anſwered in this manner; that he was a Prieſt, and was conſecrated and made a Prieſt about 18. years paſt, and that he was ſometime a Black Frier profeſſed; that alſo he was aſſured unto a maid, whom he intended to have married.

And being again demanded his opinion upon the Sacrament, he ſaid, that it was a remembrance of Chriſts Body, and that many have been deceived in believing the true Body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, and that all ſuch as do not believe as he doth, do err. And after this talk and other fair words and threatnings, they were all of them commanded to appear again at afternoon,

The third and laſt appearance.

The third and laſt appearance.

AT the which hour they came thither again, and there after the accuſtomed manner were exhorted to recant and revoke their Doctrine, and receive the Faith. To the which they conſtantly anſwered they would not, but would ſtick to that Faith that they had declared and ſubſcribed unto, for that they did believe that it was no Error which they believed; but that the contrary thereof was very Hereſie.

Stephen Knight, William Pygot, and John Laurence condemned.

When the Biſhop ſaw that neither his fair flatterings, nor yet his cruel threatnings would prevail, he gave them ſeverally their Judgments. And becauſe John Laurence had been one of their anointed Prieſts, he was by the Biſhop there (according to their order) ſolemnly degraded, the manner whereof you may ſee in the Hiſtory of Mr. Hooper afore-paſſed.

John Laurence degraded.

Their Sentence of Condemnation, and this Degradation once ended, they were committed unto the cuſtody of the Sheriffs of London, who ſent them unto Newgate, where they remained with joy together, until they were carried down into Eſſex, and there the 28. day of March, the ſaid William Pygot was burned at Braintree; and Stephen Knight at Mauldon, who at the Stake, kneeling upon the ground, ſaid this Prayer which here followeth.

The Prayer that Stephen Knight, ſaid at his death upon his Knees, being at the Stake, at Mauldon.

A godly prayer of Ste. Knight at his Martyrdom.

O Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for whoſe love I leave willingly this Life, and deſire rather the bitter death of thy Croſs, with the loſs of all earthly things, than to abide the Blaſphemy of thy moſt Holy Name, or to obey men in breaking thy holy Commandment: Thou ſeeſt, O Lord, that where I might live in Worldly Wealth to worſhip a falſe God, and honour thine enemy, I chooſe rather the torment of the Body, and the loſs of this Life, and have counted all things but vile, duſt, and dung, that I might win thee; which death is dearer unto me, than thouſands of Gold and Silver. Such love, O Lord, haſt thou laid up in my Breaſt, that I hunger for thee, as the Deer that is wounded deſireth the Soyl. Send thy holy comforter, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and ſtrengthen this weak piece of earth, which is empty of all ſtrength of it ſelf. Thou remembreſt, O Lord, that I am but duſt, and able to do nothing that is good: Therefore, O Lord, as of thine accuſtomed goodneſs and love thou haſt bidden me to this banquet, and accounted me worthy to drink of thine own Cup amongſt thine elect; even ſo give me ſtrength, O Lord, againſt this thine Element, which as to my ſight it is moſt irkſom and terrible, ſo to my mind it may at thy Commandment (as an obedient ſervant) be ſweet and pleaſant, that through the ſtrength of thy holy Spirit, I may paſs through the rage of this fire into thy boſom, according to thy promiſe, and for this mortal receive an immortal, and for this corruptible put on incorruption: Accept this burnt Sacrifice, and Offering, O Lord, not for the Sacrifice, but for thy dear Sons ſake my Saviour, for whoſe Teſtimony I offer this free-Will-offering with all my heart and with all my Soul. O Heavenly Father, forgive me my Sins, as I forgive all the World. O ſweet Son of God my Saviour, ſpread thy wings over me. O Bleſſed and Holy Ghoſt, through whoſe merciful inſpiration I am come hither, conduct me into everlaſting Life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit. Amen.

The death and Martyrdom of John Laurence Prieſt.

John Laurence Martyr March 29.

THe next day, being the 29. day of this Month, the ſaid John Laurence was brought to Colcheſter, and there being not able to go (for that as well his legs were ſore worn with heavy irons in Priſon, as alſo his Body weakned with evil keeping) was born to the fire in a Chair, and ſo ſitting, was in his conſtant faith conſumed with fire.

Jo. Laurence lamed with irons in Priſon.

The Martyrdom of John Laurence, Prieſt, at Colcheſter, Anno 1555.

At the burning of this Laurence, he ſitting in the fire the young Children came about the fire, and cried, as well as young Children could ſpeak, ſaying; Lord ſtrengthen thy Servant, and keep thy promiſe, Lord ſtrengthen thy Servant, and keep thy promiſe: which thing, as it is rare, ſo it is no ſmall manifeſtation of the Glory of God, which wrought this in the hearts of theſe little ones; nor yet a little commendation to their Parents, which from their youth brought them up in the knowledge of God and his Truth.

The Hiſtory of Dr. Robert Farrar, Biſhop of S. Davids in Wales, who moſt conſtantly gave his Life for the Teſtimony of the Truth, March 30. Anno 1555.

THe next day after, which was the 30. day of the ſaid Month of March, followed the worthy and conſtant Martyrdom

The burning of D. Robert Farrar, Bishop of S. Davids, and Martyr.

56. Articles against Bishop Farrar in K. Edwards time, devised by Thomas Young, Constantine, and other his Adversaries.

Tho. Young Son in law to Constantine.

Martyrdom of the Bishop of S. Davids in Wales, called Robert Farrar, who was the next Bishop in this Catalogue of Christian Martyrs, that suffered after Mr. Hooper. This aforesaid Farrar, by the favour and good will of the Lord Protector, was first called and promoted to that Dignity. This man I may well call twice a Martyr, not only for the cruel death of the fire, which he suffered most constantly in the days of Q. Mary, unto the shedding of his Blood, but also for divers other injuries and molestations in K. Edwards time, which he no less firmly than unworthily sustained at the hands of his enemies after the fall of the Duke of Somerset, Of these his vexations and troubles, with the wrangling Articles and Informations laid against him, to the number of 56. and of the malice conceived against him by certain covetous Canons of the Church of Carmarthen, and what were the proceedings of both parts, as well of the innocent, as of the crafty Adversaries, and what were their Names, in their Articles against him, in order here followeth.

The Principal Articles against Bishop Farrar.

1. GEorge Constantine, David Walter his Servant, Thomas Young Chaunter of the Cathedral Church, who was afterward Archbishop of York, Rowland Merick Doctor of Law, who was afterward Bishop of Bangor, Thomas Lee, and Hugh Rawlins, &c.

THrough the procurement and instance of these his Adversaries, joyning and confederating together, one Hugh Rawlins Priest, and Thomas Lee Brother in Law to the said George Constantine, did exhibit to the Kings most honourable Counsel certain Articles and Informations, conceived and devised by the persons before named, to the intent to blemish the Bishops credit, and utterly (as they thought and made their boast) to pull him from his Bishoprick, and to bring him in a Premunire. The Copy of which Articles we thought here good to express, and so after them to set his answers to the same.

Articles and Informations to the Kings Honourable Counsel, put up and exhibited by Hugh Rawlins and Thomas Lee, against the Blessed Man of God, Master Farrar Bishop of S. Davids.

Abuse of the Authority to him committed.

1. IMprimis, when the said Bishop first came to his Diocess, he appointed his Chancellor by his Letters of Commission, omitting the Kings Majesties Stile and Authority, and grounded his said Commission upon foraign usurped Laws and Authority; by force of which Authority his said Chancellor did visit certain Deanaries of his said Diocess, and monished the Chaunter and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of S. Davids aforesaid, against a certain day and place, for like intent and purpose, contrary to the Kings Highness Laws and Statutes, and in derogation of his Highness Supremacy.

2. Item, that the said Chaunter and Chapter, perceiving the fault of the said Commission, took the same from the Register into their custody, refusing to appear by vertue thereof, and by secret and charitable ways and means did admonish the said Bishop of the unlawfulness and faults of the said Commission, and of the danger that he had incurred for granting and executing the same; opening also unto him the effect of the Statute made in the 28. year of our late Soveraign Lord Henry the 8. Which Monitions notwithstanding, the said Bishop neglecting the same, and continuing in his malicious doing or inexcusable ignorance, about the 20. day of August, in the fourth year of the Reign of our Soveraign Lord that now is, did confer unto one John Evans the Vicarage of Pembrin, instituting him by Authority of the old forraign usurped Law, making no mention of the Kings Highness Authority, in contempt and derogation of the same.

3. Item, whereas the Chancellor and Vicar General to the said Bishop, did upon a lawful Title, and by the Kings Highness Supream Authority, admit and institute one John Gough into the Rectory of Haskard with the appurtenances, and gave out in the Kings Name under his Highness Seal Ecclesiastical appointed for that Office, with the Teste of the said Bishop, and subscription of the said Chancellour, a Mandate to induct accordingly; by vertue whereof the said John Gough was inducted by the Official there, into the real possession of the same Rectory, with the rights and appurtenances to the same belonging; whereupon the Register of the said Diocess, at the request of the foresaid Chancellor did signifie the premisses, with all the circumstances, before divers persons to the forenamed Bishop: Who notwithstanding did institute and cause to be inducted one Harry Goddard unto the same Parsonage, making no mention of the Kings Majesties Authority nor Supremacy; in contempt and derogation of the same his Highness Crown and Dignity, and in extolling the forraign usurped Authority, contrary to the form of the Statute, &c.

Anno 1555.

4. Item, the said Bishop, immediately after the unlawful Institution and Induction of Goddard aforesaid, molested the said John Gough, lawfully instituted and inducted as before, citing him from place to place, objecting no matter unto him of long season, till at length he articled. Among which Articles was contained, Item, interrogatur quo titulo tenet Rectoriam de Haskard: So taking upon him the cognition of the Title of the whole fruits and Patronage, in contempt of the Kings Highness Regal Crown and Dignity, and in derogation of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

5. Item, He hath commonly made his Collations and Institutions, as he did his first Commission, in his own name and Authority, without expressing the Kings Supremacy.

6. Item, He made under his Seal one Collation, two Institutions, and three Mandates to induct, in one vacation of one Benefice, three several persons, without order of Law, or revocation of any of them, giving to every one like Authority, Title, and Right. Whereby, except good foresight, as well of Justices of the Peace, as of the Friends had not been, there had insued much inconvenience amongst the partakers of the intituled Incumbents in that behalf.

7. Item, the said Bishop decreeing Caveats to be made in Benifices, thereby knowing the Titles Litigious, instituted and caused to be inducted without Trial of any Title or due order of Law.

8. Item, He directeth his Mandates of Induction unto private men, and not to the Archdeacons nor their Officials; contrary to the Law and Custom used in that behalf. Notwithstanding he hath been Counselled to the contrary of men that be learned.

9. Item, having no manner of knowledge nor practice in the Law, he sitteth every day in Harvest, and other times, upon causes without assistance of learned in the Law, having with him only an unlearned Boy, which is no Notary, to his Scribe, neither observing the Law, nor yet reasonable order. And therefore doth no good, but trifleth the time, as may appear by his Acts, if he have them to be shewed.

10. Item, He and his Officers, by his knowledge, useth to dispense with Marriages, to be Solemnized without Banes, contrary to the Laws and Ordinances in that behalf.

11. Item, Whereas one Thomas Prichard, a Chaplain of his, solemnized Matrimony in a private House without Banes, and that betwixt a Priest, and a Sister of hers that was appointed to be married with the said Priest that day; he also being a Parson, and leaving his Cure unserved that day being Sunday: and notwithstanding that one of the Kings Councel in the Marches of Wales informed the said Bishop of the same Misdemeanours, requiring due reformation thereof, He hath done nothing therein but put the same Chaplain in Office, and made him his Commissary General since that time, bearing a special favour to the rest of the offenders.

12. Item, Whereas one Meredith ap Thomas, his Houshold-servant, was accused of one Sage Hugh, to have been Father of her Child; the said Bishop, without purgation of his Servant, caused him to sue the Parents of the said Sage of Infamy, first in his principal Consistory, and from thence before a Commissary of his, being his Houshold Chaplain, and at the last took the matter before himself, so railing against all his Officers, because they proceeded not after his partial affection, and against the

the Law, that honeſt men of Carmarthen, where he then ſate upon the Cauſe, judge him to be, or at the leaſt to have been diſtract of his wit, and by this partial handling, the Cauſe remaineth unfiniſhed, and the Child without Father.

13. Item, Whereas one Jenkin Ph. accuſed William Chambers, a Servant of the Biſhops that found this William in adulterous manner with his Wife, by reaſon whereof the Biſhop expelled the Wife out of his Houſe, the ſaid Infamy not purged, the parties have been both again in the Biſhops Houſe and Service ſince that time, to the evil example of other.

14. Item, By his unlawful ſequeſtration of the fruits of the Benefices of Langattock, and Lamyhangel, by the undiſcreet handling of the ſame, there were raiſed the number of four hundred people or more, which bickered ſundry times together, to the great danger of the Inhabitants thereabout, had it not been pacified by the diſcreet means of Sir Roger Vaughan Knight.

15. Item, By his like unlawful collation of the Prebend of Lambiſter to one Stephen Green, a Chaplain of his, by covenant and promiſe to maintain the Sute, by whoſe crafty and undiſcreet handling of the ſame, there was raiſed in the Country of Radnor the 19. day of Auguſt laſt paſt, about three or four hundred men to like danger, but that the matter was ſtayed by John Bradſhaw, Rice ap Glin, and Stephen ap Rice, Juſtices of the ſame County. Who with great danger to themſelves and theirs, pacified the matter, committing an hundred of the offenders to ward.

16. Item, ſuch as he oweth diſpleaſure unto, he citeth from place to place, and day to day, only for their vexation, laying no matter againſt them; and being divers times required the Copy of his proceedings againſt them, to the intent they might anſwer accordingly, and be at their lawful defence; he denied to all ſuch perſons the Copies of his proceedings.

17. Item, He and his Officers wink at the manifeſt and open crimes of his Fautors and Adherents, to the evil example of the whole Dioceſs, and abuſeth the Cenſures of Excommunication and Suſpenſion, making it an Inſtrument of revenging againſt ſuch as they do not favour.

18. Item, Having received payment of the Kings Majeſties Subſidy, due in October, the 4. year of his Graces Reign, of the foreſaid Chaunter of the Cathedral Church of S. Davids, and Rowland Meyrike, two of the Reſidentaries there, before Chriſtmas laſt, he unjuſtly of a prepenſed mind and purpoſe afterward certified them for Recuſants, to their undoing, if they had not been admoniſhed of his cruel purpoſe, and provided lawful defence for the ſame.

19. Item, The ſaid Biſhop celebrating Matrimony in his own perſon, diſpenſed contrary to the Book of Ordinance, with the parties married, for not receiving the holy Communion; the parties both being young, and luſty perſons, having no reaſonable cauſe wherefore they ſhould abſtain. At which celebration the Biſhop Communicated not himſelf. And further, the Communion was celebrated by a Chaplain of his, with ſuperſtitious blowings, kneelings, and knockings both of the Chaplain that Miniſtred, and of all the company, onely one other Prieſt Communicating for the manner.

Maintenance of Superſtition contrary to the Kings Ordinance and Injunctions.

20. Item, Where the Official of the Archdeacon of Carmarthen, in his viſitation within Carmarthen, found, contrary unto the ſaid Ordinance, an Altar ſet up in the Body of the Church, for celebration of the Communion, and cauſed the ſaid Altar to be taken away, and a table to be ſet in the middle of the Church; the Biſhop after the ſame commanded the Vicar of Carmarthen to ſet the Table without the Chancel again for the Miniſtration of the Communion.

21. Item, He being often in Carmarthen, and other places in the Chancel at the time of holy Communion, not only tarried there himſelf, neither Communicating nor Miniſtring bareheaded and uncoyffed, reverently kneeling; but alſo permitteth the people there to continue, the Chancel and Quire full, kneeling and knocking their Breaſts. Which manner is yet uſed in all the Dioceſs, without any reformation or gainſay of him or any of his Officers.

22. Item, Whereas ſuperſtitious praying upon beads is not only ungodly, but reproved in the Kings Majeſties Injunctions; the ſaid Biſhop meeting many with Beads in their hands never rebuked any of them.

23. Item, The ſaid Biſhop being in the Pulpit, and ſeeing Croſſes there within the Church, with a great number of lights upon them, never ſpake againſt any of them.

24. Item, Whereas the Ordinance willeth, that no Children be Baptized but upon the Sunday, or Holy day (only Cauſe of neceſſity excepted) he, having two Children himſelf born without danger, cauſed one of them to be Baptized on the work day. And by his example, without any contradiction or motion of reformation, it is uſed, as it hath been cuſtomed, in all the Dioceſs commonly, contrary unto the Book of Ordinance in that behalf.

Covetuouſneſs.

25. Item, From his firſt coming into the Dioceſs, he hath had and yet hath his only ſtudy, labour, and practice, to ſurvey Land, and to look for Mines, &c. neglecting his own bounden duty to apply to his Book and Preaching.

26. Item, He keepeth no manner of Hoſpitality, but hath his Servants Table in one Parlour with him, leſt any Stranger ſhould approach his Servants being at their meat.

27. Item, He is commonly talking not of Godlineſs, but of Worldly matters; as baking, brewing, incloſing, ploughing, mining of Mill-Stones, diſcharging of Tenants and ſuch like, not only at his Table, but alſo moſt commonly at other places.

28. Item, He hath warned divers Tenants out of their Lands, which they and their elders have enjoyed for their rents theſe Hundred years, and more, and occupied with tillage; which he ſaith he will incloſe, and being ſued to of poor men, becauſe of quietneſs, he anſwered; The Crows ſhall eat the Corn, rather than ye ſhall have any profit thereof.

29. Item, When the Vicars Choral of Saint Davids, for relief of their Hoſpitality, had an Iland of his called the Biſhops Ile, for 40. s. rent; he hath ſet it to a Chaplain of his for five pound by year. And where, at the ſuit of the ſaid Vicars, it was granted by the Biſhop in the whole Chapter, that the Vicars ſhould have it for years at 40. s. rent, and pay 20. li. entry; he now covetuouſly, and againſt his promiſe openly made, denieth the ſame, except the Vicars would give 50. pound.

30. Item, He cauſed the Curate of S. Davids to warn their Tenants out of their ſaid Lands in the Pulpit, to the great Offence of the People, which were wont to have Gods Word Preached there; and ſo they ſaid to the Curate at that time.

31. Item, To the Plowing of a Paſture not above ten days work, in Lent, Anno 1549. he had 32 Ploughs in one day, and thoſe Ploughs the Prieſt bade in the Church, contrary to the Statute of Gomortha in that behalf provided, and to the evil example of Gentlemen in that Country.

32. Item, Where the Kings Majeſty of godly remembrance, Henry the eighth, appointed at Brecknock a Schoolmaſter, Uſher, Reader of Divinity, a Miniſter, and certain Scholars, and for the maintenance thereof appointed xl. and xii. li. of the penſions and revenews of Brecknock: the Biſhop finding it ſo furniſhed, hath neither Reader nor Miniſter there, covetouſly converting their ſtipends to his own uſe.

33. Item, The Biſhop was twice in one day preſented in the great Court, holden in the Court of Carmarthen, for incloſing and covetous incroaching of the Kings High-Way.

34. Item, He covetouſly occupieth purchaſing of Lands, buying of Cattel, Merchandiſe, and other things, being indebted a notable ſum to the Kings Majeſty, as may by his accounts in the Court of Tenths and firſt fruits appear.

35. Item, Whereas one Lewis John Tho. Bool, putting from him his lawful wedded Wife, upon Chriſtmas Even laſt paſt, without banes had Marriage Solemnized with a Concubine of his in a Church within three miles of the Biſhops abode at that time: The Biſhop ſince knowing the premiſſes, hath not only of a covetous mind entred familiarity with the ſaid Lewis, and bought a piece of Land of him, but alſo ever ſince hath (to have his lands good cheap) left both the parties and Prieſt unpuniſhed, uſing him ſo familiarly, that whereas a Sumner cited the parties to appear among other criminals for the ſame fact; the Biſhop commanded the ſaid Sumner to let him alone, and ſo they all remain unpuniſhed.

36. Item, Whereas the whole Chapter of S. Davids (as it was thought) was in aſſured amity with the Biſhop, they all being his Officers or Chaplains, he procured them to be impleaded with a Writ of Quo Warranto in the Kings Bench, keeping the Writ with him ſecretly, at the leaſt three Months, not delivering it, but only ten days before the day of their appearance, the parties being ſeven days journey diſtant from London.

37. Item, He is a wilful wrong doer, and troubler of men in their rights, entring upon their lawful poſſeſſions, ſtirring thereby much contention, and ſo notably known, to the offence of the Countrey.

Wilful negligence.

38. Item, Whereas the Biſhop aforeſaid was appointed in Auguſt, Anno 1547. and conſecrated in September following, he never came into the Dioceſs himſelf, nor ſent or appointed any Officer there before the Month of April, Anno 1558. to the great diſorder of the Kings Majeſties Subjects, lack of reformation, and Miniſtration of Juſtice.

39. Item, During his viſitation, the ſaid Biſhop did not indeavor himſelf to ſee reformation, but rode ſurveying of Lands, appointing vain incloſures, and ſuch other things. Which are no part of the Office to him committed, nor yet convenient, namely at that time.

40. Item. The viſitation finiſhed, he neither appointed his Officers to examine the Clergy of the places of Scripture to them appointed to be ſtudied in the ſame viſitation, nor hath hitherto effectually gone about any godly reformation, according to the ordinance of this Realm.

41. Item, The Biſhop ſince his coming to the Dioceſs never Miniſtred the Communion, ſaving only at two times, that he ordered certain Deacons; but in every thing (ſave that he otherwhiles preacheth) ordereth himſelf like no Miniſter, nor man of his vocation.

42. Item, He hath ſo alienated himſelf from ſtudy, that he Preacheth undiſcreetly, diſcrediting the Office, not only untruly reporting the Scriptures, but alſo Preaching the ten Commandments in one place in declaration of the eighth of them, for lack of ſtuff, the pith of his matter was Matrimony of Prieſts.

43. Item, the 13. day of September laſt, he ordained certain Deacons, and making his exhortation, he taught that a man was not bounden to forgive, but him that aſketh forgiveneſs; and being admoniſhed by a Letter better to declare the ſame, becauſe that divers were offended with that Doctrine; he hath hitherto deferred ſo to do, to the maintenance of malicious hearts in theſe parts.

44. Item, Since the firſt day of Auguſt, Anno 1549 unto the feaſt of Candlemas laſt, he hath Preached but two or three Sermons, of which one was Preached at Aberguilly upon Saint Stephens day laſt, to a great Audience that underſtood no Engliſh, being but a mile from Carmarthen, an Engliſh Town, and chief of his Dioceſs.

45. Item, Since his ordinary viſitation, which was finiſhed in July, Anno 1548. he hath neither Preached, nor cauſed to be Preached in the Towns of Tinby, Pembroke, nor Haverford, being Engliſh Towns, not much diſtant from the place of his moſt continuance.

46. Item, The Churches appropriate to the Biſhop have no Paraphraſes in Engliſh, and few of them Bibles.

47. Item, The Churches of the Dioceſs for the moſt part, and the Clergy almoſt every one lack Paraphraſes, notwithſtanding there hath been theſe two years, and yet be a great number of them to be ſold in the Dioceſs.

Folly.

48. Item, To declare his folly in riding, he uſeth Bridle with white ſtuds and ſnaffle, white Scottiſh ſtirrops, white ſpurs, a Scottiſh pad with a little ſtaff of three quarters long, which he hath not only uſed Superſtitiouſly theſe four or five years, in Communication oftentimes boaſting what Countreys he hath compaſſed and meaſured with the ſame ſtaff.

49. Item, he hath made a vow, that he will never wear a cap; for he ſaith, it is comly wearing of a hat, and ſo cometh in his long gown and hat, both in to the Cathedral Church, and to the beſt Town of his Dioceſs, ſitting in that ſort in the Kings great Seſſions, and in his Conſiſtory, making himſelf a mock to the People. Ann° 1555.

50. Item, He ſaid that he would go to the Parliament on foot: And to his friends that diſſwaded him, alledging that it is not meet for a man in his place; he anſwered, I care not for that, it is no Sin.

51. Item, having a Son, he went before the Midwife to the Church, preſenting the Child to the Prieſt, and giving his Name Samuel, with a ſolemn interpretation of the Name, appointing alſo two Godfathers and two Godmothers, contrary to the ordinance, making his Son a monſter, and himſelf a laughing ſtock-throughout all the Countrey.

52. Item, He daily uſeth whiſtling of his Child, and ſaith that he underſtood his whiſtle, when he was but three days old. And being advertiſed of his friends, that men laughed at his folly, he anſwered; They whiſtle their horſes and dogs, and I am contented; they might alſo be contented that I whiſtle my Child, and ſo whiſtleth him daily, all friendly admonition neglected.

53. Item, In his ordinary viſitation among other his ſurveys, he ſurveyed Milford Haven, where he eſpied a Seal-fiſh tumbling. And he crept down to the water ſide, and continued there whiſtling by the ſpace of an hour, perſwadtng the company that laughed faſt at him, that by his whiſtling he made the fiſh to tarry there.

54. Item, ſpeaking of ſcarcity of Herrings, he laid the fault to the covetuouſneſs of Fiſhers, who in time of plenty took ſo many, that they deſtroyed the Breeders.

55. Item, Speaking of the alteration of the Coyn, he wiſhed that what metal ſoever it were of, the penny ſhould be in weight worth a penny of the ſame metal.

56. For a concluſion, the ſaid Biſhop in all his doings, ſince he came to his Dioceſs, hath behaved himſelf moſt unmeet for a man of his vocation, being for a Miniſter of Juſtice, an abuſer of the Authority to him committed, for a teacher of the Truth, and reformer of Superſtition, a maintainer of Superſtition without any Doctrine of reformation, for a liberal and hoſpital, an inſatiable covetuous man: for a diligent overſeer, wilful and negligent: for an example of godly Wiſdom, given wholy to folly: for merciful, a cruel revenger. And further, for a peacemaker, a ſower of diſcord. And ſo in all his behaviour a diſcrediter and ſlanderer of his vocation, and a deceiver of all men; that had hope that he ſhould do any reformation. For he yet hath neither brought into his Dioceſs, nor hath belonging unto him any learned Preacher. But ſuch learned Preachers as he found in the Dioceſs at his entry, he ſo vexeth and diſquieteth, that they cannot attend to apply their preaching, for the defence of their livings, againſt his quarrellous inventions and unjuſt certificates.

After theſe wrangling Articles and Informations were given up, then was the Biſhop called for to anſwer, the hearing whereof was committed unto Dr. Wotton, and Sir John Maſon Knight, who likewiſe received the Biſhops anſwers to the foreſaid Articles, the Copy and effect of which anſwers hereafter follow.

D. Wotton and Sir John Maſon Commiſſioners for the hearing of the Biſhops matter.

The Anſwer of Robert, Biſhop of S. Davids, to the Articles Miniſtred unto him.

TO the firſt Article he ſaith, that after lawful Monition in the Kings Majeſties Name and Authority, from the ſaid Biſhop (being then at London) given to the Chaunter and Chapter of S. Davids, for viſitation at a certain day there to be entred; the ſaid Biſhop himſelf for ſuch purpoſe coming into the Dioceſs, knowing alſo that the Chaunter, and one of the Canons of that Church, and late before Commiſſaries in that Dioceſs, had not only by their own evil example and winking at the faults of other, or neglecting to correct the ſame, left there among Prieſts and others, much deteſtable whoredom; but had alſo ſpoyled the Cathedral Church of Croſſes, Chalices, and Cenſers, with other Plate, Jewels, and Ornaments of the Church, to the value of five hundred Marks or more, for their own private lucre (the Church remaining even yet very vile, & in great decay) and had alſo made further under their Chapter Seal many blanks, to the number Anno 1555. number of twelve or more, Sede vacante, without the Kings licence or knowledge; Therefore he brought with him one Edmund Farlee, Bachelour of Law, by Dr. Toung and Dr. Nevilon to him commended, as a man ſufficient in faithful truth and learning, to be his Chancellour. To whom he granted and ſealed a Commiſſion for that purpoſe, giving credit to him in his faculty, concerning the draught and form thereof. But the Kings Maieſty's ſtile of Supremacy was fully ſet forth in the ſame Commiſſion. Whether there were any default of formal words in ſetting forth of the Kings Authority therein, he is not certain. For he committed the doing thereof to his Chancellor, who was commended to him for a learned man. And the Biſhop ſaith, that he did never ground the Commiſſion upon any foraign uſurped Laws or Authority: Neither did his ſaid Chancellour by force of ſuch Authority viſit any Deanry of the ſaid Dioceſs, nor gave any Monition to the Chaunter and Chapiter there, by force of that Commiſſion for any like intent or purpoſe, but onely offered in the Kings Majeſty's Name and Authotity (to the ſaid Biſhop committed) to enter Viſitation of the Chaunter and Chapiter of the Cathedral Church, at another day to be executed by the Biſhop himſelf, for reformation of the Chapter Church, and Miniſters there, according to the Kings gracious Ordinances and Injunctions in that behalf. But the aforeſaid Chaunter and Canon of the Church, before the ſight of any Commiſſion, ſtubbornly anſwered the ſaid Chancellor, that they would not receive him, nor any other to Viſit them, except he were one of their Chapiter. And further, deſiring to ſee his Commiſſion, he delivered the ſame into their hands, who would not deliver it him again. And ſo it may appear that he did nothing by force of that Commiſſion.

2 To the ſecond Article he ſaith, that they opened not unto him the danger of any Statute, to his knowledge and remembrance. Nevertheleſs, he not knowing any default in the ſaid Commiſſion, and certainly minding with all diligence the faithful execution of his office of Preaching, and Viſiting the whole Dioceſs in his own perſon, by the Kings Majeſty's Authority, for the conſervation of Gods peace and the Kings, in that dangerous time of Rebellion, then begining to ariſe in other places, did neglect and lay apart the ſtubborn behaviour and ungodly doings of the ſaid Chaunter and Canon, and agreed with them, omitting all contempts and reproaches toward him and his ſaid Chancellor, and all manner of contention by them done, fearing elſe that through their unquietnes ſome Tumult might have riſen among the People there, and did alſo make the ſaid Chaunter his Chancellor, and Canon his Commiſſary, according, to their ambitious deſires, to appeaſe their malice in that dangerous time. And further, he ſaith, that he made Collation to Sir John Evans of the Vicarage of Pembrin, what day or time he remembreth not, not by any old foraign uſurped Authority, but by the Kings Authority onely, making full mention of the Kings Stile and Authority in the ſame Collation.

3. and 4. To the third and fourth he ſaith, that whereas he had granted to George Conſtantine the office of a Regiſter, who brought unto him a Commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, to be ſealed and delivered to the foreſaid Chaunter of Saint Davids, deſiring the ſaid Biſhop to ſeal it, he utterly refuſed ſo to do, becauſe the ſaid George had put therein a clauſe of admitting Clerks into Benefices: the which Authority the ſaid Biſhop would not in any wiſe grant, reſerving the examination and admiſſion of Clerks onely to himſelf, for the avoiding of wicked bribery and partiality. Whereupon the ſaid George and the Chaunter promiſed the ſaid Biſhop by their faith and truth, afore three or foure honeſt witneſſes, not to execute that clauſe of Inſtitution into Benefices, but onely to thoſe Clerks whom the Biſhop did firſt examin and admit, and ſend unto them to be inſtituted and inducted; upon which promiſe the Biſhop ſealed the ſaid Commiſſion. And after that time, the Parſonage of Haskard being void, and by the reaſon of Lapſe devolved to the Biſhops gift for that time, he conferred it to one Sir Henry Godherd, with a Collation of Inſtitution by the Kings Authority, not extolling any foraign uſurped Authority. In the which Collation or Inſtitution is fully mentioned the renunciation of the Biſhop of Rome, and all foraign powers and Authority, with the full ſtile of his Maieſty's Supremacy. And this Collation of the Church of Askard he gave, before he underſtood or knew that his Chancellor had given out the like, and he ſurely thinketh his Collation was the firſt. That notwithſtanding, the ſaid George Conſtantine, and the ſaid Chaunter having a Vowſon determined by reaſon of Lapſe, admitted and inſtituted one John Gough, to the ſaid Parſonage of Askard, by Vertue of their expired Vowſon, and Sealed his Inſtitution with a wrong Seal (becauſe they had not the right Seal of Office to that purpoſe) contrary to their former earneſt promiſe, and the Biſhops Right, and without any manner of warning or fore-knowledge thereof to him given, which thing by them untruly done, the ſaid George Conſtantine nevertheleſs came to the Biſhops Houſe and there did write with his own hand the Letters of Induction for the ſaid Sir Henry Godherd Prieſt, compriſing in the ſame the whole Sum of the Inſtitution or Collation which the ſaid Biſhop had made, and the ſame George did Seal the ſaid Letters of Induction with his own hand, finding no manner of fault therein, nor making any word or mention of his and the Chaunters former wrong doing, but ſo departed for that time. And afterward he came again, and ſhewed the Biſhop what they had done before concerning the Parſonage aforeſaid. And further, the ſaid Defendant ſaith, that he did not moleſt the ſaid John Gough, but lawfully did call him in the Kings Maieſty's Name, not for any Title of Patronage, but to know whether he were Parſon of Haskard, and how he was thereto admitted, and inſtituted, and inducted, and by what Authority he preſumed to preach there, without the Kings Majeſty's licence, with other like lawfull demands, whereunto he ſturdily refuſed to give Anſwer; and ſaith, that the Article contained in his accuſation, ſaying thus: Item interrogetur quo titulo tenet Rectoriam de Haskard, was not miniſtred unto the party in that ſort, ſo farr as he knoweth, but in theſe words or like, Quomodo intravit in Rectoriam, &c.

5, To the fifth he ſaith, that albeit George Conſtantine Regiſter, did wilfully withdraw his bounden Service due to the Kings Highneſs, and to the ſaid Defendant in the Kings Name, refuſing to attend either by himſelf, or his ſufficient Deputy for writing of Records and other Inſtruments, yet the ſaid Defendant made his Collations and Inſtitutions in his own Name, not by his own Authority, nor by another, ſave onely the Kings Authority, according as he hath declared in his Anſwer to the firſt Article, expreſſing in them the Kings Supremacy with the Biſhops own Name and Seale of Office, as he ought to do, according to the proviſion of the Kings Statute in ſuch a caſe.

6. To the ſixth he ſaith, that the Vicarie of Pembrin being void, he, as right Patron thereof to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerk, with Letters of Inſtitution and Induction; and after, when the Kings Preſentation came to him for one David Jenkin Clerk, he deſired fourteen days reſpite at that time, either to ſhew ancient record for his right, and then the matter to ſtand to the Determination of the Law, or elſe if he ſhewed not, both he and his Clerk to give place to the Kings Clerk, Which condition was by Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Doctor M. and the ſaid David Jenkin received, and an Inſtitution with an Induction was made conditionally to be put into the hands of Sir Thomas Jones Knight, for ſafe cuſtody of the Kings Clerks behoof, after the fourteen dayes to be executed at the hands of the ſaid Defendant, if he failed to ſhew. Within which time the ſaid Defendant did ſhew an old ancient Record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the ſaid Defendants behalf, and ſo that Inſtitution and Induction was never by the ſaid Defendant put in execution. Nevertheleſs, the ſaid David Jenkin (contrary to his promiſe and Oath giving thereupon his right hand to the ſaid Sir Thoms Jones Kinght) took Advantage by the ſaid writing, without knowledge of the ſaid Defendant. After which time the Lord Chancellor, by his Letters written to the ſaid Defendant, adverti ſed him, to admit one John Ap Powell Clerk preſented by vertue of a Vowſon which the Lord Chancellor judged to be good, and ſo to be admitted notwithſtanding his former presentation, whereby he would not abarr the others mans right. And so this Defendant made one Collation, two Institutions, and three Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to his knowledg. And further he saith, that there was no business nor unquietness about the possession of the said Vicarage, but this Defendant giving place, was content to lose his right for that time.

7. To the seventh he saith, that as he now remembreth, he never decreed any Caveats to be made in Benefices, neither did institute, nor cause to be inducted any into Benefices, being known to him litigious.

8. To the eighth he saith, that because the Archdeacons be absent from their Offices, and have not had faithful diligent Officials, he hath directed his Mandates to them or their Officials, or to other lawfull persons in that behalf, so far as he knoweth.

9. & 10. The ninth and tenth Articles he denieth as very untrue.

11. To the eleventh he saith, that whereas Sir Thomas Jones Knight advertised him, that Thomas Prichard had celebrated Matrimony in a private House, betwixt a certain Priest and a Woman, whose Sister had refused the same, the said Prichard leaving his own Cure unserved on that Sunday, this Defendant did put the same Thomas Prichard to penance for so doing, Marrying them without Banes. And whereas he made the said Thomas Prichard, who is a Bachelour of law, his Commissary; it was for the respect of learning in the law, thereby faithfully to execute his office according to Justice. And the said Defendant did never favor nor bear with any man wittingly in his wrong doings. He confesseth that the Matrimony was solemnized in a private Church, and that the Cure was that day unserved.

12. To the twelfth he saith, that it is slanderous and utterly untrue. And that one Sir John Hughes, Priest, made Sage Hughes (daughter to his Stepmother) an Harlot at eleven years of age, and after Married openly to another man, being Minister thereof himself. After which doing he took her away from her Husband again, and kept her, alledging a former contract. And when the said John Hughes was lawfully convicted before the said Bishop, in open Court at Carmarthen, of that his abominable Adultery, claiming the Kings pardon thereof, yet the said Sage confessed, that he had to do with her the night before that day of appearance. Which later crime he denied. Nevertheless shee proved with Child, affirming, both before the Birth and after, the Child to be his, the Midwife and others being Witnesses thereof. Yet notwithstanding, George Constantine, as a wicked Bolsterer of the said Priest in his naughty doings, with the help of the aforesaid Chaunter, first uttered that Meredith Thomas was Father of the said Child: which matter was ordered in the Ecclesiastical Court according to Justice, without any partial affection of the said Bishop, or of any other to his knowledge.

13. To the 13. he saith, it is utterly false so far as he knoweth.

14. To the 14. he saith, that by lawful sequestration in the Kings Maiesty's name, he committed the custody of the fruits of Langatnoke and Lanvihangel to two honest men, for the behoof of the Kings first fruits and tenths, and of the next incumbent, and further he did not meddle nor Minister any cause of unquietness in that behalf.

15. To the 15. he saith, that he made a collation, lawful (as he supposeth) of the Prebend of Lanbister, to Stephen Greene his Chaplain, without any covenant or colour, and further he did not meddle in that behalf.

16. To the 16. he saith, all is untrue as far as he knoweth.

17. To the 17. he saith, it is untrue for his own part, and his Officers, as far as he knoweth

18. To the 18. he saith, it is untrue as far as he knoweth, and that he did certifie the Recusants justly, as he thinketh, because they refused wilfully to pay the Kings whole Subsidy of their whole dividents, as it standeth in the Kings book, pertaining to the Canons Resident.

19. To the 19. he saith, that after travel of fourteen miles, being not able fasting to celebrate the communion, in a Chappel within the House of Sir Thomas Jones Knight, one of the Kings Majesty's Honourable Counsel of the Marches of Wales, this Defendant celebrated Matrimony without receiving the Communion for the causes aboveſaid, betwixt M. Giffith Rice, and the Daughter of the said Sir Thomas Jones, according to the Kings Ordinances. And Thomas Prichard Priest, administred the holy Communion there without any Superstition, to this Defendants knowledge: and the Married persons not disposed to receive the holy Communion, he could not compel them against their Consciences, and saith, that he did not dispense with them, as it is contained in the Article.

To the slanderous and untrue title of maintenance of Superstition, &c. he saith, that he did not maintain any Superstition, contrary to the Kings Ordinances and Injunctions, but abhoring in his heart all Superstition, hath Travelled and doth Travel to Abolish the same by True Doctrine, and doing as much as he can, with the Kings peace, among his People there.

Anno 1555.

20. TO the 20. he saith, that George Constantine in the third year of the Kings Maiesties Reign not regarding the dangerous time of Rebellion in other places, rashly caused to be pulled down, without any Authority known to this Defendant, the Communion Altar in Carmarthen Church, by his own presumptuous mind, appointing the use thereof in another place of the Church, not without grudge of the People. Wherefore the Bishop fearing Tumult, commanded the Vicar to set up the Communion Table (for the time) near to the place where it was before.

21. To the 21. he saith, that he hath been divers times in the Quire of Carmarthen, and hath tarried there in the Communion time, not communicating himself, and that in every Church where he cometh on the Holy day to preach, or to pray, he kneeleth in the Quire bareheaded, as well at Matins before the Communion, as at Evensong after, without any Superstition: he thinketh it not necessary for the Communions sake to leave kneeling to Christ. But he hath diligently taught the People not to kneel nor knock to the visible shew, or external shew of the Sacrament. And the Quires of Carmarthen and other places there, are not close at the sides, so that the People may come in and forth at their pleasure. Moreover the Kings Ordinances do not Authorize him to rebuke the People for knocking on their breasts, in token of repentance of their sins; nor for kneeling, in token of submission to God for mercy in Christ.

22. To the 22. he saith, that in the time of Rebellion in Devonshire and Cornwal, threatning to come into Wales, he teaching the People the true form of Prayer, according to Gods holy Word, and declaring the Prayer upon Beads to be vain and superstitious, yet durst not for fear of Tumult forcibly take from any man his Beads, without Authority. And touching the not reproving of such as he should meet, wearing Beads, he remembreth not that he hath so done, unless it were in the Rebellion time, at which time he durst not rebuke such Offenders.

23. To the 23. he saith, that he being in the Pulpit, his face towards the People; did not see the lights, if any were set up about the Corps behind his back till after that he came down from the Pulpit. But he with George Constantine and the aforesaid Chanter, sitting in the Church in Carmarthen to hear Causes, and seeing the Vicar with other Priests, with song and lights bringing a Corps up to the Church, called forthwith the Vicar and Priests, and rebuked them in open Court, as Cormorants and Ravens, flying about the dead carcass for lucre sake.

24. To the 24. he saith, that he caused the one Child being born with great peril of death to the Mother, and it self lying for dead a certain space after, to be christned on the working day: the other Child was christned on the working day, because both Father and Mother, and all other People there were in peril of death by reason of the sudden sweat, which all men feared at that time. And touching the rest of the accusation, which is, that by that example, it is used after the old accustomed fashion, he knoweth no such thing.

To

Anno 1555.

To the Title of Covetousness, he saith; His doings prove the contrary, as his Neighbours know.

25. AND the 25. Article he utterly denieth.

26. To the 26. he saith, That his Hall at Aberguly being ruinous, he useth for his Hall a great Chamber adjoyning, for himself and his Servants, and all manner of Strangers, and besides twenty Persons in house daily. What other Hospitality he keepeth, honest Neighbours can testifie.

27. To the 27. he saith, That his Talk is according to his Hearers, that is to say, reverently and truly of Faith, Love, ond honest Life, according to the Scripture to like Auditors; and to other unreverend and rash Turmoilers of Scriptures and holy Doctrine, he doth talk of honest worldly things with godly intent; and that he doth not most commonly talk of such things as are expressed in this Article, but when he hath honest occasion so to do.

28. The 28. he saith is untrue, and that he hath warned no man out of their Lands; but where he is destitute of necessary provision, and would have part of his own Demain from certain Freeholders, having it only from year to year at pleasure, he cannot obtain it without brawling. Wherefore he suffereth them to keep it even yet still, against right and reason. And touching the rest, that he had rather the Crows should eat it, &c. he never spake any such word.

29. To the 29. he saith, That whereas his Predecessor Bishop Barloe did let to farm the Isle of Ramsey to one William Brown, after whose hands this Defendant received it into his own possession, the Vicars of S. Davids being dispossessed of it long before; he did let it over to Stephen Green for 40 shillings the Ground, as it was before, and 3 Pounds more for Seals, Coneys, and Fowls there; and he knoweth of no right the Vicars Choral had therein, who did refuse when this Defendant did diligently upon reasonable Conditions offer the same unto them: and this Defendant made no Promise unto them, as is contained in the Article.

30. To the 30. he saith, He knoweth not but that he advertized his Bayliff to warn the Free-holders; and others having his Demain in Rent, during pleasure, to leave it at a lawful day to this Defendants necessary use; and did not cause the Curate to do as is contained in the Article to his remembrance.

31. To the 31. he saith, That he knoweth not what the Priest bade in the Church, nor how many Plows there came, undesired of this Defendant. But he knoweth certainly, that he desired no mans labour but for his Money.

32. To the 32. he saith, That he knoweth not any such appointment of Schools and Revenues there, but he found there (after the departing of Bishop Barloe) a Schoolmaster, an Usher being a Priest, and 20 Scholars, which he hath hitherto maintained better than he found it, to his knowledge: he did never convert any Peny thereof to his own use, albeit he might lawfully have done the same.

33. The 33. he saith, is all untrue, so far as he knoweth.

34. To the 34. Article he saith, He never purchased more than three Parcels, whereof one was two Shillings eight Pence by the year; the second, three Shillings four Pence; and the third, six and twenty Shillings and eight Pence, or thereabout, by year; the rest he denieth.

35. To the 35. he saith, That he never bought of Lewes John Thomas his Land good cheap, but after 40 years purchase, not knowing at that time any such thing as is contained in the Article against the said Lewes John. Neither bade he the Sumner to let him alone, but as soon as he heard any thing of it, commanded the Sumner to cite him; and so he was cited in this Defendants House, occasioning him to break his bargain: to the which Lewes this Defendant said these words, If you would give me your Land with an House full of Gold, I cannot, nor will I suffer you to keep a Lemman. Then the said Lewes affirming the latter Woman to be his wife, and the first unknown to this Defendant, he caused the said Lewes to be called to the Consistory for Trial, where it hangeth yet: And also by lawful Process Excommunicated the first Woman, for that she would not by any means appear in the Court to claim or to confess Marriage with the said Lewes, and so she standeth this day at the point of Significavit.

36. To the 36. he saith, That whereas the Chantor, and R.M. with other Canons there, would not obey the Kings godly Injunctions, concerning the finding of a School for Poor mens Children, a Lecture of Divinity, Sermons on the Sundays, Repairing of their Church and Mansion Houses, decent Order and Ministration there; but stubbornly counted themselves (with the Chantor) to be a Body Politick, without regard of the Bishop and his lawful Monitions, being himself named in their Shire Statutes, Decanus & quasi Decanus, having also their Dean-Stall in the Quire with a Prebend thereunto annexed, and the chief place in the Chapter-House, with a Key of their Chapter-Seal, being also by the Kings Majesties Commission appointed their Ordinary: yet would they not in any wise deliver unto him a Book of their Statutes, for the better knowledge of his and their Duties, nor shew unto him their Records and Monuments, for declaration of the Kings Right and his. For which cause this Defendant, by Writ of Quo warranto, lawfully called them to answer, which yet lieth asleep, to the loss of the Kings Majesties Right. The time of delivery of the said Writ, he remembreth not.

37. The 37. he saith is all false, as far as he knoweth.

To the Title of Wilful Negligence; he saith, that he hath used to his power Willing Diligence.

38. TO the 38. he saith, That he being attendant according to his bounden duty) to serve the Kings Highness during the time of the Parliament, from the first unto the last day: then immediately after repaired into his Dioces, and he might not trust R.M. the Chantor, and George Constantine to execute faithfully the Jurisdiction, because they had before (through their slanderous life, and not punishing Misdoers) left the Country in great enormity of filthy Whoredom. And saith farther, that one cause why he appointed not an Officer, &c. was for that he lacked his Letters of Authority of Jurisdiction.

39, 40. The 39 and 40. he saith are untrue.

41. To the 41. he saith, That how often he did minister the Communion he doth not remember; but in all other things so far as he knoweth, he hath studied to order himself according to his vocation, as far as he believeth, he goeth like a Minister.

42. To the 42. he saith, That he hath not alienated himself from study, neither preached undiscreetly, nor reported the Scriptures untruly to his knowledge: (but he hath been very much hindered both from Study and Preaching, by the malicious, crafty, and covetous behaviour of the forenamed Persons.) And that he did set forth the Doctrine of honest Marriage, as well of all other men as of Priests, even as the Scripture then rehearsed did minister occasion.

43. To the 43. he saith, That reciting the words of Luke, If thy Brother have offended against thee, blame him, and if he repent forgive him, and if he have offended against thee seven times in one day, and seven times in the day be converted unto thee, saying, I am sorry, forgive him: He said farther these words in effect, It appeareth by this place of Scripture, that we are not bound (except he repent) to forgive him; but we are bound to pray God to forgive him, and to give him grace to repent, that he may forgive him.

44. To the 44. he saith, That he hath preached right often at Carmarthen, as well as at other places; and, he saith, that a great number at Aberguily do understand English very well.

45. To the 45. he saith, That after he had preached first at Brecknock, Carmarthen, Swanzy, Laugharne, Tinby, Pembroch, Hereford, St. Davids, Cardigan, with other notable Towns; he hath since that time preached to a great many other poor Churches, but not in Tinby nor Pembroch: but for Hereford he standeth in doubt. And whereas he brought with him at the first a learned Preacher, of godly life, the ungodly stubborn behaviour of the perſons before-named wearied him away. And whereas he had waged another Learned man to come into his Dioceſs to preach, George Conſtantine by his diſcouragement adviſed him from this Defendant.

46. To the 46. he ſaith, That in all his Churches appropriated, there is both Bible and Paraphraſes, ſo far as he knoweth: and if the Prieſts there would not ſhew him the lack thereof, yet ſhould the Officials declare it unto him, that it might be amended (by his will) without delay.

47. To the 47. he ſaith, That George Conſtantine covetouſly ingroſſed into his hands a great number of Paraphraſes; and this Defendant hath admoniſhed the Clergy to buy every one, for his diſcharge: and if the ſaid George being Official of two Archdeaconries, and other Officials in their Office would declare unto him what Churches do lack Bibles or Paraphraſes, he would cauſe it to be amended as much as in him lieth.

To the title of Folly, he ſaith, That his deſire is in true ſimple manner of his words, deeds, and other honeſt behaviour, through Gods Grace to ſhew godly Wiſdom.

48. TO the 48. he ſaith, That he thinketh no folly in the decent colour or faſhion with honeſt uſe of Saddle, Bridle, Stirrops, Staff, and other like neceſſary or convenient things; and ſaith, that he uſed a Saddle made after the Scotiſh faſhion, with Stirrops of Iron unvarniſhed and like Spurs: and black Bridle without Studs, the Bit and Snaffle white as other mens be.

49. To the 49. he ſaith, That when he goeth abroad in Winter, he weareth a Hat to bear off Rain and Snow, and in Summer to ſhadow him from the Sun, without any vow of Superſtition or offence of the People.

50. To the 50. he ſaith, That all is one to him, to ride or go, as cauſe requireth; and whether he ſaid as is contained in the Article or not, he remembreth not. Howbeit he doth uſe to go a foot.

51. To the 51. he ſaith, That after lawful Prayer it pleaſed God to give him a Son begotten and born in honeſt Marriage; whom he therefore cauſed to be named Samuel, preſenting him to the Miniſter to be received into Chriſts Church, as a poor Member of Chriſt: by the holy Sacrament of Baptiſm was this done openly in the Cathedral Church, with earneſt gravity, and without offending any man; and alſo two Wives, being before at variance, deſired both to be Godmothers, which were both received to make Unity between them, not knowing any Law to the contrary, nor any Offence thereby conceived of the People.

52. To the 52. he ſaith, That he doth uſe with gravity all honeſt loving entertainment of his Child, to encourage him hereafter willingly at his Fathers mouth, to receive wholeſom Doctrine of the true Fear and Love of God; and ſaith, that he hath whiſtled to his Child, but ſaid not that the Child underſtood it, and that he anſwered to one that found fault with it, as is contained in the Article.

53. To the 53. he ſaith, That he was never Surveyor, but went to ſee Milford Haven for honeſt purpoſe, and not to ſurvey it; and for that he at the ſight of a Seal whiſtled in his fiſt, ſuch as meant folly might turn it to their purpoſe. And it is not true, that he ſtood whiſtling an hour to the Seal, nor that any fault was found with it, nor any ſuch anſwer made by him to his knowledge.

54. To the 54. he ſaith, That if he did ſay, The deſtroying of the Fry letteth plenty of Fiſh, he thinketh the ſame not againſt reaſon: but he remembreth not to have ſaid, as is contained in the Article.

55. To the 55. he ſaith, That he remembreth not that ever he ſaid as they alledge.

To the ſlandrous, untrue, and ungodly concluſion he ſaith, that George Conſtantine with other his Adverſaries before-named, and their Adherents, not regarding the Fear of God, and their bounden duty of loving Obedience towards God and the King, and his true Miniſters, have too much ſlanderouſly with falſe Tongues, contumelious words, and ſpiteful deeds, laboured by all means to diſcredit and deface the Kings gracious Authority to him committed. Who, ever ſithence he came to the Dioceſs, hath endeavoured himſelf to ſhew his faithful Miniſtry by his true honeſt doing, and to uſe his Authority according to his Vocation, to Gods glory and the Kings honour. And that he hath been diligent in teaching of Truth, reforming of Superſtition, free of Hoſpitality, diligent in overſeeing with godly wiſdom, peace, and mercifulneſs, as he truſteth in God, may be truly approved. And he is able juſtly to charge his Adverſaries with all the Faults herein by them moſt unjuſtly and ſlanderouſly againſt him objected. And he doth marvel greatly, that George Conſtantine, with other his Adherents, are not aſhamed maliciouſly to object (for the intent to ſlander him) moleſting of Preachers found there. For truth it is that he hath moleſted none, but hath juſtly brought under Significavit, one Morice a Preacher, living lewdly, for his ſtubborn Behaviour and malicious Contempts, even yet continuing in his wilful contempt and irregularity. And he hath (to his knowledge) juſtly certified Hugh Rawlins, Parſon of Timby, for his wilful Recuſancy of two other Parſonages, ſhamefully deceiving the Kings Majeſty by colour of Commiſſion, as appeareth by the ſame. And as for the railing, contemptuous Preaching of R. M. and the unlearned arrogant Preaching of the Chantor, he referreth to diſcreet Hearers, which were offended thereat, as they ſhewed this Defendant. And this Deponent brought into his Dioceſs both learned Preachers, and Learned men in the Law, to his very great charges, which men George Conſtantine with his Adherents hath wearied away. Anno 1555.

After theſe Anſwers thus exhibited by the vertuous and godly Biſhop againſt the quarrelling and frivolous Articles of his foreſaid Adverſaries, to wit, Hugh Rawlins, and Thomas Lee: then came in for witneſs, upon the ſaid Articles and Informations, George Conſtantine, and the Chanter of S. Davids: againſt whom the Biſhop laid firſt Exceptions, then alſo exhibited matter Juſtificatory, the tenour and proceſs whereof here followeth in order to be ſeen, firſt concerning the exceptions, and after the matter Juſtificatory.

Exceptions general, laid and propoſed on the behalf of Robert, Biſhop of St. Davids, againſt all and ſingular the pretenced Witneſſes, produced on the behalf of Hugh Rawlins Clerk, and Thomas Lee, upon their untrue ſurmiſed Articles by them exhibited unto and before the Kings moſt honourable Council, by the device and procurement of the Chanter, and George Conſtantine, with R. M. Clerk, againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

FIrſt, the ſaid Biſhop ſaith and alledgeth, That by Law there ought no faith or credence to be given unto the Depoſitions and Sayings of the ſaid Witneſſes, or any part thereof, becauſe they are infamous, falſe, perjured, and in ſome part of their Depoſitions diſcording, partial, conducted, ſubornate, inſtructed, and for favour of the Informers and their Bolſterers, have depoſed of malice more than the Articles whereupon they were producted to contain; and beſide, and without the compaſs of the ſame Articles, and in divers other parts of their Depoſitions, they depoſe unum & eundem præmeditatum ſermonem, as by their ſaid Depoſitions doth appear, unto the which the ſaid Biſhop referreth himſelf as much as it ſhall be expedient for him, and none otherwiſe. And further, for other cauſes particularly and ſpecially, as is declared in the Book of Exceptions.

Exceptions againſt the unlawful proceedings of Hugh Rawlins Clerk, and Thomas Lee, promoters of the foreſaid untrue Articles, in executing of their Commiſſion for proof of the ſame.

ITem, The ſaid Thomas Lee for himſelf and the other Promoter did contrary to Juſtice, at the Execution of their Commiſſion, examine certain of the Witneſſes himſelf, in the houſe of his Brother in Law George Conſtantine, and the ſaid Lee, and David Walter the Biſhops mortal Enemy, and Servant to the ſaid George Conſtantine, did write theſe Depoſitions upon the Articles at their own pleaſures, and alſo after the device of the ſaid George Conſtantine, and the Chanter and R. M. the Biſhops mortal Enemies, and the very deviſers and procurers of the Informations, and bolſterers and bearers of the Promoters in the ſuit thereof. Theſe are the names of the Witneſſes ſo examined, examined, which are already known: David ap Sir Richard of Gettus, a perjured and an adulterous Perſon, ſtanding in the number for two Witneſſes, written in two places of the Book.

Anno 1555.

Item, ap Ruddz of Kennarthe, Griffith ap Howel, Guyne of Kennarthe, Lewes David Clerk, David ap Harvey Clerk, Sir Goghe, alias Morgon, &c.

Item, One John Draper of Carmarthen, and an adherent of the foreſaid Adverſaries and Enemies to the ſaid Biſhop, did alſo, contrary to the tenor of their Commiſſion examine certain Witneſſes, and had to his Clerk one William Davids, Servant in Livery unto the foreſaid Griffith Donne, the Biſhops utter Enemy: by which ſhameful partiality they have written more matter, more words, other Terms and Sentences, than ſome of the Deponents have depoſed or could depoſe. Humfrey Toy the fifth Deponent, Rice Goughe the fourteenth Deponent, William ap Jenkins the fiftieth Deponent, John Benguy the 48*th* Deponent, Richard Parſon the 39*th*, which are already known what manner of Men the Promoters are.

Item, The ſaid Hugh Rawlins was not preſent at the Biſhops Sermon, whereof his Information maketh mention, neither yet at their cutting off the Commiſſion for the proof thereof: for the foreſaid Adverſaries did deviſe the ſame, and gave it unto the ſaid Rawlins to promote, chuſing him for the ſame purpoſe, knowing him to be a man willing (and ſetting his whole delight) to work miſchief, both with word and deed, who abuſeth his Tongue moſt ſhamefully, with moſt unfitting words, ever railing upon the ſaid Biſhop to every man that will hear him, without either reſpect or reverence of the Kings Majeſties Authority to the ſaid Biſhop committed. And the ſaid Rawlins hath four or five Benefices about the value of 200 Marks a year, and is reſident upon none of them, but ſpendeth his Living to the hindrance of other men, going about here and there, wandring to and fro, without either Man or Boy waiting on him, more like a light Perſon, than a man of ſuch Livelyhood and of his Vocation, being a Preacher. And indeed he is taken for a lewd Fellow of all that know his behaviour, inſomuch that when a certain Man objected unto the Adverſaries, That it was ill done to put ſo lewd a Fellow as Rawlins to promote their Cauſe: They anſwered and reported his honeſty with theſe words, We know Rawlins to be a very Knave, and ſo meet for no purpoſe as he is to ſet forward ſuch a matter: of which Report there is a ſufficient Witneſs. And it is thought that he hath done much ill with his ſpiteful Tongue: for he ſpeaketh as boldly in this ſurmiſed matter to all the Council, as though it were true, and much for the Kings profit.

Item, The other Promoter Thomas Lee is a Merchant, who hath ſold his Ware and ſpent his Money, and now for want of other buſineſs is become a Promoter of the foreſaid Articles, having his Coſts and Charges born by the ſaid principal Adverſaries, as it is alledged in the Biſhops Exceptions, which ſhall be proved if Commiſſion might be awarded for the purpoſe.

And thus much concerning the Exceptions againſt his pretended Accuſers: next followeth the matter Juſtificatory exhibited by the ſaid Biſhop, in defence of his own Cauſe, as by the effect here appeareth.

Certain Articles miniſtred by Robert Biſhop of S. Davids, againſt a ſurmiſed Information exhibited by Thomas Lee, to the Kings Majeſty his moſt Honourable Council, againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

Inprimis, viz. That there ought none advantage to be taken againſt the ſaid Biſhop, of the Contents of the ſaid pretended Information, for the Cauſes particularly following. And firſt, whereas it is objected againſt the ſaid Biſhop, in the firſt, ſecond, and fifth Articles of the ſame Information, that he contrary to the Kings Highneſs Laws and Statutes, and in the derogation of his Highneſs Supremacy, paſſed a certain Commiſſion, Inſtitutions, and Collations to Benefices, in his own name, making no mention of the Kings Highneſs Authority, whereas of truth the ſaid Biſhop, if he had paſſed out the Commiſſion, Inſtitutions, and Collations in his own name, and without the Kings Majeſty his Stile, as is ſurmiſed (as he did not) yet had he offended neither the Laws nor Statutes of this Realm therein, as doth and may appear evidently in the ſame Statutes and Laws, to the which he referreth himſelf. Proved by the Statutes.

Item, Whereas it is deduced in the third Article of the ſaid pretenced Information, that the Chancellor of the ſaid Biſhop did admit and inſtitute J. Gough into the Rectory of Haskard, and gave a Mandate for the induction of the ſaid John, under the Kings Majeſties Seal Eccleſiaſtical, for the Dioceſs of S. Davids, with the Teſte of the ſaid Biſhop and Subſcription of the ſaid Chancellor, which thing ſo deduced, if it be true, yet the ſaid Biſhop cannot be worthily blamed thereof. But the Chantor (then his Chancellor unworthy) ſhewed himſelf therein very ignorant of the Kings Statutes of Parliament, wherein it is expreſly provided, that in ſuch caſes the Ordinary ought to paſs all ſuch Inſtitutions and Inductions in his own Name, and under his own Seal, and not in the Kings Majeſties Name, nor under his Seal. And further, of very truth, the ſaid Chancellor in admitting and inſtituting the ſaid Clerk to the ſaid Benefice, without the knowledge and conſent of the ſaid Biſhop, did exceed his Commiſſion, for as much as the ſaid Biſhop, at the granting of his Commiſſion of his Chancellorſhip unto the ſaid Chantor, had reſtrained him expreſly from the admitting and inſtituting of any Clerk to any Benefice within the ſaid Dioceſs, except the ſame Clerk were firſt examined, found worthy, and admitted by the ſaid Biſhop himſelf to the ſame Benefice. Proved by the Statutes.

Item, Whereas in the fourth Article of the ſaid Information it is contained, that the ſaid Biſhop, after the admitting and inſtituting of the ſaid John Gough, as is aforeſaid, objected Articles againſt him, amongſt the which it was contained in effect.

Item, interrogetur quo titulo tenet Rectoriam de Haſkarde.

TRue it is that the ſaid Biſhop, without moleſtation of the ſaid Gough, otherwiſe than Law did permit, and without taking upon him the cognition of the Title of the ſaid Fruits and Patronage of the ſaid Benefice, in contempt of the Kings Majeſties Regal Crown and Dignity, and without any derogation of the Kings Majeſties Laws and Statutes of this Realm, did Interrogate the ſaid John Gough, how he held the ſaid Benefice, being admitted and inſtituted to the ſame without his knowledge or conſent, as he might lawfully do, and as it is meet every Ordinary ſhould know how Paſtors are admitted to any Cure within their Dioceſs. Act. adduci poſſunt.

Item, Touching the Contents of the ſixth Article of the ſaid Information, the ſaid Biſhop alledgeth that the Vicaridge of Pembrin, in the Dioceſs of S. Davids being void, he as Patron thereof, to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerk, with Letters of Inſtitution and Induction, and afterwards when the Kings Preſentation came to him for one David Jenkin Clerk, he deſired 14 days reſpit, at that day either to ſhew ancient Record for his Right, and then the matter to ſtand to the determination of the Law, or elſe if he ſhewed not, both he and his Clerk to give place to the Kings Clerk: which Condition was by Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Dr. Merike, and the ſaid David Jenkins received; and an Inſtitution with an Induction was made conditionally, to be put into the hands of Sir Thomas Jones Knight, for ſafe cuſtody for the Kings Clerk his behoof, after the 14 days to be executed at the hands of the ſaid Biſhop, if he failed to ſhew; within which time the Biſhop did ſhew an old ancient Record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the ſaid Biſhops behalf, and ſo that Inſtitution and Induction was never put in execution by the ſaid Biſhop.

Nevertheleſs the ſaid David Jenkin (contrary to his Promiſe and Oath, giving thereupon his Right hand to Sir Thomas Jones Knight) took advantage by the ſaid Writing without knowledge of the ſaid Biſhop; after which time the Lord Chancellor, by his Letters written to the ſaid Biſhop, advertized him to admit one John ap Howel Clerk, preſented by virtue of a Vowſon, which the Lord Chancellor adjudged to be good, and ſo to be admitted, notwithſtanding his former Preſentation, whereby he would not abar the other mans Right. And ſo the ſaid Biſhop made one Collation, two Inſtitutions, and three Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to his knowledge. And further, there was no buſineſs nor unquietneſs about the poſſeſſion of the ſaid Vicarage. But the ſaid Biſhop giving place, was content to loſe his right for that time.

Item, Whereas Sir Thomas Jones advertized the ſaid Biſhop, that Thomas Prichard Clerk had celebrated Matrimony in a private Houſe, betwixt a certain Prieſt and a Woman whoſe Siſter had refuſed the ſame (as it is deduced in the 11*th* Article of the ſurmized Articles laid in againſt the ſaid Biſhop) the ſaid Prichard leaving his own Cure unſerved that Sunday, he did put the ſaid Thomas Prichard to Penance for ſuch his miſdoings, and the ſaid Prichard did ſuch Penance as was enjoyned him to do. And whereas the ſaid Biſhop made the ſaid Tho. Prichard (who is Batchelor of Law) his Commiſſary, it was for the reſpect of his Learning in the Law, thereby faithfully to execute his Office, according to Juſtice, and none otherwiſe.

Item, In the 14*th* Article of the ſaid ſurmized Information, it is untruly declared, that through the unlawful Sequeſtration of the Fruits of the Benefices of Longatoke and Llanvihangel Cundy, and the undiſcreet handling of the ſaid Biſhop, there were raiſed a great number of People, to the great danger of the Inhabitants thereabouts. Truth it is, that the ſaid Biſhop upon good and lawful Conſiderations, and ſpecially for that the Kings Majeſty ſhould be truly anſwered of his Firſt-Fruits and Tenths of the ſaid Benefices, did lawfully (and as he was bound to do) ſequeſter the ſaid Fruits in the Kings Majeſties Name, and by his Authority, and committed the cuſtody thereof for a time unto two honeſt Men, to the effect aforeſaid, and none otherwiſe, without any occaſion of tumult or gathering the People through his default or folly.

Item, Whereas it is alledged in the 19*th* Article of the Information, that the Biſhop did celebrate Matrimony in his own perſon, without receiving or miniſtring the Communion to the Perſons married, it is true, for that the ſaid Biſhop had travelled fourteen long Welſh Miles, and not able to celebrate the holy Communion faſting, and for other reaſonable and lawful Cauſes him moving, did in a Chappel within the Houſe of Sir Thomas Jones Knight (one of the Kings Honourable Counſel of the Marches of Wales) ſolemnize Matrimony betwixt Mr. Griffith Rice, and the Daughter of the ſaid Sir Thomas Jones, without either receiving the holy Communion himſelf, or miniſtring the ſame to the Perſons married, being as then not diſpoſed ſo to do it lawfully and godly, without any ſuperſtitious Knockings or Bleſſings, or other uncomly geſtures, as is deduced in that Article.

Item, Touching the Contents of the reſidue of all the ſaid Articles, contained in the ſaid Information, the ſaid Biſhop, partly for the avoiding of tedioſuneſs, and partly for that ſome of them be untrue and meer falſe, ſome other general, obſcure, frivolous, vain, and of none effect, but of malice and evil-will, contrary to Truth conceived, leaveth them particularly unanſwered unto.

Item, The ſaid Biſhop alledgeth, that he hath not by all the time that he hath been Biſhop, uſed any Superſtitions or Papiſtry, as it is untruly ſurmiſed againſt him, but hath and doth to the uttermoſt of his power, wit and cunning, ſet forth, maintain teach and preach the true Doctrine of the Goſpel, and ſuch laudable Doctrine as he ought to do by the Kings Laws, Injunctions and Proceedings, and for ſuch a Teacher he hath been and is commonly known, named, reputed, taken, and accepted notoriouſly.

And where the ſaid Chantor and George perceived their Depoſitions to be inſufficient, they required, and had Commiſſion into the Country to examine further Witneſſes, which they executed very partially and unlawfully, as is alledged in the Biſhops Exceptions above-mentioned. And whereas the ſaid Rawlins and Lee were awarded two ſeveral Commiſſions, they by favour of the Officers, and for ſparing of Coſts, conjoyned both in one, and had three Months to make return, as appeareth by the Copy of their Commiſſion, which hereafter followeth.

A Copy of the Commiſſion awarded down into the Country, for the Examination of Witneſſes. Anno 1555.

Marten.

DUring all this time of the Examination of the Witneſſes, the ſaid Biſhop was ſtayed at London, upon the Allegation of the ſaid Adverſaries, which was, That if the ſaid Biſhop ſhould depart into his Dioceſs, he would let them of their Proofs.

And at the return of their Commiſſion it was ſignified unto the Council what a great number of Witneſſes they had examined, viz. Sixſcore and ſeven, which ſounded very heinous in the Councils ears.

And about three Weeks after, publication of their Witneſſes was granted, and after that, it was a fortnight ere the Biſhop could get a Copy written of their Depoſitions, becauſe the Book thereof is ſo huge and monſtrous.

Then the Biſhop deſired time, Firſt, to enquire of what condition the Perſons were that had witneſſed againſt him, and to make Exceptions and Matters to juſtifie direct contrary, and to have a Commiſſion for the proof thereof, which was then granted. And now it is objected, That the Biſhop was appointed ſo to travel with the expedition of his matter, that he ſhould have ſued out his Commiſſion, and have made return thereof at All-Hallowtide laſt paſt; but there was no ſuch Decree put in writing. And it was not poſſible for the Biſhop to do it in ſo ſhort a time, theſe Cauſes conſidered which he could not avoid, as followeth.

Firſt, It was the latter end of July ere he came home to S. Davids, where he began his Viſitation, which before was appointed.

Secondly, He was by force of Law conſtrained to anſwer at the Bar daily, during all the time of the great Seſſions at Carmarthen, in defence of his juſt Cauſe againſt the pretenced matter of Præmunire, which his Adverſaries of meer malice have procured againſt him.

Thirdly, The ſaid Adverſaries, to moleſt him further, did privily pack a Queſt of ignorant Perſons of no Reputation, and indicted him upon the words of Rawlins Information, as appeareth by a Copy of the Indictment, intending thereby to make the matter ſound more hainous, notwithſtanding that the ſame Cauſe dependeth before the Kings high Council undetermined.

Fourthly, He was appointed by the Commiſſioners, before his departure from London, to pay two Hundred pound (which was Arrearages) into the Courts of Firſt-Fruits and Tenths, at Bartholomew day then next following; which payment he made accordingly, notwithſtanding that his Adverſaries wrought means to have made him break his day; namely, one Edward Harbert Gent. who hath a Parſonage of his to Farm, kept back his Rent

Anno 1555.

to the very laſt day, becauſe that Money ſhould not help to ſerve his turn; and ſo by crafty cavillation detaineth it ſtill in his hand with a years Rent and an half more: for the ſaid Edward Harbert is an Adherent of the ſaid Biſhops Adverſaries.

Fifthly, The Book of their Depoſitions is ſo great, that it asketh a long time to peruſe. And alſo the greateſt part of their Witneſſes were utterly unknown of the Biſhop and all his: And alſo dwelling in ſo many ſundry places of the Dioceſs among the Mountains and elſewhere, ſcarcely within the circuit of two hundred Miles.

Item, Another great Seſſions holden at Carmarthen in the Month of October laſt, during which time he was attendant there, as is aforeſaid. All which Cauſes conſidered, being alſo in the time of his ordinary Viſitation, which he did execute himſelf, he could not make ready his Exceptions in ſhorter time.

The ſaid Biſhop diſpatched his Man towards London the three and twentieth day of October, who ever ſithence hath been and is attendant in the ſame Suit, for the obtaining the Commiſſion for proof of this matter againſt his Adverſaries.

A Copy of a certain Letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids.

MOſt humbly ſheweth unto your Honour, your poor Orator Robert, Biſhop of S. Davids, That whereas one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of Thomas Young and Rowland Merick, being both Canons of S. Davids, and George Conſtantine Regiſter to the ſaid Biſhop) hath exhibited unto your Honour againſt him certain Articles, in the which are mentioned many triſling things, unworthy to be declared in your honourable Audience, and alſo their pretenced weighty Articles (as they have alledged there) are utterly untrue: for proof whereof the ſaid Thomas Lee hath had his Commiſſions into the Country: Therefore it may pleaſe your Honour of your favourable goodneſs, to grant unto your ſaid Orator a like Commiſſion for the Examination of Witneſſes, in defence of his Truth and Honeſty againſt the ſaid Thomas Lee, George Conſtantine, and the forenamed Rowland Merick, and all other Perſons, with their unjuſt Articles, Atteſtations and Sayings, which have depoſed againſt him. And in tender conſideration that your ſaid Orator ſtandeth bounden, and Sureties with him, in the Sum of 1000 Mark, to appear before the Kings Juſtice in the Seſſions at Carmarthen, in July next coming, to anſwer to a forged matter of Præmunire, by the procurement and counſel of his forenamed Adverſaries, maliciouſly ſurmiſed againſt him to his utter undoing. And furthermore, your Orator being in debt to the Kings Majeſty, by reaſon of the malicious Vexation of his foreſaid Adverſaries, cannot (if he remain here) ſatisfie the ſame: for whereas there be Arrearages to a great Sum (as well of the Kings Money as of his own Rents) he can receive none thereof, his Adverſaries have made ſuch ill Report to his diſcredit, bearing the People in hand, that he ſhall come no more thither. By reaſon of which bruit, neither his own Tenants will pay their Rents and Arrearages, nor the Prieſts their Arrearages due to the Kings Majeſty, as well for Anno ſecundo and tertio, as for quarto and quinto. In conſideration of all which things, it may pleaſe your honourable goodneſs to licence your ſaid Orator to depart into the Dioceſs, for theſe Affairs and other. And he is ready at all times, at your honourable commandment and pleaſure, to repair again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jeſus for the perpetual conſervation of your Honour, to his glory.

Another Letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids.

RIght Honourable, and my very ſpecial good Lord, with humble Service and hearty Thanks to God, and to you for your godly favour towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your Fatherly Letters, moſt lovingly to admoniſh me to incline unto that which is very neceſſary, as charitable Concord and Unity; This is, further to beſeech your Lordſhip for the Lords ſake not to be grieved, but benignly to hear, and gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing (to other) but a light grief to me, is in very deed a right grievous offence to God, with no little hindrance of his holy Word, and diſturbance of the Kings godly proceedings, and may be a great occaſion of much Inobedience and diſorder of good life. Wherefore I am ſtraitly bounden for the true Zeal I ought to bear unto Gods Word of Life, Chriſtian Religion, the Kings Majeſties Honour, and the godly quiet ſtate of his People, not faintly to let fall the burthen of diligent redreſs to be ſought at his Majeſties hands by the godly wiſdom of his moſt honourable and upright Counſel, but with hearty affection to bear it up againſt thoſe high-minded, arrogant, ſtubborn, ambitious, covetous Canons, truſting in their biting Tongues, with crafty prevention, and utterly untrue ſurmiſes, to ſtop the Light that their ungodly miſdoing in darkneſs ſhall either not be ſeen, or at the leaſt may ſeem to appear in colourable appearance of Right. Inſomuch that I do not a little marvel at theſe qualities in M. Chantor, the Canon, and the Dean of Worceſter; whoſe ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only known, but expertly proved, and ſenſibly felt in two of the firſt to my great loſſes, whereof I make no Complaint. But I wonder in my mind, and lament in my heart, the ſtrange alteration and wilful going back of of my old faithful Brother George Conſtantine, the which (knowing them all three to have been in times paſt either obſtinate Enemies to the true bearers of the Croſs of Chriſt, or at leaſt private lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Goſpel, to ſting the poor Followers thereof, ſeeking but their own lucre and pleaſure in all their doings) would ſo earneſtly cleave unto them in their wrong Deeds, as to betray me with his Tongue, become untrue of his Promiſe, and a bearer of filthy Sin for Lucres ſake, even yet ſtill perſiſting in the ſame (namely) in things manifeſtly known unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited. And as for their Præmunire, both George and they at my firſt coming, ungently detaining from M. Farlee his Commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, would have faced me down with Præmunire, becauſe it was written in my own Name according to the Statute: yet was I fain, for the zeal of Unity, not to ſee their uncourteous Deeds, departing with M. Farlee for the avoiding of their Malice and Envy, and gave that Office, for the amity of George, unto Mr. Chantor his Son in Law, and to D. Merick the Office of Cardigan. But ſeeing afterward their covetous reſpect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the Reformation of Sin, and ſpecially of ſhameleſs Whoredom, I was compelled to remove them ſore againſt their wills: and whereas I deſired many and ſundry times Charitable redreſs of their wrong doings in the Vacation time, I obtained many fair words, and nothing in deed. Alſo deſiring to have ſight of the Book of Statutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtain it. Deſiring to have a Key of the Chapter Seal, as my Lord of Bathe had, they would not deliver it but upon Conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it as pleaſed them to give it. And further, requiring the ſight of neceſſary Evidences, for the declaration of divers things in traverſe of my Right, they would in no wiſe grant it. And thereupon conſidering their ungentleneſs, I moved the Quo warranto, knowing right well, that if they ſhould ſhew any ſubſtantial Grant under the Kings Seal for their Corporation, it muſt therein appear the Biſhop to be the Head, and ever hath been under the King; for other they never have, nor had, except they would return to Rome again, as I truſt they will not. And yet perceiving afterward that they had no ſpecial Grant to ſhew, or elſe ſuch as they would not ſhew, I my ſelf for the reſpect of Unity wrote my Letters to the Kings Attorney, by reaſon whereof the Quo warranto was ſtayed, and ſo yet remaineth.

But touching the Certificate, the Kings Subſidy being due at Michaelmaſs laſt, and forborn till after Chriſtmaſs, and lawfully demanded afore they did utterly refuſe to pay both to my Vice-Collector and to my ſelf, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to ask the reſt, and it is committed to me in the Kings Roll a whole Sum in groſs, to be received of the Canons Reſidentiaries for their divident: who becauſe they cannot agree in dividing, would have the Kings Majeſty to tarry for his Mony, till they can agree to make diviſion;

diviſion; and I cannot demand it of any particular perſon, nor at any particular place.

Wherefore I moſt humbly beſeech your Fatherly goodneſs, for the Lords ſake, to perſiſt and continue my good Lord and Friend unto ſuch time as ye find me either deſiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willing to put the Judgment of my right Cauſe into your hands. And becauſe that the reſidue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long, and I have moleſted you too much with this my tedious Letter, I ſhall now ſurceaſe; humbly beſeeching your good Lordſhip to accept in good part this my boldneſs proceeding of neceſſity, and to pardon it for the love of our Lord Jeſus, who ſave and keep you in health, comfort, and honour long to endure, for the advancement of his glory. Written at Aberguily this Ninth of March.

Your Lordſhips to command during life, R.F.

And thus you have heard the firſt trouble of this bleſſed Martyr of the Lord in King Edwards days, with the whole diſcourſe thereof. Which we thought the rather here to expreſs, to give other good Biſhops warning to be more circumſpect, whom they ſhould truſt and have about them. Briefly, in few words to conclude this Proceſs, B. Farrar partly upon the importunate ſute of his Adverſaries, partly upon the ſiniſter and infortunate Fall of the good Duke of Somerſet, by whom he had been before promoted and maintained, having but ſmall favour ſhewed, was detained in Priſon till the death of King Edward, and the coming in of Queen Mary and Popiſh Religion, whereby a new trouble roſe upon him, being now accuſed and examined for his Faith and Doctrine. The Proceſs of which his trouble here likewiſe followeth.

After that the foreſaid Mr. Farrar Biſhop of St. Davids had been long detained in cuſtody under Sureties, in the Reign of King Edward, not for any juſt cauſe for his part deſerved, but by reaſon that he had been promoted by the Duke of Somerſet; and now after his Fall he found fewer Friends to ſupport him againſt ſuch as hunted after his Biſhoprick, at length after the deceaſe of King Edward, by the coming in of Queen Mary, the ſtate of Religion begun to be changed and altered. Whereby a new Trouble roſe upon him, being now accuſed and examined, not for any matter of Præmunire, but for his Faith and Doctrine. Whereupon he was called before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, with Mr. Hooper, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Bradford, Mr. Sanders, and others aforeſaid, the fourth of February. On the which day he ſhould alſo with them have been Condemned: but becauſe leiſure or liſt did not ſo well then ſerve the Biſhop, his Condemnation was deferred, and he ſent to Priſon again, where he continued till the 14. day of the ſaid month of February. What his Examinations and Anſwers were before the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſo much as remained and came to our hands, I have here annexed in manner as followeth.

The ſecond Trouble of B. Farrar, in the time of Q. Mary.

The Anſwer of Robert Farrar, Biſhop of St. Davids, before Wincheſter and others.

The Talk of B. Farrar before the Biſhop of Wincheſter and other Commiſſioners.

AT his firſt coming and kneeling before my Lord Chancellor, the Biſhop of Dureſm, and the Biſhop of Worceſter, who ſate at the Table; and Mr. Rocheſter, Mr. Southwel, Mr. Bourne, and others ſtanding at the Tables end, the Lord Chancellor ſaid unto him on this ſort:

Wincheſter, Now Sir, have you heard how the World goeth here?

Farrar, If it like your Honour, I know not.

Win. What ſay you? Do you not know things abroad, notwithſtanding you are a Priſoner?

Far. No, my Lord, I know not.

Winch. Lo, what a froward Fellow is this?

Farrar, If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, how ſhould I know any thing abroad, being a Priſoner?

Winch. Have you not heard of the coming in of the Lord Cardinal?

Farrar, I know not my Lord Cardinal; but I heard that a Cardinal was come in, but I did not believe it, and I believe it not yet.

Worceſt. I pray your Lordſhip (ſaid the Biſhop of Worceſter) tell him your ſelf, that he may know what is done.

Winch. The Queens Majeſty and the Parliament hath reſtored Religion into the ſame ſtate it was in at the beginning of the Reign of our King Henry the Eighth. Ye are in the Queens debt, and her Majeſty will be good unto you, if you will return to the Catholick Church.

B. Farrar charged with the Queens Debt.

Farrar, In what ſtate I am concerning my Debts to the Queens Majeſty, in the Court of Exchequer, my Lord Treaſurer knoweth: and the laſt time that I was before your Honour, and the firſt time alſo, I ſhewed you that I had made an Oath never to conſent nor agree, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould have any Power or Juriſdiction within this Realm: and further, I need not rehearſe to your Lordſhip, you know it well enough.

B. Farrar refuſeth the Pope.

Bourne, You were once abjured for Hereſie (ſaid M. Bourne) in Oxford.

M. Bourne lyeth to B. Farrar falſly to have abjured at Oxford.

Farrar, That was I not.

Bourne, You were.

Far. I was never, it is not true.

Bourne, You went from S. Davids to Scotland.

Far. That I did not.

Bourne, You did.

Far. That did I never, but I went from York into Scotland.

Bourne, Ah, ſo ſaid I; you went with Barlow.

Farrar, That is true, but never from Saint Davids.

Bourne, You carried Books out of Oxford, to the Archbiſhop of York, L. Lee.

Farrar, That did I not.

Bourne, You did.

Farrar, I did not, but I carried old Books from S. Oſwalds to the Biſhop of York.

B. Farrar falſly charged to have ſupplanted his Maſter, whom indeed he defended from danger.

Bourne, You ſupplanted your Maſter.

Farrar, That did I never in my life.

Bourne, By my Faith you did.

Farrar, Forſooth, I did not, never in my life, but did ſhield and ſave my Maſter from danger, and that I obtained of King Henry the Eighth, for my true Service, I thank God therefore.

Bourne, My Lord (ſaith Mr. Bourne to my Lord Chancellor) he hath an ill Name in Wales as ever had any.

Farrar, That is not ſo. Whoſoever ſaith ſo, they ſhall never be able to prove it.

Bourne, He hath deceived the Queen in divers ſums of Money.

Farrar, That is utterly untrue, I never deceived King nor Queen of one Peny in my life, and you ſhall never be able to prove that you ſay.

Winch. Thou art a falſe Knave.

B. Farrar ſtoutly ſtandeth upon his Truth.

Farrar, Then Farrar ſtood up unbidden (for all that while he kneeled) and ſaid, No, my Lord, I am a true man, I thank God for it. I was born under King Henry the Seventh, I ſerved King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth truly, and have ſerved the Queens Majeſty, that now is, truly with my poor heart and word: more I could not do, and I was never falſe, nor ſhall be by the Grace of God.

Wincheſter, How ſaiſt thou, wilt thou be reformable?

B. Farrar ſtandeth to his Oath made to the King againſt the Pope.

Farrar, My Lord, if it like your Honour, I have made an Oath to God, and to King Henry the Eighth, and alſo to King Edward, and in that to the Queens Majeſty, the which I can never break while I live, to die for it.

Dureſm, You have made another Oath before.

Farrar, No my Lord, I never made another Oath before.

Dureſm, You made a Vow.

Farrar, That did I not.

Vow of Chaſtity is not to live without a Wife.

Winch. You made a Profeſſion to live without a Wife.

Farrar, No, my Lord, if it like your Honour, that did I never; I made a Profeſſion to live chaſt, not without a Wife.

Worceſt. You were ſworn to him that was Maſter of your Houſe.

Farrar.

Ann. 1555.

Farrar. That was I never.

Wincheſt. Well, you are a froward Knave: we will have no more to do with you, ſeeing that you will not come; we will be ſhort with you, and that you ſhall know within this Seven-night.

Wincheſters perjury touch.

Farrar. I am as it pleaſeth your Honour to call me; but I cannot break my Oath which your Lordſhip your ſelf made before me, and gave in example, the which confirmed my Conſcience. Then I can never break that Oath whilſt I live to die for it.

Dureſm. Well, ſaith he, he ſtandeth upon his Oath: call another.

My Lord Chancellor then did ring a little Bell, and Mr. Farrar ſaid, I pray God ſave the King and Queens Majeſties long to continue in honour to Gods glory and their comforts, and the comfort of the whole Realm; and I pray God ſave all your Honours, and ſo departed.

After theſe Examinations thus ended, Biſhop Farrar ſo remained in Priſon uncondemned, till the fourteenth day (as is aforeſaid) of February, and then was ſent down into Wales, there to receive Sentence of Condemnation. Who then upon the ſix and twentieth of February, in the Church of Carmarthen, being brought by Griffith Leyſon Eſquire Sheriff of the County of Carmarthen, was there perſonally preſented before Henry Biſhop of S. Davids, and Conſtantine the publick Notary: which Henry there, and then diſcharged the ſaid Sheriff, and received him into his own cuſtody, further committing him to the keeping of Owen Jones, and thereupon declared unto the ſaid Mr. Farrar the great mercy and clemency, that the King and Queens Highneſs pleaſure was to be offered unto him, which he there did offer unto the ſaid Mr. Farrar; that is to ſay, That if he would ſubmit himſelf to the Laws of this Realm, and conform himſelf to the Unity of the Univerſal Catholick Church, he ſhould be received and pardoned: after that, ſeeing the ſaid Mr. Farrar to give no anſwer to the Premiſſes, the ſaid Biſhop miniſtred unto him theſe Articles following.

B. Farrar brought before Dr. Morgan, pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids.

Articles deviſed againſt Biſhop Farrar.

Articles objected againſt B. Farrar.

1. FIrſt, Whether he believeth the Marriage of Prieſts lawful by the Laws of God, and Holy Church, or no?

2. Item, Whether he believeth, that in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration duly pronounced by the Prieſt, the very Body and Blood of Chriſt is really and ſubſtantially contained, without the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine?

The Anſwer of Biſhop Farrar.

Unto the which Articles the ſaid Biſhop required the ſaid M. Farrar to anſwer upon his Allegiance.

To which he ſaid, he would anſwer when he ſaw a lawful Commiſſion, and would make no further anſwer at that time. Whereupon the ſaid Biſhop taking no advantage upon the ſame Anſwer, committed him to the ſaid Keeper, to be kept in Priſon until a new Monition, and in the mean time to deliberate with himſelf for his further anſwer to the Premiſſes.

Another Examination of the Biſhop of S. Davids, before Henry Morgan the pretenced Biſhop of Saint Davids, George Conſtantine his Regiſter, and others, the laſt of February, An. 1555.

Another Examination of B. Farrar.

THis day and place, Morgan the pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids ſitting as Judge, miniſtred unto Biſhop Farrar there perſonally preſent before him, certain Articles and Interrogatories in writing: which being openly read and miniſtred unto him, the ſaid Biſhop Farrar refuſed to anſwer, till he might ſee his lawful Commiſſion and Authority. Whereupon the aforeſaid pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids, did pronounce him as Contumax, and for the puniſhment of this his Contumacy to be counted pro confeſſo, and ſo did pronounce him in writing. Which being done, he committed the ſaid Biſhop to the cuſtody of Owen Jones, until Monday next, being the fourth of March, then to be brought again into the ſame place, between one and two.

Another appearance of the ſaid Biſhop Farrar, before Morgan the pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids.

Another appearance of B. Farrar.

Item, The day and place appointed, the ſaid Biſhop appearing again before the pretenced Biſhop, humbly ſubmitting himſelf as ready to anſwer to the Articles and Poſitions above-mentioned, gently required the Copy of the Articles, and a competent term to be aſſigned unto him, to anſwer for himſelf: which being granted unto him, and the Thurſday next being aſſigned unto him between One and Three to anſwer preciſely and fully; ſo he was committed again to Cuſtody, as above.

Another Appearance of the ſaid Biſhop.

Another appearance of the ſaid Biſhop.

ON Thurſday, as was appointed, which was the ſeventh of March, the ſaid Biſhop perſonally again appeared, where he exhibited a certain Bill in writing, containing in it his Anſwer unto certain Articles objected and miniſtred unto him before. Then after Henry the pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids offered him again the ſaid Articles as before: the tenor whereof tendeth to this effect, Articles again miniſtred againſt Biſhop Farrar.

Firſt, That he willed him being a Prieſt to abrenounce Matrimony.

Secondly, To grant the Natural preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Thirdly, That the Maſs is a propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead.

Fourthly, That general Councils lawfully congregated never did, nor can erre.

Fifthly, That men are not juſtified before God by Faith only, but that Hope and Charity are alſo neceſſarily required to Juſtification.

6. Sixthly, That the Catholick Church which only hath Authority to expound Scriptures, and to define Controverſies of Religion; and to ordain things appertaining to publick Diſcipline, is viſible, and like unto a City ſet upon a Mountain for all men to underſtand.

B. Farrar denieth to ſubſcribe to the Articles.

To theſe Articles thus objected to him, he refuſed to ſubſcribe, affirming that they were invented and excogitated by man, and pertain nothing to the Catholick Faith. After this, the Biſhop above-named, delivered unto him the Copy of the Articles, aſſigning him Monday next following, to anſwer and ſubſcribe to the ſame, either Affirmatively or Negatively.

Another Appearance of Biſhop Farrar.

Another appearance, or Examination of B. Farrar.

UPon the which Monday, being the 11. of March, he appearing again before the Biſhop, and the aforeſaid Notary George Conſtantine, exhibited in a written Paper his mind and anſwer to the foreſaid Articles, which the Biſhop had twice now objected againſt him before, to the which Articles and Anſwers he did ſo ſubſcribe, adding theſe words, as tenens ſe de æquitate & juſtitia eſſe Epiſcopum Menevenſem, that the Biſhop aſſigned the next Wedneſday, in the Fore-noon, to hear his final and definitive Sentence.

The laſt Appearance of Biſhop Farrar.

The laſt appearance and Examination of the bleſſed Biſhop M. Farrar.

THe which day and place the ſaid Biſhop and true Servant of God M. Farrar, perſonally there appearing, was demanded of Henry the pretenced Biſhop of S. Davids, whether he would renounce and recant his Hereſies, Schiſms, and Errors (as he called them) which hitherto he had maintained, and if he would ſubſcribe to the Catholick Articles, otherwiſe than he had done before.

B. Farrar appealeth from the Biſhop of S. Davids to the Cardinal.

After this the ſaid godly Biſhop, M. Farrar, did exhibit a certain Schedule written in Engliſh, and remaining in the Acts; appealing withal by expreſs word of mouth from the Biſhop, as from an incompetent Judge, to Cardinal Poole, &c.

Sentence pronounced againſt B. Farrar.

All which notwithſtanding, the ſaid Biſhop proceeding in his rage, pronounced the definitive Sentence againſt him contained in Writing, and there left in the Acts: by the which Sentence he pronounced him as an Hereticke Excommunicate, and to be given up forthwith to the Secular Power, namely, to the Sheriff of the Town of

of Carmarthen, Mr. Leyſon. The tenour of which Sentence, as well of his Condemnation, as of his Degradation, here followeth.

The Sentence of Condemnation againſt B. Farrar.

Here followeth the Copy of his Degradation.

The Sentence of Degradation againſt B. Farrar.

IN nomine Patris, ✠ Filii, ✠ & Spiritus Sancti, ✠ Amen. Quia nos Henricus permiſſione divina Meneven. Epiſc. per viam Inquiſitionis in negotio Hæreticæ pravitatis, cognoſcentes te Robertum Farrar Clericum propter tuam manifeſtam contumaciam & obſtinaciam per nos nunciatum fuiſſe, & eſſe in illud deteſtabile crimen Hæreſis multipliciter incidiſſe & commiſiſſe: quod cum non ſolum grande, ſed etiam damnabile & damnoſum ſit, & adeo enorme, quod exinde non tantum divina Majeſtas offenſa, ſed & univerſa Diœceſis Menevenſis commota eſt, & ob hoc indignus officio Sacerdotali & Eccleſiaſtico ſis redditus: Idcirco nos autoritate Dei Patris Omnipotentis, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, & noſtra, te ab omni hujuſmodi officio ſententialiter perpetuo privamus in hiis ſcriptis, teque ab illis verbo deponimus realiter, & actualiter ſecundum traditionem Canonum deponendum, & degradandum, prout in Ordinario & Pontificali continetur degradamus, prout ſequitur. In primis amovemus à te, &c.

Thus this godly Biſhop being condemned and degraded, was committed to the Secular Power, who not long after was brought to the place of Execution in the Town of Carmarthen, where he in the Market place in the South-ſide of the Market-Croſs, the thirtieth day of March, being Saturday next before Paſſion-Sunday, moſt conſtantly ſuſtained the torments and paſſion of the Fire.

Biſhop Farrar brought to the place of Execution.

The cruell burning of Doctor Farrar, Biſhop of S. Davids.

The burning of Rawlins White, Martyr.

Touching the which Conſtancy of this bleſſed Martyr, this is moreover to be added and noted, that one named Richard Jones, a Knights Son, coming to M. Farrar a little before his death, ſeemed to lament the painfulneſs of the Death he had to ſuffer; unto whom the Biſhop anſwered again to this effect, ſaying, That if he ſaw him once to ſtir in the pains of his Burning, he ſhould then give no credit to his Doctrine. And as he ſaid, ſo he right well performed the ſame; for ſo patiently he ſtood, that he never moved, but even as he ſtood, holding up his Stumps, ſo ſtill he continued, till one Richard Gravell with a Staff daſhed him upon the head, and ſo ſtruck him down.

A memorable Example of Conſtancy in this bleſſed Biſhop and Martyr.

¶ Letters.

As touching the Letters of M. Farrar, we do not find many that he did write. And peradventure in Queen Maries time his impriſonment was ſo ſtrait, that at no time it was permitted him to write. Albeit in his other Troubles in King Edwards time, certain Letters he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer, and to the Earl of Warwick: which Letters although they might be well referred to the firſt Edition of this ſtory; yet becauſe in the ſaid Letters is contained briefly and in few

few lines, the whole diſcourſe of his unjuſt vexation at that time wrought by his Adverſaries, I thought good not to paſs them over, but to communicate them unto the Reader, for the better underſtanding both of the innocency of that bleſſed Biſhop, and of the crafty iniquity of his conſpired Enemies; as in the ſaid Letters here following to the indifferent Reader may eaſily appear.

1555.

The Copie of a certain Letter of the Biſhop of Saint Davids, written belike to the Lord Chancellour Doctor Goodrick Biſhop of Ely.

MOſt humbly ſheweth unto your Honour, your poor Orator Robert Biſhop of Saint Davids, That whereas one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of Thomas Young, and Rowland Merick being both Canons of Saint Davids, and George Conſtantine Regiſter to the ſaid Biſhop) hath exhibited unto your Honour againſt him certain Articles, in the which are mentioned many trifling things, unworthy to be declared in your Honourable Audience, and alſo their pretenſed weighty Articles (as they have alledged there) are utterly untrue: for proof whereof the ſaid Thomas Lee hath had Commiſſions into the Country. Therefore it may pleaſe your Honour of your favourable goodneſs, to grant unto your ſaid Orator a like Commiſſion for the Examination of witneſſes, in defence of his Truth and honeſty againſt the aforenamed Thomas Lee, George Conſtantine, Thomas Young, Rowland Merick, and all other perſons with their unjuſt Articles, atteſtations, and ſayings, depoſed againſt him. And in tender conſideration that your ſaid Orator ſtandeth bounden, and Sureties with him in the ſum of a Thouſand Marks, to appear before the Kings Juſtice, in the Seſſions at Carmarthen, in July next coming to anſwer to a forged matter of Præmunire, by the procurement and counſell of his forenamed Adverſaries, maliciouſly ſurmiſed againſt him to his utter undoing. And furthermore that your Orator being in debt to the Kings Majeſty, by reaſon of the malicious vexation of the foreſaid Adverſaries, cannot (if he remain here) ſatisfy the ſame: for whereas there be Arrerages to a great ſum (as well of the Kings money as of his own rents) he can receive none thereof, his Adverſaries have made ſuch ill report to his diſcredit, bearing the People in hand, that he ſhall come no more thither. By reaſon of which bruit, neither his own Tenants will pay their Rents and Arrerages, nor the Prieſts their Arrerages due to the Kings Majeſty, as well for Anno ſecundo, and tertio, as for quarto, and quinto. In conſideration of all which things, it may pleaſe your Honourable goodneſs to licence your ſaid Orator to depart into the Dioceſs, for theſe affairs and other. And he ſhall be ready at all times, at your honourable commandment and pleaſure, to repair again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jeſus for the perpetual conſervation of your Honour, to his glory.

Biſhop Farrar with his ſureties in a thouſand Marks to appear in a matter of Premunire.

Beſides this letter he wrote another likewiſe to the ſaid Lord (who was, as ſeemeth, Dr. Goodrick L. Chancellor afore mentioned) wherin he declareth the whole cauſe of his trouble, how it roſe againſt him by his Adverſaries, as here followeth.

Another Letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids to the Lord Chancellor aforeſaid.

Another letter of Biſhop Farrar to the Lord Chancellour.

RIght honourable, and my very ſpecial good Lord, with humble ſervice and hearty thanks to God, and to you for your godly favor towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your Fatherly Letters, moſt lovingly admoniſhing me to incline unto that which is very neceſſary, as charitable concord and Unity; This is further to beſeech your Lordſhip for the Lords ſake not to be grieved, but benignely to hear, and gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing to other but a light grief, to me is in very deed a right grievous offence to God-ward, with no little hinderance of his holy Word, and diſturbance of the Kings godly proceedings, and may be a great occaſion of much inobedience, and diſorder of good life.

Wherefore I am ſtraitly bounden for the true Zeal that I am to bear unto the Word of Life, Chriſtian Religion, the Kings Majeſty's honour, and the godly quiet ſtate of his People, not faintly to let fall the burden of diligent redreſs to be ſought at his Majeſty's hands by the godly wiſdom of his moſt honourable and upright councel, but with hearty affection to bear it up againſt thoſe high-minded, arrogant, ſtubborn, ambitious, covetous Canons, truſting in their biting tongues, whith crafty prevention, and utterly untrue ſurmiſes, to ſtop the light that their ungodly miſdoings in darkneſs ſhall either not be ſeen, or at the leaſt may have a colourable appearance of right. In ſo much that I do not a little marvel at theſe qualities in Maſter Chaunter, the Canon, and the Dean of Worceſter, whoſe ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only known, but expertly proved, and ſenſibly felt in two of the firſt to my great loſſes whereof I make no complaint.

The unkind dealing of George Conſtantine againſt B. Farrar.

But I wonder in my mind and lament in my heart the ſtrange alteration and wilful going backward of mine old faithfull Brother George Conſtantine, the which (knowing them all three to have been in times paſt either obſtinate enemies to the True bearers of the Croſs of Chriſt, or at the leaſt privy lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Goſpell, to ſting the poor followers thereof, ſeeking but their own lucre and pleaſure in all their doings) would ſo earneſtly cleave unto them in their wrong deeds, as to betray me with his tongue, become untrue of his promiſe, and a bearer of filthy Sin for Lucres ſake, even yet ſtiffly perſiſting in the ſame, namely, in a thing manifeſtly known unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited.

This Farlee was Chancellor to B. Farrar.

And as for their præmunire, both George and they at my firſt coming, urgently detaining from M. Farlee his commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, would have faced me down with præmunire, becauſe it was written in my own name according to the Statute: yet was I fain, for the Zeal of Unity, not to ſee their uncourteous deeds, departing with M. Farlee for the avoiding of their malice and envy, and gave that office for the amity of George unto M. Chaunter his Son in Law, and to M. Merick the Office of Cardigan. But ſeeing after their covetous reſpect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the reformation of Sin, and eſpecially of ſhameleſs whoredom, I was compelled to remove them, ſore againſt their wils: and whereas I deſired many and ſundry times charitable redreſs of their wrong doings in the vacation time, I obtained many fair words, and nothing in deed.

This Chaunter was D. Young.

Dr. Young and Dr. Merick, removed by B. Farrar from their offices.

And deſiring to have ſight of the Book of Statutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtain it. Deſiring to have a key of the Chapter Houſe Seal, as my Lord of Bath had, they would not deliver it but upon conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it as it pleaſed them to give it. And further requiring the ſight of neceſſary Evidences, for the declaration of divers things in traverſe of my right, they would in no wiſe grant it. And thereupon conſidering their ungentleneſs, I moved the Quo warranto, knowing right well, if they ſhould ſhew any ſubſtantial grant under the Kings Seal for the Corporation, it muſt therein appear the Biſhop to be the Head, and ever hath been under the King: for other they never have, nor had, except they would return to Rome again, as I truſt they will not. And yet perceiving afterward, that they had no ſpecial grant to ſhew, or elſe ſuch as they would not ſhew, I my ſelf for the reſpect of Unity, wrote my Letters to the Kings Attourney, by reaſon whereof the Quo warranto was ſtayed, and ſo yet remaineth.

The wrongs which B. Farrar received by Tho: Yeung and Dr. Merick.

But as touching the certificate, the kings Subſidy being due at Michaelmas laſt, and forborn till after Chriſtmas, and lawfully demanded afore, they did utterly refuſe to pay both to my Vicecollector and to my ſelf, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to ask the reſt, and it is committed unto me in the Kings Roll a whole ſum in groſs, to be received of the Canons Reſidentiaries for their dividents: who, becauſe they cannot agree in dividing, would have the Kings Majeſty to tarry for his money, till they can agree to make diviſion; and I cannot demand it of any particular perſon, nor at any particular place.

Wherefore

Wherefore I moſt humbly beſeech your Fatherly goodnes for the Lords ſake, to perſiſt and continue my good Lord and Friend unto ſuch time as ye find mee either deſiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willing to put the Judgement of my right cauſe into your hands. And becauſe that the reſidue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long, and I have moleſted you too much whith this my tedious Letter, I ſhall now ſurceaſe; Humbly beſeeching your good Lordſhip to accept in good part this my boldneſs proceeding of neceſſity, and to pardon it for the Love of our Lord Jeſus, who ſave and keep you in health, comfort, and Honour long to endure, for the advancement of his glory Written at Aburguily this 9. of March.

Your Lordſhips to command during life, R. F.

The Hiſtorie of one Rawlins White, burned at Cardiffe in Wales about the Month of March, for the Teſtimony of Chriſt's Goſpel, reported by I. Dane being yet alive, who was almoſt Continually with him during his trouble, unto his death.

Rawlins White Martyr, burned at Cardiffe in Wales.

FOr ſo much as we have here paſſed the Hiſtory of Maſter Farrar, burned at the Town of Carmarthen in Wales, I thought to adjoyn and accompany with the ſame the Hiſtory alſo of one Rawlins White, a Fiſher-Man, which both in the like cauſe, and in the ſame Country of Wales, and alſo about the ſame Month of March, and year aforeſaid, gave his Life like a Valiant Souldier of Jeſus Chriſt to Martyrdom, and was burned at Cardiffe; the proceſs of whoſe ſtory here followeth expreſſed more at large.

This Rawlins was by his calling and occupation a Fiſherman, living and continuing in the ſaid trade by the ſpace of Twenty years at the leaſt, in the Town of Cardiffe, being (as a man of his vocation might be) one of a very good Name, and well accounted amongſt his Neighbors. As touching his Religion at the firſt, it cannot otherwiſe be known, but that he was a great partaker of the Superſtition and Idolatry that then was uſed, I mean in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. But after that God of his mercy had raiſed up the light of his Goſpel, through the bleſſed Goverment of King Edward the ſixth, here in this Realm of England, this Rawlins began partly to miſlike that which before he had embraced, and to have ſome good opinion of that which before by the iniquity of the time had been concealed from him: and the rather to bring this good purpoſe and intent of his to paſs, he began to be a diligent hearer, and a great ſearcher out of the Truth.

The deſirous mind of Rawlins to ſearch for truth.

But becauſe the good man was altogether unlearned, and withall very ſimple, he knew no ready way how he might ſatisfie his great deſire. At length it came in his mind to take a ſpecial remedy to ſupply his neceſſity which was this: He had a little Boy which was his own Son, which Child he ſet to School to learn to read Engliſh. Now after the little Boy could read indifferently well, his Father every night after ſupper, Summer and Winter, would have the Boy to read peice of the holy Scripture, and now and then of ſome other good Book. In which kind of Vertuous Exerciſe the old man had ſuch a delight and pleaſure, that, as it ſeemed, he rather practiſed himſelf in the ſtudy of the Scripture, than in the Trade or Science which before time he had uſed: ſo that Rawlins within few years in the ſaid time of King Edward, through the help of his little Son, a ſpecial Miniſter appointed by God (no doubt) for that purpoſe, and through much conference beſides, profited and went forward in ſuch ſort, that he was able not only to reſolve himſelf touching his own former Blindneſs and Ignorance, but was alſo able to Admoniſh and Inſtruct others: and therefore when occaſion ſerved he would goe from one place to another Viſiting ſuch as he had beſt hope in. By which his doing he became in that Country, both a notable and open Profeſſor of the Truth, being at all times and in all ſuch places, not without the Company of his little Boy, whom (as I have ſaid) he uſed as an aſſiſtance to this good purpoſe. And to this his great induſtry and endeavour in the holy Scripture, God did alſo add in him a ſingular gift of Memory, ſo that by the benefit thereof hee would and could do that in vouching and rehearſing of the Text, which men of riper and more profound knowledg, by their notes and other helps of Memory could very hardly accompliſh. Inſomuch that he, upon the alledging of Scripture, very often would cite the book, the leafe, yea and the very ſentence; ſuch was the wonderful working of God in this ſimple and unlearned Father.

The means whereby Rawlins firſt came to knowledge. Rawlins by the means of his young ſon came to the knowledge of the Scripture.

The gift of Memory in Rawlins.

Anno 1555.

Now when he had thus continued in his profeſſion the ſpace of five years, King Edward died, upon whoſe deceaſe Queen Mary ſucceeded, and with her all kind of Superſtition and Papiſtry crept in. Which thing being once perceived, Rawlins did not altogether uſe open inſtruction and admonition (as before he was wont) and therefore oftentimes in ſome private place or other he would call his truſty Friends together, and with earneſt Prayer and great lamentation paſs away the time, ſo that by his Vertuous inſtructions, being without any blemiſh, of Error, he converted a great number, which number (no doubt) had greatly increaſed, had not the cruel ſtorm of perſecution been.

The extremity and force whereof at the laſt ſo purſued this good Father Rawlins, that he looked every hour to go to priſon: whereupon many of thoſe, which had received comfort by his inſtructions, did reſort unto him, and by all means poſſible began to perſwade him to ſhift for himſelf, and to diſpoſe his goods by ſome reaſonable order to the uſe of his Wife and Children, and by that means he ſhould eſcape that danger, which was imminent over his head.

Rawlins exhorted to ſhift for himſelf.

But Rawlins nothing abaſhed for his own part through the iniquity of the time, and nothing at all moved with theſe their fleſhly perſwaſions, thanked them moſt heartily for their good will, and told them plainly, that he had learned one good leſſon touching the confeſſion end denial of Chriſt; adverti ſing them, that if he upon their perſwaſions ſhould preſume to deny his Maſter Chriſt, Chriſt in the laſt day would deſy and utterly condemn him: and therefore (quoth he) I will by favourable grace confeſs and bear witneſs of him before men, that I may find him in everlaſting life.

Rawlins promiſeth to be conſtant to the death.

Notwithſtanding which Anſwer, his Friends were very importunate with him. Howbeit Father Rawlins continued ſtill in his good purpoſe ſo long, till at the laſt he was taken by the Officers of the Town, as a man ſuſpected of Hereſie; upon which apprehenſion he was convented before the Biſhop of Landaffe that then was, the ſaid Biſhop lying then at his Houſe beſides Chepſtow: by whom after divers combates and conflicts with him and his Chaplains, this good Father Rawlins was committed to priſon in Chepſtow. But this his keeping, whether it were by the Biſhops means, becauſe he would rid his hands of him, or through the favour of his Keeper, was not ſo ſevere and extreme, but that (if he had ſo liſted) he might have eſcaped oftentimes.

Rawlins apprehended and convented before the Biſhop of Landaffe named Anthony Rechin. Rawlins might eſcape and would not

But that notwithſtanding, he contiued ſtill, inſomuch that at the laſt he by the aforenamed Biſhop was removed from Chepſtow to the Caſtle of Cardiffe, where he continued by the ſpace of one whole year: During whith time, this Reporter reſorted to him very often, with Money and other reliefe from this Reporters Mother (who was a great favourer of thoſe that were in affliction in thoſe days) and other of his Friends: which he received not without great thanks and praiſes given to the Name of God. And albeit that he was thus troubled and impriſoned as ye have heard, to his own undoing in this World, and to the utter decay of his poor Wife and Chrildren: yet was his heart ſo ſet to the inſtruction and furtherance of others in the way of Salvation, that he was never in quiet, but when he was perſwading or exhorting ſuch of his familiar Friends, as commonly came unto him. Inſomuch that on the Sundays and other times of leaſure, when his Friends came to viſit him, he would paſs away the time in prayer and exhortations, admoniſhing them always to beware of falſe Prophets which come in Sheeps Clothing.

Rawlins a whole year in priſon. A godly Woman ſtirred up to relieve Rawlins.

Exhortation of Rawlins to his Frieds.

Now when he had continued in Cardiffe Caſtle by the ſpace of one whole year (as I have ſaid) the time of his further tryal was at hand. Wherupon the forenamed Biſhop of Landaffe cauſed him to be brought again from the Caſtle of Cardiffe unto his own Houſe beſides Chepſtow and whileſt he continued there, the Biſhop aſſayed many ways how to reduce him to ſome conformity. But when

Anno 1555.

Rawlins by no means could be reduced to return to Popery.

when all means either by their threatning words, or flattering promiſes, were to no purpoſe: the Biſhop willed him to adviſe, and be at a full point with himſelf, either to recant his Opinions, or elſe to abide the rigour of the Law, and thereupon gave him a day of determination. Which day being come, the Biſhop with his Chaplains went into his Chappel, not without a great number of other By-dwellers, that came to behold the manner of their doings. When the Biſhop with his Retinue were placed in order, poor Rawlins was brought before them. The Biſhop after a great deliberation in addreſſing himſelf (as it ſeemed, and ſilence forewarned to the reſt that were there preſent) uſed a long kind of Talk to him, declaring the cauſe of his ſending for, which was for that he was a man well known to hold Heretical Opinions, and that through his Inſtruction many were led into blind Error. In the end he exhorted him to conſider his own eſtate wherein he ſtood: for (ſaid the Biſhop) Rawlins, you have oftentimes ſince your firſt trouble, both here in my houſe, and elſewhere been travelled with al touching your Opinions, and that notwithſtanding ye ſeem altogether obſtinate and wilful. Now hereupon we thought good to ſend for you, to ſee if there were any conformity in you: ſo that the matter is come to this point, That if you will ſhew your ſelf Repentant for that which you have done againſt God and the Princes Law, we are ready to uſe favour towards you; but if by no means we can perſwade with you touching your Reformation, we are minded at this time to miniſter the Law unto you, and therefore adviſe with your ſelf what you will do.

Rawlins brought before the Biſhop of Landaff in open Judgment.

The words of the Biſhop to Rawlins

Rawlins anſwereth to the Biſhop.

When the Biſhop had made an end of his long Tale, this good Father Rawlins ſpake boldly to him, and ſaid, My Lord, I thank God I am a Chriſtian man, and I hold no Opinions contrary to the Word of God; and if I do, I deſire to be reformed out of the Word of God, as a Chriſtian man ought to be. Many more words in like ſort were between the Biſhop and Rawlins, which this Reporter doth not well remember. But in the end, when Rawlins would in no wiſe recant his Opinions, the Biſhop told him plainly, that he muſt proceed againſt him by the Law, and condemn him as an Heretick.

The B. of Landaff proceedeth with Prayer in condemnation of Rawlins; which commonly the Popiſh Perſecutors are not wont to do.

Proceed in your Law a Gods name, ſaid Rawlins; but for an Heretick you ſhall never condemn me while the World ſtandeth. But (ſaid the Biſhop to his Company) before we proceed any further with him, let us pray unto God that he would ſend ſome ſpark of Grace upon him, (meaning Rawlins) and it may ſo chance, that God through our Prayer will here turn and convert his heart. When Rawlins heard the Biſhop ſay ſo; Ah my Lord, quoth he, now you deal well and like a goodly Biſhop, and I thank you moſt heartily for your great charity and gentleneſs. Chriſt ſaith, Whereas two or three be gathered together in my Name, I will be in the midſt of them: and there be more than two or three of you.

The Biſhop prayeth to his God, and Rawlins to his.

Now if it be ſo that your Requeſt be godly and lawful, and that ye pray as ye ſhould pray, without doubt God will hear you. And therefore my Lord go to, do you pray to your God, and I will pray to my God. I know that my God will both hear my prayer, & perform my deſire.

By and by the Biſhop with his Company fell to Prayer. And Rawlins, turning himſelf to a Pew that ſtood ſomewhat near him, fell down upon his Knees, covering his Face with his hands: and when they had prayed a while, the Biſhop with his Company aroſe from Prayer. And then alſo aroſe Rawlins, and came before the Biſhop.

Rawlins confirmed in his Doctrine.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Now Rawlins, how is it with thee? Wilt thou revoke thy Opinions, or no? Surely (ſaid Rawlins) my Lord, Rawlins you left me, and Rawlins you find me, and by God's Grace Rawlins I will continue. Certainly if your Petitions had been juſt and lawful, God would have heard them: but you honour a falſe God, and pray not as ye ſhould pray; and therefore hath not God granted your deſire. But I am one poor ſimple man, as you ſee, and God hath heard my complaint, and I truſt he will ſtrengthen me in his own Cauſe.

Popiſh Biſhops pray to a falſe God, and therefore are not heard.

The Biſhop, when he perceived that this Hypocriſie of theirs took none effect, then with hot words he reproved him, and forthwith was ready to read the Sentence. Howbeit, upon ſome advice given to him by his Chaplains that were there preſent, he thought beſt firſt to have a Maſs, thinking that indeed by ſo doing ſome wonderful work ſhould be wrought in Rawlins, and thereupon a Prieſt began a Maſs.

A Maſs ſaid for Converſion of Rawlins.

In the mean time poor Rawlins betook himſelf to Prayer in a ſecret place there by; until ſuch time as the Prieſt came to the Sacring, as they term it, which is a principal point of their Idolatry. When Rawlins heard the Sacring-Bell ring (as the uſe was) he roſe out of his place, and came to the Quire-door, and there ſtanding a while, turned himſelf to the People, ſpeaking theſe words, Good People, if there be any Brethren amongſt you, or at the leaſt, if there be but one Brother amongſt you, the ſame one bear witneſs at the Day of Judgment, that I bow not to this Idol (meaning the Hoſt that the Prieſt held over his Head.)

The words of Rawlins to the People at the Sacring time.

The Maſs being ended, Rawlins eftſoons was called for again. To whom the Biſhop uſed many perſwaſions; but the bleſſed Man continued ſo ſtedfaſt in his former Profeſſion, that the Biſhops Talk was altogether in vain, and to no purpoſe. Whereupon the Biſhop cauſed the definitive Sentence to be read. Which being ended, Rawlins was diſmiſſed, and from thence he was by the Biſhops commandment carried again to Cardiff, there to be put into the Priſon of the Town, called Cockmarel, a very dark, loathſom, and moſt vile Priſon.

Rawlins ſtill conſtant in the Profeſſion of Gods Truth.

Sentence read againſt Rawlins. Rawlins ſent to Priſon to Cardiffe Caſtle.

Rawlins in the mean time paſſed away the time in Prayer, and chiefly in ſinging of Pſalms: which kind of godly Exerciſe he always uſed, both at Cardiff Caſtle, and in all other places.

Now after he had thus continued a Priſoner in Cockmarel Priſon at Cardiff (as is aforeſaid) a good ſpace, about three weeks before the day wherein he ſuffered, the Head Officers of the Town, that had the charge of his Execution, were determined to burn him, becauſe they would be ſooner rid of him; having not indeed a Writ of Execution awarded, as by the Law they ſhould have. Whereupon one H. Lewes, the Recorder of the Town that then was, ſeeing that they went about to burn him without any Warrant by Writ, came to them and told them, That if they did burn him before they had the Writ, De Hæreticis comburendis, the Wife of the ſaid Rawlins would upon juſt cauſe, by Law, call their doings into queſtion.

The Officers intending to burn Rawlins without a Writ.

Immediately upon this Advertiſement, they ſent to London for the Writ above-named: upon the receit whereof they made ſome ſpeed to the Execution of the ſaid Rawlins. Now when the day was come, wherein the good Father ſhould perform and accompliſh the laſt act of this his worthy conflict, he was the Night before willed to prepare himſelf.

The Writ awarded for burning of Rawlins.

Now when he perceived his time was no leſs near than it was reported unto him, he ſent forthwith to his Wife, and willed her by the Meſſenger, that in any wiſe ſhe ſhould make ready and ſend unto him his Wedding-garment, meaning a Shirt, which afterward he was burned in. Which requeſt, or rather commandment of his, his Wife with great ſorrow and grief of heart did perform, and early in the Morning did ſend it to him, which he received moſt gladly and joyfully.

Rawlin's Wedding-Garment.

Now when the hour of his Execution was come, this good and conſtant Father Rawlins was brought out of Priſon, having on his Body the long Shirt, which (as you heard before) he called his Wedding-garment, and an old Ruſſet-Coat which he was wont to wear. Beſides this, he had upon his Legs an old pair of Leather-Buskins, which he had uſed long afore. And thus being brought out of Priſon (as I have ſaid) he was accompanied, or rather guarded with a great company of Bills and Gleaves. Which ſight when he beheld, Alas (quoth he) what meaneth all this? All this needeth not. By God's Grace I will not ſtart away: but I with all my heart and mind give unto God moſt hearty Thanks, that he hath made me worthy to abide all this for his holy Names ſake.

Rawlins going to the place of Execution.

So he came to a place in his way, whereas his poor Wife and Children ſtood weeping, and making great lamentation: the ſudden ſight of whom ſo pierced his heart that the very Tears trickled down his Face. But he ſoon after, as though he had miſliked this Infirmity of his fleſh, began to be as it were altogether angry with himſelf: Inſomuch, that ſtriking his Breaſt with his hand, he uſed theſe words, Ah Fleſh, ſtayeſt thou me ſo? wouldeſt thou fain prevail? Well, I tell thee do what thou canſt, thou ſhalt not, by God's Grace, have the Victory.

Rawlins ſomewhat moved at the ſight of his Wife and Children.

Rawlins wreſtleth againſt his Fleſh.

By this time this poor Innocent came to the very Altar of his Sacrifice (I mean the place appointed for his death) and there found a Stake ready ſet up, with ſome Wood toward the making of the Fire. Which when he beheld, he ſet forward himſelf very boldly; but in going toward the Stake, he fell down upon his knees and kiſſed the ground; and in riſing again, the Earth a little ſticking on his Noſe, he ſaid theſe words, Earth unto Earth, and Duſt unto Duſt: thou art my Mother, and unto thee I ſhall return. Then went he chearfully and very joyfully, and ſet his Back cloſe unto the Stake; and when he had ſtood there a while, he caſt his eye upon this Reporter, and called him unto him, and ſaid, I feel a great fighting between the Fleſh and the Spirit, and the Fleſh would very fain have his ſwing; and therefore I pray you, when you ſee me any thing tempted, hold your finger up to me, and I truſt I ſhall remember my ſelf.

The Agony and Fight of this Chriſtian Warriour.

As he was thus ſtanding with his Back cloſe unto the Stake, a Smith came with a great Chain of Iron: whom when he ſaw, he caſt up his hand with a loud voice, and gave God great thanks. Then the Smith caſt a Chain about him, and as he was making it faſt on the other ſide, Rawlins ſaid unto him, I pray you good Friend knock in the Chain faſt; for it may be that the Fleſh would ſtrive mightily, but God of thy great mercy give me ſtrength and patience to abide the extremity.

Rawlins faſtned to the Stake.

Now when the Smith had made him ſure to the Stake, the Officers began to lay on more Wood, with a little Straw and Reed: wherein the good Old man was no leſs occupied than the beſt; for as far as he could reach his hands, he would pluck the Straw and Reed, and lay it about him in places moſt convenient for his ſpeedy diſpatch. Which thing he did with ſuch a chearful Countenance and familiar Geſture, that all men there preſent were in a manner aſtoniſhed.

The chearfulneſs of Father Rawlins at his Death.

Thus when all things were ready, ſo that there lacked nothing but the putting to of the Fire, directly over againſt the Stake, in the face of Rawlins, there was a Standing erected, whereon ſtept up a Prieſt, addreſſing himſelf to ſpeak to the People, which were many in number, becauſe it was Market-day. When Rawlins perceived him, and conſidered the cauſe of his coming, he reached a little Straw unto him, and made two little Stays and ſet them under his Elbows. Then went the Prieſt forward in his Sermon, wherein he ſpake of many things touching the Authority of the Church of Rome. In the mean time Rawlins gave ſuch good ear and attention, that he ſeemed nothing at all moved or diſquieted. At the laſt, the Prieſt came to the Sacrament of the Altar, and there he began to inveigh againſt Rawlins Opinions: in which his Invection he cited the common place of Scripture, and thereupon made a Clerkly Interpretation.

A Popiſh Sermon preached at Rawlin's Martyrdom.

Now when Rawlins perceived that he went about not only to teach and preach the People falſe Doctrine, but alſo to confirm it by Scripture, he ſuddenly ſtart up, and beckned his hands to the People, ſaying twice; Come hither good People, and hear not a falſe Propher preaching: and then ſaid unto the Preacher, Ah thou naughty Hypocrite, doſt thou preſume to prove thy falſe Doctrine by Scripture? Look in the Text what followeth; Did not Chriſt ſay, Do this in remembrance of me? After which words, the Prieſt being rather amazed than interrupted, forthwith held his peace.

Rawlins words to the falſe Propher.

Then ſome that ſtood by cried out, Put fire, ſet to fire; which being ſet to, the Straw and Reed, by and by, caſt up both a great and ſudden flame. In the which flame this good and bleſſed man bathed his hands ſo long, until ſuch time as the Sinews ſhrunk, and the Fat dropped away, ſaving that once he did, as it were, wipe his Face with one of them. All this while, which was ſomewhat long, he cried with a loud voice, O Lord, receive my Soul; O Lord, receive my Spirit, until he could not open his mouth. At the laſt the extremity of the Fire was ſo vehement againſt his Legs, that they were conſumed almoſt before the reſt of his Body was burned, which made the whole Body fall over the Chain into the Fire ſooner than it would have done. During which time of his burning, it cannot be ſaid that he felt any great pain, conſidering that not without his perfect memory he abode both quietly and patiently, even unto the departing of his life. Thus died this godly and old man Rawlins for the Teſtimony of Gods Truth, being now rewarded, no doubt, with the Crown of eternal Life.

The Martyrdom of Rawlins White, a Fiſherman, at Cardiff, An. 1555.

The conſtant patience of Rawlins at his burning.

Anno 1555.

It is recorded furthermore of the ſaid good Father Rawlins, by this Reporter, that as he was going to his death, and ſtanding at the Stake, he ſeemed in a manner to be altered in Nature. For as before he was wont to go ſtooping, or rather crooked, through the infirmity of Age, having a ſad Countenance and a very feeble Complexion, and withal very ſoft in Speech and Geſture, now he went and ſtretched up himſelf not only bolt upright, but alſo bore withal a moſt pleaſant and comfortable Countenance, not without great courage and audacity both in Speech and Behaviour. He had (of which thing I ſhould have ſpoken before) about his Head a Kerchief, the Hairs of his head (ſomewhat appearing beneath his Kerchief) and alſo of his Beard, were more inclining to white than to gray, which gave ſuch a ſhew and countenance to his whole Perſon, that he ſeemed to be altogether Angelical.

A ſudden alteration of Nature marvellous in Rawlins before his death.

It is alſo ſaid by this Reporter, that a little before the Fire flaſhed up to his Body (as ye have heard) many of his Friends came to him, and took him by the hand, amongſt whom the Reporter of this ſtory held him ſo long by the hand, till the flame of the Fire roſe and forced them to ſunder. In the mean time the Prieſt, of whom I ſpake afore, cried out and ſaid, that it was not lawful for any man to take him by the hand, becauſe he was an Heretick, and condemned by the Church. The chief cauſe of his Trouble, was his Opinion touching the Sacrament of the Altar. He was at that time of his death of the Age of Threeſcore years, or thereabouts.

The Reporter of this ſtory was one M. Dane.

The ſum of the words ſpoken by Queen Mary to certain of her Counceollrs, March 28. An. 1555. touching the reſtitution of Abby-Lands.

BEfore I paſs over this Month of March, I cannot but leave a little Memorandum of the words or conſultation of Q. Mary, uſed to certain of the Council the 28. day of the ſaid Month of March, touching the reſtoring again of the Abby-Lands. Who after ſhe had called unto her preſence four of her Privy Council, the day and month aforeſaid (the names of which Councellors were theſe.)

1. William, Lord Marqueſs of Wincheſter, High Treaſurer of England.
2. Sir Robert Rocheſter Knight, the Queens Controller.
3. Sir William Peter Knight, Secretary.
4. Sir Francis Ingleſield Kt. Maſter of the Wards.

The names of the Councellors called before Q. Mary.

The ſaid Queen Mary inferred theſe words, the principal effect and ſum whereof here followeth. You are here of our Council, and we have willed you to be called unto us, to the intent you might hear of me my Conſcience, and the reſolution of my mind, concerning the Lands and Poſſeſſions as well of Monaſteries, as of other Churches whatſoever, being now preſently in my poſſeſſion.

The effect of Q. Maries words touching Abby-lands to be reſtored.

First, I do conſider, that the ſaid Lands were taken away from the Churches aforeſaid in the time of Schiſm, and that by unlawful means, ſuch as are contrary both to the Law of God and of the Church. For the which cauſe my Conſcience doth not ſuffer me to detain them; and therefore I here expreſly refuſe either to claim or to retain the ſaid Lands for mine, but with all my heart freely and willingly, without all paction or condition, here and before God I do ſurrender and relinquiſh the ſaid Lands and Poſſeſſions, or Inheritances whatſoever, and do renounce the ſame with this mind and purpoſe, that order and diſpoſition thereof may be taken, as ſhall ſeem beſt liking to our moſt holy Lord the Pope, or elſe his Legate the Lord Cardinal, to the honour of God, and wealth of this our Realm.

The Queen makeeth a Conſcience in keeping Abby-lands.

The Queen ſurrendreth from her ſelf the poſſeſſion of Abby-lands.

And albeit you may object to me again, that conſidering the ſtate of my Kingdom, and the Dignity thereof, my Crown Imperial cannot be honourably maintained and furniſhed without the poſſeſſions aforeſaid: yet notwithſtanding I ſet more by the ſalvation of my Soul, than by ten Kingdoms; and therefore the ſaid Poſſeſſions I utterly refuſe here to hold after that ſort and title, and give moſt hearty thanks to Almighty God, which hath given me an Husband likewiſe minded, with no leſs good affection in this behalf, than I am my ſelf.

Anno 1555.

Promiſes for reſtitution of Abby-Lands.

Wherefore I charge and command, that my Chancellor (with whom I have conferred my mind in this matter before) and you four, to morrow together do reſort to the moſt Reverend Lord Legate, and do ſignifie to him the Premiſſes in my name, and give your attendance upon him for the more full declaration of the ſtate of my Kingdom, and of the foreſaid Poſſeſſions accordingly, as you your ſelves do underſtand the matter, and can inform him in the ſame.

This Intimation being given by the Queen, firſt unto the Councellors, and then coming to the Cardinals hand, he drawing out a Copy thereof in Latin, ſent the ſame to thePope: which Copy drawn in Latin, and coming afterward to my hand, I have thus tranſlated into Engliſh, as you have heard.

Ambaſſadors ſent from England to Rome, Febr. 19.

Furthermore, here by the way is to be underſtood, that in the Month before, which was February, and in the 19. day of the ſaid Month, the Biſhop of Ely, with the Lord Montacute and Sevenſcore Horſe, were ſent as Embaſſadors from the King and Queen unto Rome. For what cauſe, in ſtory it is not expreſſed; but by conjecture it may be well ſuppoſed to be for the ſame cauſe of Abby-Lands, as by the ſequel thereof may probably appear.

The Popes Bull for reſtitution of Abby-Lands.

For it was not long after, but the Pope did ſet forth in print a Bull of Excommunication for all manner of ſuch Perſons, without exception, as kept any of the Church or Abby-Lands: by virtue of which Bull, the Pope Excommunicated as well ſuch as had any of the Church or Abby-Lands, as alſo all ſuch Princes, Biſhops, and Noblemen, Juſtices of Peace and other in Office, who had not, or did not forthwith put the ſame Bull in Execution. Albeit this execution (God be thanked) yet to this day was never put in practice.

Note the nature of the Papiſts, where they can overcome they are Lions; where they are overmatched they play the Foxes.

Wherein again is to be obſerved another Catholick ſtretch, not unworthy (perchance) of marking. For where this kind of Catholicks by rigor and force may overmaſter, they ſpare for no coſt, but lay on load enough. This well appeared, and ſtill doth appear in burning the poor patient Chriſtians, whom becauſe they ſee to be deſtitute of power and ſtrength to reſiſt them, and content with patience to receive whatſoever is put unto them, there they play the Lions, and make no end of burning and perſecuting. But where they ſpy themſelves to be over-matched, or fear to receive a foil in preſuming too far, there they keep in, and can ſtay the execution of their Laws and Bulls, be they never ſo Apoſtolical, till they ſpy their time convenient for their purpoſe, as in this caſe is evident for all the world to ſee.

Here lacked no good will in the Biſhops, but time as yet did not ſerve them.

For notwithſtanding that the Popes Bull, coming down with full Authority for reſtitution of Abby-Lands, did ſo thunder out moſt terrible Excommunication, not only againſt them which detained any ſuch Lands, but alſo againſt all other that did not ſee the Popes commandment to be executed; yet neither Wincheſter, nor any of all the Popes Clergy, would greatly ſtir in that matter, perceiving the Nobility to be too ſtrong for them to match withal; and therefore were contented to let the Caſe fall, or at leaſt to ſtay for a time, while time might better ſerve them.

Falſe diſſembling in the Popes Catholick Church.

Yea, and moreover under a crafty pretence, that the Nobility and men of Lands at the firſt coming out of the Bull ſhould not be exaſperate too much againſt them, they ſubtilly abuſed the Pulpits, and diſſembled with the People, affirming that the ſaid Popes late Bull, ſet forth in print for reſtitution of Abby-Lands, was not meant for England, but for other forreign Countries: where in very deed the meaning of that Bull, was only for England, and no Country elſe, as both by this Intimation of Queen Mary here mentioned, and by many other conjectures, and alſo by Mr. Fecknams Ballet of Caveat Emptor, may appear. Whereby it is eaſie for all men to underſtand what the purpoſe of thoſe men was to do, if time, which they obſerved, might have ſerved their Devotion. But to let this matter paſs of the Popes Bull, the time now ſerveth to intreat of Pope Julius death, forſomuch as he made his end about the latter end of this foreſaid Month of March.

Mr. Fecknams Ballet of Caveat Emptor.

Concerning the Deeds and Acts of which Pope, to make a full declaration, it were not ſo much tedious to the Reader, as horrible to all good Ears. Under this Julius flouriſhed the Archbiſhop of Beneventanus, a Florentine, named Johannes à Caſa, Dean of the Popes Chamber, and chief Legate to the Venetians: who well declaring the fruit of that filthy See, ſo far forgot both Honeſty and Nature, that he ſhamed not only to play the filthy Sodomite himſelf, and to boaſt openly of the ſame; but alſo took upon him moſt impudently in Italian Metre, to all mens ears, to ſet forth the praiſe and commendation of that beaſtly Iniquity, ſaying, That he himſelf never uſed other: and this Book was printed at Venice by one Trojanus Navus; and yet the Pope could ſuffer this ſo great Iniquity and ſhameleſs Beaſtlineſs, even under his noſe in his own Chamber, which could not abide the true Doctrine of Chriſt in Chriſtian Books.

Read more of this in a Book called a Warning to England. The death Pope Julius the Third. Vide ſcriptum Pauli Vergerii contra hunc Archiepiſc. Note here what an holy Catholick Church this is.

Amongſt other Pranks and Deeds of this foreſaid Pope, in his Jubilee, and in the Synod of Trent, and in confirming of the Idol of Lauretane, this is alſo reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatly in Pork-fleſh and Peacocks. Upon a time when he was admoniſhed of his Phyſician to abſtain from all Swines-fleſh, for that it was noyſom for his Gout, and yet would not follow his counſel; the Phyſician afterward gave warning to his Steward or Orderer of his Diet, that he ſhould ſet no more Pork-fleſh before him.

A Porkiſh Pope.

Whereupon when the Pope perceived the ſaid Pork-fleſh to be lacking in his accuſtomed ſervice: Where (ſaid he) is my Pork? And when his Steward had anſwered that his Phyſician had forbidden any Pork to be ſerved: then the Pope burſting out into a great rage, ſaith theſe words, Bring me, ſaid he, my Pork-fleſh, Al diſpetto de Dio, that is to ſay in Engliſh, In the deſpight of God.

Monſtrous Blaſphemy in the Pope.

At another time, he ſitting at Dinner, pointing to a Peacock upon his Table, which he had not touched; Keep (ſaid he) this cold Peacock for me againſt Supper, and let me ſup in the Garden: for I ſhall have Gueſts. So when Supper came, and amongſt other hot Peacocks, he ſaw not his cold Peacock brought to his Table: the Pope, after his wonted manner, moſt horribly blaſpheming God, fell into an extream rage, &c. Whereupon one of his Cardinals ſitting by, deſired him, ſaying; Let not your Holineſs, I pray you, be ſo moved with a matter of ſo ſmall weight. Then this Julius the Pope anſwering again, What, ſaid he, if God was ſo angry for an Apple, that he caſt our firſt Parents out of Paradiſe for the ſame, why may not I, being his Vicar, be angry then for a Peacock, ſince a Peacock is a greater matter than an Apple? Behold here (good Reader) by this Pope, the holineſs of that blaſphemous See: and yet thou ſhalt ſee here what affection was born to this Pope here in England, by the Diriges, Hearſes, and Funerals commanded to be had and celebrated in all Churches by the Queen and her Council, as may appear by the Copy of their Letters here following.

Pope Julius blaſphemeth God for a Peacock. O vocem Antichriſto dignam!

A Letter from the Biſhop of Wincheſter (being Lord Chancellor) unto Boner Biſhop of London, touching the celebrating of the Popes Funeral.

April 20. Winchſters Letter to Boner for the Popes Funeral.

After my hearty Commendations to your good Lordſhip. the King and Queens Majeſty having certain knowledge of the death of the Popes Holineſs, thought good there ſhould be as well ſolemn Obſequies ſaid for him throughout the Realm, as alſo theſe Prayers (which I ſend you herein incloſed) uſed at Maſs time in all places at this time of Vacation; and therefore willed me to ſignifie their pleaſures unto you in this behalf, that thereupon ye might proceed to the full accompliſhment thereof, by putting the ſame in due execution within your own Diocеſs, and ſending word to the reſt of the Biſhops, to do the like in theirs.

Thus doubting not but that your Lordſhip will uſe ſuch diligence in this matter at this time, as ſhall be neceſſary, I bid your Lordſhip heartily well to fare. From my Houſe at Aſher, the tenth of April 1555.

Your aſſured Friend and Brother,
Stephanus Winton, Chancel.

A Woman of S. Magnes Impriſoned for not praying for the Pope.

Upon this Commandment, on Wedneſday in Eaſter Week there were Hearſes ſet up, and Diriges ſung for the ſaid Julius in divers places. At which time it chanced a Woman to come into S. Magnes Church at the Bridge-foot in London, and there ſeeing an Hearſe and other preparation, asked what it meant: and other that ſtood by, ſaid that it was for the Pope, and that ſhe muſt pray for him. Nay (quoth ſhe) that will I not, for he needeth not my Prayers: and ſeeing he could forgive us all our Sins, I am ſure he is clean himſelf; therefore I need not to pray for him. She was heard ſpeak theſe words of certain that ſtood by: which, by and by, carried her unto the Cage at London-Bridge, and bid her coolher ſelf there.

A Spectacle for all Chriſtians to behold, and to take heed of the Popes blaſphemous Doctrine.

BY many and ſundry ways Almighty God hath admoniſhed Men of all Nations in theſe our later years to embrace, and not violently to repugh againſt the light of his Goſpel: as firſt, by preaching of his Word; ſecondly, by the Blood of the Martyrs; and thirdly, by terrible Examples ſhewed from time to time upon his Adverſaries. In the number of whom cometh here to be remembred the notable working of Gods hand upon a certain Prieſt in Kent, named Nightingal, Parſon of Crondall beſides Canterbury: who upon Shrove-Sunday, which was about the third day of the ſaid Month of March, and Year of our Lord aforeſaid, rejoycing belike not a little at this alteration of Religion, began to make a Sermon to his Pariſhioners, taking his Theme out of the words of S. John; He that ſaith that he hath no ſin, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, &c. And ſo upon the ſame very impertinently declared to them all ſuch Articles as were ſet forth by the Popes Authority, and by the commandment of the Biſhops of this Realm; ſaying moreover unto the People in this wiſe, Now Maſters and Neighbours rejoyce and be merry, for the Prodigal Son is come home. For I know that the moſt part of you be as I am, for I know your hearts well enough. And I ſhall tell you what hath hapned in this Week paſt: I was before my Lord Cardinal Pooles Grace, and he made me as free from Sin, as I was at the Font-ſtone: and on Thurſday laſt being before him, he hath appointed me to notifie (I thank him for it) the ſame unto you. And I will tell you what it is. And ſo reading the Popes Bull of Pardon that was ſent into England, he ſaid, he thanked God that ever he had lived to ſee that day; adding moreover that he believed, that by the virtue of that Bull he was clean from Sin, as that Night that he was born: and immediately upon the ſame fell ſuddenly down out of the Pulpit, and never ſtirred hand nor foot, and ſo lay he. Teſtified by Robert Auſten of Cartham, which both heard and ſaw the ſame, and is witneſſed alſo by the whole Country round about.

John Awcock.

April 2. John Awcock Martyr.

IN the beginning of April, and the ſecond day of the ſaid Month, died in Priſon John Awcock, who after was buried in the Fields as the manner of the Papiſts was, to deny their Chriſtian Burial to ſuch as died out of their Popiſh Antichriſtian Church.

Now forſomuch as having paſſed the Month of March; we are entred into the Month of April, to ſet down in order out of publick Records what happend in the ſaid Month, here followeth to be noted: That the firſt day of April, Anno 1555. a Letter was ſent to the Sheriff of Kent, to apprehend Thomas Wodgat and William Maynard, for Preaching ſecretly, and to ſend them up to the Council.

The ſeventh day of the ſaid Month, another Letter was ſent to the ſaid Sheriff for the apprehenſion of one Harwich, who went about with a Boy with him, Preaching from place to place.

The

Anno 1555.

The 15. of of April a letter was directed to Sir Nicolas Hare, and Sir Thomas Cornwallis, willing them to examin M. Flower, alias Branch, what he meant to wear about his neck written, Deum time, Idolum fuge and whom elſe he knew to wear the like, praying them alſo to ſpeak to Boner Biſhop of London, ſpeedily to proceed againſt him for his Religion according to the Laws, and that the Juſtices of Peace of Middleſex ſhould likewiſe proceed againſt him for Shedding of Blood in the Church, according to the Statute, ſo as if he continue his opinion, he might be executed at the fartheſt by the latter end of this week, and that his Right Hand be the day before his execution, or the ſame day, ſtriken off.

The 22. of April there was a like letter ſent to the Juſtices of Peace of Middleſex, with a Writ for the Execution of the ſaid Flower, commanding them to ſee his Hand ſtriken off before his burning.

The 29. of April, M. Robert Hornebey, Servant than to the Lady Elizabeth, was convented before the Councel for his Religion; and ſtanding conſtantly to the Truth, notwithſtanding their threats and other perſwaſions, was therefore committed to the Marſhalſea.

A declaration of the life, examination, and burning of George Marſh, who ſuffered moſt conſtant Martyrdom for the profeſſion of the Goſpel of Chriſt, at Weſtminſter, the 24. day of April, Anno 1555.

April 24. G. Marſh. Martyr.

THe ſaid George Marſh was born in the Pariſh of Deane, in the County of Lancaſter, and was well brought up in learning and honeſt trade of living by his Parents, who afterwards about the 25. year of his age took to Wife an honeſt maiden of the Countrey; with whom he continued, earning their living upon a Farm, having Children between them lawfully begotten: and then God taking his Wife out of this World, he being moſt deſirous of godly ſtudies (leaving his Houſhold and Children in good order) went unto the Vniverſity of Cambridge, where he ſtudied, and much increaſed in learning and godly Vertues, and was a Miniſter of Gods Holy Word and Sacraments, and for a while was Curate to Laurence Saunders, as himſelf reporteth. In which condition of life he continued for a ſpace, earneſtly ſetting forth Gods true Religion, to the defacing of Antichriſts falſe Doctrin, by his godly readings and Sermons, as well there and in the Pariſh of Deane, as elſwhere in Lancaſhire.

G. Marſh, firſt a Farmer.

G. Marſh made Miniſter.

Whereupon at length, by detection of certain Adverſaries, he was apprehended, and kept in cloſe priſon by George Cotes then Biſhop of Cheſter, in ſtreit priſon in Cheſter, within the precinct of the Biſhops Houſe, about the ſpace of four Months, being not permitted to have relief and comfort of his Friends; but charge being given unto the porter, to mark who they were, that asked for him, and to ſignifie their Names unto the Biſhop, as by the particular Deſcription of his Story, teſtified and recorded with his own pen, more evidently may appear in the proceſs hereunder following.

D. Cotes Biſh. of Cheſter, a perſecutor of G. Marſh detected.

The handling, Intreating, and Examination of George Marſh, being ſent firſt by the Earl of Darby to Doctor Cotes, Biſhop of Cheſter.

The examination of G. Marſh written with his own hand. M. Barton gentleman, and perſecutor.

ON the Monday before Palm-ſundy, which was the 12. day of March, it was told me at my Mothers Houſe, that Roger Wrinſtone, with other of M. Bartons Servants did make diligent ſearch for me in Bolton, and when they perceived that I was not there, they gave ſtrict charge to Robert Ward and Robert Marſh, to find and bring me to M. Barton the day next following, with others, to be brought before the Honourable Earl of Darby, to be examined in matters of Religion, &c.

G. Marſh adverſtiſed by his Friends to flie.

I knowing this, by relation of divers of my Friends was diverſly affected; my Mother, and other my Friends advertiſing me to flie, and to avoid the peril, which thing I had intended afore after a week then next enſuing, if this in the mean while had not chanced; ſeeing that if I were taken, and would not recant in matters of Religion (as they thought I would not, and as God ſtrengthening and aſſiſting me with his Holy Spirit I never will) it would not only have put them to great ſorrow, heavineſs and loſſes, with coſts and charges, to their ſhame and rebuke in this World, but alſo mine own ſelf, after troubles and painful priſonment, unto ſhameful Death.

G. Marſh. in a perplexity whether to flie or to tarry.

This conſidered, they adviſed me and counſelled me to depart and flie the Countrey, as I had intended to have done, if this had not hapned. To whoſe Counſel my weak Fleſh would gladly have conſented, but my Spirit did not fully agree; thinking and ſaying thus to my ſelf, that if I fled ſo away, it would be thought, reported, and ſaid, that I did not only flie the Countrey, and my Neareſt and Deareſt Friends: but much rather from Chriſts Holy Word, according as theſe years paſt I had with my heart, or at leaſt with mine outward living profeſſed, and with my mouth and word taught, according to the ſmall talent given me of the Lord. I being thus with their Councel and Advice, and the Cogitations and Counſels of mine own mind drawn as it were divers ways, went from my Mothers Houſe, ſaying, I would come again at evening.

G. Marſh conſulteth with God:

In the mean time I ceaſed not by Earneſt Prayer to ask and ſeek Counſel of God (who is the giver of all good gifts) and of other my Friends, whoſe godly Judgments and knowledge I much truſted unto. After this, I met with one of my ſaid Friends on Dean Moor, about Sun going down: and after we had conſulted together of my buſineſs, not without Hearty Prayer kneeling on our knees, we departed. I not fully determining what to do, but taking my leave with my Friend, ſaid; I doubted not but God (according as our Prayer and truſt was) would give me ſuch Wiſdom and Councel, as ſhould be moſt to his Honour and Glory, the Profit of my Neighbors and Brethren in the World, and obtaining of mine Eternall Salvation by Chriſt in Heaven.

Marſhes Brethren chargedto ſeek him.

This done, I returned to my Mothers Houſe again, where had been divers of M. Bartons Servants ſeeking after me; who, when they could not find me, ſtraitly charged my Brother and William Marſh to ſeek me that night, & to bring me to Smethehils the next day: who being ſo charged, were gon to ſeek me in Adderton, or elſwhere I know not. Thus intending afore to have been all night with my Mother, but then conſidering that my tarrying there would diſquiet her with her Houſhold, I departed from thence, and went beyond Dean Church, and there tarried all night with an old Friend of mine, taking ill reſt, and conſulting much with my ſelf of my Trouble.

The marvellous providence of God in reſoluing G. Marſh not to flie, but to tarry

So at my firſt awaking, one came to me from a faithfull Friend of mine with Letters, which I never read nor yet looked on, who ſaid this: My Friends Advice was that I ſhould in no wiſe flie, but abide and boldly Confeſs the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. At whoſe Words I was ſo confirmed and eſtabliſhed in my Conſcience, that from thenceforth I conſulted no more. whether it were better to fly or to tarry; but was at a point with my ſelf, that I would not fly, but to go to M. Barton who did ſeek for me, and there preſent my ſelf, and patiently bear ſuch Croſs as it ſhould pleaſe God to lay upon my ſhoulders. Whereupon my Mind and Conſcience afore being much unquieted and troubled, was now merry and in quiet Eſtate.

G. Marſh took his leave of his Friends.

So betimes in the Morning I aroſe, and after I had ſaid the Engliſh Litany (as my cuſtom was) with other Prayers, kneeling on my knees by my Friends bed ſide, I prepared my ſelf to go toward Smethehils: and as I was going thitherward, I went into the Houſes of Henry Widdowes, of my Mother in Law, of Ralf Yeton, and of the Wife of Thomas Richardſon, deſiring them to pray for me, and have me commended to all my Friends and to comfort my Mother, and be good to my little Children: for (as I ſuppoſed) they ſhould not ſee my face any more before the laſt day; and ſo took my leave of them not without tears ſhed on both parts, and came to Smethehils about nine of the Clock, and preſented my ſelf afore M. Barton: who ſhewed me a Letter from the Earl of Darby, wherein he was commanded to ſend me with others to Latham.

G. Marſh of his own voluntary mind offereth himſelf to his enemies.

Whereupon he charged my Brother and William Marſh to bring and deliver me the next day by ten of the Clock, before the ſaid Earl or his Counſel. I made earneſt ſute with other ſpecial Friends, which I had there at the ſame time, to M. Barton, that the would take ſome one of them, or them all bound by Recognizance or otherwiſe, for mine appearing before the ſaid Earl or his ſaid Counſel, that my brother and William Marſh might be at home, becauſe it was the chiefeſt time of ſeeding, and their ploughs could no go if they were not at home; but nothing could be obtained.

G. Marſh taketh his leave of his Mother.

So we went to my Mothers, and there I dined and ſhifted part of my Cloths; and ſo praying, took my leave of my Mother, the Wife of Richard Marſh, and both their Houſholds, they and I both weeping, and ſo departed from them, and went toward Latham, and were all night a mile and an half on this ſide Latham. So the next day, which was Wedneſday, we aroſe, prayed, and came to Latham betimes, and tarried there till four of the Clock at Afternoon.

G. Marſh brought before the Earl of Darby.

Then was I called by Roger Mekinſon to my Lord and his Councell, and ſo I was brought into the Chamber of preſence, where was preſent Sir William Nores, Sir Pierce Alee, Maſter Sherburn the Parſon of Grapnal, Maſter More, with others. Where when I had tarried a little while, my Lord turned him toward me, and asked what was my name: I anſwered, Marſh.

Then he asked, whether I was one of thoſe that ſowed evil ſeed and diſſention amongſt the People: Which thing I denied, deſiring to know mine accuſers, and what could be laid againſt me: but that I could not know.

G. Marſh examined before the Earl of Darby.

Then, ſaid he, he would with his Councill examine me themſelves, and asked me whether I was a Prieſt; I ſaid no. Then he asked me, what had been my living. I anſwered I was a Miniſter, ſerved a Cure, and taught a School. Then ſaid my Lord to his Councel, this is a wonderful thing. Afore he ſaid he was no Prieſt, and now he confeſſeth himſelf to be one. I anſwered, by the Laws now uſed in this Realm (as farre as I do know) I am none.

Then they asked me who gave me Orders, or whether I had taken any at all. I anſwered, I received Orders of the Biſhop of London and Lincoln.

Then ſaid they one to another, thoſe be of theſe new Hereticks, and asked me what acquaintance I had with, them? I anſwered, I never ſaw them but at the time when I received Orders.

They asked me how long I had been Curate, and whether I had Miniſtred with a good Conſcience; I anſwered, I had been Curate but one year, and had Miniſtred with a good Conſcience, I thanked God, and if the Laws of the Realm would have ſuffered me, I would have Miniſtred ſtill; and if the Laws at any time hereafter would ſuffer me to Miniſter after that ſort, I would Miniſter again.

The blaſphemous mouth of the Parſon of Grapnal.

Whereat they murmured, and the Parſon of Grapnal ſaid, this laſt Communion was the moſt Diveliſh thing that ever was deviſed. Then they asked me what my Belief was,

I anſwered, I believed in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, according as the Scriptures of the old and new Teſtaments do teach, and according as the four Simbols or Creeds, that is to wit, the Creed Commonly called Apoſtolorum, the Creed of Nice Councel, of Athanaſius, and of Auſtin and Ambroſe do teach.

And after a few Words, the Parſon of Grapnal ſaid; But what is thy Belief in the Sacrament of the Altar?

G. Marſhes belief in the Sacrament

I anſwered, I believed that whoſoever, according to Chriſts Inſtitution, did receive the Holy Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, did eat and drink Chriſts Body and Blood with all the Benefits of his Death and Reſurrection to their Eternal Salvation; for Chriſt (ſaid I) is ever preſent with his Sacrament.

Then asked they me, whether the Bread and Wine, by the Vertue of the words pronounced by the Prieſt, were changed into the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, and that the Sacrament, whether it were received or reſerved, was the very Body of Chriſt;

G. Marſh loth to anſwer to the queſtion of Tanſubſtantiation.

Whereunto I made Anſwer, I knew no further than I had ſhewed already. For my knowledge is unperfect ſaid I; deſiring them not to aſk me ſuch hard and unprofitable queſtions, whereby to bring my Body into Danger of death, and to ſuck my Blood. Whereat they were not a little offended, ſaying, they were no Blood-Suckers, and intended nothing to me but to make me a good Chriſtian.

So after many other Queſtions, which I avoided as well as I could, remembring the ſaying of Paul, Fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, knowing they doe but ingender Strife; my Lord commanded me to come to the Boord, and gave me pen and ink in my hand, and commanded me to write mine Anſwers to the Queſtions of the Sacrament above named; and I wrote as I had anſwered before. Whereat he being much offended, commanded me to write a more direct Anſwer, ſaying, I ſhould not chuſe but do it.

Anno. 1555.

G. Marſh commanded by the Earl of Darby to write his Anſwers.

Then I took the Pen and wrote, that further I knew not. Whereat he being ſore grieved, after many threatnings, ſaid, I ſhould be put to ſhamefull death like a Traytor, with ſuch other like words; and ſometimes giving me fair words if I would turn and be conformable as other were, how glad he would be.

The Earl of Darby commandeth Marſh into priſon

In concluſion, after much ado, he commanded me to ward in a cold, windy, ſtone houſe, where was little room; where I lay two nights without any bed, ſaving a few great canvaſs tent-clothes, and the done, I had a pair of ſheets, but no woollen clothes, and ſo continued till Palm-ſunday, occupying my ſelf as well as I could in meditation, Prayer and ſtudy; for no man could be ſuffered to come to me but my Keeper twice a day when he brought me meat and drink.

Another examination of Gorge Marſh before the Earl of Darby.

ON Palm-ſunday after dinner I was ſent for to my Lord and his Councel (ſaving Sir William Nores and Sir Pierce Alee were not then preſent in place) amongſt whom was Sir John Beram, and the Vicar of Preſcot. So they Examined me yet once again of the Sacrament. And after I had communed apart with the Vicar of Preſcot a good ſpace concerning that matter, he returned to my Lord and his Councel with me, ſaying; That Anſwer which I had made before, and then did make (as it is above written) was ſufficient for a beginner, and as one which did not profeſs a perfect knowledge in that matter, until ſuch time as I had learned further. Wherewith the Earl was very well pleaſed, ſaying, he doubted not but by the means and help of the Vicar of Preſcot I would be conformable in other things. So after many fair words he commanded I ſhould have a bed, with fire, and liberty to go amongſt his Servants, ſo that I would do no harm whith my communication amongſt them.

Marſh again examined about the Sacrament.

Marſh yet keepeth himſelf cloſe in the Sacrament.

And ſo after much other communication I departed, much more troubled in my ſpirit than afore, becauſe I had not with more boldneſs confeſſed Chriſt, but in ſuch ſort as mine Adverſaries thereby thought they ſhould prevail againſt me; whereat I was much grieved: For hitherto I went about as much as in me lay, to rid my ſelf out of their hands: if by any means without open denying of Chriſt and his word that could be done.

Marſh troubled in his Conſcience for being no more bold touching the Sacrament.

This conſidered, I cried more Earneſtly unto God by Prayer, deſiring to him ſtrengthen me with his Holy Spirit, with Boldneſs to confeſs him: and to deliver me from their inticing words, and that I were not ſpoiled through their Philoſophy and deceitful vanity after the Traditions of men and Ordinances of the World, and not after Chriſt.

Marſh prayeth for more boldneſs.

And ſo after a day or two I was ſent for to the Vicar of Preſcot, and the Parſon of Grapnal; where our moſt communication was concerning the Maſs: and he asked what offended me in the Maſs. I Anſwered, the whole Maſs did offend me, firſt becauſe it was in a ſtrange language, whereby the People were not edified, contrary to St. Pauls Doctrin, 1 Corinth. 14. and becauſe of the manifold and intolerable abuſes and Errors contained therein, contrary to Chriſts Prieſt-hood and Sacrifice.

Marſh again examined before the Biſhops Chaplains. Talk about the Maſs. Allegations againſt the Maſs.

Then they asked me in what place thereof and I named certain places; which places they went about with gentle and far ſought interpretations to mitigate, ſaying thoſe places were underſtood far otherwiſe than the words did purport, or than I did take them.

Sacrificium Miſſe quid ſit.

I anſwered, I did underſtand them as they did purport, and as their own books do comment & gloſs upon them.

They ſaid, Sacrificium or Oblatio did not in the Maſs ſignifie any thing elſe, than either a Sacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving, or elſe a memorial of a Sacrifice or Oblation. So they cauſed a Maſs-book to be ſent for for, and ſhewed me where in ſome places of the Maſs was written. Sacrificium laudis. Whereto I anſwered, that it followed not therefore that in all places it ſignified a Sacrifice or oblation of praiſe or thankſgiving; and although it did, yet was not a Sacrifice of praiſe or thankſgiving to be offered for the ſins of the People, for that did Chriſt by his own paſſion once offer on the Croſs: where the words of the Maſs were, that the Prieſt did offer an oblation and Sacrifice for the ſins and offences both of himſelf, and of the People; for them that were dead, and for the ſalvation of the living: and that the commixtion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt was health both of Body and Soul.

Anno 1555.

Sacrifice of the Maſs expounded by the Papiſts, to be nothing elſe but the Sacrifice only of thankſgiving.

The Vicar Anſwered, that was to be underſtood of the commixtion of Chriſts Body and Blood with his Church or People. So after much exhortation unto me that I ſhould be conformable to the true Catholick Church (which, as they meant was the Romiſh Church) I departed, not conſenting unto them.

The Articles of D. Cromes recantation brought to G. Marſh.

So within a day or twain came to me Maſter More, bringing with him certain Articles, whereunto Doctor Crome had conſented and ſubſcribed in the preſence of certain witneſſes in the days of K. Henry the Eighth, and willed me to read them over, and asked me whether I would conſent and ſubſcribe unto thoſe Articles: and after communication had of one or two of the ſaid Articles, I confeſſed plainly I would in no wiſe conſent and ſubſcribe to thoſe Articles: for then I did againſt mine own Conſcience; and ſo he departed.

So within a ſhort ſpace after, which was on Shier-thurſday, the ſaid Parſon and Vicar ſent for me again, ſaying, my Lord would be at a ſhort point with me: for if I would not conſent and ſubſcribe unto four Articles drawn out of the Articles aforeſaid, I muſt go to priſon ſtraightways.

Four Popiſh Articles for Marſh to ſubſcribe unto.

The firſt was, whether the Maſs now uſed in the Church of England was according to Chriſts Inſtitution, and with faith, reverence, and devotion to be heard and ſeen?

2 Tranſubſtantiation.

The ſecond, whether the Almighty, by the words pronounced by the Prieſt, did change the Bread and Wine after the words of Conſecration into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, whether it were received or reſerved?

3 Receiving in one kind.

Thirdly, whether the lay People ought to receive but under the form of Bread only, and that the one kind was ſufficient for them?

4 Confeſſion.

Fourthly, whether Confeſſion to the Prieſt now uſed in England were godly and neceſſary?

G. Marſh denieth the Articles.

Theſe four Queſtions or Articles they delivered me in writing, and bade me go to my chamber and ſubſcribe my Anſwers with mine own hand, and come again. So within one half hour I came to them again, and delivered them the Queſtions with mine Anſwers. The firſt I denied. The ſecond I anſwered, as I did to my Lord afore, and as is above written. To the third I anſwered, that the lay-People by Chriſts inſtitution ought to receive under both kinds, and that it ſufficeth not them to receive under the one kind only. Fourthly, that though confeſſion auricular were a commodious mean to inſtruct the rude People, yet it was not neceſſary nor commanded of God.

G. Marſh exhorted to the Catholick Church.

They much exhorted me then to leave mine opinions, ſaying; I was much deceived, underſtanding the Scriptures amiſs, and much counſelled me to follow the Catholick Church of Chriſt, and to do as other did. I anſwered, my Faith in Chriſt conceived by his holy Word I neither could nor would deny, alter, or change, for any living creature whatſoever he were, deſiring them to ſpeak to my Lord, that during my life and impriſonment my Poor Friends might be ſuffered to relieve me with neceſſary things according to their powers. And ſo after much exhortation of them, to do and believe as the Catholick Church did, we departed; I from thence forth continuing in the Porters ward, not coming forth of my chamber, ſaving at noon and night while I dined and ſupped.

M. Shereburn and M. More examiners of G. Marſh.

Upon one of the Eaſter Holy days Maſter Sherburn and Maſter More ſent for me, perſwading me much to leave mine opinions; ſaying, all the bringers up and favourers of that Religion had evil luck, and were either put to death or in priſon, and in Danger of Life. Again, the favourers of the Religion now uſed had wondrous good luck and proſperity in all things: with many other Wordly reaſons of mans Wiſdom; for as for the Scriptures M. Shereburn confeſſed himſelf Ignorant.

Gods truth is not to be eſteemed by Proſperity or Adverſity.

I anſwered, that I believed and leaned only to the Scriptures, not judging things by Proſperity or Adverſity: but they earneſtly adviſed me to refuſe mine opinions, and not to let for any Worldly Shame.

I anſwered, that that which I did, I did not for the avoiding of any Wordly ſhame, ſaying; My Soul and Life were dearer to me than the avoiding of any Worldly Shame: neither yet did I it for any vain praiſe of the World, but in the reverent fear of God.

Then M. More queſtioned with me of receiving the Sacrament under the one kind. I ſaid, Chriſts Inſtitution was plain, that all men ſhould Drink of the Cup. Then he told me of the 24. of Luke, and the 20. of the Acts, where was but mention of Breaking Bread onely: where-of he gathered, that they received the Sacrament but under one kind.

Chriſts breaking of Bread Luke 24 proveth not the receiving under one kind.

That I denied ſaying, thoſe places either did not ſpeak of the Celebration of the Lords Supper, or els under the Name of Breaking Bread was ſignified and meant the receiving of the Sacrament, both of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, according to his Inſtitution. So after much communication of that matter, M. Shereburn ſaid, It was great pity that I being a welfavoured young man, and one that might have good living and do good, would ſo fooliſhly caſt my ſelf away, ſticking ſo hard to ſuch fooliſh opinions.

G. Marſh forſaketh kindred and altogether to ſtick to Chriſt.

I anſwered as afore I had done to my Lord and to his Councel, that my Life, Mother, Children, Brethren, Siſters, and Friends, with other delights of Life, were as dear and ſweet unto me as unto any other man, and that I would be as loath to loſe them as another would, if I might hold them with good Conſcience, and without the Ignominy of Chriſt; and ſeeing I could not do that, my truſt was, that God would ſtrengthen me with his Holy Spirit to loſe them all for his ſake: for I take my ſelf (ſaid I) for a Sheep appointed to be ſlain, patiently to ſuffer what Croſs ſoever it ſhall pleaſe my merciful Father to lay on me. And ſo after I had deſired them that if I were committed to priſon my Friends might be ſuffered to relieve me, they departed.

Alphonſus book brought to G. Marſh.

M. More after this brought unto me a book of one Alphonſus a Spaniſh Friar, of all hereſies wherewith the Church of Rome, which he called Chriſts true Church, had been troubled ſince Chriſts time, willing me to read and take Counſel of that Book; and appointed me a place, where this Author did write againſt them that ſay, the lay-people ought to receive under both kinds.

This Author I perceived did vehemently write againſt Luther, Melanchthon, Pelican, and other Germanes of this our time, in all points defending the blaſphemous abuſes and enormities of the Romiſh Church, condemning as deteſtable Hereſies whatſoever was written, taught, or believed contrary to the ſame, uſing for his ſtrongeſt and ſureſt Arguments, the Conſent, Agreement, and Determination of the Romiſh Church. So within a few days M. More came to me again, asking me how I liked the Book I ſaid the Author of the Book did in all points, being a Papiſt, allow the Rites and abuſes of the Romiſh Church; and ſhewed him further, that this Author without Authority, and contrary both to the Scriptures and old Doctors, did condemn for Hereſie the lay people receiving of this Sacrament under both kinds, whereas this Author witneſſeth his own ſelf, Chriſts Church nine hundred years after Chriſt uſed the contrary.

Marſhes judgment of Alphonſus book.

So in concluſion he rebuked me, ſaying I was unlearned, and erred from the Catholick Faith, ſtubborn, and ſtood altogether in mine own conceit. I anſwered, for my learning, I knowledge my ſelf to know nothing but Jeſus Chriſt, even him that was crucified, and that my Faith was grounded upon Gods holy Word onely, and ſuch as, I doubted not, pleaſed God, and as I would ſtand in until the laſt day, God aſſiſting me, and that I did not ſay or do any thing either of ſtubbornneſs, ſelfe wilfulneſs, vain-glory, or any other Worldly purpoſe, but with good Conſcience, and in the fear of God: and deſired him to ſpeak to my Lord and his Councel, that I might find ſome gentleneſs and mercy at their hands. He made me ſhort

ſhort anſwer. Than I ſaid, I commit my cauſe unto God, who hath numbred the hairs of my head, and appointed the days of my life, ſaying; I am ſure God which is a righteous Judge, would make inquiſition for my Blood, according as he hath promiſed. Then he took his book from me, and departed.

Marſh carried to Lancaſter Caſtle.

I continued ſtill in ward untill Low-ſunday, and after dinner my Keeper Richard Scot came to me into my Chamber, and told me that two young men were come to carry me to Lancaſter, and ſo delivered me unto them, a great company both of my Lords Servants and others, accompanying and bringing me on the way, unto Richard Addertons, and ſomwhat further, counſelling and perſwading like as is aforeſaid.

To whom I made plain anſwer, that in matters of Faith I would give place to no earthly creature. So they comforted me, and ſaid that they were ſorry for me, ſaying; If I knew mine opinion to be good, I did well, and ſo they departed, willing my bringers to intreat me honeſtly.

My bringers by the way ſhewed me they were willed and adviſed to bind me, and that they deſired firſt to ſee me: and after they had looked on me ſitting at dinner, they anſwered they would take charge of me being looſe; for they ſaid I ſeemed to be an honeſt man.

The firſt night we were all night at Broughton, and the ſecond day we came to Lancaſter betimes at afternoon, and ſo they kept me all night with them of their Gentleneſs, and on the morrow delivered me to the Jaylor, who brought me into the higeſt priſon, where I do remain.

G. Marſh cauſed to hold up his hand at Lancaſter amongſt other priſoners.

After that, the ſaid George came to Lancaſter Caſtle, and there being brought with other priſoners unto the Seſſions, was made to hold up his hand with the malefactors. The Earl of Darby had this cummunication with him as here followeth.

Communication between George Marſh, and the Earl of Darby.

Talk betwen G. Marſh. and the Earl of Darby.

I Said unto my Lord, I had not dwelled in the Countrey theſe three or four years paſt, and came home but lately to Viſit my Mother, Children, and other my Friends, and to have departed out of the Countrey before Eaſter then next, and to have gon out of the Realm. Wherefore I truſted, ſeeing nothing could be laid againſt me, wherein I had offended againſt the Laws of this Realm, his Lordſhip would not with captious Queſtions examin me, to bring my Body into danger of Death, to the great diſcomfort of my Mother, but ſuffer me to avoid peaceably, ſeeing I might have fled out of the Countrey, and yet of mine own will came to his Lordſhip.

He ſaid to his Counſel, he had heard tell of me above at London; and intended to make ſearch for me, and take me either in Lancaſhire or above at London, and asked me into what Land I would have gon.

The Earl of Darby chargeth the Realme of Denmark of Hereſie.

I Anſwered, I would have gon either into Almain, or elſe into Denmark. He ſaid to his Councel; in Denmark they uſed ſuch Hereſie as they have don in England; but as for Almain, he ſaid the Emperor had deſtroyed them.

So after ſuch like words I ſaid unto him, my truſt was, that his Lordſhip being of the Honourable Councel of the late King Edward, conſenting and agreeing to Acts concerning Faith toward God and Religion, under great pain, would not ſo ſoon after conſent to put poor men to Shameful Death, as he had threatned me for embracing the ſame with ſo good a Conſcience.

The Earl of Darby, Lord Windſor, and Lord Dacres in K. Edwards time agreed not to the Acts of Religion.

He Anſwered, that he, with the Lord Windſor and Lord Dacres, with one mo, whoſe name I have forgotten, did not conſent to thoſe Acts, and that the names of them four would be to be ſeen, as long as the Parliament Houſe ſtood. Then my Lord did rehearſe the evil luck of the Dukes of Northumberland and Suffolk, with others, becauſe they favoured not the true Religion; and again the good hap and proſperity of the Queens Highneſs, becauſe ſhe favoured the true Religion, thereby gathering the one to be good, and of God, and the other to be wicked, and of the Divel, and ſaid that the Duke of Northumberland confeſſed ſo plainly.

Anno 1555

G. Marſh writeth his own examination.

George Marſh to the Reader.

FOrſomuch as not onely when I was at Lathum, but alſo ſince I departed thence, I hear that there be divers and ſundry Reports and Opinions of the cauſe of mine impriſonment, as well at Lathum as at Lancaſter (as by credible perſons I am informed) ſome ſaying it was onely becauſe I would not do open penance, and ſome becauſe I could not agree with my Lord and his Councel concerning the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, and the manner of Chriſts preſence there, ſome becauſe I would not grant it ſufficient, and according to Chriſts Inſtitution, the lay-people to receive the ſaid Sacrament under the one kind onely: I thought it good, dearly Beloved in Chriſt, and my bounden Duty, to certifie you by mine own hand-writing, of mine Examination and handling at Lathum, and to tell you the truth as near as I could, to quiet your mind in this behalf; and therefore I have here written with mine own hand the Certainty of thoſe things, as near as I could, here above expreſſed, not omitting any thing at all concerning Religion, whereof they did examine me: how be it I perceive in ſome things I keep not the ſame order in writing that thing which was asked by them, and anſwered by me afore or after, as it was in very deed in all points, ſaving this, telling the truth as near as I can, deſiring you to accept in good worth this my good will, and to pray for me and all them that be in bonds, that God would aſſiſt us with his Holy Spirit; and that we may with boldneſs Confeſs his Holy Name; and that Chriſt may be Magnified in our Bodies, that we may ſtand full and perfect in all the will of God; to whom be all Honour and Glory World without end, Amen.

And thus you have heard all the whole trouble which George Marſh ſuſtained both at Lathum, and alſo at Lancaſter, teſtified and written with his own hand, whereto he addeth moreover, and ſaith:

While I was, ſaith he, in ward at Lathum, divers at ſundry times came unto me. Some ſaid unto me that all my fellows had recanted, and were gon home, whereas indeed that was not ſo; for I ſaw divers of them divers times after. Other ſaid, that it was reported amongſt my Lords Houſhold, that I had conſented and agreed in all things with my Lord and his Councel.

Furthermore, while I was at Lancaſter, at this Seſſion many came to me to talk with me, ſome of good will towards me, but without knowledg gave me ſuch like Counſel as Peter gave Chriſt as he went up to Jeruſalem, when he took him aſide and began to rebuke him, ſaying; Maſter, favour thy ſelf, this thing ſhall not be unto thee. But I anſwered with Chriſts ſharp anſwer unto Peter again; who turned about, and ſaid unto Peter, Come after me Satan: and perceiving that they were an hinderance unto me, and that they favoured not the things which are of God, but the things that are of men, I made them plain anſwer, that I neither could, nor would follow their Counſel, but that by Gods grace I would both live and die with a pure conſcience, and according as hitherto I had believed and profeſſed. For we ought in no wiſe to flatter and bear with them, though they love us never ſo well, which go about to pluck us away from the obedience that we ow unto God and to his word, but after Chriſts example ſharply to rebuke them for their Counſel.

Peters Counſel to Chriſt to gave himſelf.

G. Marſh followeth Chriſts anſwer to Peter.

Some others, yea even ſtrangers alſo came to me far unlike to theſe, who after ſober communication had, conſented with me in all things, lamenting much my troubleous eſtate giving me Comfortable words, and ſome money too, and reſorted to me oftentimes, for the ſpace of two, three, or four days. There came alſo many Prieſts to me, by two, three, four, five, or ſix at once, whoſe mouths it was a thing eaſie enough to ſtop; for the Prieſts (which is much to be lamented) be not always the greateſt Clerks, and beſt learned in the Law of God; At their departing they either conſented with me, or els had nothing to ſay againſt me, ſaying they could find no fault with my words. My comunication with Prieſts not always the greateſt Clerks.

them was about the Sacrament. There came also into the Prison to me Mr. Westby, Mr. Ashton of Hull, Mr. Ashton of Chaterton, and many more, both Gentlemen and others, to my great comfort. Unto whom I had good occasion to utter a great part of my Conscience: for God so strengthened me with his Spirit of Boldness, according to my humble Request and Prayer before (everlasting Thanks be given him therefore) that I was nothing afraid to speak to any that came to me, no not even to Judges themselves, before whom I was thrice arraigned at the Bar, amongst the Thieves, with Irons on my feet, and put up my hand as other did; but yet with boldness I spake unto them so long as they would suffer me.

Geo. Marsh strengthned in Prison with the boldness of Gods Spirit.

They also sent for me the fourth time into their Chamber, where amongst other things they laid it straitly to my charge, that I had reported, that I knew a whole Mess of good Gentlemen in Lancashire of mine Opinion, and straitly charged me, upon pain of Allegiance to the Queens Grace, to shew who they were. But I denied that I had spoken any such thing (as it was indeed a false forged Lye of some wicked Wretches.) After that, they threatned and rebuked me, for my Preaching to the People out of the Prison, as they called it, and for my Praying and Reading so loud, that the People in the Streets might hear. The truth is, I and my Prison-Fellow Warbarton, every day kneeling on our Knees, did read Morning and Evening Prayer, with the English Litany every day twice, both before Noon and after, with other Prayers more, and also read every day certain Chapters of the Bible, commonly towards Night: and we read also these things with so high and loud a voice, that the People without in the Streets might hear us, and would oftentimes, namely in the Evenings, come and sit down in our sights under the Windows and hear us read, wherewith others being offended, complained.

G. Marsh reproved for his loud Praying and Reading in Prison.

Warbarton, Fellow-Prisoner with Marsh.

All this while George Marsh was not yet brought before the Bishop, whose name was Doctor Cotes, placed the same time in the Bishoprick of Chester. Of whose coming then into Lancaster, the said George Marsh reporteth himself as followeth.

How the Bishop came to Lancaster, and of his doings there.

D. Cotes Bishop of Chester.

The Bishops coming to Lancaster, and setting up Idolatry.

THe Bishop being at Lancaster, there set up and confirmed all blasphemous Idolatry, as Holy-Water casting, Procession, Gadding, Mattins mumbling, Children confirming, Mass hearing, Idols up setting, with such Heathenish Rites forbidden by God; but no Gospel-Preaching, which Christ, Gods Son, so earnestly commanded. He was informed of me, and willed to send for me and Examine me. Which thing he refused to do, saying he would have nothing to do with Hereticks so hastily: So hasty in Judgment, and calling men Hereticks, are our Bishops in their Lordly Dignities, afore they hear or see what is to be amended or condemned, contrary to the express Commandment of Gods Word, which saith, Condemn no man before thou hast tried out the Truth of the matter; and when thou hast made Inquisition, then reform righteously. Give no Sentence before thou hast heard the Cause, but first let men tell out their Tale: and he that giveth Sentence in a matter before he hear it, is a Fool, and worthy to be confounded.

The Bishop judgeth Marsh to be an Heretick, before he heareth him.

Hasty Judgment of Bishops reproved by Gods Word.

And instead of his liberality towards me poor Prisoner, he sent for the Jaylor, and rebuked him because he suffered me to fare so well, willing him to have me more strictly kept and dieted: but if his Lordship were Tabled but one Week with me, I do think he would judge our Fare but slender enough.

The unmerciful straitness of the Bishop towards G. Marsh in Prison.

Also he, and his Chaplains and Chancellor did find fault with the School-master and others, for speaking to me as to a most heinous Heretick, and also with the Jaylor for suffering them. Such is the mercy that those Religious Fathers shew to the Friendless and Comfortless in their Adversities. If we may know the Tree by the fruits (as Christ saith) no man can judge such for any other, but for very Enemies to Christ and his true Religion. God lay it never to their charges, but forgive them, and turn their hard hearts, if it be his will.

The School-master of Lancaster rebuked for coming to Marsh in Prison.

Popish Bishops declare themselves by their fruits to be very Enemies to Gods Word.

But it is no new thing for the Bishops to persecute the Truth, and the Prophets of the Lord for their constancy in Preaching of the true Faith; for so did their Pharisaical Fore-fathers, if ye mark well the Histories of the Holy Bible. Pashur was the head Bishop of the Temple, the Ring-leader of false Prophets, the chief Heretick-taker, that is as much as to say, the Out-thruster of true Godliness. After that the Dignity of Priesthood was given unto him, he abused it. For he taught not, neither reproved by the Word, but feared the godly with Cruelty. He not only strook, but also imprisoned the holy Prophet Jeremy, though he withstood him not, but presently looked for the help of God, stedfastly preaching the Truth of God.

No new thing for Bishops to be Persecutors.

Examples of persecuting Bishops in the old time.

What mischief the ungracious Bishop Jason wrought among the Jews, destroying all Godliness, and setting up abominable Idolatrous Laws, ye may read in the fourth Chapter of the second of Maccabees. How the execrable and blind Bishops, Annas and Caiphas, which never spake the Truth of God themselves, unless it were against their wills, unwittingly to their utter destruction, how (I say) they pressed the Truth in Christ and his Apostles, is so well known that I need not to rehearse it.

Bishop Jason.

Bishop Annas and Caiphas.

And thus much hitherto concerning the Prisonment of George Marsh, and his Examinations before the Earl of Darby and his Deputies above-named. Now proceeding further in the troublesom Persecution of this blessed man, let us likewise consider the later part of his Troubles and Examinations which followed under the Bishop of the same Dioceses, which was Doctor Cotes; the effect whereof being drawn out of his own Writing, here briefly is to be seen, as followeth.

The Troubles and Examination of George Marsh under D. Cotes Bishop of Chester.

G. Marsh appeareth before the Bishop.

YE heard before how George Marsh being first Imprisoned at Latham, and afterward translated unto Lancaster, was troubled by the Earl. Again, within few days after, the said Marsh was removed from Lancaster, and coming to Chester, was sent for by Dr. Cotes then Bishop to appear before him in his Hall, no Body being present but they twain; and then he asked him certain Questions concerning the Sacrament: who made such Answers as the Bishop seemed therewith to be content, saving that he utterly denied Transubstantiation, and allowed not the abuse of the Mass, nor that the Lay-people should receive under one kind only, contrary to Christs Institution; in which point the Bishop went about to persuade him: howbeit (God be thanked) all in vain. Much other talk he had with him, to move him to submit himself to the Universal Church of Rome; and when he saw he could not prevail, he sent him to Prison again: and after being there, came to him divers times one Massie, a Fatherly old Man, one Wrench the School-Master, one Hensham the Bishops Chaplain, and the Arch-deacon, with many more; who with all probability of Words and Philosophy, or worldly Wisdom and deceitful Vanity, after the Tradition of Men, and the beggarly Ordinances and Laws of the World, but not after Christ as it were all singing one Song) went about to persuade him to submit himself to the Church of Rome, and to acknowledge the Pope to be Head thereof, and to interpret the Scriptures none otherwise than that Church did; with many such like Arguments and persuasions of fleshly Wisdom.

Great labour to make G. Marsh to recant.

To whom the said George Marsh answered, that he did acknowledge and believe (though much Evil be withal annexed) one holy Catholick and Apostolick Church; without which there is no Salvation, and that this Church is but one, because it ever hath, doth, and shall confess and believe one only God, and him only worship, and one only Messiah, and in him only trust for Salvation: which Church also is ruled and led by one Spirit, one Word, and one Faith, and that this Church is Universal and Catholick, because it ever hath been since the Worlds beginning, is, and shall endure to the Worlds end, and comprehending within it all Nations, Kindreds and Languages, degrees, states, and conditions of Men; and that this Church is builded only upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the head Corner-stone, and not upon the Romish Laws and Decrees, the Bishop of Rome being the Supream Head.

The Church Apostolick. The Church, how it is one.

The Nature, Condition, and Notes of the true Church.

And

The nature, condition, and notes of the falſe Church.

And where they ſaid, the Church did ſtand in ordinary ſucceſſion of Biſhops, being ruled by General Councils, Holy Fathers, and the Laws of Holy Church, and ſo had continued by the ſpace of fifteen hundred years and more; he made anſwer, that the holy Church, which is the Body of Chriſt, and therefore moſt worthy to be called Holy, was before any ſucceſſion of Biſhops, General Councils, or Romiſh Decrees; neither yet was bound to any time or place, ordinary Succeſſion, General Councils, or Traditions of Fathers, either had any Supremacy over Empires and Kingdoms: but that it was a little poor ſilly Flock, diſperſed and ſcattered abroad, as Sheep without a Shepherd in the midſt of Wolves, or as a Flock of Orphans and Fatherleſs Children; and that this Church was led and ruled by the only Laws, Counſels, and Word of Chriſt, he being the Supream Head of this Church, and aſſiſting, ſuccouring and defending her from all Aſſaults, Errors, Troubles and Perſecutions, wherewith ſhe is ever compaſſed about.

Confutation of the falſe Church, fully declared.

Examples declaring the true Church. The falſe Church ever greater in number.

He ſhewed and proved unto them alſo by the Flood of Noah, the deſtruction of Sodom, the Iſraelites departing out of Egypt; by the Parables of the Sower, of the Kings Sons Marriage, of the great Supper, and by other plain Sentences of Scripture, that this Church was of none eſtimation, and little in compariſon of the Church of Hypocrites and wicked Wordlings.

He was thruſt at with all violence of craft and ſubtilty, but yet the Lord upheld him and delivered him. Everlaſting thanks be to that merciful and faithful Lord, which ſuffereth us not to be tempted above our might, but in the midſt of our troubles ſtrengtheneth us with his moſt Holy Spirit of Comfort and Patience, giveth us a mouth and wiſdom how and what to ſpeak; whereagainſt all his Adverſaries were not able to reſiſt.

Another appearance of George Marſh before the Biſhop.

G. Marſh again brought before the Biſhop and his Collegues.

NOw, after that the ſaid Biſhop had taken his pleaſure in puniſhing this his Priſoner, and often reviling him, giving taunts and odious names of Heretick, &c. he cauſed him to be brought forth into a Chappel, in the Cathedral Church of Cheſter, called our Lady Chappel, before him the ſaid Biſhop, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon, who was there placed in a Chair for that purpoſe, and Fulk Dutton Mayor of the ſaid City, Dr. Wall, and other Prieſts aſſiſting him, placed not far from the ſaid Biſhop, but ſomewhat lower, George Wenſloe Chancellor, and one John Getham Regiſter, ſate directly over againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

The Biſhop with his Colleagues ſitting upon G. Marſh.

Marſh ſworn to anſwer before the Biſhop.

Then they cauſed the ſaid George Marſh to take an Oath upon a Book, to anſwer truly unto ſuch Articles as ſhould be objected againſt him. Upon which Oath taken, the Chancellor laid unto his charge, that he had preached and openly publiſhed moſt heretically and blaſphemouſly within the Pariſh of Dean, Eccles, Bolton, Berry, and many other Pariſhes within the Biſhops Dioceſs, in the Months of January, February, or ſome other time of the year laſt, proceeding directly againſt the Popes Authority and Catholick Church of Rome, the bleſſed Maſs, the Sacrament of the Altar, and many other Articles.

G. Marſh purgeth himſelf.

Unto all which in ſum he anſwered, That he neither heretically nor blaſphemouſly preached or ſpake againſt any of the ſaid Articles; but ſimply and truly, as occaſion ſerved, and (as it were thereunto forced in Conſcience) maintained the Truth touching the ſame Articles, as (he ſaid) all you now preſent did acknowledge the ſame in the time of the late King Edward the Sixth.

The Biſhops Clergy more able to examine, than to diſpute.

Then they examined him ſeverally of every Article, and bade them anſwer directly Yea or Nay, without circumſtance; for they were come to Examine, and not to Diſpute at that preſent.

Then he anſwered them unto every Article, very modeſtly, according to the Doctrine by publick Authority received, and taught in this Realm at the death of the ſaid King Edward: whoſe Anſwers were every one noted and written by the Regiſter, to the uttermoſt that could make againſt him, which cannot at this preſent be gotten. After this, the Company for that time brake up, and he was returned to his Priſon again.

The laſt and final appearance of George Marſh before the Biſhop.

Anno 1555.

The laſt appearance of Marſh before the Biſhop.

WIthin three Weeks after this, or thereabouts, in the ſaid Chappel, and in like ſort as before, the ſaid Biſhop and others before-named, there being aſſembled, the ſaid G. Marſh was brought by the Keeper and others with Bills and divers Weapons before them; where firſt the ſaid Chancellor, by way of an Oration, declared unto the People preſent the ſaid Biſhops charge and burning Charity, who even like as a good Shephard doth ſee to his Flock, that none of his Sheep have the Scab or other diſeaſe for infecting other clean Sheep, but will ſave and cure the ſaid ſcabbed Sheep: ſo his Lordſhip had ſent for the ſaid G. Marſh there preſent, as a ſcabbed Sheep, and had weeded him out for corrupting others, and had done what he could in ſhewing his charitable diſpoſition toward the ſaid Marſh, to reduce him from his naughty Hereſies; but all that he could do would not help: ſo that he was now determined, if the ſaid Marſh would not relent and abjure, to pronounce and give Sentence definitive againſt him. Wherefore he bade the ſaid George Marſh to be now well adviſed what he would do, for it ſtood upon his life: and if he would not at that preſent forſake his Heretical Opinions, it would be (after the Sentence given) too late, though he would never ſo gladly deſire it.

The Chancellors Oration.

Then the ſaid Chancellor firſt asked him, whether he were not one of the Biſhops Dioceſs? To the whieh he anſwered, That he knew not how large his Dioceſs was, for his continuance was at Cambridge. But then they replied and asked, whether he had not lately been at Deane Pariſh in Lancaſhire, and there abode? And he anſwered, Yea.

Interrogatories put to G. Marſh.

Then the Chancellor read all his former Anſwers that he made in that place at his former Examination, and at every one he asked him, whether he would ſtick to the ſame, or no? To the which he anſwered again, Yea, yea.

How ſay ye then to this, quoth the Chancellor? In your laſt Examination, amongſt many other damnable and ſchiſmatical Hereſies, you ſaid, That the Church and Doctrine taught and ſet forth in King Edwards time, was the true Church, and the Doctrine of the true Church, and that the Church of Rome is not the true and Catholick Church.

Note here the great Hereſie of G. Marſh.

I ſo ſaid indeed, quoth Marſh, and I believe it to be true. Here alſo others took occaſion to ask him (for that he denied the Biſhop of Romes Authority in England) whether Linus, Anacletus, and Clement, that were Biſhops of Rome, were not good men, and he anſwered, Yes, and divers others: but (ſaid he) they claimed no more Authority in England, than the Biſhop of Canterbury doth at Rome; and I ſtrive not, quoth he, with the place, neither ſpeak I againſt the perſon of the Biſhop, but againſt his Doctrine, which in moſt points is repugnant to the Doctrine of Chriſt.

Argument. Linus and Anacletus were good men: Ergo the Pope is the Supream Head of all Churches.

Neither the place nor perſon of the Pope ſpoken againſt, but only his Doctrine.

Thou art an arrogant Fellow indeed then, ſaid the Biſhop. In what Article is the Doctrine of the Church of Rome repugnant to the Doctrine of Chriſt?

To whom George Marſh anſwered and ſaid, Oh my Lord, I pray you judge not ſo of me: I ſtand now upon the point of my life and death; and a man in my caſe hath no cauſe to be Arrogant, neither am I, God is my Record. And as concerning the diſagreement of the Doctrine, among many other things the Church of Rome erreth in the Sacrament. For where Chriſt in the Inſtitution thereof did as well deliver the Cup, as the Bread, ſaying, Drink ye all of this, and Mark reporteth, that they did drink of it: in like manner S. Paul delivered it unto the Corinthians. And in the ſame ſort alſo was it uſed in the Primitive Church by the ſpace of many hundred years. Now the Church of Rome doth take away one part of the Sacrament from the Laity. Wherefore, if I could be perſwaded in my Conſcience by Gods Word that it were well done, I could gladly yield in this point.

Wherein the Doctrine of the Church of Rome erreth.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Non diſputandum eſt cum Hæretico, that is, There is no diſputing with an Heretick. And therefore when all his Anſwers were read, he asked him whether he would ſtand to the ſame; being as they were, ſaid he, full of Hereſie, or elſe forſake them, and come unto the Catholick Church.

So ſaith the Turk in his Alcoran, that no man muſt diſpute of his Law.

To

Anno 1555.

To whom he made this full answer, and said, That he held no Heretical Opinion, but utterly abhorred all kind of Heresie, although they most untruly so did slander him. And he desired all the People present to bear him witness (if hereafter any would slander him, and say that he held any grievous Heresie) that in all Articles of Religion he held none other Opinion than was by Law most godly established, and publickly taught in England at the death of King Edward the Sixth, and in the same pure Religion and Doctrine he would, by Gods Grace, stand, live and dye. And here the Chancellor spake to one Leach, which stood near unto Marsh, and bade him stand farther from him: for his presence did him no good.

G. Marsh cleareth himself of Heresie.

Leach bid to stand from Marsh.

This being done, the Bishop took a Writing out of his bosom, and began to read the Sentence of Condemnation: but when the Bishop had read almost half thereof, the Chancellor called him, and said, Good my Lord, stay, stay; for if ye proceed any farther, it will be too late to call it again, and so the Bishop stayed. Then his Popish Priests, and many other of the ignorant People, called upon Marsh, with many earnest words, to recant, and amongst other one Pulleyn a Shoe-maker said to him, For shame man remember thy self, and recant. They bade him kneel down and pray, and they would pray for him: So they kneeled down, and he desired them to pray for him, and he would pray for them.

Sentence of Condemnation read against Marsh.

The Bishop stayeth in his Sentence.

The Bishop then asked him again, whether he would not have the Queens mercy in time; and he answered, he did gladly desire the same, and did love her Grace as faithfully as any of them; but yet he durst not deny his Saviour Christ, for losing his Mercy everlasting, and so win everlasting Death.

Gods mercy preferred before the Queens mercy.

Then the Bishop put his Spectacles again upon his Nose, and read forward his Sentence about five or six Lines, and there again the Chancellor with a glavering and smiling Countenance called to the Bishop, and said, Yet, good my Lord once again stay, for if that word be spoken all is past, no relenting will then serve: and the Bishop (pulling off his Spectacles) said, I would stay, if it would be.

The Bishop proceedeth in his Sentence.

Another stay in reading the Sentence.

How saist thou, quoth he, wilt thou Recant? Many of the Priests and ignorant People bade him do so, and call to God for Grace; and pulled him by the Sleeve, and bade him recant and save his life. To whom he answered, I would as fain live as you, if in so doing I should not deny my Master Christ, and again he should deny me before his Father in Heaven.

G. Marsh exhorted to recant, but could not be turned.

So the Bishop read out his Sentence unto the end, and strait after said unto him, Now will I no more pray for thee, than I will for a Dog. And Marsh answered, That notwithstanding he would pray for his Lordship: and after this the Bishop delivered him unto the Sheriffs of the City. Then his late Keeper bade him farewel good George, with weeping Tears, which caused the Officers to carry him to a Prison at the North-Gate, where he was very straitly kept until the time he went to his Death, during which time he had small comfort or relief of any worldly Creature.

The Bishop readeth out the Sentence.

A dogged saying of the Bishop.

G. Marsh delivered to the Sheriffs.

The strait keeping of Marsh in Prison.

For being in the Dungeon or dark Prison, none that would him good could speak with him, or at least durst enterprize so to do for fear of Accusation: and some of the Citizens which loved him in God, for the Gospels sake (whereof there were but a few) although they were never acquainted with him, would sometime in the Evening at a hole upon the Wall of the City (that went into the said dark Prison) call to him, and ask him how he did. He would answer them most chearfully, that he did well, and thanked God most highly, that he would vouchsafe of his mercy to appoint him to be a Witness of his Truth, and to suffer for the same, wherein he did most rejoyce; beseeching him that he would give him Grace not to faint under the Cross, but patiently bear the same to his glory and comfort of his Church: with many other like godly sayings at sundry times, as one that most desired to be with Christ. Once or twice he had Money cast him in at the same hole, about Ten pence at one time, and Two shillings at another time: for which he gave God thanks, and used the same to his Necessity.

The Brotherly zeal of good men comforting G. Marsh.

When the time and day appointed came that he should suffer, the Sheriffs of the City, whose names were Agmy and Couper, with their Officers and a great number of poor simple Barbers with rusty Bills and Poll-Axes, went to the North-Gate, and there took out the said George Marsh, who came with them most humbly and meekly, with a Lock upon his feet. And as he came upon the way towards the place of Execution, some Folks proffered him Money, and looked that he should have gone with a little Purse in his hand (as the manner of Felons was accustomed in that City in times past, at their going to Execution) to the end to gather Money to give unto a Priest to say Trentals or Masses for them after their death, whereby they might, as they thought, be saved: but Marsh said, he would not as then be troubled with medling with Money, but willed some good Man to take the Money, if the People were disposed to give any, and to give it unto the Prisoners or poor People. So he went all the way unto his death with his Book in his hand, looking upon the same; and many of the People said, This man goeth not unto his death as a Thief, or as one that deserveth to dye.

Agmy and Couper, Sheriffs of Chester.

Marsh led to his Martyrdom.

The old use in Lancashire to give Money to buy Trentals.

G. Marsh refuseth to receive Money going to his death.

Now when he came to the place of Execution without the City, near unto Spittle-Boughton, one Cawdrey being then a Deputy Chamberlain of Chester, shewed Marsh a Writing under a Great Seal, saying, That it was a Pardon for him if he would recant. Whereat Marsh answered, That he would gladly accept the same (and said farther, that he loved the Queen) but forasmuch as it tended to pluck him from God, he would not receive it upon that condition.

G. Marsh refuseth the Queens Pardon.

After that, he began to speak to the People, shewing the cause of his Death, and would have exhorted him to stick unto Christ. Whereupon one of the Sheriffs said: George Marsh, we must have no Sermoning now. To whom he said, Master, I cry you mercy: and so kneeling down made his Prayers, and then put off his Clothes unto his Shirt, and then was he chained to the Post, having a number of Faggots under him, and a thing made like a Firkin, with Pitch and Tar in the same over his Head: and by reason the Fire was unskilfully made, and that the Wind did drive the same to and fro, he suffered great extremity in his death, which notwithstanding he abode very patiently.

G. Marsh not suffered to speak to the People.

The Martyrdom of G. Marsh at Westchester, Anno 1555. April 24.

Wherein this in him is to be noted, That when as he had been a long time tormented in the Fire without moving, having his Flesh so broiled and pufft up, that they which stood before him underneath could see the Chain wherewith he was fastned, and therefore supposed no less but he had been dead, notwithstanding, suddenly he spread abroad his Arms, saying, Father of Heaven have mercy upon me, and so yielded his Spirit into the hands of the Lord.

The Patience of G. Marsh the blessed Martyr.

Upon this, many of the People said that he was a Martyr, and died marvellous patiently and godly. Which thing caused the Bishop shortly after to make a Sermon in the Cathedral Church, and therein affirmed, That the said Marsh was an Heretick, burnt like an Heretick, and was a Fire-brand in Hell.

In recompence of this his good and charitable Sermon, within short time after, the just Judgment of God appeared upon the said Bishop, recompencing him in such wise, that not long after he turned up his heels and died. Upon what cause his death was gendred, I have not here precisely to pronounce, because the rumor and voice of the People is not always to be followed. Notwithstanding such a Report went in all mens Mouths, that he was burned of an Harlot. Wherefore, whether he died so or no, I am not certain, neither dare lean too much upon publick Speech. Albeit this is certain, that when he was afterward searched, being dead, by some of his secret Friends and certain Aldermen for stopping the rumor of the People, this Maidenly Priest and Bishop was found not to be free from certain appearance, which declared but small Virginity in him, and that the Rumor was not raised up altogether upon nought amongst the People. But of this I will stay, and proceed no further; not because more cannot be said, but because I will not be so uncharitable in defacing these Men, as they are cruel in condemning Gods Servants to death, Gods just revenging hand upon a persecuting Bishop.

Anno 1555.

Letters of George Marſh.

This good Man wrote divers and ſundry Letters out of Priſon, beſides his Examinations, as before ye have heard. Touching the which his Examinations, this Letter firſt he ſendeth to his Friends, the Copy whereof here followeth.

A Letter of G. Marſh to the Reader, touching the matter of his Examination.

A Letter of Geo. Marſh to the Reader.

HEre have you, dearly beloved Friends in Chriſt, the chief and principal Articles of Chriſtian Doctrine briefly touched, which heretofore I have both believed, profeſſed and taught, and as yet do believe, profeſs and teach, and am ſurely purpoſed by Gods Grace, to continue in the ſame until the laſt day. I do want both time and opportunity to write out at large the probations, cauſes, parts, effects, and contraries or errors of theſe Articles, which whoſo deſireth to know, let them read over the common places of the godly Learned men, Philip Melanchthon and Eraſmus Sarcerius, whoſe Judgment in theſe matters of Religion, I do chiefly follow and lean unto. The Lord give us underſtanding in all things, and deliver us from this preſent evil World, according to his will and pleaſure, and bring us again out of this Hell of Affliction, into which it hath pleaſed the merciful Lord to throw us down: and deliver us out of the mouth of the Lion, and from all evil doing, and keep us unto his everlaſting and heavenly Kingdom. Amen.

Though Sathan be ſuffered as Wheat to ſift us for a time, yet faileth not our Faith through Chriſts aid, but that we are at all times able and ready to confirm the Faith of our weak Brethren, and always ready to give an anſwer to every man that asketh us a reaſon of the Hope that is in us, and that with meekneſs and reverence, having a good Conſcience; and whereas they backbite us as Evil-doers, they may be aſhamed, foraſmuch as they have falſly accuſed our good Converſation in Chriſt. I thought my ſelf now of late years, for the Cares of this life, well ſettled with my loving and faithful Wife and Children, and alſo well quieted in the peaceable poſſeſſion of that pleaſant Euphrates, I do confeſs it: but the Lord, who worketh all things for the beſt to them that love him, would not there leave me, but did take my dear and beloved Wife from me; whoſe death was a painful croſs to my Fleſh.

1 Pet. 3.

Alſo I thought my ſelf now of late well placed under my moſt loving and moſt gentle Mr. Lawrence Sanders, in the Cure of Langhton. But the Lord of his great mercy would not ſuffer me long there to continue (although for the ſmall time I was in his Vineyard, I was not an idle workman.) But he hath provided me, I perceive it, to taſt of a far other Cup; for by violence hath he yet once again driven me out of that glorious Babylon, that I ſhould not taſt too much of her wanton pleaſures, but with his moſt dearly beloved Diſciples to have my inward rejoycing in the Croſs of his Son Jeſus Chriſt: the glory of whoſe Church, I ſee it well, ſtandeth not in the harmonious ſound of Bells and Organs, nor yet in the gliſtering of Mitres and Copes, neither in the ſhining of gilt Images and Lights, (as the blind Papiſts do judge it) but in continual labours and daily afflictions for his Names ſake.

G. Marſh Curate to L. Sanders.

The glory of the Church ſtandeth not in outward ſhews.

God at this preſent here in England hath his Fan in his hand, and after his great Harveſt, whereinto theſe years paſt he hath ſent his Labourers, is now ſifting the Corn from the Chaff and purging his floor, and ready to gather the Wheat into his Garner, and burn up the Chaff with unquenchable fire.

Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Scribes and of the Sadduces. I mean the erroneous Doctrine of the Papiſts, which with their gloſſes deprave the Scriptures. For as the Apoſtle St. Peter doth teach us, There ſhall be falſe Teachers amongſt us, which privily ſhall bring in damnable Sects: And ſaith, that many ſhall follow their damnable ways, by whom the way of Truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of, and that through covetouſneſs they ſhall with fained words make merchandize of us; and Chriſt earneſtly warneth us, to beware of falſe Prophets, which come to us in Sheeps cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves. By their fruits you ſhall know them. The fruits of the Prophets are their Doctrine. In this place are we Chriſtians taught, that we ſhould try the Preachers, and others that come under colour to ſet forth true Religion unto us, according to the ſaying of S. Paul, Try all things, and chuſe that which is good. Alſo the Evangeliſt St. John ſaith, Believe not every Spirit, but prove the Spirits whether they be of God or not; for many falſe Prophets, ſaith he, are gone out into the world. Therefore if thou wilt know the true Prophets from the falſe, try their Doctrine by the true Touch-ſtone, which is the Word of God: and as the godly Bereans did, Search ye the Scriptures, whether thoſe things which be preached unto you be even ſo or not; or elſe by the outward converſation of them ye may eaſily be deceived. Deſunt fortaſſis aliqua.

A Letter Exhortatory of George Marſh to the faithful Profeſſors of Langhton.

A Letter of G. Marſh to the men of Langhton.

GRace be unto you, and Peace be multiplied in the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

I thought it my duty to write unto you, my beloved in the Lord at Langhton, to ſtir up your minds, and to call to your remembrance the words which have been told you before, and to exhort you (as that good man, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, Barnabas did the Antiochians) that with purpoſe of heart ye continually cleave unto the Lord, and that ye ſtand faſt, and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel, whereof, God be thanked, ye have had plenteous preaching unto you by your late Paſtor Mr. Sanders, and other faithful Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, which now, when Perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the Word, do not fall away like ſhrinking Children, and forſake the Truth, being aſhamed of the Goſpel whereof they have been Preachers, but are willing and ready for your ſakes (which are Chriſts Myſtical Body) to forſake not only the chief and principal Delights of this Life (I do mean) their Native Countries, Friends, Livings, &c. but alſo to fulfil their Miniſtry to the utmoſt, that is to wit, with their painful Impriſonments and Blood-ſheddings, if need ſhall require, to confirm and ſeal Chriſts Goſpel, whereof they have been Miniſters; and (as S. Paul ſaith) they are ready not only to be caſt into Priſon, but alſo to be killed for the Name of the Lord Jeſus.

Whether theſe being that good Salt of the Earth, that is, true Miniſters of Gods Word, by whoſe Doctrine, being received through Faith, men are made ſavoury unto God, and which themſelves loſe not their ſaltneſs, now when they be proved with the boiſterous Storms of Adverſity and Perſecution; or others being that unſavoury Salt which hath loſt his ſaltneſs, that is to wit, thoſe ungodly Miniſters, which do fall from the Word of God into the Dreams and Traditions of Antichriſt: whether of theſe, I ſay, be more to be credited and believed, let all men judge.

Matth. 5.
True Salt diſcerned from the corrupt and unſavoury Salt.

Wherefore my dearly Beloved, receive the Word of God with meekneſs, that is graſted in you, which is able to ſave your Souls: And ſee that ye be not forgetful hearers, deceiving your ſelves with ſophiſtry, but doers of the Word; whom Chriſt doth liken to a wiſe man, which buildeth his Houſe on a Rock, that when the great Rain deſcended, and the Floods came and beat upon the Houſe, it fell not, becauſe it was grounded upon a Rock: this is to wit, that when Satan, with all his Legion of Devils, with all their ſubtile ſuggeſtions, and the World with all the mighty Princes thereof, with their crafty counſels, do furiouſly rage againſt us, we faint not, but abide conſtant in the Truth, being grounded upon a moſt ſure Rock, which is Chriſt, and the Doctrine of the Goſpel, againſt which the Gates of Hell, (that is, the power of Satan) cannot prevail.

Matth. 16.

And be ye followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and receive the Word in much Affliction (as the godly Theſſalonians did:) for the true Followers of Chriſt and the Apoſtles, be they which receive the Word of God. They only receive the Word of God, which both believe it, and alſo frame their lives after it, and be ready to ſuffer all manner of adverſity for the name of the Lord, as Chriſt and all the Apoſtles did, and as all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt do: for there is none other way into the Kingdom of Heaven, but through much Tribulation. And if we ſuffer any thing for the Kingdom of Heavens ſake, and for Righteouſneſs ſake, we have the Prophets, Chriſt, the Apoſtles and Martyrs for an enſample to comfort us: for they did all enter into the Kingdom of Heaven at the ſtrait Gate and narrow way that leadeth unto Life, which few do find. And unleſs we will be content to deny our own ſelves, and take up the Croſs of Chriſt, and his Saints, it is an evident Argument, that we ſhall never reign with him.

And again, If we can find in our hearts patiently to ſuffer Perſecutions and Tribulations, it is a ſure token of the righteous Judgment of God, that we are counted worthy of the Kingdom of God, for which we alſo ſuffer. It is verily (ſaith the Apoſtle) a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble us, and reſt to us that be troubled: For after this life, the godly being delivered from their tribulations and pains, ſhall have a moſt quiet and joyful reſt: whereas the wicked and ungodly contrariwiſe ſhall be tormented for evermore with intolerable and unſpeakable pains, as Chriſt by the Parable of the rich Glutton and wretched Lazarus, doth plainly declare and teach. Theſe ought we to have before our eyes always, that in the time of Adverſity and Perſecution (whereof all that will be the Children of God ſhall be partakers, and wherewith it hath pleaſed God to put ſome of us in ure already) we may ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord, and endure even unto the end, that we may be ſaved. For unleſs we, like good warriours of Jeſus Chriſt, will endeavour our ſelves to pleaſe him, who hath choſen us to be Souldiers, and fight the good fight of Faith even unto the end, we ſhall not obtain that Crown of Righteouſneſs, which the Lord, that is a righteous Judge, ſhall give to all them that love his coming.

Let us therefore receive with meekneſs the Word that is graffed in us, which is able to ſave our Souls, and ground our ſelves on the ſure Rock Chriſt. For (as the Apoſtle ſaith) other foundation can no man lay, beſides that which is laid already, which is Jeſus Chriſt. If any man build on this foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, timber, hay, ſtubble, every mans work ſhall appear, for the day ſhall declare it, and it ſhall be ſhewed in the fire. And the fire ſhall try every mans work what it is. If any mans work that he hath builded upon abide, he ſhall receive a reward: if any mans work burn, he ſhall ſuffer loſs; but he ſhall be ſaved himſelf, nevertheleſs yet as it were through fire.

James 1.
1 Cor. 3.

By Fire here doth the Apoſtle underſtand Perſecution and Trouble, for they which do truly preach and profeſs the Word of God, which is called the Word of the Croſs, ſhall be railed upon and abhorred, hated, thruſt out of company, perſecuted and tried in the Furnace of Adverſity, as gold and ſilver are tried in the Fire.

Fire in Scripture, what it ſignifieth.

By gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, he underſtandeth them that in the midſt of Perſecution abide ſtedfaſt in the Word. By timber, hay, and ſtubble, are meant ſuch, as in time of Perſecution do fall away from the Truth. And when Chriſt doth purge his floor with the wind of Adverſity, theſe ſcatter away from the face of the Earth like light Chaff which ſhall be burned with unquenchable fire. If they then which do believe, do in time of Perſecution ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the Truth, the Builder (I do mean the Preacher of the Word) ſhall receive a reward, and the work ſhall be preſerved and ſaved: but if ſo be that they go back and ſwerve, when Perſecution ariſeth, the Builder ſhall ſuffer loſs, that is to ſay, ſhall loſe his labour and coſt, but yet he ſhall be ſaved, if he, being tried in the Fire of Perſecution, do abide faſt in the Faith.

The place of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 3. expounded.

Wherefore, my Beloved, give diligent heed, that ye as living ſtones be builded upon this ſure Rock, and be made a ſpiritual Houſe and a holy Prieſthood to offer up ſpiritual Sacrifices, acceptable unto God by Jeſus Chriſt. For we are the true Temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in us, if ſo be that we continue in the Doctrine of the Goſpel. We are alſo an holy and royal Prieſthood, to offer up ſpiritual Sacrifices and Oblations; for the Sacrifices of the New Teſtament are ſpiritual and of three manners.

1 Pet. 2.
2 Cor. 3.
1 Pet. 2.

The firſt is the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving, which S. Paul doth call the fruits of thoſe lips which confeſs the Name of God.

Three ſorts of Sacrifices of the New Teſtament.

The ſecond is Mercy towards our Neighbours, as the Prophet Oſee ſaith, I will have Mercy and not Sacrifice. Read the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew.

Heb. 13.
Oſee 6.

The third is, when we make our Body a quick Sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, that is, when we mortifie and kill our fleſhly Concupiſcences and carnal Luſts, and ſo bring our fleſh, through the help of the Spirit, under the obedience of Gods holy Law. This is a Sacrifice to God moſt acceptable, which the Apoſtle calleth Our reaſonable ſerving of God. And let us be ſure, that unleſs we do now at this preſent take better heed to our ſelves, and uſe thankfully the grace of God offered to us by the Goſpel preached theſe years paſt, whereby we are induced and brought to the knowledge of the Truth; unleſs, I ſay, we keep Chriſt and his holy Word dwelling by Faith in the Houſe and Temple of our hearts, the ſame thing that Chriſt threatneth unto the Jews, shall happen unto us; that is to wit, the unclean Spirit of Ignorance, Superstition, Idolatry, and Infidelity and Unbelief, the Mother and Head of all Vices, which by the Grace of God was cast out of us, bringing with him seven other Spirits worse than himself, shall to our utter destruction return again unto us: and so shall we be in worse case than ever we were before. For if we, after we have escaped from the filthiness of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, be yet tangled therein again and overcome, then is the latter end worse than the beginning: and it had been better for us not to have known the way of righteousness, than after we have known it, to turn from the holy Commandment given to us.

Exhortation to persist in the Word of God, and not to abide of it. 2 Pet. 2.

Prov. 26. For it is then happened unto us according to the true Proverb, The Dog is turned to his Vomit again, and the Sow that was washed to wallowing in the Mire. And thus to continue and persevere in Infidelity, and to kick against the manifest and known Truth, and so to dye without Repentance, and with a despair of the Mercy of God in Jesus Christ, is to sin against the Holy Ghost, which shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. For it is not possible (saith Saint Paul) that they which were once lightned, and have tasted of the heavenly Gift, and have tasted of the good Word of God, and of the Power of the World to come, if they fall away, should be renewed again by Repentance: Forasmuch as they have, as concerning themselves, crucified the Son of God again, making a mocking of him.

Matthew. Heb. 6.

The place of the Heb. expounded.

S. Pauls meaning in this place is, that they that believe truly and unfeignedly Gods Word, do continue and abide stedfast in the known Truth.

If any therefore fall away from Christ and his Word, it is a plain token that they were but dissembling Hypocrites for all their fair Faces outwardly, and never believed truly; as, Judas, Simon Magus, Demas, Hymenens, Philetus, and others were, which all fell away from the known Verity, and made a mock of Christ: which S. Paul doth call here, to crucifie Christ anew, because that they turning to their old Vomit again, did most blasphemously tread the benefits of Christs Death and Passion under their feet. They that are such can in no wise be renued by Repentance: For their Repentance is fleshly, as the Repentance of Cain, Sa. l. and Judas was, which being without godly comfort, breedeth desperation unto death. These are not of the number of the Elect: and as S. John doth say, They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would have remained with us unto the end. Also the Apostle saith in another place, If we sin willingly after we have received the knowledge of the Truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for judgment and violent fire, which shall devour the Adversaries.

Matth. 26. Falling from Christ.

1 John 2.

Hebr. 10.

They sin willingly, which of a set malice and purpose do withold the Truth in Unrighteousness and Lying, kicking against the manifest and open known Truth, which although they do perfectly know that in all the World there is none other sacrifice for sin, but only that omni-sufficient sacrifice of Christs death: yet notwithstanding they will not commit themselves wholly unto it, but rather despise it, allowing other sacrifices for sin, invented by the imagination of man (as we see by daily experience) unto whom, if they abide still in their wickedness and sin, remaineth a most horrible and dreadful Judgment. This is that sin unto death, for which Saint John would not that a man should pray.

Rom. 1. Wilful kicking against open-known Truth.

Sin unto death.

1 John 5.

Wherefore, my beloved in Christ, let us (on whom the ends of the world are come) take diligent heed unto our selves, that now in these last and perillous times (in the which the Devil is come down, and hath great wrath because he knoweth his time is but short, and whereof the Prophets, Christ and the Apostles have so much spoken, and given us an earnest forewarning) we withhold not the Truth in Unrighteousness, believing, doing, or speaking any thing against our knowledge and conscience, or without faith. For if we so do, for whatsoever cause it be, it is a wilful and obstinate infidelity, and a sin unto death: And as our Saviour Christ saith, If ye believe not, ye shall die in your own sins. For unless we hold fast the Word of Life, both believing it, and also bringing forth fruit worthy of Repentance, we shall with the unprofitable Fig-tree, which did but cumber the ground, be cut down, and our Talent taken from us, and given unto another that shall put it to a better use: and we, through our own unthankfulness put from the Mercy of God, shall never be able to pay our Debts, that is to say, we shall altogether be lost and undone. For the Earth that drinketh in Rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth Herbs meet for them that dress it, receiveth blessing of God: but that ground that beareth Thorns and Bryars, is reproved and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned.

Matth 3. The fruitless Fig-tree. Luke 13. Matth. 18. Hebr. 6.

Nevertheless, dear Friends, we trust to see better of you, and things which accompany Salvation, and that ye being the good ground, watered with the moistness of Gods Word plenteously preached among you, will with a good heart hear the Word of God and keep it, bring forth fruit with patience. And be none of those forgetful and hypocritish hearers, which although they hear the Word, yet the Devil cometh, and catcheth away that which was sowen in their heart; either having no root in themselves, endure but a season, and as soon as Tribulation or Persecution ariseth because of the Word, by and by they are offended; either with the cares of this World and deceitfulness of Riches choak the Word, and so are unfruitful. Read the Parable of the Sower, and among other things note and mark, that the most part of the hearers of Gods Word are but Hypocrites, and hear the Word without any fruit or profit, yea, only to their greater condemnation; for only the fourth part of the Seed doth bring forth fruit. Therefore let not us that be Ministers, or Professors, and Followers of Gods Word, be discouraged, though that very few do give credit, and follow the Doctrine of the Gospel, and be saved.

The good ground. Luke 8. James 1. Matth. 13. The most part of the hearers of Gods word are but Hypocrites.

Whosoever therefore hath ears to hear, let him hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even that he hath: that is to say, they that have a desire of Righteousness, and of the Truth, shall be more and more illuminated of God: on the contrary part, they that do not covet after Righteousness and Truth, are more hardened and blinded, though they seem unto themselves most wise. For God doth here follow an example of a loving Father, which when he seeth that fatherly love and correction doth not help towards his Children, useth another way. He ceaseth to be beneficial unto them, and to minister unto them fatherly correction: he giveth them over unto themselves, suffering them to live as they list themselves.

To him that hath shall be given, and how. Example of Gods dealing with stubborn Children.

But we trust to see better of you, my dearly beloved, and that ye like very Gaderenites, for fear to lose your worldly substance or other delights of this Life, will not banish away Christ and his Gospel from among you; but that ye with all diligence of mind will receive the Word of God, taught you by such Ministers, as now when Persecution ariseth because of the Word, are not ashamed of the Testimony of our Lord Jesus, but are content to suffer Adversity with the Gospel, and therein to suffer trouble as evil doers, even unto Bonds. And if ye refuse thus to do, your own Blood will be upon your own heads. And as ye have had plenteous preaching of the Gospel, more than other have had: so ye shall be sure, if ye repent not and bring forth fruits worthy of Repentance, to be sorer plagued, and to receive greater vengeance at Gods hand, than others, and the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and be given to another Nation, which will bring forth the fruits thereof.

Heb. 6. Matth. 6. Acts 14. 2 Tim. 1. 2 Tim. 2. Acts 18. The more preaching with less following draweth greater vengeance at Gods hand.

Wherefore, my dearly beloved in Christ, take good heed to your selves, and ponder well in your minds, how fearful & horrible a thing it is to fall into the hands of the Living God. And see that ye receive not the Word of God in vain, but continually labour in Faith, and declare your Faith by your good Works, which are infallible witnesses of the true justifying Faith, which is never idle, but worketh by Charity. And see that ye continually give your selves unto all manner of good Works: Amongst the which, the chiefest are to be obedient to the Magistrates (sith they are the Ordinance of God, whether they be good or evil) unless they command idolatry and ungodliness, i.e. things contrary unto true Religion. For, then ought we to say with Peter, We ought more to

Rom. 13. Acts 5. Epheſ. 6. John 19. Job 35. Rom. 13.

The Weapon of a Chriſtian in this matter, ought to be the Sword of the Spirit, which is Gods Word and Prayer, coupled with Humility and due Submiſſion, and with readineſs of heart, rather to die than to do any ungodlineſs. Chriſt alſo doth teach us, that all Power is of God, yea even the power of the wicked, which God cauſeth oftentimes to reign for our ſins and diſobedience towards him and his word. Whoſoever then doth reſiſt any Power, doth reſiſt the Ordinance of God, and ſo purchaſe to himſelf utter deſtruction and undoing.

Fourthly, We muſt diligently exerciſe the neceſſary work of Prayer for all Eſtates: knowing that God therefore hath ſo much commanded it, and hath made ſo great promiſes unto it, and doth ſo well accept it. After theſe works, we muſt learn to know the Croſs, and what affection and mind we muſt bear towards our Adverſaries and Enemies, whatſoever they be, to ſuffer all Adverſities and Evils patiently, to pray for them that hurt, perſecute, and trouble us: and by thus uſing our ſelves, we ſhall obtain an hope and certainty of our Vocation, that we be the Elect Children of God.

After Salutations in Chriſt to you, with thanks for your friendly remembrances of me, deſiring and wiſhing unto you, not only in my Letters, but alſo in my daily Prayers, ſuch Conſolation in Spirit, and taſte of heavenly Treaſures, that ye may thereby continually work in Faith, labour in Love, perſevere in Hope, and be patient in all your Tribulations and Perſecutions, even unto the end and glorious coming of Chriſt: theſe ſhall be earneſtly to exhort and beſeech you in Chriſt, as ye have received the Lord Jeſus, even ſo to walk, rooted in him, and not to be afraid of any terror of your Adverſaries, be they never ſo many and mighty, and you on the other ſide never ſo few and weak: for the Battel is the Lords. And as in times paſt, God was with Abraham, Moſes, Iſaac, David, the Machabees, and other, and fought for them, and delivered all their Enemies into their hands, even ſo hath he promiſed to be with us alſo unto the worlds end, and ſo to aſſiſt, ſtrengthen and help us, that no man ſhall be able to withſtand us. For as I was with Moſes, ſo will I be with thee, ſaith God, and will never leave thee nor forſake thee. Be ſtrong and bold; neither fear nor dread: for the Lord thy God is with thee, whetherſoever thou goeſt. Now if God be on our ſide, who can be againſt us?

Spiritual warfare. Epheſ. 6. 2 Cor. 11, 12. Acts 21.

In this our ſpiritual warfare is no man overcome, unleſs he traiterouſly leave and forſake his Captain, either cowardly caſt away his Weapons, or willingly yield himſelf to his Enemies, either fearfully turn his back and fly? Be ſtrong therefore in the Lord, dear Brethren, and in the power of his might, and put on all the Armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand ſtedfaſt againſt the crafty Aſſaults of the Devil.

A Chriſtian mans life is a perpetual warfare.

Now what Weapons ye muſt fight withal, learn of S. Paul, a Champion both much exerciſed, and alſo moſt valiant and invincible. For we muſt think none other, but that the life of man is a perpetual warfare upon Earth, as the examples of all godly men throughout all Ages do declare. The valiant Warriour S. Paul being delivered into the hands of the ungodly, and that ſo many times, and alſo from ſo many extream perils and dangers of death, as he his own ſelf doth witneſs, is fain to commit himſelf in the end to the rough Waters of the Sea, where he was in great peril and jeopardy of his own life: yet was God always (to the great comfort of all that hear of it) moſt ready to comfort and ſuccour him, and gloriouſly delivered him out of all his troubles; ſo that no man that invaded him, could do him any harm, and in the end he was compelled to ſay, I have finiſhed my courſe, the time of my departing is at hand, I long to be looſed, and to be with Chriſt, which is the beſt of all, moſt heartily deſiring death.

The manifold deliverances of S. Paul be examples for our comfort. Acts 28. 2 Tim. 4. Phil. 1.

Rom. 15.

Theſe things be written for our learning and comfort, and be to us a ſure Obligation, that if we ſubmit our ſelves to God and his holy Word, no man ſhall be able to hurt us, and that he will deliver us from all troubles, yea from death alſo, until ſuch time as we covet and deſire to dye. Let us therefore run with patience unto the Battel that is ſet before us, and look unto Jeſus the Captain and Finiſher of our Faith, and after his example, for the Rewards ſake that is ſet out unto us, patiently to bear the Croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame. For all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer Perſecution.

Heb. 12. Perſecution followeth Chriſtian godlineſs. 2 Tim. 3.

Matth. 3, 4. Where Chriſt is, Satan there is always ready. Epheſ. 6.

Chriſt was no ſooner baptized, and declared to the world to be the Son of God, but Satan was by and by ready to tempt him: which thing we muſt look for alſo: yea, the more we ſhall increaſe in faith and vertuous living, the more ſtrongly will Satan aſſault us: whom we muſt learn, after the example of Chriſt, to fight againſt, and overcome with the Holy and Sacred Scriptures the Word of God (which are our heavenly Armour) and Sword of the Spirit. And let the faſting of Chriſt, while he was tempted in the Wilderneſs, be unto us an example of ſober living, not for the ſpace of forty days (as the Papiſts do fondly fancy of their own brains) but as long as we are in the wilderneſs of this wretched life, aſſaulted of Satan, who like a roaring Lion walketh about, and ceaſeth not, ſeeking our utter deſtruction.

Matth. 4. The faſt of Chriſt is to us example of ſober living. 1 Pet. 5.

Neither can the Servant of God at any time come and ſtand before God, that is, lead a godly life, and walk innocently before God, but Satan cometh alſo among them, that is, he daily accuſeth, findeth fault, vexeth, perſecuteth, and troubleth the godly: for it is the nature and property of the Devil always to hurt, and do miſchief, unleſs he be forbidden of God: for unleſs God doth permit him, he can do nothing at all, not ſo much as enter into a filthy Hog: but we are more of price than many Hogs before God, if we cleave unto his Son by Faith.

Job 1. 2. When the Servants of God ſtand before him, Satan cometh alſo. Matth. 8.

Let us therefore, knowing Satans deceits, and rancour, walk the more warily, and take unto us the Shield of Faith, wherewith we may be able to quench and to overcome all the fiery and deadly darts of the wicked. Let us take to us the Helmet of Salvation, and Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and learn to uſe the ſame according to the example of our grand Captain Chriſt. Let us faſt and pray continually. For this frantick kind of Devils goeth not out otherwiſe, as Chriſt doth teach us, but by faithful Prayer and Faſting, which is true Abſtinence and Soberneſs of Living, if we uſe the ſame according to the Doctrine of the Goſpel and Word of God. Faſting is acceptable to God, if it be done without Hypocriſie, that is to ſay, if we uſe it to this intent, that thereby this mortal Body and diſobedient Carkaſs may be tamed and brought under the ſubjection of the Spirit: And again, if we faſt to this intent, that we may ſpare wherewith to help and ſuccour our poor needy Brethren.

Epheſ. 6. The Shield of Faith. The Helmet of Salvation. The Sword of the Spirit. Matth. 4. Matth. 17.

Prayer and Faſting. True Faſt, what it is. How to Faſt without Hypocriſie.

This Faſt do the true Chriſtians uſe all the days of their life, although among the common ſort of People remaineth yet ſtill that ſuperſtitious kind of Faſting, which God ſo earneſtly reproveth by his Prophet Eſay. For as for true chaſtening of the Body, and abſtaining from Vice, with ſhewing Mercy towards our needy Neighbours, we will neither underſtand nor hear of it, but ſtill think with the Jews, that we do God a great pleaſure when we Faſt, and that we then Faſt, when we abſtain from one thing, and fill our bellies with another. And verily in this point doth our Superſtition much exceed the Superſtition of the Jews: For we never read that they ever took it for a Faſt, to abſtain from Fleſh, and to eat either Fiſh or White-meat, as they call it.

Abuſe of faſting among Chriſtians. Elay 58.

The Jewiſh manner of faſting reproved. The Chriſtians in ſuperſtitious faſting exceed the Jews.

To Faſting and Prayer muſt be joyned Alms, and Mercy towards the Poor and Needy: And that our Alms may be acceptable unto God, three things are chiefly required.

Mercy to the Poor.

2 Cor. 9. In Alms three things required.

Firſt, That we give with a cheerful and joyful heart; for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

Secondly, That we give liberally, putting aſide all niggardſhip, knowing that he that ſoweth little, ſhall reap little, and he that ſoweth plenteouſly, ſhall reap plenteouſly. Let every man therefore do according as he is able. The pooreſt Caitiff in the world may give as great and acceptable an Alms in the ſight of God, as the richeſt man in the world can do. The poor Widow that did offer but two Mites, which make a Farthing, did highly pleaſe Chriſt: Inſomuch that he affirmed with an Oath, That ſhe of her Penury had added more to the Offerings of God, than all the rich men, which of their Superfluity had caſt in very much. For if there be firſt a willing mind (as S. Paul ſaith) it is accepted, according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not.

Mark 12.

2 Cor. 8.

Thirdly, We muſt give without Hypocriſie and Oſtentation, not ſeeking the Praiſe of men, or our own glory or profit. And although the Scriptures in ſome places make mention of a Reward to our Alms and other good Works, yet ought we not to think that we do merit or deſerve any thing: but rather we ought to acknowledge, that God in his meer mercy rewardeth in us his own gifts. For what hath he that giveth Alms, that he hath not received? He then that giveth to a poor man any manner of thing, giveth not of his own, but of thoſe goods which he hath received of God. What haſt thou, ſaith the Apoſtle, that thou haſt not received? If thou haſt received it, why rejoyceſt thou, as though thou hadſt not received it?

Alms without oſtentation.

Works of Mercy do not merit with God touching ourſalvation any thing.

1 Cor. 4.

This Sentence ought to be had in remembrance of all men. For if we have nothing, but that which we have received, what can we deſerve? or what need we to diſpute and reaſon of our own Merits? it cometh of the free gift of God, that we live, that we love God, that we walk in his fear. Where is our deſerving then? We muſt alſo in this our ſpiritual warfare arm our ſelves with continual Prayer, a very neceſſary, ſtrong, and invincible weapon, and after the example of Chriſt and all other godly men, cry heartily unto God in Faith, in all our diſtreſſes and anguiſhes. Let us go boldly to the Seat of Grace, where we ſhall be ſure to receive Mercy, and find Grace to help in time of need. For now is Pride and Perſecution encreaſed: Now is the time of deſtruction and wrathful diſpleaſure.

Continual Prayer. Matth. 26. Heb. 4. 1 Mach. 4.

Wherefore, my dear Brethren, be ye fervent in the Law of God, and jeopard ye your lives, if need ſhall require, for the Teſtament of the Fathers, and ſo ſhall ye receive great honor, and an everlaſting name. Remember Abraham: Was not he found faithful in temptation, and it was reckoned unto him for righteouſneſs? Joſeph in time of his trouble kept the Commandment, and was made a Lord of Egypt. Phineas was ſo fervent for the honour of God, that he obtained the Covenant of an Everlaſting Prieſthood. Joſhua for the fulfilling of the Word of God, was made the Captain of Iſrael. Caleb bare record before the Congregation, and received an Inheritance. David alſo in his merciful kindneſs obtained the Throne of an Everlaſting Kingdom. Elias being zealous and fervent in the Law, was taken up into Heaven. Ananias, Azarias, and Miſael remained ſtedfaſt in the Faith, and were delivered out of the Fire. In like manner Daniel being unguilty, was ſaved from the mouth of the Lions.

To be faithful in temptation.

And thus ye may conſider throughout all Ages, ſince the world began, that whoſoever put their truſt in God were not overcome. Fear not ye then the words of ungodly men; for their glory is but dung and worms; to day they are ſet up, and to morrow are they gone; for they are turned into Earth, and their memorial cometh to nought. Wherefore let us take good hearts unto us, and quit our ſelves like men in the Law: for if we do the things that are commanded us in the Law of the Lord our God, we ſhall obtain great honour therein.

Acts 14.

Beloved in Chriſt, let us not faint becauſe of Affliction, wherewith God trieth all them that are ſealed unto Life everlaſting: for the only way into the Kingdom of God is through much Tribulation. For the Kingdom of Heaven (as God teacheth by his Prophet Eſdras) is like a City builded and ſet upon a broad Field, and full of all good things, but the entrance is narrow and ſudden (full of ſorrow and travel, perils and labours:) Like as if there were a fire at the right hand, and a deep Water at the left; and as it were one ſtreight path between them both, ſo ſmall, that there could but one man go there. If this City were now given to an Heir, and he never went through the perillous way, how could he receive his Inheritance? Wherefore ſeeing we are in this narrow and ſtreight way, which leadeth unto the moſt joyful and pleaſant City of everlaſting Life: let us not ſtagger, either turn back, being afraid of the dangerous and perillous way, but follow our Captain Jeſus Chriſt in the narrow and ſtreight way, and be afraid of nothing, no not even of Death it ſelf: for it is he that muſt lead us to our Journeys end, and open us the door unto everlaſting Life.

4 Eſdras 7.

Strait is the way which the Elect muſt walk in.

Death is a door to life.

Conſider alſo the courſe of this world, how many there be which for their Maſters ſake, or for a little Promotions ſake, would adventure their lives in worldly affairs, as commonly in wars, and yet is their reward but light and tranſitory, and ours is unſpeakable, great and everlaſting. They ſuffer pains to be made Lords on Earth for a ſhort ſeaſon: how much more ought we to endure like pains, yea peradventure much leſs to be made Kings in Heaven for evermore? Conſider alſo the wicked of this world, which for a little pleaſures ſake, or to be avenged on their Enemies, will fight with Sword and Weapons, and put themſelves in danger of Impriſonment and Hanging. So much as Vertue is better than Vice, and God mightier than the Devil, ſo much ought we to excel them in this our Spiritual Battel.

If worldly men jeopard ſo much for earthly things, how much more ought we to jeopard for everlaſting things?

And ſeeing Brethren, it hath pleaſed God to ſet me, and that moſt worthy Miniſter of Chriſts John Bradford, your Countrey-men, in the Fore-front of this Battel, where (for the time) is moſt danger, I beſeech you all, in the Bowels of Chriſt, to help us, and in all our Fellow-ſouldiers ſtanding in like perillous place, with your Prayers to God for us, that we may quit our ſelves like men in the Lord, and give ſome example of boldneſs and conſtancy mingled with patience in the fear of God, that ye and others our Brethren, through our example, may be ſo encouraged and ſtrengthened to follow us, that ye alſo may leave example to your weak Brethren in the world, to follow you, Amen.

Conſider what I ſay, the Lord give us underſtanding in all things. Brethren, the time is ſhort; it remaineth that ye uſe this world as though ye uſed it not: for the faſhion of this world vaniſheth away. See that ye love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: but ſet your affection on heavenly things, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God. Be meek, and long ſuffering, ſerve and edifie one another, with the gift that God hath given you. Beware of ſtrange Doctrine, lay aſide the old Converſation of greedy Luſts, and walk in a new life. Beware of unclenneſs, covetouſneſs, fooliſh talking, falſe Doctrine and drun-drunkenneſs: rejoyce and be thankful towards God, and ſubmit your ſelves one to another. Ceaſe from ſin, ſpend no more time in vice, be ſober and apt to pray; be patient in trouble, love each other, and let the glory of God and profit of your Neighbour be the only mark ye ſhoot at in all your doings. Repent ye of the life that is paſt, and take better heed to your doings hereafter. And above all things cleave ye faſt to him, who was delivered to death for our ſins, and roſe again for our juſtificaion. To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, be all honour and rule for evermore. Amen.

Salute from me in Chriſt all others which love us in the Faith, and at your diſcretion make them partakers of theſe Letters: and pray ye all for me and others in Bonds for the Goſpel, that the ſame God (which by his Grace hath called us from wicked Papiſtry unto true Chriſtianity, and now of love proveth our patience by perſecution) will of his mercy and favor in the end glorioufly deliver us, either by death, or by life, to his glory, Amen. At Lancaſter the 30. of Auguſt, 1555.

By me an unprofitable Servant of Chriſt,
George Marſh.

To his welbeloved in Chriſt, Jenkin Crampton, James Leiver, Elice Fogge, Ralph Bradſhaw, the wife of Richard Bradſhaw, Elice Cramptor, and to every one of them, be theſe delivered from Lancaſter. George Marſh.

1 Cor. 13. Another Letter of Mr. Marſh to certain of his Friends.

THe Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all, Amen.

After ſalutations in Chriſt, and hearty thanks for your friendly Tokens and your other Remembrances towards me, beſeeching God that ye may increaſe in faith, fear, and love, and all good gifts, and grow up into a perfect man in Chriſt: Theſe be earneſtly to exhort you, yea and to beſeech you in the tender mercy of Chriſt, that with purpoſe of heart ye continually cleave unto the Lord, and that ye worſhip and ſerve him in ſpirit, in the Goſpel of his Son. For God will not be worſhipped after the Commandments and Traditions of men, neither yet by any other means appointed, preſcribed and taught us, but by his holy Word. And though all men for the moſt part defile themſelves, with the wicked Traditions of Men, and Ordinances after the World, and not after Chriſt: yet do ye after the enſample of Toby, Daniel, and his three Companions, Mattathias and his three Sons, be it at a point with your ſelves, that ye will not be defiled with the unclean meats of the Heathen; I do mean the filthineſs of Idolatry, and the very Heatheniſh Ceremonies of the Papiſts: but as the true Worſhippers, ſerve ye God in Spirit and Verity, according to the Sacred Scriptures, which I would wiſh, and will you above all things continually and reverently (as both Saint Paul and Chriſt command you) to ſearch and read, with the wholſome Monitions of the ſame: to teach, exhort, comfort and edifie one another, and your Brethren and Neighbours, now in the time of this our miſerable Captivity, and great famiſhment of Souls, for want of the Food of Gods Word. And doubt not but that the merciful Lord, who hath promiſed to be with us even unto the worlds end, and that whenſoever two or three be gathered together in his Name, he will be in the midſt of them, will aſſiſt you, and teach you the right meaning of the Sacred Scriptures, will keep you from all Errors, and lead you into all Truth, as he hath faithfully promiſed.

Ephe. 4. Acts 11. Rom. 1. Col. 2. Tob. 1. Dan. 1. 1 Mach. 1. John 4. John 5. 1 Tim. 5. Matth. 28. Matth. 18. John 12. Matth. 14.

And though you think your ſelves unable to teach, yet at the commandment of Chriſt, now in time of Famine, the hungry People being in a Wilderneſs far from any Towns, which if they be ſent away faſting, are ſure to faint and periſh by the way, employ and beſtow thoſe five Loaves and two Fiſhes that ye have, upon that hungry Multitude, although you think it nothing among ſo many. And he that increaſed the five Loaves and two Fiſhes to feed five thouſand men, beſides women and children, ſhall alſo augment his gifts in you, not only to the edifying and winning of others in Chriſt, but alſo to an exceeding great increaſe of your knowledge in God and his holy Word. And fear not your Adverſaries; for either according to his accuſtomed manner God ſhall blind their eyes that they ſhall not ſpie you, either get you favour in their ſight, or elſe graciouſly deliver you out of their hands by one means or other. Phil. 1.

Leſſons of Chriſtian manners.

Obey with reverence all your Superiors, unleſs they command Idolatry or Ungodlineſs. Make proviſion for your Houſholds, chiefly that they be inſtructed and taught in the Law of God. Love your Wives even as your own ſelves, and as Chriſt loved the Congregation. Love your Children, but rate them not, leſt they be of a deſperate mind: and bring them up in the nurture and information of the Lord, and teach them even as the godly Parents of Toby the younger, and Suſanna did teach their Children, even from their infancy to reverence God according to his Law, and to abſtain from ſin, providing that in no wiſe they be brought up in idleneſs and wantonneſs, ſeeing that ye reckon your ſelves to be the Children of God, and look for the Life which God ſhall give to them which never turn their belief from him. See that ye ever fear God, and keep his Commandments: and though the Plague of God chance upon you, yet remain ye ſtedfaſt in the faith and fear of God, and thank him, and ſerve him in ſuch holineſs and righteouſneſs as are acceptable before him all the days of your life. Comfort your ſelves in all your adverſities, and ſtay your ſelves in him, who hath promiſed not to leave you as fatherleſs and motherleſs Children without any comfort; but that he will come to you like a moſt gentle and merciful Lord. He will continually ſtand by you in all your troubles, aſſiſting, helping, and ſuccouring you at all times. I will be with you (ſaith he) unto the end of the world. And cleave you faſt unto him, which was incarnate, lived, wrought, taught, and died for your ſins, yea, roſe again from death, and aſcended into Heaven for your juſtification. Repent ye of the life that is paſt, and ceaſe from ſin, and from hence forward live as much time as remaineth in the fleſh, not after the luſts of men, but after the will of God. To do good and diſtribute, forget not. Faſt and pray buſily, and as every man hath received the gift, miniſter the ſame one to another as good Miniſters of the manifold Graces of God, that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be praiſe and dominion for ever, and while the world ſtandeth, Amen. Tob. 2. Tob. 3.

Yours George Marſh.

Another Letter.

Another Letter of G. Marſh to certain faithful Brethren in the Congregation.

THe ſame Grace and Peace (dearly beloved in Chriſt) do I intirely deſire and wiſh unto you, which the Apoſtle S. Paul wiſheth to all them, unto whom he did write and ſend his Epiſtles, than which two things no better can be wiſhed and deſired of God. Grace is throughout all the Epiſtles of Paul, taken for the free mercy and favour of God, whereby he ſaveth us freely without any deſervings or works of the Law. In like manner peace is taken for the quietneſs and tranquillity of the Conſcience, being throughly perſwaded that through the only Merits of Chriſts Death and Blood-ſhedding, there is an attonemont and peace made between God and Us, ſo that God will no more impute our ſins unto us, nor yet condemn us.

Grace. Peace, what it is?

Dearly Beloved, I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of things, though that you know them your ſelves, and be alſo eſtabliſhed in the preſent Truth; notwithſtanding, I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle, to ſtir you up by putting you in remembrance. Wherefore I beſeech you Brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Jeſus, that ye increaſe more and more, even as ye have received, how ye ought to walk and to pleaſe God. And as Barnabas, that good man, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, exhorted the Antiochians, with purpoſe of heart cleave ye continually unto the Lord. And ſtand faſt, and be not moved from the hope of the Goſpel, whereof God be thanked, ye have had plenteous preaching unto you theſe years paſt, by the faithful Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, Leiver, Pilkinton, Bradford, Sanders, and others like, which now, when Perſecution ariſeth, becauſe of the Word, do not fall away like ſhrinking Children, and forſake the Truth, but are preſt and ready for your ſakes, which are his Myſtical Body, to forſake the chief and principal delights of this life, and ſome of them in giving place to the ouragious tyranny of the world, to forſake their Livings, Friends, Native Land, and other chief Pleaſures of this Life, and to commit themſelves to painful Exile, that if it pleaſe God, Chriſt may come again out of Egypt. And other ſome are ready to fulfil their Miniſtry unto the uttermoſt: that is to wit, with their painful impriſonments and blood-ſhedding, if need ſhall ſo require, to confirm and ſeal Chriſts Goſpel whereof they have been Miniſters: and as S. Paul ſaith, not only to be caſt into Priſon, but alſo to dye for the Name of the Lord Jeſus.

He exhorteth to ſtedfaſtneſs in the Goſpel.

Leiver, Pilkinton, Bradford, Sanders.

Men baniſhed for the Goſpel in Q. Marie. days.

Be ye not therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord Jeſus, neither be ye aſhamed of us which are his Priſoners, but ſuffer ye adverſity with the Goſpel, for which Word we ſuffer as evil doers, even unto bonds: but the Word of God is not bound with us. Therefore we ſuffer all things for the Elects ſake, that they alſo may obtain the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus with eternal glory: wherefore ſtand ye faſt in the Faith, and be not moved from the hope of the Goſpel, and ſo ſhall ye make us even with joy to ſuffer for your ſakes, and as the Apoſtle ſaith, To fulfil that which is behind of the Paſſions of Chriſt in our fleſh, for his Bodies ſake, which is the Congregation. S. Paul doth not here mean, that there wanteth any thing in the Paſſion of Chriſt, which may be ſupplied by man: for the Paſſion of Chriſt, as touching his own Perſon, is that moſt perfect and omni-ſufficient Sacrifice, whereby we are all made perfect, as many as are ſanctified in his Blood: but theſe his words ought to be underſtood of the Elect and Choſen, in whom Chriſt is, and ſhall be perſecuted unto the worlds end. The Paſſion of Chriſt then, as touching his myſtical Body, which is the Church, ſhall not be perfected till they have all ſuffered, whom God hath appointed to ſuffer for his Sons ſake. Wherefore ſtabliſh your ſelves, and be of good comfort, and be not moved in theſe Afflictions, knowing that we are appointed thereunto. For on our parts nothing can be greater conſolation and inward joy unto us in our adverſity, than to hear of your faith and love, and that ye have a good remembrance of us always, praying for us as we do for you, as the Apoſtle writeth of the Theſſalonians, ſaying, Now are we alive, if ye ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord: for good Shephards do always count the welfare and proſperous eſtate of Chriſts Flock to be their own: for while it goeth well with the Congregation, it goeth well with them alſo in whatſoever Affliction or Adverſity they be: but when they ſee the Church in any peril or weakneſs, then be they weary of their own lives, then can they have no reſt nor joy. Who is weak, ſaith S. Paul, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I do not burn? But this Affection is not in them that ſeek their own lucre and glory.

The meaning of S. Pauls words opened.

The condition of a true Paſtor.

And foraſmuch as the life of man is a perpetual warfare upon Earth, let us run with joy unto the battel that is ſet before us, and like good warriours of Jeſus Chriſt pleaſe him, who hath choſen us to be Souldiers, and not like ſhrinking Children faint and fall away from the Truth now in time of Adverſity and Tribulation, wherewith all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt be tried, even as gold and ſilver is proved in the fire, and whereof all the Scriptures have given us ſo much forewarning. For God is wont for the moſt part, to warn his Elect and Choſen, what affliction and trouble ſhall happen unto them for his ſake, not to the intent to fray them thereby, but rather to prepare their minds againſt the boiſterous ſtorms of Perſecution. As we have a notable example in the Apoſtle S. Paul, unto whom God ſent Agabus, who propheſied unto him of the Impriſonment and Bands that he ſhould ſuffer at Jeruſalem: in whom we have alſo a good example of conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs, which regarding nothing the tears of his familiar Friends, nor yet the peril of his own life, did through fire and water go on ſtill to ſet forth the glory of God; and he being delivered from the hands of his ungodly and blood-thirſty Enemies, and that ſo many times, is in concluſion fain to commit himſelf to the rough waters of the Sea, where he was a long ſeaſon in great peril and jeopardy of his own life. But God was always (to the great comfort of all that ſhall hear of it) moſt ready to help and ſuccour him. Firſt, he did ſend him a moſt friendly and ſweet company, I mean Ariſtarchus and Lucas, ſo ruling the heart of the under Captain Julius, that he courteouſly intreated him, and gave him liberty to go to his Friends, and to refreſh himſelf, and he was beneficial unto him at all times. In like manner was God with Joſeph, and delivered him from all his Adverſities, and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh King of Egypt, inſomuch that he made him Governour over all Egypt, and over all his Houſhold. In like manner was he with Jeremy and Daniel, in their great troubles, and appointed men for them in their moſt troubles, to relieve, ſuccour, and help them, to their ſingular comfort.

A Chriſtian mans life is a warfare upon Earth.

The Church is ever forewarned before Affliction.

Acts 17.

Anno 1555.

Alſo when Peter was in Herods Priſon, ſleeping between two Souldiers, bound with two Chains, and the Keepers before the door keeping the Priſon, the ſame night that Herod had intended to have brought him out unto the People the day following, and to have put him unto death to pleaſe the Jews withal, as a little before he had killed James the Brother of John with the Sword; God ſent his Angel, and the Chains fell off from Peters hands, and the Iron gate opened unto him by its own accord, and ſo was Peter wonderfully delivered by God. For it is the true living God that looſeth all Bands, and delivereth out of Priſon, and not that fained God S. Leonard. On that true God did S. Peter call, unto him did he aſcribe the glory of his deliverance, ſaying, Now I know of a truth, that God hath ſent his Angel, &c.

Peter delivered out of Priſon.

Theſe things are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. The God of patience and comfort, grant that we be like minded one towards another, after the enſample of Chriſt Jeſus, that we all agreeing together, may with one mouth glorifie God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Another Letter of G. Marſh to R. Langley and others.

After hearty Commendations to you, with thanks for that ye did viſit me a Priſoner in Chriſt, and unacquainted with, to your coſts, this ſhall be to let you know, that ye ſhall receive from me mine Examination and handling at Lathum, and the cauſe of mine Impriſonment, according as I did promiſe you: and this ye ſhall receive by my Brother, or ſome one of the Bradſhaws of Bolton within this ſevennight, willing you to ſhew the ſame to ſuch faithful men about Mancheſter or elſewhere, as you do take to be favourers of true Religion, and Chriſts holy Word, and then to deliver it again. And whereas you did put me in comfort, that if I did want any thing neceſſary unto this life, you with ſome others would be bearers with me in this my coſtly and painful Affliction; I give you moſt hearty thanks, and rejoyce greatly in the Lord, who ſtirs up the hearts of others to be careful for me in this my great neceſſity. I thank God, as yet I do want nothing, and intend to be as little chargeable to others (ſaving my Mother) as I can. If I do want, I will be bold with you and others, to ſend for your relief and help in my neceſſity; deſiring you in the mean while to pray for me, and all others in the Bonds of Chriſt, that God would perform the thing which he hath begun in us, that we may with boldneſs confeſs Jeſus Chriſt, and fight the good fight of Faith.

Another Letter of G. Marſh to his friend.

After hearty commendations and thanks to you, not only for your large token, but much more for your loving Letters, full of conſolation to me as touching my perſon to you unknown: theſe ſhall be to certifie you, that I rejoyce greatly in the Lord, when I do perceive how my ſweet Saviour Chriſt doth ſtir up the minds, not only of my familiar friends in times paſt, but alſo of ſundry & divers heretofore tofore unto me unknown and unacquainted, to bear part with me in this my painful and coſtly Impriſonment, ſending me things not only neceſſary for this preſent Life, but alſo comfortable Letters, encouraging and exhorting mee to continue grounded and ſtabliſhed in the Faith, and not to be moved away from the hope of the Goſpel, whereof, according to my ſmall talent, I have been a Miniſter: and daily I call and cry unto the Lord in whom is all my truſt. And without whom I can do nothing, that he which hath begun a good work in me, would vouchſafe to go forth with it until the day of Jeſus Chriſt, being ſurely certified in my Conſcience of this, that he will ſo do, foraſmuch as he hath given me, that not only I ſhould believe on him, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. The Lord ſtrengthen me with his Holy Spirit, that I may be one of the number of thoſe bleſſed, which induring to the end, ſhall be ſaved.

And whereas you ſay, that my ſuffering of perſecution with Chriſt is a thing to you moſt comfortable, I make anſwer, that in all mine adverſity and neceſſity nothing on your behalf is greater conſolation unto me, than to hear of the Faith and Love of others, and how they have good remembrance of us always, even as the Apoſtle reporteth by the Theſſalonians, ſaying. Now are we alive, if ye ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord. For my truſt in the Lord is, that this my buſineſs ſhall happen to the furtherance of the Goſpel, and that you will be none of thoſe forgetful and hypocritiſh hearers, whereof ſome being but wayſide hearers, the devil cometh and taketh away the word out of their hearts, leſt they ſhould believe and be ſaved, (but let Prayer be made without ceaſing by the Congregation unto God for them) and (no doubt) God will to your Conſolation glorioufly deliver by one means or other his oppreſſed. Only tarry ye the Lords leaſure; be ſtrong, let your heart be of good comfort, and wait ye ſtill for the Lord. He tarrieth not that will come, look for him therefore and faint not, and he will never fail you.

Wayſide hearers of the Word.

A Letter of a Godly Brother, one James Bradſhaw, ſent to George Marſh in Priſon.

A Letter of James Bradſhaw to George Marſh.

GRace and Peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you alway, Amen.

We had a Letter from you, which is a great comfort unto us, to ſee you take the Croſs ſo thankfully. Trouble and affliction doth prove, try, inſtruct, confirm and ſtrengthen the Faith, provoke and ſtir up Prayer, drive and force us to amendment of Life, to the fear of God, to meekneſs, to patience, to conſtancy to gentleneſs, to ſobernes, temperancy, and to all manner of vertues, and are the occaſion of exceeding much good, as well tranſitory as eternal, in this World as in the World to come. There is neither good nor bad, godly nor ungodly, but he hath one croſs or other. And although ſome there be that can ſhift for a while, and make proviſion for themſelves for a time, by craft and ſubtilty and diſſimulation, or by ſome falſhood in fellowſhip (as they call it) yet they bring themſelves at length into the higheſt danger, confuſion and ſhame, both in this World, and in the World to come. And ſeeing that all the troubles and adverſity in this World are a thouſand times more light and eaſie, yea nothing in compariſon of the eternal fire, which is prepared and already kindled for the unfaithful wicked enemies of God; all Faithful and Godly Perſons ought to bear and ſuffer their tranſitory affliction and adverſity the more patiently, willingly, and thankfully; conſidering and remembring all the dearly beloved friends of God, which were wonderfully vexed and plagued of their enemies, Abraham of the Caldees, Lot of the Sodomites, Iſaac of Iſhmael, Jacob of Eſau, Moſes of his People, David of Saul, and of his own Son. As for Job, he had not a drop of Blood in his Body. John Baptiſt, the holieſt that ever was born of a Woman, was, without any Law, right or reaſon, beheaded in Priſon, as though God had known nothing at all of him.

What good affliction worketh in the godly.

Examples of holy men ſuffering affliction.

We have many thouſands fellow Martyrs and companions of our miſery and adverſity, in reſpect of whoſe impriſonment, racking, chains, fire, wild beaſts, and other means wherewith they were tormented, all that we ſuffer is but a blaſt of wind. Therefore now, whoſoever is aſhamed of the croſs of Chriſt, and agrieved therewith, the ſame is aſhamed to have Chriſt for his fellow and companion, and therefore ſhall the Lord Jeſus Chriſt be aſhamed of him again at the latter day.

Thus I leave for this time, beſeeching you to let me have your advice, becauſe I do not outwardly ſpeak that with my Tongue that I do not think in my Heart. Pray for me, as I for you. I beſeech the Holy Ghoſt have you in his keeping alway, Amen.

By your friend,
James Bradſhaw.

A Prayer of G. Marſh, which he uſed daily to ſay.

A Prayer of G. Marſh, Martyr.

O Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which art the only Phyſitian of wounded Conſciences, we miſerable Sinners truſting in thy gracious goodneſs, do briefly open unto thee the evil tree of our heart, with all the roots, boughs, leaves, and fruits, and with all the crooks, knots and knoures, all which thou knoweſt: for thou throughly perceiveſt as well the inward luſts, doubtings, and denying thy providence, as thoſe groſs outward Sins which we commit inwardly and deadly. Wherefore we beſeech thee, according to the little meaſure of our infirmity, although we be far unable and unapt to pray, that thou wouldeſt mercifully circumciſe our ſtony Hearts, and for theſe old Hearts create new within us, and repleniſh us with a new Spirit, and water us, and moiſten us with the juice of Heavenly Grace, and wells of Spiritual Waters, whereby the inward venom and noyſom juice of the fleſh may be dryed up, and cuſtom of the Old Man changed, and our Heart, always bringing forth thorns and briars to be burned with fire, from henceforth may bear ſpiritual fruits in righteouſneſs and holineſs, unto Life everlaſting, Amen.

Beloved, among other exerciſes, I do daily on my knees, uſe this Confeſſion of Sins, willing and exhorting you to do the ſame, and daily to acknowledge unfainedly to God your unbelief, unthankfulneſs, and diſobedience againſt him. This ſhall ye do, if ye will diligently conſider and look your ſelves firſt in the pure glaſs of Gods Commandments and there ſee your outward filthineſs and uncleanneſs, and ſo learn to vanquiſh the ſame, that is to wit, fall in hearty diſpleaſure againſt Sin, and therby be provoked to long after Chriſt, for we truly are Sinners; but he is juſt, and the juſtifier of all them that believe on him. We are poor, but he is rich in mercy toward all them that call upon him. If we hunger and thirſt for righteouſneſs, let us reſort unto his Table, for he is a moſt liberal feaſtmaker. He will ſet before us his own holy Body, which is given to us to be our meat, and his precious Blood, which was ſhed for us, and for many for the remiſſion of Sins, to be our drink. He biddeth, willeth, and calleth for gueſts, which hunger and thirſt. Come (ſaith he) all ye that labor and are laden, and I will refreſh you, cool and eaſe you, and you ſhall find reſt unto your Souls.

The Life and Story of W. Flower, who for ſtriking of a Prieſt, was apprehended, firſt having his hand cut off, and after Martyred for his conſtant ſtanding to the Truth.

WIlliam Flower, otherwiſe named Branch, firſt concerning his trade of Life, and bringing up, he was born at Snowhill in the County of Cambridge, where he went to School certain years, and then came to the Abbey of Ely; where, after he had remained a while, he was a profeſſed Monk according to the Order and Rule of the ſame Houſe wherein he remained, uſing and bearing the Habit of a Monk, and obſerving the Rules and Order of the ſame Houſe, untill he came to one and twenty years of Age, or thereabout: and before he came to that Age, and being a profeſſed Monk, he was made a Prieſt alſo in the ſame Houſe, and there did celebrate and ſing Maſs a good ſpace together: After that, by reaſon of a Viſitation, and certain Injunctions given in the ſame time by the Authority of King Henry the eighth, he forſook the ſame Houſe, and caſting from him the ſaid Monks Habit and Religion aforeſaid, took upon him and uſed the Habit of a Secular Prieſt, and returned to Snowhill, where he was born; and there he did celebrate and ſing Maſs, and taught Children their Primar and Accidence about half a year together.

Then he went from thence to Ludgate in Suffolk, and there ſerved as a ſecular Prieſt about a quarter of a year; and from thence he then went to Stoniland, where he tarried and ſerved as a ſecular Prieſt alſo, until the coming out of the ſix Articles: And then he departed from thence, and went into Gloceſterſhire, where after he had made his abode in the Countrey a while, at length in Tewksbury, according to Gods Holy Ordinance, hee Married a Wife, with whom he ever after Faithfully and Honeſtly continued: and after his Marriage, he tarried in Tewksbury about two years together, and then from thence he went unto Broſley, where he tarried three quarters of a year, and practiſed Phyſick and Chirurgery, and from thence he removed to Northamptonſhire, where under a Gentleman he taught Children their Primars, and to write and read, a good ſpace. And ſo departing from thoſe parts; he came to London, and there remained for a certain ſpace. After that, being deſirous to ſee his Country, he returned to Snowhill where he was Born: from thence to Brankſtrey in Eſſex, then to Coxall, where he taught Children a ſpace, and ſo came to Lambeth beſide London, where he hired a Houſe, and placed his Wife, where he and his Wife did ever ſince dwell together till this time: howbeit for the moſt part he was always abroad; and ſeldom at home, except once or twice in a Month, to viſit and ſee his Wife; where he being at home upon Eaſter day aboubt 10. or 11. a Clock in the Forenoon of the ſame day, came over the Water from Lambeth into S. Margarets Church at Weſtminſter, where he finding and ſeeing a Prieſt called John Cheltam Miniſtring and giving the Sacrament of the Altar to the People, and therewith being greatly offended in his Conſcience with the Prieſt for the ſame his doing (for that he judged him not to be a Catholick Miniſter, neither his Act to be Catholick and laudable according to Gods Word) did ſtrike and wound him upon the Head, and alſo upon the Arm and Hand with his Woodknife, the Prieſt having the ſame time in his Hand a Chalice, with certain Conſecrated Hoſts therein, which were ſprinkled with the Blood of the ſaid Prieſt.

W. Flower repenteth his Act in ſtriking. W. Flower conſtant in his Faith.

Whereupon the foreſaid W. Flower, being firſt apprehended and laid in the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter (where he had given two Groats the ſame day a little before to the Priſoners, ſaying, he would ſhortly after come to them) with as many Irons as he could bear: afterward was convented before Boner his Ordinary, April 19. Anno 1555. where the Biſhop after he had ſworn him upon a Book (according to his ordinary manner) miniſtred Articles and Interrogatories to him. But before I ſpeak of the Articles, firſt we have here to ſet forth what Communication paſſed betwixt him and Robert Smith being then alſo there Priſoner with him in Newgate, concerning his Fact done at Weſtminſter, the tenor and effect of which Communication here followeth.

W. Flower laid in the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter.

W. Flower brought before Biſhop Boner.

A Communication or debating between Robert Smith Priſoner in Newgate, and W. Flower, concerning his ſtriking of the Prieſt at Weſtminſter.

Robert Smith.

The talk between Robert Smith and W. Flower.

FRiend, for as much as I do underſtand that you do profeſs the Goſpel, and alſo have ſo done along ſeaſon, I am bold to come unto you, and in the way of Communication to demand and learn a truth at your own Mouth, of certain things by you committed, to the aſtoniſhing not only of me, but of divers other, that alſo profeſs the verity.

Flower. I praiſe God for his great goodneſs, in ſhewing me the light of his holy word; and I give you hearty thanks for your viſitation, intending by Gods Grace to declare all the Truth that ye ſhall demand lawful of me, in all things.

Smith. Then I deſire you to ſhew me the Truth of your deed, committed on John Cheltam Prieſt in the Church, as neer as you can, that I may hear from your own Mouth how it was. Anno 1555.

Flo. I came from my Houſe at Lambeth over the Water, and entring into S. Margarets Church (ſo called) and there ſeeing the People falling down before a moſt ſhameful and deteſtable Idol, being moved with extream zeal for my God, whom I ſaw before my Face diſhonored, I drew forth my Hanger, and ſtrake the Prieſt which Miniſtred the ſame unto them: whereupon I was immediately apprehended, and this is moſt true, as the Act is manifeſt.

The zeal of W. Flower in ſeeing the Lords Honour defaced.

Smi. Did ye not know the perſon that ye ſtrake, or were ye not zealous upon him for any evil will or hatred between you at any time.

Flo. No verily, I never to my knowledge ſaw the Perſon before that preſent, neither ought him or any man alive evil will, or malice; for if he had not had it, another ſhould, if I had any time come where the like occaſion had been miniſtred, if God had permitted me to do it.

Smith. Do ye think that thing to be well done, and after the Rule of the Goſpel?

Extraordinary zeals are no general rules to be followed.

Flo. I do confeſs all Fleſh to be ſubject to the Power of Almighty God, whom he maketh his Miniſters to do his will and pleaſure; as in example, Moſes, Aaron, Phinees, Joſhua, Zimry, Jehu, Judith, Mattathiah, with many others, not only changing degrees, but alſo planting zeals to his honour, againſt all order and reſpect of Fleſh and Blood. For, as ſaith S. Paul, His Works are paſt finding out: by whoſe Spirit I have alſo given my Fleſh at this preſent unto ſuch order, as it ſhall pleaſe the good will of God to appoint, in death, which before the Act committed I looked for.

Smith. Think you it convenient for me, or any other, to do the like by your example?

W. Flower intending at Pauls to have done the like.

Flo. No verily, neither do I know if it were to do again, whether I could do it again, or no: for I was up very early at Pauls Church (ſo called) upon Chriſts day in the morning, to have done it in my jealouſie: but when I came in place I was no more able to do it, than now to undo that is done; and yet now being compelled by the ſpirit, not only to come over the Water, and to enter the Church, but being in mind fully content to dye for the Lord, gave over my Fleſh willingly without all fear, I praiſe God. Wherefore I cannot learn you to do the like. Firſt, becauſe I know not what is in you. Secondly, becauſe the rules of the Goſpel commandeth us to ſuffer with patience all wrongs and injury; yet nevertheleſs, if he make you worthy, that hath made me zealous, ye ſhall not be letted, judged, nor condemned: for he doth in his People his unſpeakable works in all Ages, which no man can comprehend. I humbly beſeech you to judge the beſt of the Spirit, and condemn not Gods doings: for I cannot expreſs with my Mouth the great Mercies that God hath ſhewed on me in this thing, which I repent not.

Smith. Are ye not aſſured to have death miniſtred unto you for the ſame Act committed, and even with extremity?

W. Flower prepared himſelf to death before the fact committed.

Flo. I did before the deed committed, adjudg my Body to dye for the ſame: whereupon I carried about me in writing, mine Opinion of God and the Holy Scriptures; that if it had pleaſed God to have given them leave to have killed my Body in the Church, they might in the ſaid writing have ſeen my hope, which (I praiſe God) is laid up ſafe within my breaſt, notwithſtanding any death that may be miniſtred upon my Body in this World; being aſcertained of everlaſting Life through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and being moſt heartily ſorry for all mine offences committed in this Fleſh, and truſting ſhortly through his mercy, to ceaſe from the ſame.

Smith. It is no need to examine or commune with you of the hope that ye have any further: for I perceive (God be praiſed) ye are in good Eſtate, and therefore I beſeech God for his mercies ſpread his Wings over you, that as for his love you have been zealous, even to the loſs of this Life, ſo he may give you his Holy Spirit to conduct you out of this Death into a better Life, which I think will be ſhortly.

Flo. I hunger for the ſame (dear friend) being full aſcertained aſcertained that they can kill but the Body, which I am aſſured ſhall receive life again everlaſting, and ſee no more death; entirely deſiring you and all that fear the Lord, to pray with me to Almighty God, to perform the ſame in me ſhortly. And thus Robert Smith departed, leaving him in the Dungeon, and went again to his Ward. And this (gentle Reader) is the Truth, as near as the ſaid Smith could report it.

And thus much concerning the talk between him and Robert Smith in Newgate, concerning his Fact in ſtriking the Prieſt. Now to return again to the matter of his Examination, where we left: We ſhewed before how this William Flower, after his ſtriking the Prieſt, firſt was laid in the Gatehouſe; then, being Examined before Boner, had Articles miniſtred againſt him the Copy whereof here followeth, Articles objected and miniſtred by Boner, againſt William Branch, alias Flower, late of Lambeth in the County of Surry.

Articles objected againſt W. Flower by B. Boner.

FIrſt, that thou being of a lawful Age and diſcretion at the leaſt of ſeventeen years Old waſt profeſſed a Monk in the late Abbey of Ely, wherein after thy profeſſion thou remainedſt until the Age of 21. years, uſing all the mean time the Habit and Religion of the ſame Houſe, and waſt reputed and taken notoriouſly for ſuch a perſon.

In the latter days certain ſhall depart from the Faith forbidding marriage and eating of meats. 1 Tim. 4.

Item, that after the premiſſes, thou waſt ordered and made Prieſt, according to the laudable cuſtom of the Catholick Church, and afterward thou diſt execute and miniſter as a Prieſt, and waſt commonly reputed, named, and taken for a Prieſt.

Item, that after the premiſſes thou forgettlng God, thy Conſcience, honeſty, and the laudable order of the Catholick Church, didſt contrary to thy Profeſſion and Vow, take, as unto thy Wife, one Woman, commonly called Alice Pulton, in the Pariſh Church of Tewkſbury in the Dioceſs of Gloceſter, with whom thou haddeſt mutual cohabitation, and carnal copulation, as Man and Wife, and begateſt of her two Children.

A great Hereſie.

Item, that thou being a Religious Man and a Prieſt, didſt contrary to the order of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, take upon thee to practiſe in divers places within the Dioceſs of London, Phyſick, and Chirurgery, when thou waſt not admitted, expert, nor learned.

Item, that upon Eaſter day laſt paſt, that is to wit, the fourteenth day of this preſent Month of April, within the Pariſh Church of S. Margarets at Weſtminſter, within the County of Middleſex and Dioceſs of London, thou didſt malicioufly, outragiouſly, and violently pull out thy Weapon, that is to wit, thy Woodknife or Hanger. And whereas the Prieſt and Miniſter there, called Sir John Chelton, was executing his Cure and Charge, eſpecially in doing his ſervice, and miniſtring the Sacrament of the Altar to Communicants, then didſt thou wickedly and abominably ſmite with hy ſaid Weapon the ſaid Prieſt, firſt upon the head very ſore, and afterwards upon his hands or other parts of his Body, drawing Blood abundantly upon him; the ſaid Prieſt then holding the ſaid Sacrament in his hand, and giving no occaſion why thou ſhouldeſt ſo hurt him; the people being grievouſly offended therewith, and the ſaid Church polluted thereby, ſo that the Inhabitants were compelled to repair to another Church to Communicate, and to receive the ſaid Sacrament.

Item, that by reaſon of the premiſſes, thou waſt and art by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of the Church, amongſt other penalties, Excommunicate and accurſed, ipſo facto, and not to be companied withal, neither in the Church, nor otherwhere, but in ſpecial Caſes.

Item, that thou, concerning the verity of Chriſts Natural Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, haſt been by the ſpace of theſe years, 20. 19. 18. 17. 16. 15. 14. 13. 12. 11. 10. 9. 8. 7. 6. 5. 4. 3. 2. and 1. or any one of them, and yet art at this preſent of this opinion; that is to ſay, that in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained (under the forms of Bread) the very true and Natural Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

His Faith in the Sacrament.

Item, that thou for the hatred and diſdain that thou haddſt and didſt bear againſt the ſaid Sacrament, and the vertue thereof, and againſt the ſaid Prieſt miniſtring the ſame (as before) didſt ſmite, wound, and hurt him in manner and form as before is declared.

Item, that thou, over and beſides the pains due unto thee for the doing of the cruel fact, art alſo by the order of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of the Church, and the laudable Cuſtom and Ordinance of the ſame, to be reputed, taken, and adjudged (as thou art indeed) a very Heretick, and to be puniſhed by and with the pains due for Hereſie, by reaſon of the ſaid Hereſie & Damnable Opinion.

Item, that all the premiſſes be true, manifeſt, and notorious and famous, and that upon the ſame, and every part thereof, there was and is within the ſaid Pariſh of S. Margarets and other places thereabout, a publick voice and fame.

The Anſwer of William Flower made to the Articles aforeſaid.

Flower anſwereth to the Articles.

TO the firſt Article he anſwereth and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof, except that he ſaith and confeſſeth that he never conſented and agreed in his heart to be a Monk.

Flower made Monk againſt his will.

To the ſecond Article he anſwereth and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof. Howbeit he ſaith, that he never did, nor yet doth eſteem the ſaid order of Prieſthood, according to the ſaid order of the Catholick Church, becauſe he was offended therewith in his Conſcience.

Flower confeſſeth his Matrimony to be honeſt and lawful. W. Flower more devout to God being in the ſtate of Matrimony, than before

To the third Article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he intending to live in godly Matrimony, and not forgetting God, did marry with the ſaid Alice Pulton named in this Article, wherein he believed that he did well, and according to Gods Laws. Further, confeſſing and believing, that all the time when he was profeſſed Monk, and made Prieſt; he did thereby utterly forget God: but when he did ſo marry the ſaid Alice Pulton, and in continuing with her did beget three Children, he did remember God, as he ſaith, and believeth that he did then lawfully.

To the fourth Article he anſwereth, and believeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

The order of Flowers ſtriking the Prieſt at the Altar. Note that the ſaid W. Flower afterward in his next appearance corrected and reformed this Anſwer.

To the fifth Article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that his Conſcience being greatly offended with the ſaid Sir John Chelton Prieſt, for miniſtring of the Sacrament of the Altar to the people at the place and time ſpecified in this Article, he did ſo ſmite and ſtrike the ſame Prieſt with his Hanger or Woodknife, as well upon his head, as upon other parts and places of his Body, which he remembreth not, whereby the Blood ran out, and was ſhed in the ſaid Church, as he believeth, having, as he ſaith, none other cauſe or matter ſo to do, but only that his Conſcience was offended and grieved, in that the ſame Prieſt did ſo give and miniſter the ſaid Sacrament to the People: which People he believeth was greatly abaſhed and offended with his ſaid fact and doing, and were enforced and compelled to go out of the Church, and to repair to another to receive the ſaid Sacrament. And further, being then demanded and Examined, whether he did then mind and intended to have killed the ſaid Prieſt, or not: he ſaid he would not anſwer thereunto. And being further examined, whether he did well or evil in ſtriking the ſaid Prieſt; he would make no anſwer thereunto, as he ſaid.

Flower will not anſwer whether he intended to kill the Prieſt.

To the ſixth he anſwereth and ſaith, that whether he be ſo Excommunicate or accurſed, as is contained in this Article, he referreth himſelf herein to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws.

To the ſeventh he anſwereth and ſaith, that by the ſpace of ſix and twenty years now paſt, he hath always been, and yet is of this opinion touching the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, as followeth; videlicet, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained under the form of Bread, the very true and Natural Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

To the eighth he anſwereth, and believeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the ninth he anſwereth, and herein he referreth himſelf to the ſaid Laws, Cuſtom, and Ordinance ſpecified in this Article, that is to ſay, the Canonical Laws.

To

To the laſt he anſwereth and believeth, that thoſe things before by him confeſſed be true, and thoſe which he hath denied, be untrue; and that the ſaid common Voice and Fame hath and doth only labour and go upon thoſe things by him before confeſſed.

By me W. Flower, alias Branch.

W. Flower exhorted to recant.

After this Examination done, the Biſhop began after the beſt ſort of his fine Divinity to inſtruct him, and to exhort him to return again to the Unity of his Mother the Catholick Church, with ſuch reaſons as he is commonly wont to uſe to others, promiſing many fair things if he would do ſo, beſides the remitting of that was paſt.

To this William Flower anſwering again, thanked him for his offer: And where it was in his power to kill or not to kill his Body, he ſtood therewith contented, let him do therein what he thought; yet over his Soul he had no ſuch power, which being once ſeparated from the Body, is in the hands of no man, but only of God either to ſave or ſpill. As concerning his opinion of the Sacrament, he ſaid he would never go from that he had ſpoken, do he with him what he would.

W. Flower refuſeth to revoke his Faith and Doctrine.

Then the Biſhop aſſigned him again to appear in the ſame place at afternoon, betwxt 3. and 4. In the mean time to adviſe himſelf of his former Anſwers, where he would ſtand to the ſame his opinions or no: which if he ſo did, he would further proceed againſt him, &c.

Another appearance of W. Flower before B. Boner.

At Afternoon the ſaid William Flower, appeared again before the ſaid Biſhop the hour and place appointed. To whom the Biſhop ſitting in his Conſiſtory, ſpake theſe words: Branch, ye were this forenoon here before me, and made Anſwer to certain Articles; and thereupon I reſpited you till now, to the intent you ſhould conſider and weigh with your ſelf your ſtate, and to remember while you have time, both your abominable Act, and alſo that evil opinion which ye have conceived touching the verity of Chriſts true Natural Body in the Sacrament of the Altar.

W. Flower ſtandeth to his Doctrine.

To whom the ſaid Branch anſwered again, and ſaid as followeth: That which I have ſaid, I will ſtand to; and therefore I require that the Law may proceed againſt me. Whereupon the Biſhop commanded his Notary (Harward by name) to read to him again his Articles, as before. Which being read, the ſaid William Flower perſiſting in his Godly Sentence, anſwered to all parts of the Articles, as in the forenoon before, ſave only that he requeſted the Biſhop concerning the fifth Article, he might alter ſomething his Anſwer therein, after this tenor and manner of words, to wit, and moreover confeſſeth and ſaith, that whereas he ſtrake the Prieſt on Eaſter day laſt paſt, in S. Margarets Church in Weſtminſter, he hath ſince that time, and yet doth miſlike himſelf in that doing, and doth now judge and believe that the ſame his Act was evil and naught. Howbeit he ſaith and believeth that for the matter and cauſe wherefore he ſo ſtrook the ſaid Prieſt (which was for miniſtring of the Sacrament of the Alter, which he taketh and judgeth abominable) he neither did nor doth miſlike himſelf at all therein.

Flower miſliked his own act in ſtriking the Prieſt.

Flower reformeth his Anſwer to the ninth Article.

Moreover, he deſireth of the ſaid Biſhop Licence to be granted him, to alter and take out ſomewhat of the ninth Article, and in place thereof, theſe words to be placed; to wit, Herein he referreth himſelf to the Laws, Cuſtom and Ordinance ſpecified in this Article, &c. At which requeſt, Boner granted to the altering of both the Articles according as he deſired, and ſo put in the Acts.

After this, the Biſhop turning again to his old manner of exhorting, went about with words (and words only) to perſwade him to ſubmit himſelf to the Catholick Church, and to the Faith thereof. All which his perſwaſions notwithſtanding, William ſtill remained in the conſtancy of his Sentence, ſaying, that he would not be removed from that he had ſpoken, to dye therefore. Whereupon the Biſhop aſſigned him the next day (being the twentieth day of April) to appear in the ſame day and place, between the hours of 8. and 9. before noon, there and then to hear the Sentence pronounced, in caſe he would not relent, &c.

Anno 1555.

The laſt appearance of William Flower before Biſhop Boner.

The laſt appearance of W. Flower before B. Boner.

IN the which day, hour, and place, the ſaid William Flower as he was appointed, was brought by the Keeper, belonging to the Warden of the Fleet, before Boner, who after his wonted manner of perſwaſion going about to reduce him to his Catholick Church and the Unity thereof, that is, from Chriſt to Antichriſt; ſometime with fair promiſes alluring, ſometime with menaces, and terrors, fearing him, &c. To this William anſwering, ſaid on this wiſe; Do what ye will, I am at a point: for the Heavens ſhall as ſoon fall, as I will forſake mine opinion &c. Whereupon the Biſhop after he had commanded theſe words to be regiſtred, called for the depoſitions of certain witneſſes, producted for the better information of this matter, the names of which witneſſes were theſe: William Jennings, John Bray, Robert Graunt, Richard Dod, William Pampion, Robert Smalwood, the Pariſh Prieſt of S. Margarets at Weſtminſter. The ſum and effect of whoſe depoſitions here enſueth.

W. Flowers conſtancy.

Witneſs producd againſt W. Flower.

The Depoſitions or Atteſtations producted upon the Anſwers of William Flower.

ROBERT Graunt of Weſtminſter, Examined upon the ſaid Anſwers of William Flower, ſaith and depoſeth; that he did hear and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid Anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his own hand, and alſo was preſent in the Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, when the ſaid William Flower did ſmite and wound the Prieſt, when (as he ſaith) he was Miniſtring the Sacrament; and how this examinate among other preaſed towards him to take him, and was hurt thereby upon his Chin, and after he was taken, this examinate holp to conduct him to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter.

RICHARD Dod of Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid Anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth; that he did hear and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid Anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his own hands; and alſo did ſee and was preſent, when the ſaid Flower upon Eaſter day laſt paſt drew his Wood-knife, and ſtrake the Prieſt upon the head, hand, and arm: who being wounded therewith, and having a Chalice with conſecrated Hoſts there in his hand, ſprinkled with the ſaid Prieſts Blood, was holpen and reſcued by this examinate, and the ſaid Flower carried to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter, and his Wood-knife taken away by this examinate.

WILLIAM Pampion, one of the Churchwardens of the ſaid Pariſh Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid Anſwers of the ſaid Flower, ſaith and depoſeth, that the ſame Anſwers be true, and in his ſight were ſubſcribed with the hand of the ſaid Flower. And that upon Eaſter day laſt paſt, about eleven of the Clock in the forenoon, in the Pariſh Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, among a great number of the People ready to be houſeled, the Prieſts back being turned toward the ſaid Flower, he the ſaid Flower ſuddenly drew forth his Wood-knife, and Strake Sir John Cheltham the Prieſt both upon his head, hand, and arm, whereby he was wounded, and bled abundantly, and the Chalice with conſecrated Hoſts being in his hand, were ſprinkled with his Blood, and the People in great fear cried out lamentably, as though they ſhould preſently have been killed.

ROBERT Smalwood of Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid Anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth that he did hear and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid Anſwers, and ſubſcribe the ſame with his own hand; and touching the ſtriking and wounding the Prieſt in S. Margarets Church in Weſtminſter upon Eaſter day laſt, this examinate ſaith, he was not there when the fact was done, but immediately after, he came to Church, and found Sir John hurt, and wounded in the head head, hand, and arm, by the ſaid Flower, and the People in great heavineſs by reaſon thereof. Alſo the People did report (as this examinate ſaith) That Flower did the deed, as the Prieſt had the Chalice in his hand, miniſtring the Sacrament to the People.

William Jenings of Weſtminſter, being examined upon the Anſwers of the ſaid William Flower, ſaith and depoſeth by vertue of his Oath, that he did hear and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid Anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his own hand in the Conſiſtory place: and further depoſeth, that he (upon Eaſter day laſt paſt) was preſent in the Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, where Flower ſtrake the ſaid Sir John Cheltam Prieſt, firſt upon the head, and afterward upon his arm two ſore ſtrokes, whereby the ſaid Prieſt is like to loſe his hand. Alſo this Jurate depoſed, that the ſaid Sir John Cheltam had a Chalice with certain Conſecrated hoſts therein) in his hand) which were ſprinkled with the Blood of the ſaid Prieſt, and after the ſaid Flower was apprehended by this examinate and others, they carried him immediately to the Gatehouſe in Weſtminſter.

John Bray one of the Churchwardens of the Pariſh Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, ſworn and examined upon the ſaid Anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth, that he did hear and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid Anſwers, and alſo ſubſcribe unto the ſame. And further depoſeth of Flowers ſtriking the Prieſt, in effect, as the reſt of the examinates do, and that this ſaid Jurate was preſent there at the deed doing.

After the depoſitions of theſe foreſaid witneſſes being taken, publiſhed, and denounced, the ſaid Biſhop ſpeaking to William Flower, asked him if he knew any matter or cauſe why his Sentence ſhould not be read, and he to be pronounced as an Heretick. Whereunto the Martyr of God anſwered again as followeth; I have nothing at all to ſay, for I have already ſaid unto you all that I have to ſay; and that I have ſaid I will not go from: and therefore do what you will, &c.

Sentence of Condemnation and degradation pronounced againſt William Flower.

Which when he had ſpoken, the Biſhop proceeded to the Sentence, Condemning and Excommunicating him for an Heretick, and after pronounced him alſo to be degraded, and ſo committed him to the Secular Power. Upon the 24. day of the foreſaid Month of April, which was S. Marks Even, he was brought to the place of Martyrdom, which was in S. Margarets Churchyard at Weſtminſter, where the fact was committed: and there coming to the Stake where he ſhould be burned, firſt he maketh his Prayer to Almighty God, with a Confeſſion of his Chriſtian Faith, in manner as followeth.

A Prayer and Confeſſion of William Flower.

Flowers Prayer.

O Eternal God, moſt mighty and Merciful Father, who haſt ſent down thy Son upon the Earth, to ſave me and all Mankind, who aſcended up into Heaven again, and left his Blood upon the Earth behind him, for the redemption of our Sins, have mercy upon me, have mercy upon me, for thy dear Son our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts ſake in whom I confeſs only to be all Salvation and Juſtification, and that there is none other mean, nor way, nor holineſs, in which or by which any man can be ſaved in this World. This is my Faith, which I beſeech all men here to bear witneſs of.

Then he ſaid the Lords Prayer, and ſo made an end.

Talk between W. Flower and M. Cholmeley.

Then M. Cholmeley came to him, willing him to recant his Hereſie, whereby he might do good to the People, or elſe he would be damned.

Flower anſwered as followeth: Sir, I beſeech you for Gods ſake to be contented: for that I have ſaid, I have ſaid, and I have been of this Faith from the beginning; and I truſt to the living God he will give me his holy Spirit to continue to the end. Then he deſired all the World to forgive him whom he had offended, as he forgave all the World.

This done, firſt his hand being held up againſt the Stake, was ſtriken off, his left hand being ſtayed behind him. At the which ſtriking off his hand, certain that were preſent beholders of the matter, and purpoſely obſerving the ſame, credibly informed us, that he in no part of his Body did once ſhrink at the ſtriking thereof, but once a little he ſtirred his ſhoulders.

And thus fire was ſet unto him, who burning therein, cried with a loud Voice; O the Son of God have mercy upon me, O the Son of God receive my Soul, three times, and ſo his Speech being taken from him, he ſpake no more, lifting up notwithſtanding his ſtump with his other arm as long as he could.

And thus indured this conſtant witneſs and Faithful Servant of God the extremity of the fire, being therein cruelly handled, by reaſon that to his burning little wood was brought, ſo that for lack of fagots there not ſufficient to burn him, they were fain to ſtrike him down into the fire. Where he lying a long (which was doleful to behold) upon the ground, his neither part was conſumed in the fire, whilſt his upper part was clean without the fire, his Tongue in all mens ſight ſtill moving in his Mouth.

May 1555.

The third of May a Letter was ſent to George Colt and Thomas Daniel, to make ſearch for, and apprehend John Bernard and John Walſh, who uſed to repair to Sudbury, and carrying about with them the Bones of Pigot that was burned; do ſhew them to the People, perſwading them to be conſtant in his Religion, and upon Examination to commit them to further ordering, according to the Laws.

This day Stephen Appes was committed to the Little Eaſe in the Tower, there to remain two or three days, untill further Examination.

The 12. day M. Thomas Roſs Preacher, was by the Councels Letters delivered from the Tower to the Sheriff of Norfolk, be to conveighed and delivered to the Biſhop of Norwich, and he either to reduce him to recant, or elſe proceed againſt him according to the Law.

The 16. a Letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, ſignifying what the L. L. had done for Roſs, and that order ſhould be given, according to his Lordſhips requeſt, for Letters to the Biſhops: and for Appes, whom the Lieutetenant of the Tower reporteth to be mad, his Lordſhip perceiving the ſame to be true, ſhould commit him to Bethlem, there to remain untill their further order.

The 26. a Letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to confer with the Biſhop of London, and the Juſtices of the Peace of that County, wherein they are to be executed, that are already Condemned for Religion, and upon agreement of places, to give order for their Execution accordingly.

The 28. a Letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to cauſe ſpeedy preparation to be made of ſuch money as was appointed for ſuch perſons as ſhould carry the joyful tydings of Queen Maries good delivery of Child, to divers Princes, ſo as they be not compelled to ſtay when time ſhall come. The Embaſſadors were, to the Emperor the Lord Admiral, to the French King the Lord Fitzwater, to the King of Romans Sir Henry Sidney, to the King of Portugal Richard Shelley, whoſe free paſſage through France M. Doctor Wotton was willed to procure by Letters the 24. of June.

The 29. was a Letter directed to Sir Francis Ingleſield to make ſearch for one John D. at London, and to apprehend him, and ſend him to the Councel, and to make ſearch for ſuch Papers and Books as he thinketh may touch the ſame D. or one Benger.

The Burning and Martyrdom of John Cardmaker and John Warne Upholſter which ſuffered both together in Smithfield, Anno. 1555.

May 30. John Cardmaker and John Warne, Martyrs.

Upon the 30. day of May ſuffered together in Smithfield John Cardmaker, otherwiſe called Taylor, Prebendary of the Church of Wels; and John Warne Upholſter, of the Pariſh of S. John in Walbrook. Of whom it remaineth now particularly to entreat, beginning firſt with M. Cardmaker, who firſt was an obſervant Frier before the diſſolution of the Abbeys: then after was a married Miniſter, and in King Edwards time time appointed to be a Reader in Pauls, where the Papiſts were ſo much agrieved with him for his Doctrines ſake, that in his reading they cut and mangled his Gown with their Knives. This Cardmaker being apprehended in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, with M. Barlow Biſhop of Bathe, was brought to London, and laid in Priſon in the Fleet, King Edwards Laws yet being in force. But after the Parliament was ended, in which the Pope was again admitted as ſupream Head of the Church, and the Biſhops had alſo gotten Power and Authority, Ex officio, to exerciſe their Tyranny, theſe two were brought before Wincheſter Chancellor, and others appointed by Commiſſion (as before is mentioned) to examine the Faith of ſuch as were then Priſoners, and as unto others before, ſo now unto them the Chancellor offered the Queens mercy, if they would agree, and be conformable, &c.

M. Cardmaker Reader in Paul's.

Cardmaker with M. Barlow apprehended and laid in the Fleet.

Barlow and Cardmaker acceptable to Wincheſter as Catholicks.

To this they both made ſuch an Anſwer, as the Chancellor with his fellow Commiſſioners allowed them for Catholicks. Whether they of weakneſs ſo anſwered, or he of ſubtilty would ſo underſtand their Anſwer, that he might have ſome forged Example of a ſhrinking Brother to lay in the diſh of the reſt, which were to be examined, it may eaſily be perceived by this, that to all them which followed in Examination, he objected the example of Barlow and Cardmaker, commending their ſoberneſs, diſcretion, and learning. But whatſoever their Anſwer was, yet notwithſtanding Barlow was led again to the Fleet, from whence he afterward being delivered, did by exile conſtantly bear witneſs to the Truth of Chriſts Goſpel. Cardmaker was conveighed to the Counter in Breadſtreet, the Biſhop of London procuring it to be publiſhed, that he ſhould ſhortly be delivered, after that he had ſubſcribed to Tranſubſtantiation and certain other Articles. To the ſame Priſon where Cardmaker was, Laurence Sanders was brought (after the Sentence of Excommunication and Condemnation was pronounced againſt him) where theſe two Priſoners had ſuch Chriſtian Conference, that whatſoever the Breath of the Biſhop bluſtred, and the tickle ears of the People too lightly believed, in the end they both ſhewed themſelves conſtant Confeſſors and worthy Martyrs of Chriſt: as of Lawrence Sanders it is already written. After whoſe departure Cardmaker remained there Priſoner, to be baited of the Papiſts, which would needs ſeem to have a certain hope that Cardmaker was become theirs. Continual and great Conference divers of them had with him, with reaſonings, perſwadings, threatnings, and all to none effect. To the end that their doings might appear, he required them to put their reaſons in writing, and promiſed by writing to anſwer them.

M. Barlow exiled for the Truth.

Conference between Laurence Sanders and John Cardmaker.

Doctor Martin, who bare alſo a part in thoſe pageants, took upon him to be the chief doer by writing, whoſe long unſavoury Letters and ſimple reaſons for Tranſubſtantiation, and ſuch papiſtical traſh, this Cardmaker anſwered largely, learnedly, and ſubſtantially, confuting the ſame, opening the falſhood of his Arguments, and delivering the Sentences of the Fathers (which Martin abuſed for his purpoſe) to their true underſtanding; which his Anſwers I would had come to our hands. Thus conſtantly abode this Man of God all the enemies doings, as he did alſo the death which he ſuffered in Smithfield in London: whereof ye ſhall hear more anon. But firſt we will ſurvey the matter and manner of his Articles objected againſt him by B. Boner, with his Anſwers annext to the ſame, as conſequently hereunder followeth.

Dr. Martin writeth againſt Cardmaker.

Articles objected by Boner againſt John Taylor, alias Cardmaker, with his Anſwers unto the ſame.

May 24. Articles miniſtred againſt John Cardmaker by the Biſhop of London.

FIrſt, I Edmund Biſhop of London, object againſt thee Sir John Taylor, alias Cardmaker, that thou waſt and art of the City and Dioceſs of London, and ſo of the Juriſdiction of me Edmund Biſhop of London.

John Cardmaker miſt an obſervant Frier.

Item, that thou in times paſt didſt profeſs the rule of S. Francis, and didſt by Vow promiſe to keep poverty, chaſtity, and obedience, according to the rule of S. Francis.

Item, that thou in times paſt didſt receive all the orders of the Church then uſed: to wit, tam majores quàm minores.

Anno 1555.

Item, that thou after thy ſaid entry into Religion and profeſſion and orders aforeſaid, didſt take to Wife a Widow, and with her hadſt carnal Copulation, and didſt get of her a Woman Child, breaking thereby thy Vow and Order, and alſo the Ordinance of the Church.

John Cardmaker married.

Item, that thou haſt believed and taught, and ſo doſt believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar under the viſible ſigns there, that is to ſay, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is really and truly the true and very Natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Item, that the Belief of the Catholick Church is, that in having the Body and Blood of Chriſt really and truly contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, is to have (by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God) the Body and Blood of Chriſt there inviſibly and really preſent under the ſaid Sacrament, and not to make thereby a new God, or a new Chriſt, or a new Body of Chriſt.

The belief of the Popes Catholick Church.

Item, that it may ſtand well together, and ſo is the Faith of the Catholick Church; that the Body of Chriſt is viſibly and truly aſcended into Heaven, and there is in the viſible form of his Humanity; and yet the ſame Body in ſubſtance is inviſibly and truly contained in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar.

To ſpeak naturally of the Natural Body of Chriſt, theſe two cannot ſtand together at one time, unleſs we grant Chriſt to have two Bodies.

Item, that Chriſt at his laſt Supper taking Bread into his hands, bleſſing it, breaking it, giving it to his Apoſtles, and ſaying; Take, eat, this is my Body; did inſtitute a Sacrament there, * willing that his Body really and truly ſhould be contained in the ſaid Sacrament, no ſubſtance of Bread and Wine there remaining, but only the accidents thereof.

* That Chriſt never willed, neither can the Scriptures bear it.

Anſwers of Cardmaker to the Articles aforeſaid.

TO the firſt Article he anſwereth, and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

John Cardmaker anſwereth to the Articles.

To the ſecond Article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he, being under Age, did profeſs the ſaid Order and Religion, and afterward by the Authority of King Henry the eighth, he was diſpenſed with for the ſame Religion.

To the third he anſwereth, and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the fourth he anſwereth and confeſſeth, the firſt part thereof to be true: and to the ſecond part of the ſame Article he anſwereth and ſaith, that in marriage he brake no vow, becauſe he was ſet at liberty to marry, both by the Laws of this Realm, and alſo by the Laws and Ordinances of the Church of the ſame.

To the fifth he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he hath believed and taught, as it is contained in this Article, but he doth not now ſo believe nor teach.

To the ſixth he anſwereth, that he doth not believe the ſame to be true in any part thereof.

To the ſeventh he anſwereth, that he doth not believe the ſame to be true in part thereof.

To the eighth he anſwereth and doth believe, videlicet, that it is true; that is to ſay, that Chriſt taking Bread at his laſt Supper into his hands, bleſſing it, breaking it, giving it to his Diſciples, and ſaying; Take, eat, This is my Body, did inſtitute a Sacrament there. And to the other part of his Article, videlicet (willing that his Body really and truly ſhould be contained in the ſaid Sacrament, no ſubſtance of Bread and Wine there remaining, but only the accidents thereof) he anſwereth that he doth not believe the ſame to be true.

The firſt part of this Article is true: the ſecond is falſe.

By me John Cardmaker.

Maſter Cardmaker calling to mind afterwards the ready cavillings of the Papiſts, and thinking himſelf not to have fully and according to his true meaning anſwered the latter part of the laſt eighth Article, did the next day after the foreſaid Anſwers exhibit unto the Biſhop in a ſchedule this hereafter following.

Where in my Anſwer to your Articles I deny the Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, I mean not his Sacramental Preſence, for that I confeſs; but my denial is of his Carnal Preſence in the ſame. But yet further, becauſe this word is oftentimes taken of the holy Fathers, not only for Bread and Wine, but alſo for the whole adminiſtration ſtration and receiving of the ſame, according to Chriſts Inſtitution: ſo I ſay, that Chriſt is preſent ſpiritually too, and in all them which worthily receive the Sacrament; ſo that my denial is ſtill of the Real, Carnal, and Corporal Preſence in the Sacrament, and not of the Sacramental, nor Spiritual Preſence.

Sacramental Preſence in the Sacrament.

Carnal Preſence in the Sacrament denied.

This have I thought good to add to my former Anſwer, becauſe no man ſhould miſunderſtand it.

By me John Cardmaker.

Next to theſe Articles of Mr. Cardmaker, I thought beſt to infer the Articles and Anſwers likewiſe of John Warne his Martyr fellow, in manner as followeth.

Articles miniſtred againſt John Warne Upholſter, of the Pariſh of S. John in Walbrook, with his Anſwers to the ſame.

Articles againſt John Warne Upholſter in Walbrook.

FIrſt, That thou John Warne, being of the age of 29 years, and of the Pariſh of S. John of Walbrook in London, haſt believed, and doſt believe firmly and ſtedfaſtly, that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is not the very true and natural Body of our Saviour Chriſt in Subſtance, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Item, That thou haſt believed, and doſt believe, that after the words of Conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, there is not (as the Church of England doth believe and teach) the Body of Chriſt; but that there doth only remain the Subſtance of material Bread, as it is before the Conſecration, or ſpeaking of the words of Conſecration; and that the ſaid Bread is in no wiſe altered or changed.

Againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs.

Item, That thou haſt ſaid and doſt believe, that if the Catholick Church do believe and teach, that there is in the Maſs, now uſed in England, and in other places of Chriſtendom, a Sacrifice wherein there is a Sacrament containing the Body and Blood of Chriſt really and truly; then that Belief and Faith of the Church is naught, againſt Gods Truth and the Scripture.

Hereſie for laughing at a Spaniel ſhorn on the Head.

Item, That thou haſt ſaid, that where about a twelve month agon, and more, a great rough Water Spaniel of thine was ſhorn on the Head, and had a Crown like a Prieſt made in the ſame, thou didſt laugh at it and like it, though thou didſt it not thy ſelf, nor kneweſt who did it.

Item, That thou neither this Lent laſt paſt, nor at any time ſince the Queens Majeſties Reign, haſt come into the Church, or heard Maſs, or been confeſſed, or received the Sacrament of the Altar; and haſt ſaid, that thou art not ſorry that thou haſt ſo done, but thou art glad, becauſe thou haſt not therewith defiled thy Conſcience, which otherwiſe thou ſhouldſt have done.

Upon all which Articles John Warne being examined by the ſaid Boner, in preſence of divers Witneſſes, the 23. of May, the year 1555. did confeſs and believe the ſame, and ſubſcribe hereunto his Name with his own Hand.

By me John Warne.

Another addition of Articles.

Alſo it was objected againſt the ſaid John Warne, by the Biſhop aforeſaid, as followeth.

John Warne about the time of Anne Askew was condemned to be burned, and had his Pardon.

Item, That thou John Warne waſt in time paſt here in the City of London, convented in the Guildhall for Hereſie againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the Laws of this Realm of England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, and when Alderman Barnes was Sheriff, and the Thurſday after that Anne Askew was burnt in Smithfield, and thereupon thou waſt ſent a Priſoner to Newgate, to whom Edmund Biſhop of London did repair with his Chaplains, to inſtruct thee in the true Faith of Chriſt, touching the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, and to bring thee from thy Error, which was, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the Body of Chriſt, nor any Corporal Preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood, under the forms of Bread and Wine; but that in the ſaid Sacrament there is only material Bread and Wine, without any Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood at all: and becauſe thou wouldſt not leave and forſake thy ſaid Hereſie therein, but perſiſt and abide obſtinately and wilfully therein, thou wert according to the ſaid Laws condemned to death and to be burnt; and thereupon labour being made for thee to the King and other in the Court, thou hadſt a Pardon of King Henry the Eighth, and ſo thereby didſt ſave thy life.

John Warne pardoned by K. Henry 8.

Nevertheleſs, in thy Heart, Conſcience, and Mind, thou didſt both then, and alſo afore believe no otherwiſe than at this preſent thou doſt believe; that is to ſay, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is neither the very true Body or Blood of Chriſt, nor no other Subſtance but the Subſtance of material Bread and Wine. and to receive the ſaid material Bread and Wine, and to break it, and to diſtribute it among the People, only is the true receiving of Chriſts Body, and no otherwiſe: ſo that thy Faith and belief is, that in the ſaid Sacrament there is no Subſtance of Chriſts material Body and Blood: but all the thing that is there, is material Bread, and the receiving thereof as afore; and that the Subſtance of the natural and true Body of Chriſt, born of the Virgin Mary, is only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament of the Altar. In which thine Opinion thou haſt ever hitherto ſince continued, and ſo doſt continue at this preſent, thou confeſſing all this to be true, and in witneſs thereof ſubſcribing thy Name thereunto, as followeth.

John Warne denieth Tranſubſtantiation.

By me John Warne.

John Warne being examined upon the foreſaid Articles by the Biſhop before certain Witneſſes, whoſe names were John Roſwell, John Heywood, Robert Ravens, the 23. of May, did anſwer to the ſame, confeſſing and granting the Articles and the Contents thereof to be true, according as they were objected in every part, ſubſcribing alſo the ſame with his Hand. Such ſtrength and fortitude Gods holy Spirit wrought in him, to ſtand ſtoutly and confidently to the defence of the ſincere Doctrine of his Son.

The plain Anſwer of John Warne to the Articles.

Whereupon the Biſhop exhorting him with many words to leave his Hereſies (as he called them) and to return to the boſom of his Mother the holy Church, commanded him to appear again the next day, being the 24. of the ſame Month.

Who ſo doing (and anſwering as he did before) was willed to come thither again at Afternoon, and ſo he did: where and at what time he was earneſtly exhorted by the ſaid Biſhop to recant his Opinions. To whom he anſwered, that he would not depart from his received Profeſſion, unleſs he were thereunto throughly perſwaded by the holy Scriptures.

The ſecond Seſſion againſt John Warne.

Upon which Anſwer he was willed to come again the next day, being the 25. day of the ſame Month, at one of the Clock in the Afternoon. At which day and hour the Biſhop examined him again upon all his former Articles before objected, to the which he moſt conſtantly did ſtick, with this further Anſwer thereunto added: I am perſwaded (quoth he) that I am in the right Opinion, and I ſee no cauſe to repent; for all Filthineſs and Idolatry is in the Church of Rome.

The third Seſſion. May 25.

John Warne conſtant againſt the Biſhops perſwaſions.

The Biſhop then ſeeing that notwithſtanding all his fair Promiſes, and terrible Threatnings (whereof he uſed ſtore) he could not any thing prevail; finiſhed this Examination with the definitive Sentence of Condemnation pronounced againſt the ſaid John Warne, and ſo charged the Sheriffs of London with him, under whoſe Cuſtody he remained in the Priſon of Newgate, until the 30. day of the ſame Month of May.

Sentence given againſt John Warne.

Upon the which 30. of May, being the day appointed for their Execution, John Cardmaker, with the ſaid John Warne, were brought by the Sheriffs to the place where they ſhould ſuffer. Who being come to the Stake, firſt the Sheriffs called Cardmaker aſide, and talked with him ſecretly, ſo long, that in the mean time Warne had made his Prayers, was chained to the Stake, and had Wood and Reed ſet about him, ſo that nothing wanted but the ſtring; but ſtill abode Cardmaker talking with the Sheriffs.

May 30. Cardmaker and John Warne brought to Execution.

John Warne tied to the Stake.

The People which before had heard that Cardmaker would recant, and beholding this manner of doing, were in a marvellous dump and ſadneſs, thinking indeed that Cardmaker ſhould now recant at the burning of Warne. At length Cardmaker departed from the Sheriffs, and came towards the Stake, and (in his Garments as he was, kneeled down and made a long Prayer in ſilence to himſelf: yet the People confirmed themſelves in their fantaſie of Recanting, ſeeing him in his Garments, praying ſecretly, and no ſemblance of any burning.

John Cardmaker ſtandeth conſtantly to the fire.

His Prayers being ended, he roſe up, put off his Clothes unto his Shirt, went with bold Courage to the Stake, and kiſſed it ſweetly: he took Warne by the hand, and comforted him heartily, and ſo gave himſelf to be alſo bound to the Stake moſt gladly. The People ſeeing this ſo ſuddenly done, contrary to their fearful expectation, as men delivered out of a great doubt, cried out for joy (with ſo great a ſhout as hath not lightly been heard a greater) ſaying, God be praiſed, the Lord ſtrengthen thee Cardmaker, the Lord Jeſus receive thy Spirit. And this continued while the Executioner put fire to them, and ſonſtancy;

The Confeſſion of the Faith of John Warne Citizen of London, which he wrote the day before he was burned, the 30th day of May, Anno 1555.

I believe in God the Father Almighty, and Maker of Heaven and Earth.

The Confeſſion of John Warne.

A Father, becauſe he is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the everlaſting Word, whom before all worlds he hath begotten of himſelf, which Word was made Fleſh, and therein alſo manifeſted to be his Son; in whom he hath adopted us to be his Children, the Inheritors of his Kingdom, and therefore he is our Father; An Almighty God, becauſe he hath of nothing created all things viſible and inviſible, both in Heaven and in Earth, even all Creatures contained therein, and governeth them.

And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord.

The eternal Word, perfect God with his Father, of equal Power in all things, of the ſame Subſtance, of like Glory, by whom all things were made, and have life, and without whom nothing liveth: He was made alſo perfect Man, and ſo being very God, and very Man in one Perſon, is the only Saviour, Redeemer, and Ranſomer of them which were loſt in Adam our Foreſather. He is the only mean of our deliverance, the hope of our health, the ſurety of our ſalvation.

Which was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary.

According to the Fathers moſt merciful promiſe, this eternal Son of God, forſaking the heavenly Glory, humbled himſelf to take Fleſh of a Virgin, according to the Scriptures, uniting the Subſtance of the Godhead to the Subſtance of the Manhood, which he took of the Subſtance of that bleſſed Virgin Mary in one Perſon, to become therein the very Meſſiah, the anointed King and Prieſt, for ever appointed to pacifie the Fathers wrath, which was juſtly gone out againſt us all for our ſin.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and deſcended into Hell.

He was Arraigned before Pontius Pilate the Ruler of Jewry, and ſo unjuſtly accuſed of many Crimes, that the Ruler judged him innocent, and ſought means to deliver him; but contrary to known Juſtice, he did let go Barrabbas which had deſerved death, and delivered Chriſt to be crucified, who deſerved no death: which doth declare unto us manifeſtly, that he ſuffered for our ſins, and was buffeted for our offences, as the Prophets do witneſs, thereby to have it manifeſted to all men, that he is that Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world. Therefore ſuffering for our ſins, he received and did bear our deſerved condemnation, the pains of death, the taſte of abjection, the very terror of Hell, yielding his Spirit to his Father, his Body to be buried in Earth.

The third day he roſe again from death to life.

To make full and perfect the whole work of our Redemption and Juſtification, the ſame crucified Body which was laid in the Grave, was raiſed up again the third day from death, by the Power of his Father, and Glory of his Godhead: he became the firſt fruits of the Reſurrection, and got the victory of death, that all by him might be raiſed up from death. Through whom all true penitent ſinners may now boldly come unto the Father, and have remiſſion of their ſins.

He aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty.

After that in his Death and Reſurrection he had conquered Sin, Death, and the Devil, and had been converſant forty days in the Earth, being ſeen of the Apoſtles, and more than five hundred Brethren at once, in the ſame Body in which he wrought the work of our Salvation,

The triumphant victory over death.

Anno 1555.

Body in which he wrought the work of our Salvation, he aſcended into Heaven with eternal Triumph, for the victory over Death, Sin, Hell, leaving the Paſſage open, by which all true Believers may and ſhall enter into his Kingdom, where he now ſitteth at his Fathers right hand, is to ſay, in Power and Glory equal, in Majeſty coeternal.

From thence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead.

He ſhall appear again in great Glory to receive his Elect unto himſelf, and to put his Enemies under his feet, changing all living men in a moment, and raiſing up all that be dead, that all may be brought to his Judgment. In this ſhall he give each man according to his Deeds. They which have followed him in Regeneration, which have their ſins waſhed away in his Blood, and are cloathed with his Righteouſneſs, ſhall receive the everlaſting Kingdom, and reign with him for ever; and they, which after the race of the corrupt Generation of Adam have followed Fleſh and Blood, ſhall receive everlaſting damnation with the Devil and his Angels.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt.

I do believe that the Holy Ghoſt is God, the third Perſon in Trinity, in Unity of the Godhead equal with the Father and the Son, given through Chriſt to inhabit our Spirits, by which we are made to feel and underſtand the great power, vertue, and loving kindneſs of Chriſt our Lord. For he illuminateth, quickneth, and certifieth our Spirit, that by him we are ſealed up unto the day of Redemption, by whom we are regenerate and made new Creatures, ſo that by him and through him we do receive all the abundant goodneſs promiſed us in Jeſus Chriſt.

The Holy Catholick Church.

The Church. This is an holy number of Adams Poſterity, elected, gathered, waſhed, and purified by the Blood of the Lamb from the beginning of the world, and is diſperſed through the ſame by the tyranny of Gog and Magog; that is to ſay, the Turk and his Tyranny, and Antichriſt, otherwiſe named the Biſhop of Rome, and his Angels, as this day alſo doth teach.

The Communion of Saints.

Which moſt holy Congregation (being as Paul teacheth, builded upon the Foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt being the Head-corner-ſtone) though it be by the tyranny of Satan and his Miniſters perſecuted, ſome by Impriſonment, ſome by Death, and ſome by other Afflictions and painful Torments; yet doth it remain in one perfect Unity, both in Faith and Fellowſhip: which Unity is knit in an unſpeakable knot, as well of them which are departed from this mortal life, as of them which now be living, and hereafter ſhall be in the ſame, and ſo ſhall continue until they all do meet in the Kingdom, where the Head Jeſus Chriſt, with all his holy Members (of which number through Chriſt I aſſuredly believe I am one) ſhall be fully compleat, knit, and united together for evermore.

The forgiveneſs of ſins.

Remiſſion only through Chriſt. I do believe that my ſins, and all their ſins which do rightly believe the holy Scripture, are forgiven only through Jeſus Chriſt, of whom only I do profeſs that I have my whole and full Salvation and Redemption, which S. Paul ſaith, cometh not through our works and deſervings, but freely by Grace; leſt any ſhould boaſt himſelf. Through the Blood of the Croſs all things in Heaven and Earth are reconciled, and ſet at Peace with the Father; without him no heavenly life given, nor ſin forgiven.

The Reſurrection of the Body.

Reſurrection. I do believe, that by the ſame my Saviour Chriſt, I and all men ſhall riſe again from death; for he, as S. Paul ſaith, is riſen again from the dead, and is become the firſt fruits of them which ſleep. For by a man came death, and by a man cometh the Reſurrection from death. This man is Chriſt, through the power of whoſe Reſurrection I believe that we all ſhall riſe again in theſe our Bodies; the Elect clothed with Immortality to live with Chriſt for ever; the Reprobate alſo ſhall riſe Immortal to live with the Devil and his Angels in death everlaſting.

And the Life everlaſting.

Through the ſame Jeſus, and by none other, I am ſure to have life everlaſting. He only is the way and entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven. For ſo God loved the world, that he did give his only Son Jeſus Chriſt, to the end that ſo many as do believe in him might have everlaſting life. The which I am ſure to poſſeſs ſo ſoon as I am diſſolved, and departed out of this Tabernacle, and in the laſt day ſhall both Body and Soul poſſeſs the ſame for ever, to the which God grant all men to come. John 3. Life and Salvation only by Faith in Chriſt.

I believe, that the Sacraments, that is to ſay, of Baptiſm and of the Lords Supper, are Seals of Gods moſt merciful Promiſes towards Mankind. In Baptiſm, as by the outward Creature of water I am waſhed from the filthineſs which hangeth on my fleſh; ſo do I aſſuredly believe, that I am by Chriſts Blood waſhed clean from my ſins, through which I have ſure confidence of my certain Salvation. In the partaking of the Lords Supper, as I receive the Subſtance of Bread and Wine (the Nature of which is to ſtrengthen the Body) ſo do I by Faith receive the redemption wrought in Chriſts Body broken on the Croſs, life by his death, reſurrection by his reſurrection, and in ſum, all that ever Chriſt in his Body ſuffered for my Salvation, to the ſtrengthening of my Faith in the ſame. And I believe, that God hath appointed the eating and drinking of the Creatures of Bread and Wine in his holy Supper according to his Word, to move and to ſtir up my mind to believe theſe Articles above written. Two Sacraments of the New Teſtament.

This is my faith; this do I believe; and I am content by Gods Grace to confirm and ſeal the truth of the ſame with my Blood.

By me John Warne.

A Letter of John Cardmaker to a certain Friend of his.

The Peace of God be with you.

A Letter of Mr. Cardmaker to a certain Friend of his. YOu ſhall right well perceive that I am not gone back, as ſome men do report me, but as ready to give my life, as any of my Brethren that are gone before me, although by a Policy I have a little prolonged it, and that for the beſt, as already it appeareth unto me, and ſhall ſhortly appear unto all. That day that I recant any point of Doctrine, I ſhall ſuffer twenty kinds of death, the Lord being mine aſſiſtance, as I doubt not but he will. Commend me to my Friend, and tell him no leſs. The the Lord ſtrengthen you, me, and all his Elect: My Riches and Poverty is as it was wont to be, and I have learned to rejoyce in Poverty as well as Riches, for that I account now to be be very Riches. Thus fare ye well in Chriſt. Salute all my Brethren in my Name. I have conferred with ſome of my Adverſaries, learned men, and I find that they be but Sophiſts and Shadows.

A note concerning Mr. Cardmaker.

A note concerning the talk between Mr. Cardmaker and Beard a Promoter. MAſter Cardmaker being Condemned, and in Newgate, one Beard a Promoter came to him two or three days before he was burned, and ſaid unto him, Sir, I am ſent unto you by the Councel, to know whether ye will recant or no?

Card. From which Councel are ye come? I think ye are not come, nor yet ſent from the Queens Councel, but rather from the Commiſſioners, unto whom (as I ſuppoſe) ye belong. And whereas ye would know, whether I will recant or no, thus I pray you report of me to thoſe whom ye ſaid ſent you. I know you are a Taylor by your Occupation, and have endeavoured your ſelf to be a cunning Workman, and thereby to get your living: ſo I have been a Preacher theſe twenty years, and ever ſince that God by his great Mercy hath opened mine eyes to ſee his eternal Truth, I have by his Grace endeavoured my ſelf to call upon him, to give me the true underſtanding of his holy Word, and I thank him for his great Mercy; I hope I have diſcharged my Conſcience in the ſetting forth of the ſame, to that little Talent that I have received.

Beard. Yea Sir; but what ſay you to the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar?

Card. I ſay, and mark it well, that Chriſt the night before his bitter Paſſion, ordained the holy and bleſſed Communion, and hath given commandment, that his death ſhould be preached before the receiving thereof, in remembrance of his Body broken, and his precious Blood ſhed for the forgiveneſs of our ſins, to as many as faithfully believe and truſt in him.

The Sentence and Judgment of Mr Cardmaker touching the Sacrament.

And furthermore, to conclude the matter briefly with him, he asked of him, Whether the Sacrament he ſpake of had a beginning or no? Whereunto when he had granted and affirmed the ſame to be, then Mr. Cardmaker again thus inferred thereupon: If the Sacrament (ſaid he) as you confeſs, have a beginning and an ending, then it cannot be God; for God had no beginning nor ending: and ſo willing him well to note the ſame, he departed from him.

The fifth day, Mr. Secretary Bourne, the Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Francis Engleſield, Sir Richard Read, and Doctor Hughes, authorizing them, or two or three of them at the leaſt, to proceed to further Examination of Benger, Cary, D. and Field, upon ſuch Points as they ſhall gather out of their former Confeſſions, touching their lewd and vain practiſes of Calculating or Conjuring, preſently ſent unto them with the ſaid Letters.

The ſeventh day there was another Letter to Sir John Tregonwell, willing him to joyn in Commiſſion with the ſaid Lord North, and others above named, about the Examination of the ſaid Parties and others, for Conjuring and Witchraft.

And the 29. of Auguſt, Cary and D. were ſet at liberty upon Bands for their good Appearing until Chriſtmas after.

The twelfth day a Letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to cauſe Writs to be made to the Sheriff of Suſſex, for the burning and executing of Dirike a Brewer, at Lewes, and other two, the one at Stainings, the other at Chicheſter,

The 23th of June a Letter was ſent to Boner, to examine a Report given to the Councel of four Pariſhes within the Soken of Eſſex, that ſhould ſtill uſe the Engliſh Service, and to puniſh the Offenders, if any ſuch be.

The Story of John Ardeley and John Simſon of the Pariſh of Wigborow the Great, in Eſſex.

The Story of John Simſon and John Ardeley, Martyrs.

With Mr. Cardmaker and John Warne, upon the ſame day, and in the ſame Company, and for the ſame Cauſe was alſo condemned John Ardeley and John Simſon, which was the 25th day of May. But before we come to the Story of them, firſt here is to be noted the Copy of the King and Queens Letter, directed from the Court the ſame day, and ſent by a Poſt early in the morning to the Biſhop, in tenor and form as followeth.

To the right reverend Father in God, our right truſty and welbeloved, the Biſhop of London.

The King and Queens Letter to B. Boner.

Right Reverend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well. And where of late we addreſſed our Letters to the Juſtices of Peace within every of the Counties of this our Realm, whereby amongſt other Inſtructions given them for the good order and quiet government of the Country round about them, they are willed to have a ſpecial regard unto ſuch diſordered perſons as (forgetting their duties towards God and Us) do lean to any erroneous and heretical Opinions, refuſing to ſhew themſelves conformable to the Catholick Religion of Chriſts Church; wherein if they cannot by good admonitions and fair means reform them, they are willed to deliver them to the Ordinary, to be by him charitably travelled withal, and removed (if it may be) from their naughty Opinions, or elſe if they continue obſtinate, to be ordered according to the Laws provided in that behalf: underſtanding now, to our no little marvel, that divers of the ſaid diſordered perſons, being by the Juſtices of Peace for their contempt and obſtinacy, brought to the Ordinaries to be uſed as is aforeſaid, are either refuſed to be received at their hands, or if they be received, are neither ſo travelled with, as Chriſtian Charity requireth, nor yet proceeded withal according to the order of Juſtice, but are ſuffered to continue in their Errors, to the diſhonour of Almighty God, and dangerous example of others; like as we find this matter very ſtrange, ſo we have thought convenient both to ſignifie our knowledge, and therewith alſo to admoniſh you to have in this behalf ſuch regard henceforth to the Office of a good Paſtor and Biſhop, as when any ſuch Offenders ſhall be by the ſaid Officers or Juſtices of Peace brought unto you, you to uſe your good wiſdom and diſcretion in procuring to remove them from their Errours, if it may be, or elſe in proceeding againſt them (if they ſhall continue obſtinate) according to the order of the Laws; ſo as through your good furtherance, both Gods glory may be better advanced, and the Commonwealth more quietly governed. Given under our Signet, at our Honour of Hampton Court, the 24th of May, the firſt and ſecond years of our Reigns.

Anno 1555.

Q. Mary ſtirreth Boner to ſhed innocent blood.

This Letter thus coming from the Court to the Biſhop, made him the more earneſt and haſty to the condemnation, as well of others, as of theſe men, of whom now we have preſently to intreat, of John Simſon I mean, and John Ardeley. Which being both of one Country, and of one Town together, and of one Trade, that is, being both Husbandmen in the Town of Wigborow in Eſſex, and alſo almoſt both of one age, ſave that Simſon was of the age of 34. the other of 30. were brought up both together by the under Sheriff of Eſſex, to Boner Bp. of London, upon the Accuſation (as in that time it was called) of Hereſie.

John Ardeley and John Simſon, both Husbandmen in the Town of Wigborow.

As touching the order and manner of their Examinations before the Biſhop; as the Articles miniſtred againſt them, were much like, ſo their Anſwers again unto the ſame were not much diſcrepant in manner and form; as out of the Biſhops own Regiſters here followeth expreſſed.

Articles objected againſt John Simſon and John Ardeley of the Pariſh of Wigborow the Great in Eſſex, Husbandmen, by Boner Biſhop of London, at Fulham, May 22. Anno 1555.

Articles miniſtred againſt John Simſon and John Ardeley.

1. FIrſt, that thou John Simſon (or John Ardeley) Husbandman, of the age of 34. years or thereabout, waſt and art of the Pariſh of great Wigborow, within the Dioceſs of London, and thou haſt not believed, nor doſt believe, that there is here in Earth one Catholick and Univerſal whole Church, which doth hold and believe all the Faith and Religion of Chriſt, and all the neceſſary Articles and Sacraments of the ſame.

Item, That thou haſt not believed, nor doſt believe, that thou art neceſſarily bounden, under the pain of damnation of thy Soul, to give full faith and credence unto the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church, and to the Religion of the ſame, in all neceſſary Points of the ſaid Faith and Religion, without wavering or doubting in the ſaid Faith or Religion, or in any part thereof.

3. Item, That thou haſt not believed, nor doſt believe that that Faith and Religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spain, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being the Members and Parts of the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church, do believe and teach, is both agreeing with the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church, and the Faith and Religion of Chriſt, and alſo is the very true Faith and Religion which all Chriſtian People ought to believe, obſerve, follow, and keep: but contrariwiſe thou haſt believed, and doſt believe, that that Faith and Religion, which the ſaid Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforeſaid have heretofore believed, and do now believe, is falſe, erroneous, and naught, and in no wiſe ought to be believed, obſerved, kept, and followed of any Chriſtian man.

The Church of Rome, Italy, Spain, and other Forreign Countries in Europe.

4. Item, That albeit it be true, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is in Subſtance the very Body and Blood of Chriſt under the forms of Bread and Wine, and albeit that it be ſo believed, taught, and preached undoubtedly in the ſaid Church of Rome, and all other the Churches aforeſaid, yet thou haſt not ſo believed; nor doſt ſo believe; but contrariwiſe thou haſt and doſt believe firmly and ſtedfaſtly, that there is not in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, under the ſaid forms of Bread and Wine, the very Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood, but that there is only the Subſtance of material and common Bread and and Wine, with the forms thereof; and that the ſaid material and common Bread and Wine, are only the Signs and Tokens of Chriſts Body and Blood, and by Faith to be received, only for a remembrance of Chriſts Paſſion and Death, without any ſuch Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood at all.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

5. Item, That thou haſt believed and taught, and thou haſt openly ſpoken, and to thy power maintained and defended, and ſo doſt believe, think, maintain, and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Chriſts Body and Blood, is only to take material and common Bread, and to break it, and to diſtribute it amongſt the People, remembring thereby the Paſſion and Death of Chriſt only.

The Maſs abominable.

6. Item, That thou haſt likewiſe believed, taught and ſpoken, that the Maſs now uſed in this Realm of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid, is abominable and naught, and full of Idolatry, and is of the Ordinance of the Pope, and not of the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and hath no goodneſs in it, ſaving the Gloria in Excelſis, and the Epiſtle and the Goſpel, and that therefore thou haſt not, nor will not come to be preſent at the Maſs, nor receive the Sacrament of the Altar, or any other Sacrament of the Church, as they are now uſed in this Realm of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid.

7. Item, That thou haſt in times paſt believed preciſely, and obſtinately affirmed and ſaid, and ſo doſt now believe and think, that Auricular Confeſſion is not needful to be made unto the Prieſt, but it is a thing ſuperfluous and vain, and ought only to be made to God, and to none other perſon: and likewiſe thou haſt condemned as ſuperfluous, vain, and unprofitable, all the Ceremonies of the Church and the Service of the ſame, and haſt ſaid, that no Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh tongue, and if it be otherwiſe ſaid, it is unlawful and naught.

The Anſwers of John Simſon, and alſo of John Ardeley, to the foreſaid Articles.

Their Anſwers to the Articles.

TO the firſt, they believe, that here in Earth there is one Catholick and Univerſal holy Church, which doth hold and believe as is contained in the firſt Article, and that this Church is diſperſed and ſcattered abroad throughout the whole world.

To the ſecond, they believe, that they be bound to give Faith and Credence unto it, as is contained in the ſecond Article.

To the third, as concerning the Faith and Religion of the Church of Rome, of Italy, Spain, France, Ireland, Scotland, and other Churches in Europe, they ſay, they have nothing to do with that Faith and Religion: But as concerning the Faith and Religion of England, that if the ſaid Church of England be ruled and governed by the Word of Life, then the Church of England hath the Faith and Religion of the Catholick Church, and not otherwiſe; and do ſay alſo, that if the Church of England were ruled by the Word of Life, it would not go about to condemn them and others of this Hereſie.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

To the fourth they anſwer, that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is very Bread and very Wine, not altered nor changed in Subſtance in any wiſe, and that he that receiveth the ſaid Bread and Wine, doth ſpiritually and by faith only receive the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but not the very Natural Body and Blood of Chriſt in Subſtance under the forms of Bread and Wine.

To the fifth they ſay, they have anſwered, anſwering to the ſaid fourth Article, and yet nevertheleſs they ſay, that they have believed, and do believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood, but only the Subſtance of the Natural Bread and Wine.

The Maſs deteſted.

To the ſixth they ſay, that they believe, that the Maſs is of the Pope, and not of Chriſt; and therefore it is not good, nor having in it any goodneſs, ſaving the Gloria in Excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpel, the Creed, and the Pater noſter; and for this cauſe they ſay they have not, nor will not come and hear Maſs.

To the ſeventh John Ardeley anſwereth and ſaith, that he believeth the Contents of the ſame to be true; but John Simſon doth anſwer, that he is not as yet fully reſolved with himſelf, what anſwer to make thereunto; and further, that as touching the common and daily Service ſaid and uſed in the Church, he ſaith, that he never ſaid, that Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh Tongue, nor yet he never ſaid, that if it be otherwiſe ſaid and uſed than in Engliſh, it is unlawful and naught.

John Ardeley and John Simſon.

Another appearance of Simſon and John Ardeley before the Biſhop.

Thus theſe Articles being to them objected, and their Anſwers made unto the ſame, as before, the Biſhop, according to the old trade of his Conſiſtory Court, reſpited them to the Afternoon, bidding them to make their Appearance the ſaid day and place, between the hours of two and three. At what time the ſaid Biſhop repeating again the ſaid Articles unto them, and beginning with John Ardeley did urge and ſolicitate him, according to his manner of words, to recant.

The words of J. Ardeley to Boner.

To whom John Ardeley again, conſtantly ſtanding to his profeſſed Religion, gave anſwer in words as followeth; My Lord (quoth he) neither you, nor any other of your Religion, is of the Catholick Church; for you be of a falſe Faith: and I doubt not but you ſhall be deceived at length, bear as good a face as ye can. Ye will ſhed the innocent Blood, and you have killed many, and yet go about to kill more, &c.

And added further, ſaying, If every hair of my head were a man, I would ſuffer death in the Opinion and Faith that I am now in. Theſe with many other words he ſpake. Then the Biſhop yet demanded if he would relinquiſh his erroneous Opinions (as he called them) and be reduced again to the Unity of the Church. He anſwered as followeth, No, God foreſhield that I ſhould ſo do, for then I ſhould loſe my Soul.

John Ardeley and John Simſon condemned.

After this, the ſaid Biſhop asking John Ardeley (after his formal manner) if he knew any cauſe why he ſhould not have Sentence condemnatory againſt him; ſo read the Condemnation, as he alſo did againſt John Simſon, ſtanding likewiſe in the ſame cauſe and conſtancy with John Ardeley; which was done the 25th day of May, and ſo were they both committed to the Secular Power, that is, to the hands of the Sheriffs, to be conveighed to the place where they ſhould be executed. But before I come to their Execution, here is not to be paſſed a thing not unworthy the looking upon, which hapned in the cloſing up the Examination of theſe two innocent Martyrs of God, which is this.

A note of the ſudden fear of Boner.

At the time of the Examination of this Simſon and John Ardeley aforeſaid, there was aſſembled ſuch a great multitude of People, that becauſe the Conſiſtory was not able to hold them, they were fain to ſtand in the Church, near about the ſaid Conſiſtory, waiting to ſee the Priſoners when they ſhould depart. It hapned in the mean time, that the Biſhop being ſet in a heat with the ſtout and bold Anſwers of the ſaid two Priſoners (eſpecially of John Simſon) burſt out in his loud and angry voice, and ſaid, Have him away, have him away.

The ridiculous fear of Boner and his Doctors.

Now the People in the Church hearing theſe words, and thinking (becauſe the day was far ſpent) that the Priſoners had their Judgment, they being deſirous to ſee the Priſoners had to Newgate, ſevered themſelves, one running one way, another another way, which cauſed ſuch a noiſe in the Church, that they in the Conſiſtory were all amazed, and marvelled what it ſhould mean: wherefore the Biſhop alſo being ſomewhat afraid of this ſudden ſtir, asked what there was to do. The ſtanders by anſwering ſaid, That there was like to be ſome tumult; for they were together by the ears.

When the Biſhop heard this, by and by his heart was in his heels, and leaving his Seat, he with the reſt of the Court betook them to their legs, haſtning with all ſpeed poſſible to recover the door that went into the Biſhops Houſe: but the reſt being ſomewhat lighter of foot than my Lord, did ſooner recover the door, and thronging haſtily to get in, kept the Biſhop ſtill out, and cried, Save my Lord, ſave my Lord, but meaning yet firſt to ſave themſelves if any danger ſhould come, whereby they gave the ſtanders by good matter to laugh at; reſembling in ſome part a ſpectacle not much unlike to the old ſtagers at Oxford, worſe feared than hurt, when as the Church there was noiſed to be ſet on fire, whereof ye may read before. But of this matter enough.

John Simſon and John Ardeley ſent into Eſſex to be executed. Now John Simſon and John Ardeley being delivered (as is aforeſaid) to the Sheriffs, were ſhortly after ſent down from London to Eſſex, where both they in one day (which was about the Tenth day of June) were put to death, albeit in ſeveral places; for John Simſon ſuffered at Rochford, John Ardeley the ſame day was had to Rayley, where he finiſhed his Martyrdom moſt quietly in the quarrel of Chriſts Goſpel. The martyrdom of Simſon and Ardeley. June 10.

A Note of John Ardeley.

FOr the better conſideration of the rigorous cruelty of theſe Catholick days, this is furthermore not unworthy of all men to be noted and known to all Poſterity, concerning the Examinations of this Ardeley and his Company, how that they being brought before the Commiſſioners, were by them greatly charged of ſtubbornneſs and vain-glory. Unto whom they anſwered in defence of their own ſimplicity, that they were content willingly to yield to the Queen all their Goods and Lands, ſo that they might be ſuffered to live under her, in keeping their Conſcience free from all Idolatry and Papiſtical Religion. Yet this would not be granted, although they had offered all to their heart blood; ſo greedy and ſo thirſty be theſe Perſecutors of Chriſtian blood. The Lord give them Repentance if it be his will, and keep from them the juſt reward of ſuch cruel dealing. Amen.

The ridiculous handling and proceeding of Biſhop Boner and his Mates againſt John Tooly, firſt ſuſpected and condemned after his death, and then digged out of his Grave, and given to the Secular Power, and ſo burned for an Heretick.

The Story of John Tooly. ABout the ſame time of the burning of theſe two aforeſaid, in the beginning of the ſaid Month of June, fell out a ſolemn Proceſs, and much ado was made about the Popes Spiritualty againſt John Tooly in a caſe of Hereſie. The ſtory is this: There was about the time that the Spaniards began firſt to keep a ſtir in England, one John Tooly a Citizen and Poulter in London, who conſpired with certain other of his Society, to rob a Spaniard at S. James's: and although the deed were heinous and wicked of it ſelf, yet was it aggravated and made greater than it was by other, being committed againſt ſuch a perſon, and againſt ſuch a Country, which both the Queen and her whole Court did highly favour. The robbery being known, and brought into Judgment, this Tooly was found guilty, and judged to be hanged, whereas notwithſtanding in this Realm there are many more Theſts committed than Thieves executed.

The foreſaid Tooly being led to the Gallows (which ſtood faſt by Charing Croſs) a little before he died, ſtanding upon the Cart, read a certain Prayer in a printed Book, and two other Prayers written in two ſeveral Papers: who then having the Halter about his Neck, deſired the People there preſent to pray for him, and to bear him witneſs that he died a true Chriſtian man, and that he truſted to be ſaved only by the Merits of Chriſts Paſſion, and ſhedding of his precious Blood, and not by any Maſſes, or Trentals, Images, or Saints, which were (as he ſaid) meer Idolatry and Superſtition, and deviſed by the Biſhop of Rome: and as the ſame Tooly, and two other his Fellows which were there hanged with him, did ſteal and rob for Covetouſneſs, ſo the Biſhop of Rome did ſell his Maſſes and Trentals, with ſuch other Paltry, for Covetouſneſs, and there being in a great anger (as appeared) againſt the Biſhop of Rome, ſpake with a loud voice theſe words following; From the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable Enormities; From falſe Doctrine and Hereſie, and from the Contempt of thy Word and Commandment, Good Lord deliver us. John Tooly died a true Chriſtian man. The Chriſtian Confeſſion of Tooly.

And then adding further to the ſame, he ſpake unto the People; All you that be true Chriſtian men, ſay with me, Amen. And immediately thereupon 300 perſons and more, to the judgment and eſtimation of thoſe that were there preſent, anſwered and ſaid, Amen, three times together at the leaſt. Ex Regiſtro.

After this it hapned, that when Tooly had read the Bill the firſt time, it fell from him, and a certain young man (who was thought to be a Prentice) ſtooped down and took up the Bill, and climbed up by the Cart; and delivered it unto Tooly again, which he again did read to the People. That done, he delivered unto one of the Marſhals Officers the Book aforeſaid, and willed him to deliver it unto one Haukes, ſaying, that it was his Book. Furthermore, he delivered one of the Prayers, written in a Paper, to one Robert Bromeley Sergeant, which deſired to have it of him. Upon the top of which Bill was written a line, containing theſe words, Beware of Antichriſt; and ſubſcribed underneath, Per me Thomam Harold, Priſoner in the Marſhalſea, enemy to Antichriſt. For the Bill aforeſaid, Robert Bromely was brought afterward coram nobis, and was fain to ask Pardon of the Biſhop, and to deteſt all the words of Tooly, and glad ſo to eſcape. Anno 1555.

Thus while Tooly had made his Prayers, as is aboveſaid, to be delivered from the Popes Tyranny, by the ſame Prayer he fell into great tyranny. For ſo ſoon as the brute of this fact came unto the ears of the Prieſts and Mitred Prelates, they were not a little mad thereat, thinking it not tolerable that ſo great a Reproach ſhould be done againſt the holy Father. Calling therefore for a Councel together, as though it had been a matter of great importanee. Tooly's talk at his death was debated among themſelves. A Councel called againſt Tooly.

At laſt (after much Pro and Contra) they all conſented to thoſe mens judgment, which thought it meet that the violating of the Popes Holineſs ſhould be revenged with fire and fagot. And I do eaſily believe that Cardinal Pool was no ſmall doer in this Sentence: for as Wincheſter and Boner did always thirſt after the blood of the living, ſo Poole's lightning was for the moſt part kindled againſt the dead; and he reſerved this Charge only to himſelf, I know not for what purpoſe, except peradventure being loth to be ſo cruel as the other, he thought nevertheleſs by this means to diſcharge his duty towards the Pope. By the ſame Cardinals like lightning and fiery fift the Bones of Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius, which had lien almoſt two years in their Graves, were taken up and burned at Cambridge, as Tooly's Carkaſs was here at London. And beſides this, becauſe he would ſhew ſome token of his diligence in both Univerſities, he cauſed Peter Martyrs Wife, a Woman of worthy memory, to be digged out of the Church-yard, and to be buried on the Dunghil. Of theſe two prodigious acts ye ſhall hear more hereafter. But now to our purpoſe of Tooly, which having ended his Prayer, was hanged and put into his Grave, out of which he was digged again, by the commandment of the Biſhops, and becauſe he was ſo bold to derogate the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, at the time of his death, it pleaſed them to judge and condemn him as an Heretick, upon the commandment of the Councels Letter, as here appeareth. Card. Poole a great doer in burning dead mens Bones. Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius, Peter Martyrs wife, and John Tooly, burned for Hereticks after their death.

A Letter ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, from the Councel.

AFter our very hearty Commendations to your Lordſhip, underſtanding that of late amongſt others that have ſuffered about London for their Offences, one lewd perſon that was condemned for Felony, died very obſtinately, profeſſing at the time of his death ſundry heretical and erroneous Opinions; like as we think it not convenient that ſuch a matter ſhould be overpaſſed without ſome example to the world, ſo we thought good to pray your Lordſhip to cauſe further inquiry to be made thereof, and thereupon to proceed to the making out of ſuch Proceſs as by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws is provided in that behalf. And ſo we bid your Lordſhip heartily well to fare. From Hampton Court, the 28. of April, 1555. The Councels Letter to B. Boner concerning Tooly.

Anon

Anno 1555

Anon after a Citation was ſet up upon Pauls Church door under the Biſhop of Londons great Seal; the tenor whereof here enſueth.

The Writ or Mandate of Boner Biſhop of London, ſet up at Charing Croſs, on Pauls Church door, and at S. Martins in the field, for the citing and further inquiring out of the caſe of John Tooly.

A citation ſet up by Boner. and that in Latin, commanding his kin and kinſfolks to ſay for him what they could before the Sentence given, or elſe to hold their peace for ever.

EDmund by the ſufference of God, Biſhop of London, to all and ſingular Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and others, Clerks and learned Men, being within our Dioceſs of London, and ſpecially onto Richard Clenie, our ſworn Sumnor, greeting, ſalutation, and benediction. Forſomuch as it is come to our hearing by common fame, and the declaration of ſundry credible perſons, that one John Tooly late Citizen and Poulter of London, the Son of perdition and iniquity, coming to the profundity of malice in the ſelf ſame time in the which he ſhould go to hanging, according to the Laws of the Realm, for the great theft lately by him committed, at which time chiefly he ſhould have cared for the wealth of his Soul, and to have died in the Unity of the Catholick Church, did utter divers and ſundry damnable, blaſphemous and heretical opinions and errors, utterly contrary and repugnant to the Verity of the Catholick Faith and Unity of the ſame, and did exhort, ſtir up, and encourage the People, there ſtanding in great multitude, to hold and defend the ſame errors and opinions: And moreover, certain of the People there ſtanding, as it did appear, affected with Errors and Hereſies, as fautors and defenders of the ſaid John, did confirm and give expreſs conſent to the foreſaid words, propoſitions, and affirmations; which thing we do utter with ſorrow and bitterneſs of heart.

Note how Boner here pretenderh Conſcience in proſecuring this matter, when only he was commanded unto it by the Councels Letters.

We therefore the foreſaid Edmund and Biſhop aboveſaid, not being able, nor daring to paſs over in ſilence, nor winck at the foreſaid hainous Act, leſt by our negligence and ſlackneſs the Blood of them might be required at our hands at the moſt terrible day of Judgment, deſiring to be certified and informed whether the premiſſes declared unto us, be of the truth, and leſt that any ſcabbed ſheep, lurking amongſt the ſimple flock of our Lord, do infect them with peſtiferous Hereſie: to you therefore we ſtraightly charge and command that you cite, or cauſe to be cited all and ſingular, having or knowing the truth of the premiſſes, by ſetting up this Citation upon the Church door of S. Martins in the field, being within our Dioceſs of London, and alſo upon the Cathedral Church door of Saint Paul in London, leaving there the Copy hereof, or by other means or ways, the beſt you can, that this Citation and Monition may come to their knowledge.

All which and ſingular by the tenor of theſe preſents we cite and admoniſh that they appear, and every one of them do appear before us, our Vicar general, or Commiſſary, whatſoever he be in that behalf, in our Cathedral Church of S. Paul in London, in the Conſiſtory place, upon Thurſday the ſecond day of May now next enſuing, betwixt the hours of nine and ten of the Clock in the forenoon the ſame day, to bear witneſs of the truth in this behalf, and to depoſe and declare faithfully the truth that they know or have heard of the premiſſes, and moreover to do and receive what Law and reaſon doth require.

The Wife, Children and Kindred of John Tooly cited.

Further we commit unto you as before, and ſtraightly enjoyning you do command, that ye will generally cite the Wife of the ſaid Tooly that is dead, and his Children, and his kindred by Father and Mother, his friends and his familiars in eſpecial, and all other and every of them, if there be any perhaps that deſire to defend and purge the remembrance of the perſon in the premiſſes, that ye admoniſh them after the manner and form aforeſaid, whom we likewiſe by the tenor of theſe preſents, do in ſuch ſort cite and moniſh that they appear all, and that every one of them do appear (under pain to be compelled to keep ſilence for ever hereafter in this behalf) before us, or our Vicar general in ſpiritual matters, or ſuch our Commiſſary, at the day, hour, and place aforeſaid, to defend the good name and remembrance of him that is dead, and to ſay, alledge and propoſe in due form of Law a cauſe reaſonable, if they have or can tell of any, why the ſaid John Tooly, that is dead, ought not to be determined, and declared for ſuch an Heretick and excommunicate perſon, and his remembrance condemned, in the deteſting and condemning of ſo hainous a deed and crime, and his Body or carcaſs to lack Church burial, as a rotten member cut off from the Church, and the ſame to be committed to the arm and Power Secular, and they compelled hereafter for ever to hold their peace.

The carkaſs of Tooy cut off from Chriſtian burial.

And furthermore, to do, receive, and to ſuffer as Law and reaſon will, and as the quality of ſuch matter, and the nature of themſelves do conſtrain and require; and moreover, that you cite and moniſh, after the manner aforeſaid, all and every of the receivers, fautors, and creditors of the ſaid John Tooly that is dead, eſpecially if any of them do incline and give conſent to thoſe wicked and deteſtable affirmations, propoſitions, and rehearſals aforeſaid, that on this ſide the ſaid Thurſday they return and ſubmit themſelves unto us, and to the lap of the Mother holy Church: which thing if they do, we truſting upon the mercy of Almighty God, do promiſe that we will receive them being penitent for ſuch their Errors and faults, with thanks, benignity, mercy, and favour, to the comfort and health of their own Souls, and in that behalf ſave their honeſties to the uttermoſt of our power; otherwiſe, if they will not provide thus to come of their own accord, but to abide the ordinary proceſs of the Law, let thoſe Men know that we will puniſh more ſeverely this offence, according to the uttermoſt of the Law, and as far as the Law will bear it; and what ye ſhall do in the premiſſes, let him among you, which ſhall execute this our preſent Mandate, certifie us, or our Vicar general in ſpiritual matters, either by his own perſon, or by his Letters Patents, together with theſe authentically ſealed.

The Biſhop layeth his bail to catch whom he may trouble.

Dated at London under our Seal, the laſt day of April. 1555. and of our tranſlation the 11.

When the time of this Citation was expired, and this Tooly being cited did not appear: next in order of Law came the Suſpenſion (whereas one ſuſpenſion had been enough for him) and after that cometh the Excommunication, that is, that no man ſhould eat and drink with him; or if any met him by the way, he ſhould not bid him good morrow, and beſides that, he ſhould be excluded from the Communion of the Church. Theſe things being prepared in ſuch manner, as in ſuch caſes full wiſely they uſe to do, at length one ſtood out for the nonce, that made Anſwer to certain Articles, rehearſed in Judgment openly and that in the behalf of the dead Man. But when the poor dead Man could neither ſpeak for himſelf, nor did (as they ſaid) ſufficiently Anſwer them by the other, to avoid the name of an Heretick: firſt witneſſes were provided againſt him, whoſe names were Henry Clark Eſquire, Thomas Way Keeper of the Marſhalſey, Philip Andrew Undermarſhal, William Holingworth Fiſhmonger, William Gellard, William Walton Chandler, Richard Longman Merchantaylor, Philip Britten, John Burton Brewer, Thomas Smith Sergeant. Then he was for an Heretick condemned, and ſo committed to the ſecular power, namely to the Sheriffs of London, which with the like diligence went about to execute their charge. Therefore receiving the man being Suſpended Excommunicated, Condemned as an Heretick, and beſides that, dead, they laid him on the fire to be burned namely, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, for a continual remembrance thereof: This was done the fourth day of June.

Tooly ſuſpended and Excommunicated.

Witneſs againſt John Tooly.

Tooly given to the ſecular power.

Here followeth the Hiſtory and Martyrdom of the worthy ſervant of Chriſt, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, with his Examinations and Anſwers had with B. Boner, recorded and penned with his own hand.

IMmediately after the Story of Doctor Taylor, mention before was made of ſix men brought and convented before Biſhop Boner upon the eighth day of February. The names of which Martyrs were Stephen Knight, W. Pigot, Thomas Tomkins, J. Laurence, W. Hunter. In which number whs alſo Tho. Haukes, and condemned likewiſe with them the 9. day of the foreſaid Month

The Story of M Thomas Haukes Martyr.

Month of February. But becauſe his Execution did not ſo ſhortly follow with theirs, but was prolonged to this preſent 10. day of the Month of June, wherewith we are now in hand, it followeth therefore now conſequently to enter tractation thereof; firſt, beginning briefly with his Godly Converſation and Inſtitution of Life, then ſhewing of his Troubles, alſo of his Examinations and Conflicts with the Biſhop and other Adverſaries, according as the order of his ſtory doth requite.

The Life and converſation of Tho. Haukes.

As touching therefore his education and order of Life, firſt he was of the Country of Eſſex, born of an honeſt ſtock, in calling and profeſſion a Courtier, brought up daintily from his Childhood, and like a Gentleman. Beſides that, he was of ſuch comlineſs and ſtature, ſo well endued with excellent qualities, that he might ſeem on every ſide a Man (as it were) made for the purpoſe. But his gentle behaviour toward other, and eſpecially his fervent ſtudy and ſingular love unto true Religion and Godlineſs did ſurmount all the reſt. Wherein as God did ſingularly adorn him: even ſo he, being ſuch a valiant Martyr of God, may ſeem to nobilitate the whole company of other holy Martyrs, and as a bright ſtar to make the Church of God and his Truth, of themſelves bright and clear, more glorioully to ſhine by his Example.

The Victory of Martyrs, is the Triumph of Chriſt. Ambroſe.

For if the Conqueſts of Martyrs are the Triumphs of Chriſt (as S. Ambroſe doth notably and truly write) undoubtedly Chriſt in few Men hath either Conquered more notably, or Triumphed more glorioully, than in this young Man: he ſtood ſo wiſely in his cauſe, ſo godly in his Life, and ſo conſtantly in his death.

Tho. Haukes firſt in Service with the Earl af Oxford.

But to the Declaration of the matter: firſt this Haukes following the guiſe of the Court, as he grew in years, entred ſervice with the Lord of Oxford, where he remained a good ſpace, being there right well eſteemed and loved of all the houſhold, ſo long as Edward the ſixth lived. But he dying, all things began to go backward, Religion to decay, godlineſs not only to wax cold, but alſo to be in danger every where, and chiefly in the Houſes of good Men. Haukes miſliking the ſtate of things, and eſpecially in ſuch Mens Houſes, rather than he would change the Profeſſion of true godlineſs, which he had taſted, thought to change the place; and ſo, forſaking the Noblemans Houſe, departed thence to his own home, where more freely he might give himſelf to God and uſe his own Conſcience.

Haukes compelled to leave the Earl of Oxfords Houſe.

But what place in this World ſhall a Man find ſo ſecret for himſelf, whither the old wicked Serpent cannot creep, whereby he may have ſome matter to overthrow the quietneſs of the godly? Now in the mean ſeaſon (as it happened) Haukes keeping his Houſe at home, had born unto him a young Son, whoſe Baptiſm was deferred to the third week, for that he would not ſuffer him to be Baptized after the papiſtical manner, which thing the Adverſaries not able to ſuffer, laying hands upon him, did bring him to the Earl of Oxford, there to be reaſoned with, as not ſound in Religion, in that he ſeemed to contemn the Sacraments of the Church.

Haukes Child three weeks unchriſtened.

Haukes brought before the Earl.

Haukes ſent up by the Earl to Biſhop Boner.

The Earl either intending not to trouble himſelf in ſuch matters, or elſe ſeeing himſelf not able, to weigh with him in ſuch caſes of Religion, ſent him up to London with a Meſſenger, and Letters, and ſo, willing to clear his own hands, put him in the hands of Boner B. of London; the contents of which his Letter ſent to Boner, be theſe.

A Letter of the Earl of Oxford to Boner.

The Earls Letter to Boner.

MOſt reverend Father in God, be it known unto you, that I have ſent you one Thomas Haukes, dwelling in the County of Eſſex, who hath a Child that hath remained unchriſtened more than three weeks; who, being upon the ſame examined, hath denied to have it Baptized, as it is now uſed in the Church, whereupon I have ſent him to your good Lordſhip, to uſe as ye think beſt, by your good diſcretion.

When the Biſhop had peruſed this Letter, and afterward read it to M. Haukes, he hearing the ſame, thought with himſelf that he ſhould not be very well uſed, ſeeing he was put to his diſcretion. Then wrote the Biſhop a Letter again to him that ſent the Priſoner, with many great thanks for his diligence in ſetting forth the Queens proceedings. Then began the Biſhop to enter Communication with M. Haukes, firſt asking, what ſhould move him to leave his Child unchriſtned ſo long? To whom M. Haukes anſwered thus again as followeth. Anno 1555.

Private talk or conference between Mr. Haukes and B. Boner.

Haukes. Becauſe we be bound to do nothing contrary to the Word of God.

Boner. Why? Baptiſm is commanded by the Word of God.

Haukes. His Inſtitution therein I do not deny.

Boner. What deny ye then?

Haukes. I deny all things invented and deviſed by Man.

Boner. What things be thoſe that be deviſed by Man, that ye be ſo offended withal?

Mans Invention added to Baptiſm.

Haukes. Your, Oyl, Cream, Salt, Spittle, Candle, and conjuring of Water, &c.

The forefathers.

Boner. Will ye deny that which all the whole World, and your Father hath been contented withal?

Haukes. What my Father and all the whole World hath done, I have nothing to do withal: but what God hath commanded me to do, to that ſtand I.

The Catholick Church.

Boner. The Catholick Church hath taught it.

Haukes. What is the Catholick Church?

Boner. It is the Faithful Congregation, whereſoever it be diſperſed thorowout the whole World.

Haukes. Who is the Head thereof?

Boner. Chriſt is the Head thereof.

Haukes. Are we taught in Chriſt, or in the Church now?

Boner. Have ye not read in the eighth of John where he ſaid, he would ſend his Comforter which ſhould teach you all things?

Haukes. I grant you it is ſo, that he would ſend his comforter, but to what end? Forſooth to this end, that he ſhould lead you into all Truth and Verity, and that is not to teach a new Doctrine.

Boner. Ah Sir, ye are a right Scripture Man. For ye will have nothing but the Scripture. There is a great number of your Country-Men of your Opinion. Do you know one Knight and Pygot?

Haukes. Knight I know, but Pygot I do not know.

Boner. I thought ye were acquainted with him: it ſeemeth ſo by your Judgment. What Preachers do ye know in Eſſex.

Haukes. I know none.

Boner. Do ye not know one Baget there?

Haukes. Yes forſooth, I know him.

Boner. What manner of Man is he?

Haukes. An honeſt Man ſo far as I know.

Boner. Do you know him if ye ſee him?

Haukes. Yea that I do. Then ſaid he to one of his Servants, Go call me Baget hither. And then he ſaid to me; Ye ſeem to be a very proud Man and a ſtubborn. He that brought me up ſtood all this while by.

Boner looketh to be courtiſed.

Haukes. What ſhould move your Lordſhip ſo to ſay?

Boner. Becauſe I ſee in a Man that came with you much humility and lowlineſs.

Haukes. It ſeemeth your Lordſhip ſpeaketh that to me, becauſe I make no courteſie to you: and with that came Baget. Then the Biſhop ſaid to Baget: How ſay ye, Sir, know ye this man?

Baget brought to the ſight of Tho. Haukes.

Baget. Yea forſooth my Lord; with that Baget and I ſhook hands. Then ſaid the Biſhop to Baget, Sir, this Man hath a Child which hath lyen three weeks unchriſtened (as I have Letters to ſhew) who refuſeth to have it Baptiſed, as it is now uſed in the Church: how ſay you thereto?

Baget. Forſooth, my Lord, I ſay nothing thereto (with low courteſie to the hard ground.)

Boner. Say you nothing thereto? I will make you tell me whether it be laudable, and to be frequented and uſed in the Church or not.

Baget. I beſeech your Lordſhip to pardon me, he is old enough, let him anſwer for himſelf.

Boner chafeth at Bagets Anſwer.

Boner. Ah Sir knave, are ye at that point with me? Goe call me the Porter, ſaid he, to one of his Men, Thou ſhalt ſit in the Stocks, and have nothing but Bread and Water. I perceive I have kept you too well. Have I made thus much of you, and have I you at this point? Then came the Biſhops Man, and ſaid, The Porter is gone to London: Then ſaid the Biſhop to Baget,

Come

Anno 1555.

Come with me, and he went away with him, and commanded me away, and bade one of his Gentlemen to talk with me (who was one of his own teaching) who deſired amongſt other things to know of me, with whom I was acquainted in Eſſex, and what men they were that were my teachers.

Boner taketh Baget with him aſide to conjure him.

Haukes. When I ſee your Commiſſion, I will make you Anſwer. And then immediately came the Biſhop again: but ere he came, his man and I had much talk. Then the Biſhop ſate down under a Vine in his Orchard, and called Baget to him, whom he carried away, and brought again, and called me alſo, and ſaid to Baget: How ſay ye now Sir unto Baptiſm? Say whether it be to be frequented and uſed in the Church, as it is now, or no?

Baget taught to ſay after Boner.

Baget. Forſooth my Lord, I ſay it is good.

Boner. I befool your heart, could ye not have ſaid ſo before? Ye have wounded this mans Conſcience. Then the Biſhop turned to me, and ſaid; How ſay ye now, Sir, this man is turned and converted.

Tho. Haukes builded his Faith upon no man.

Haukes. I build my Faith neither upon this man, neither upon you, but only upon Chriſt Jeſus, who (as Paul ſaith) is the founder and author of all mens Faith.

Boner. I perceive ye are a ſtubborn fellow. I muſt be glad to work another away with you, to win you.

Tho. Haukes forbidden to talk in the Biſhops Houſe.

Haukes. Whatſoever ye do, I am ready to ſuffer it: for I am in your hands to abide it.

Boner. Well ye are ſo, Come on your waies, ye ſhall go in, and I will uſe you Chriſtianlike: You ſhall have meat and drink, ſuch as I have in my Houſe: but in any wiſe talk not.

Haukes. I purpoſe to talk nothing but the Word of God and Truth.

Boner. I will have no Hereſie talked on in my Houſe.

Haukes. Why, Is the Truth become Hereſie? God hath commanded that we ſhould have none other talk in our Houſes, in our Beds, at our Meat, and by the way, but all Truth.

Boner. If ye will have my favor, be ruled by my Counſel.

Haukes. Then I truſt you will grant me my requeſt.

Boner. What is that?

Tho. Haukes and Baget ſeparated aſunder.

Haukes. That your Doctors and Servants give me none occaſion: for if they do, I will ſurely utter my Conſcience. Then commanded he his Men to take in Baget, and let not Haukes and him talk together. And ſo thus we departed, and went to dinner, and I dined at the Stewards Table.

Talk between Darbiſhire and Tho: Haukes.

After Dinner, his Chaplains and his Men began to talk with me. But amongſt all other, there was one Darbiſhire principal of Broadgates in Oxford, and the Biſhops kinſman, who ſaid to me, that I was too curious: for ye will have (ſaid he) nothing but your little pretty Gods Book.

Haukes. And is it not ſufficient for my Salvation? Ye, (ſaid he) it is ſufficient for our Salvation, but not for our Inſtruction.

Salvation. Inſtruction.

Haukes. God ſend me the Salvation, and you the Inſtruction. And as we thus reaſoned, came the Biſhop, who ſaid unto me; I gave you a Commandment that you ſhould not talk.

Haukes. And I deſired you that your Doctors and Servants ſhould give me none occaſion, Then went we into his Orchard again, he and his Doctors and I.

Talk between M. Haukes, and Boner. Bapтiſm after K. Edwards Booke.

Boner. Would not ye be contented to have, that your Child ſhould be Chriſtened after the Book that was ſet out by King Edward?

Haukes. Yes, with a good will: it is a thing that I deſire.

Boner. I thought ſo: ye would have the ſame thing. The principal is in the Name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and in the neceſſity it may ſerve.

Haukes. Chriſt did uſe it without any ſuch neceſſity: and yet we lack the chiefeſt point.

Boner. What is that?

Haukes. Go teach all Nations, Baptizing them, &c.

Boner no Preacher.

Boner. Thou ſpeakeſt that becauſe I am no Preacher.

Haukes. I ſpeak the Text: I do not mean you. Then ſpake all the Doctors and his Men that were with him: he ſpake it of you my Lord (with a great noiſe that they made.)

Boner. Will ye be content to tarry here, and your Child ſhall be Baptized, and you ſhall not know of it, ſo that you will agree to it?

Haukes. If I would ſo have done, I needed not to have come to you: For I had the ſame Counſel given before.

Boner. You ſeem to be a luſty young Man; you will not give your head for the waſhing; you will ſtand in the defence of it for the honor of your Country. Do ye think that the Queen and I cannot command it to be done in ſpite of your teeth?

M. Hauk. will not conſent to have his Child Chriſtened after the Popiſh Order.

Haukes. What the Queen and you can do, I will not ſtand in it: but ye get my conſent never the ſooner.

Boner. Well, you are a ſtubborn young Man: I perceive I muſt work another way with you.

Haukes. Ye are in the hands of God, and ſo am I.

Boner. Whatſoever you think, I will not have you ſpeak ſuch words unto me. And ſo we departed untill even ſong time: and ere evenſong was begun, my Lord called for me to come to him into the Chappel, and ſaid; Haukes, thou art a proper young Man, and God hath done his part unto thee; I would be glad to do thee good. Thou knoweſt that I am thy Paſtor, and one that ſhould anſwer for thee. If I would not teach thee well, I ſhould anſwer for thy Soul.

Haukes. That I have ſaid, I will ſtand to it, God willing: there is no way to remove it.

Boner. Nay, nay Haukes, thou ſhalt not be ſo wilfull. Remember Chriſt bade two go into his Vineyard, the one ſaid he would, and went not, the other ſaid he would not, and went.

Haukes. The laſt went.

Boner enteth talk of the Sacrament.

Boner. Do thou likewiſe, and I will talk friendly with thee; how ſayeſt thou? It is in the ſixth of S. John; I am the Bread of Life, and the Bread that I will give is my Fleſh, which I will give for the Life of the World. And whoſoever eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, hath everlaſting Life. My Fleſh is very meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed. And he that eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Do ye believe this?

Haukes. Yea, I muſt needs believe the Scriptures.

Boner. Why? then I truſt that you be found in the Bleſſed Sacrament.

Haukes. I beſeech your Lordſhip to feel my Conſcience no farther then in that, that I was accuſed in unto you.

Boner. Well, well, let us go unto Evenſong.

Haukes. With that I turned my Back to go out of the Chappel.

Tho. Haukes refuſeth to hear Boners Evenſong.

Boner. Why, will you not tarry Evenſong?

Haukes. No forſooth.

Boner. And why?

Haukes. For I will not.

Boner And why will ye not?

Haukes. For becauſe I have no edifying thereby, for I underſtand no Latin.

Boner. Why? you may pray by your ſelf. What Books have ye?

Haukes. I have the New Teſtament, the Books of Solomon, and the Pſalter.

Boner. Why I pray you tarry here, and pray you on your Pſalter.

Haukes. I will not pray in this place, nor in any ſuch. Then ſaid one of his Chaplains; let him go my Lord, and he ſhall be no partaker with us in our Prayers.

Haukes. I think my ſelf beſt at eaſe when I am fartheſt from you And ſo the Biſhop went to Evenſong, and I came down and walked between the Hall and the Chappel in the Court, and tarried there till Evenſong was done, and within an hour after that Evenſong was done, the Biſhop ſent for me into his Chamber where he lay himſelf, and when I came, there was he, and three of his Chaplains.

Tho. Haukes called for again by Boner.

Boner. Ye know of the talk that was between you and me, as concerning the Sacrament. You would not have your Conſcience ſought any farther, than in that ye were accuſed of.

Haukes. I thought you would not be both mine accuſer and judge.

Boner

Boner. Well, ye shall Answer me to the Sacrament of the Altar, the Sacrament of Baptism, the Sacrament of Penance, and the Sacrament of Matrimony.

Haukes. There is none of these, but I dare speak my Conscience in them.

Tho. Haukes knoweth no Sacrament of the Altar.

Boner. The Sacrament of the Altar ye seem to be found in.

Haukes. In the Sacrament of the Altar? why Sir, I do not know it.

Boner. Well, we will make you to know it, and believe in it too, ere ever we have done with you.

Haukes. No, that shall ye never do.

Boner. Yes, a Fagot will make you do it.

Haukes. No, no, a point for your fagot. What God thinketh meet to be done, that shall ye do and more ye shall not do.

The matter and substance of the Sacrament.

Boner. Do ye not believe that there remaineth in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration be spoken, no more Bread, but the very Body and Blood of Christ? and at that word he put off his Cap.

Haukes. I do believe as Christ hath taught me.

Boner. Why? did not Christ say, Take, eat, this is my Body?

Haukes. Christ said so: but therefore it followeth not, that the Sacrament of the Altar is so as you teach, neither did Christ ever teach it so to be.

Boner. Why? the Catholick Church taught it so, and they were of Christs Church.

Haukes. How prove you it? The Apostles never taught it so. Read the Acts, the second, and the twenty. Neither Peter nor Paul ever taught it, neither instituted it so.

Boner. Ah Sir, ye will have no more than the Scripture teacheth, but even as Christ hath left it bare.

Haukes. He that teacheth me any otherwise, I will not believe him.

Boner. Why? then ye must eat a Lamb, if ye will have but Christs Institution only.

Touching the necessary points of Doctrine and Sacraments, only the Word is to be followed.

Haukes. Nay, that is not so, before that Christ did Institute the Sacrament, that Ceremony ceased, and then began the Sacrament.

Boner. Alas, you know not how it began, neither of the Institution thereof.

Haukes. Then I would be glad to learn.

Boner. Marry, we will teach you: but you are so stubborn that ye will not learn.

Haukes. Except ye learn me by the word of God, I will never credit you, nor believe you: and thus we concluded. Then the Bishop and his Chaplains laughed and said: Jesu, Jesu, what a stubbornness and arrogantness is this? and this was in his Chamber where he lay. Then said the Bishop to me, go ye down and drink, for it is fasting day: it is Midsummer Even, but I think ye love neither fasting nor Praying.

A false conceived opinion of Boner against the Protestants. Fasting and Praying no man denieth.

Haukes. I will never deny fasting neither Praying, so that it be done as it ought to be done, and without Hypocrisie or vain glory.

Boner. I like you the better for that: and so we left for that night.

The next day the Bishop went to London: for Feckenam was made Dean that day, and I tarried still at Fulham.

Then did the Bishops men desire me to come to Mass, but I did utterly refuse it, answering them as I did their Master.

Boner returneth from London.

That Night the Bishop came home to Fulham again.

Talk between Harpsfield and Thomas Haukes.

Talk between Tho. Haukes and Harpsfield.

THen upon the Monday Morning very early, the Bishop did call for me. There was with him Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, to whom the Bishop said, this is the Man which I told you of, who would not have his Child Christened, nor will have any Ceremonies.

Harpsfield. Christ used Ceremonies. Did he not take Clay from the ground, and took spittle, and made the Blind Man to see?

But Christ never made any ordinance or custom of that Ceremony.

Haukes. I wot well that, but Christ did never use it in Baptism. If ye will needs have it, put it to the use that Christ put it unto.

Harpsfield. Admit your Child die unchristened: what a heavy case stand you in?

Anno 1555.

Haukes. I admit that if it do, what then?

The state of Children dying without Baptism.

Harps. Marry then are ye damned, and your Child both.

Haukes. Judge you no farther than ye may by the Scriptures.

Harps. Do ye not know that your Child is born in Original Sin?

Haukes. Yes that I do.

Harps. How is Original Sin washed away?

Haukes. By true Faith and Belief of Christ Jesus.

Harps. How can your Child being an Infant believe?

Haukes. The Deliverance of it from Sin standeth in the Faith of his Parents.

Harps. How prove you that?

Haukes. By S. Paul, in the seventh and the first to the Corinthians, saying; The unbelieving man is sanctified by the believing Woman, and the unbelieving Woman is sanctified by the believing Man, or else were your Children unclean.

The believing Parents Sanctifie the Child.

Harps. I will prove that they whom thou putteſt thy trust in, will be against thee in this Opinion.

Haukes. Who be those?

Harps. Your great learned Men in Oxford.

Haukes. If they do it by the Scriptures, I will believe them.

Boner. Recant, recant: do ye not know that Christ said, Except ye be Baptized ye cannot be saved?

Christianity standeth not in outward Ceremonies.

Haukes. Doth Christianity stand in outward Ceremonies, or no?

Boner. Partly it doth: what say you to that?

Haukes. I say as S. Peter saith, Not the washing of Water purgeth the filthiness of the Flesh, but a good Conscience consenting unto God.

Harps. Beware of Pride, Brother, beware of Pride.

Haukes. It is written, Pride serveth not for Men, nor yet for the Sons of Men.

Sirach. 10.

Boner. Let us make an end here. How say you to the Mass, Sirra?

Boner cometh in with his Mass.

Haukes. I say it is detestable, abominable, and profitable for nothing.

Mass profitable for nothing.

Boner. What nothing profitable in it? what say you to the Epistle and Gospel?

Haukes. It is good, if it be used as Christ left it to be used.

Boner. Well, I am glad that ye somewhat recant: recant all, recant all.

Haukes. I have recanted nothing, nor will do.

Boner. How say you to Confiteor.

Confiteor in the Mass a thing detestable.

Haukes. I say it is abominable and detestable, yea, and a Blasphemy against God and his Son Christ, to call upon any, to trust to any, or to pray to any, save only to Christ Jesus.

Boners similitude to prove praying to Saints.

Boner. To trust to any, we bid you not: but to call upon them, and to pray to them, we bid you. Do ye not know when ye come into the Court ye cannot speak with the King and the Queen, unless ye call to some of the privy Chamber that are next to the King and Queen?

We ought not to believe in Saints. Ergo, we ought not to call upon them.

Haukes. They that list receive your Doctrine. You teach me that I should not believe nor trust in any, but to call on them: and S. Paul saith, How should I call upon him . on whom I believe not?

Praying for the dead.

Boner. Will you have no Body to pray for you when you be dead?

Haukes. No surely, except you can prove it by the Scriptures. Then the Bishop pointed unto Harpsfield, and said unto me; Is it not well done to desire this man to pray for me?

Haukes. Yes surely, so long as we live, Prayer of the Righteous Man is available: but this Mans Prayers, you being dead, profiteth nothing at all.

Boner. Will ye grant the Prayer of the Righteous Man to prevail?

Haukes. I grant it doth for the living, but not for the dead.

Boner. Not for the dead?

Haukes. No forsooth, for David saith, No Man can deliver his Brother from death, nor make agreement unto Psal. 49.

God

Anno 1555.

God for him: for it coſt more to redeem their Souls, ſo ſo that ye muſt let that alone for ever.

Alſo Ezekiel ſaith. Though Noah, Daniel, or Job dwelt among them, yet can they in their righteouſneſs exceed no farther than themſelves. Then the Biſhop ſaid to Harpsfield, Sir, ye ſee this Man hath no need of our Lady, neither of any of the BleſſedSaints. Well, I will trouble you no longer; I did call you hoping that you ſhould do ſome good on him, but it will not be. And he ſaid to me, Sir, It is time to begin with you; we will rid you away, and then we ſhall have one Heretick leſs.

Ezek. 14.

Boner when he cannot overcome by Doctrine, goeth about to oppreſs by Authority.

Harpſ. What Books have you?

Haukes. The New Teſtament, Salomons Books, and the Pſalter.

Harpſ. Will you read any other Books?

Haukes. Yea, if you will give me ſuch Books as I will require.

Harpſ. What Books do you require?

Haukes. Latimers Books, my Lord of Canterburies Book, Bradfords Sermons. Ridleys Books.

Boner. Away, away, he will have no Books but ſuch as maintain his Hereſies: and ſo they departed, for Harpsfield was booted to ride unto Oxford, and I went to the Porters lodg again.

The next days talk.

The next days talk. The Biſhops name was Bird, Biſhop ſometime of Cheſter, and Suffragane before of Coventry, of whom read before.

THe next day came thither an Old Biſhop, who had a Pearl in his Eye, and he brought with him to my Lord a diſh of Apples, and a Bottle of Wine. For he had loſt his living, becauſe he had a Wife. Then the Biſhop called me again into the Orchard, and ſaid to the Old Biſhop: this young Man hath a Child, and will not have it Chriſtened.

Haukes. I deny not Baptiſm.

Boner. Thou art a Fool thou canſt not tell what thou wouldeſt have, and that he ſpake with much anger.

Boner reproved for his Anger.

Haukes. A Biſhop muſt be blameleſs or faultleſs, ſober, diſcreet, no chider, nor given to anger.

Boner. Thou judgeſt me to be angry: no by my Faith am I not, and ſtroke himſelf upon the Breaſt

Then ſaid the Old Biſhop, Alas good young Man, you muſt be taught by the Church, and by your ancients, and do as your forefathers have done before you.

Boner. No, no, he will have nothing but the Scriptures, and God wot he doth not underſtand them. He will have no Ceremonies in the Church, no not one. What ſay you to Holy Water?

Haukes. I ſay to it, as to the reſt, and to all that be of his making that made them.

Boner. Why, the Scriptures do allow it.

Haukes. Where prove you that?

See how Boner proveth holy Water by the Scripture.

Boner. In the Book of Kings, where Elizeus threw ſalt into the Water.

Elizeus put Salt in the Water, not to waſh away Sin, but only to make the Water ſweet.

Haukes. Ye ſay truth; that it is written in the fourth Book of the Kings, the ſecond Chapter; the Children of the Prophets came to Elizeus, ſaying The dwelling of the City is pleaſant, but the Waters be Corrupted. This was the cauſe that Elizeus threw Salt into the Water, and it became ſweet and good: and ſo when our Waters be corrupted, if ye can by putting in of Salt make them ſweet, clear and wholeſom, we will the better believe your Ceremonies.

Boner. How ſay you to Holy Bread?

Haukes. Even as I ſaid to the other. What Scripture have you to defend it?

Boner proveth holy Bread by the five Loaves and three Fiſhes.

Boner. Have ye not read where Chriſt fed five thouſand men five with Loaves, and three Fiſhes.

Haukes. Will ye make that Holy Bread? There Chriſt deale Fiſh with his Holy Bread.

Boner. Look I pray you how Captious this Man is.

Haukes. Chriſt did not this miracle, or other, becauſe we ſhould do the like miracle, but becauſe we ſhould believe and credit his Doctrine thereby.

Boner. We believe no Doctrine, but that which is wrought by miracles.

Mark, 16.

Haukes. No forſooth, for Chriſt ſaith, Theſe Tokens ſhall follow them that believe in me: They ſhall ſpeak with new Tongues, they ſhall caſt out Devils, and if they drink any deadly poiſon, it ſhall not hurt them.

Boner With what new Tongues do ye ſpeak?

How converted Chriſtians do ſpeak with Tongues.

Haukes. Forſooth, where before that I came to the knowledg of Gods Word, I was a foul Blaſphemer and filthy talker, ſince I came to the knowledge thereof, I have lauded God, praiſed God, and given thanks unto God, even with the ſame Tongue; and is not this a new Tongue?

Boner. How do you caſt out Devils?

Haukes. Chriſt did caſt them out by his word, and he hath left the ſame word, that whoſoever doth credit and believe it, ſhall caſt out Devils.

Boner. Did you ever drink any deadly Poyſon?

Haukes. Yea forſooth that I have, for I have drunken of the peſtilent Traditions and Ceremonies of the Biſhop of Rome.

Boner. Now you ſhew your ſelf to be a right Heretick.

B. Boner an Heretick by his own definition.

Haukes. I pray you, what is Hereſie.

Boner. All things that are contrary to Gods Word.

Haukes. If I ſtand in any thing contrary hereto, then am I worthy to be ſo called.

Boner. Thou art one, and thou ſhalt be burned, if thou ſtand and continue in this Opinion. Ye think we are afraid to put one of you to death: yes, yes, there is a Brotherhood of you, but I will break it; I warrant you.

The Papiſts do beſides Gods Book in burning men for their Faith.

Haukes. Where prove you that Chriſt or his Apoſtles did kill any Man for his Faith?

Boner. Did not Paul Excommunicate?

Haukes. Yes my Lord, but there is a great difference between Excommunicating and Burning.

Boner. Have ye not read of the Man and the Woman in the Acts of the Apoſtles, whom Peter deſtroyed.

Haukes. Yes forſooth, I have read of one Ananias, and Sapphira his Wife, which were deſtroyed for lying againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which ſerveth nothing to your purpoſe,

This Biſhop here forgetteth his leſſon, Benedicite perſequentibus vos.

Boner. Well you will grant one yet.

Haukes. Well, if you will have us to grant you be of God, then ſhew mercy, for that God requireth.

Boner. We will ſhew ſuch mercy unto you, as ye ſhewed unto us: for my Benefice or Biſhoprick was taken away from me, ſo that I had not one penny to live upon.

Haukes. I pray ye my Lord what do you give him now that was in the Biſhoprick or Benefice before that ye came again to it? whereunto he anſwered me never a word: for he turned his Back unto me, and talked with other Men, ſaying that he was very ſorry for me, but he truſted that I would turn with S. Paul, becauſe I was ſo earneſt, and ſo he departed and went to Dinner, and I to the Porters Lodge again.

Tho. Haukes afterwards called for again to talk with the Old Biſhop.

After Dinner I was called into the Hall again and the Biſhop deſired the Old Biſhop to take me into his Chamber: for I would be glad (ſaid he) if ye could convert him. So he took me into his Chamber, and ſate him down in a Chair, and ſaid to me; I would to God I could do you ſome good. Ye are a young Man, and I would not wiſh you to go too far, but learn of your elders to bear ſome what.

Haukes. I will bear with nothing that is contrary to the Word of God. And I looked that the Old Biſhop ſhould have made me an Anſwer, and he was faſt a ſleep.

Then I departed out of the Chamber alone, and went to the Porters Lodge again, and there ſaw I the Old Biſhop laſt: I ſuppoſe he is not yet awake.

Talk between Fecknam and Haukes.

The next days talk with Fecknam.

THe next day came Fecknam unto me and ſaid; Are ye he that will have no Ceremonies?

Haukes, What mean you by that?

Fecknam. Ye will not have your Child Chriſtned, but in Engliſh, and you will have no Ceremonies.

Haukes. Whatſoever the Scripture commandeth to be done I refuſe not.

Fecknam. Ceremonies are to be uſed by the Scriptures.

Haukes. Which be thoſe?

Fecknam. How ſay you by Pauls Breeches?

Fecknam reaſon lyeth in Pauls Breeches.

Haukes. I have read no ſuch thing.

Fec. Have ye not read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, how how things went from Pauls Body, and they received health thereby?

Acts 19.

Haukes. I have read in the xix. of the Acts, how there were Partlets and Napkins from Pauls Body, is it that you mean?

Fecknam maketh every Act ſpoken of in the New Teſtament to be a Ceremony. Mark 5. Luke 8.

Fecknam. Yea the ſame is it: what ſay you to thoſe Ceremonies?

Haukes. I ſay nothing to the Ceremonies. For the Text ſaith, that God did ſo work by the hands of Paul, that there went Partlets and Napkins from him, &c. So that it ſeemed by the Text, that it was God that wrought, and not the Ceremonies.

Fecknam. How ſay ye to the Woman that came behind Chriſt, and touched the hem af his veſture? did not her diſeaſe depart from her by that Ceremony?

Fecknam taken ſhort in his own ale.

Haukes. No forſooth: for Chriſt turned back, and ſaid to Peter, Who is it that toucheth me? And Peter ſaid, Thou ſeeſt the People thruſt thee, and askeſt thou, Who touched me? Some Body hath touched me (ſaith Chriſt) for vertue hath gone out of me. I pray you, whether was it the vertue that healed this Woman, or his veſture?

Fecknam. Both.

Fecknam driven in a ſtrait, driveth him to the Sacrament.

Haukes. Then is not Chriſt true: for he ſaid, Go thy way thy Faith hath made thee whole.

Boner. Away, away to the Sacrament, for theſe are but meer trifles to that.

Fecknam. How ſay ye Sirra? Chriſt took Bread, and brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat, This is my Body.

It is his Sacramental Body, or the Sacrament of his Body, but not his true Body.

Haukes. I grant Chriſt ſaid ſo.

Fecknam. And is it not ſo?

Haukes. No forſooth, I do not underſtand it ſo.

Fecknam. Why: then is Chriſt a lyer?

Haukes. I think ye will ſo prove him.

Fecknam. Will I? why I have ſpoken the words that Chriſt ſpake.

The words of Chriſt are to be underſtood, not as he ſpake, but as he meant them.

Haukes. Is every word to be underſtood as Chriſt ſpake it? Chriſt ſaid, I am a door, a Vine, I am a King, a way, &c.

Feckn. Chriſt ſpake theſe words in parables.

Haukes. And why ſpeaketh he this in parables when he ſaid, I am a Door, a Vine, a King, a Way, &c. more than this when he ſaid, This is my Body? For after the ſame phraſe of ſpeech, as he ſaith, This is my Body: ſo ſaith he, I am a Door, a Vine, a King, a Way, he ſaith not, I am like a Door, like a Vine, &c.

Then Fecknam ſtood up, and ſaid, I had ſuch a one before me this other day. Alas, theſe places ſerve nothing for your purpoſes. But I perceive ye hang and build on them that be at Oxford.

Haukes. What mean you by that?

Feck. I mean Latimer, Cranmer, and Ridley.

Haukes. I know nothing elſe by them, but that they be both godly and learned.

Fecknam falleth out of his matter to raylng.

Fecknam. Wilt thou truſt to ſuch dolts? One of them hath written a Book, wherein he affirmeth a real preſence in the Sacrament.

Haukes. What he hath done, I know not, but what he doth I know.

Fecknam. Ridley hath preached at Pauls Croſs openly, that the Devil believeth better than you: for he believeth that Chriſt is able of ſtones to make Bread, and ye will not believe, Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, and yet thou buildeſt thy Faith upon them.

Tho. Haukes buildeth his Faith upon no Man.

Haukes. I build my Faith upon no Man, and that ye well know: for if thoſe men, and as many more as they be, ſhould recant, and deny that they have ſaid or done, yet will I ſtand to it, and by this ſhall ye know that I build my Faith upon no man.

Boner. If any of thoſe recant, what will ye ſay to it?

Haukes. When they recant, I will make you an anſwer.

Boner. Then thou wilt ſay as thou doſt now for all that.

Haukes. Yea indeed will I, and that truſt to it, by Gods Grace.

B. Boner judgeth other Men by his own art.

Boner. I dare ſay, Cranmer would recant, ſo that he might have his living. And ſo the Biſhop and Fecknam departed from me with great laughing, and I went again to the Porters lodge.

Talk between Haukes and Chadſey.

Anno 1555.

Another daies talk with D. Chadſey.

The next day came D. Chadſey to the Biſhop and him. The Biſhop declared unto him that I had ſtood ſtubbornly in the defence againſt the chriſtening of my Child, and againſt the Ceremonies of the Church, and that I would not have it Chriſtened but in Engliſh.

Then ſaid D. Chadſey; then he denieth the order of the Catholick Church.

Bon. Yea, he thinketh that there is no Church but in England and in Germany.

The Church of Rome.

Haukes. And ye think that there is no Church, but the Church of Rome.

Chad. What ſay ye to the Church of Rome.

Haukes. I ſay it is a Church of a ſort of vicious Cardinals, Prieſts, Monks and Friars, which I will never credit nor believe.

The Biſhop of Rome.

Chad. What ſay ye to the Biſhop of Rome?

Haukes. From him and all his deteſtable enormities, Good Lord deliver us.

Chad. Marry ſo may we ſay, from K. Henry the eighth, and all his deteſtable enormities, Good Lord deliver us.

Haukes. Where were ye whiles that he lived, that ye would not ſay ſo?

Chad. I was not far.

Haukes. Where were ye in his Sons days?

Chad. In Priſon.

Haukes. It was for your well doing.

Chadſeyes Argument: Chriſt never ſpake Engliſh: ergo, we muſt not pray in Engliſh.

Boner. He will by no means come within my Chappel, nor hear Maſs: for neither the Maſs, neither the Sacrament of the Altar can he abide, neither will he have any ſervice but in Engliſh.

Chad. Chriſt never ſpake in Engliſh.

An Inſtance given againſt Chad.

Haukes. Neither ſpake he ever any Latin but always in ſuch a Tongue as the People might be edified thereby. And Paul ſaith, That Tongues profit us nothing. He maketh a ſimilitude between the Pipe and the Harp, and except it be underſtood what the trumphet meaneth, who can prepare himſelf to the battel: ſo if I hear the Tongue which I do not underſtand, what profit have I thereby? no more than he hath by the Trumpet, that knoweth not what it meaneth.

Chad. If he underſtand Pauls ſaying, he ſpeaketh it under a prophecy, If one prophecy to you in Tongues, &c.

Haukes. Forſooth Paul ſpeaketh plainly of Tongues: for Tongues ſerve not for them that believe.

Chad. I tell you Paul ſpeaketh altogether upon prophecy.

Haukes. Paul maketh a diſtinction between prophecying and Tongues, ſaying, That if any Man ſpeak with Tongues, let it be by two or three at the moſt, and let another interpret it. But if there be no Interpreter, let them keep ſilence in the Congregation, and let himſelf pray unto God: and then let the Prophets ſpeak two or three, and that by courſe, and let the other judge: and if any Revelation be made to him that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace: ſo that it ſeemeth that Paul maketh a diſtinction between Tongues and prophecying.

Latin ſervice.

Boner. The order was taken in the Catholick Church that the Latin Tongue ſhould ſerve thorow the whole World, becauſe that they ſhould pray all generally together in one Tongue, and that to avoid all contention and ſtrife, and to have one univerſal order thorow the whole World.

Haukes. This did your Councels of Rome conclude.

Boner. Underſtand ye what the general Councels of Rome meant?

The general Councels of Rome.

Haukes. Indeed all your general Councels of Rome be in Latin, and I am an Engliſh Man: therefore I have nothing to do with them.

Chad. Ye are too blame, being an unlearned Man to reprove all the Councels thorowout all the whole World.

Haukes. I reprove them not, but Paul rebuketh them, ſaying, If any Man Preach any other Doctrine than that which I have taught, do you hold him accurſed.

Chad. Hath any Man Preached any other Doctrine unto you?

Haukes.

Anno 1555.

Other doctrine taught in the Church of Rome than ever Paul taught.

Haukes. Yea, I have been taught another Goſpel ſince I came into this Houſe.

Chad. What Goſpel have ye been taught?

Haukes. Praying to Saints, and to our Lady, and truſt in the Maſs, holy Bread, holy Water, and in Idols.

Chad. He that teaches you ſo, teaches you not amiſs.

Haukes. Curſed be he that teacheth me ſo: for I will not truſt him nor believe him.

Boner. You ſpeak of Idols, and you know not what they mean.

Idols.

Haukes. God hath taught us what they be: for whatſoever is made, graven, or deviſed by mans hand, contrary to Gods Word, the ſame is an Idol. What ſay you to that?

Chad. What be thoſe that ye are ſo offended withal?

The Croſs.

Haukes. The Croſs of Wood, Silver, Copper, or Gold, &c.

Boner. What ſay ye to that?

Haukes. I ſay it is an Idol. What ſay you to it?

Images.

Boner. I ſay every Idol is an Image, but every Image is not an Idol.

Haukes. I ſay, what difference is there between an Idol and Image?

Note here Boners definition of an Idol.

Boner. If it be a falſe God, and an Image made of him, that is an Idol: but if an Image be made of God himſelf, it is no Idol, but an Image, becauſe he is a true God.

Note here how groſly Chadſey underſtandeth the words of S. Paul.

Haukes. Lay your Image of your true God and of your falſe God together, and ye ſhall ſee the difference. Have not your Images feet and go not, eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, hands and feel not, mouths and ſpeak not? and even ſo have your Idols.

Chad. God forbid, ſaith S. Paul, that I ſhould rejoyce in any thing elſe, but in the Croſs of Chriſt Jeſus.

Haukes. Do ye underſtand Paul ſo? Do ye underſtand Paul? Unto the which he anſwered me never a word.

Boner. Where can we have a godlier remembrance when we ride by the way, than to ſee the Croſs?

Haukes. If the Croſs were ſuch a profit unto us, why did not Chriſts Diſciples take it up and ſet it on a Pole, and carry it in proceſſion, with Salve, feſta dies?

Chad. It was taken up.

Haukes. Who took it up? Helene, as ye ſay; for ſhe ſent a piece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the Viſitors when that Houſe was ſuppreſſed, and the piece of the holy Croſs (which the Religious had in ſuch eſtimation, and had robbed many a Soul, committing Idolatry to it) was called for, and when it was proved, and all come to all, it was but a piece of a Lath covered over with Copper, double gilded as it had been clean Gold.

The People ſeduced by falſe pieces of the holy Croſs.

Boner. Fie, fie, I dare ſay thou ſlandereſt it.

Haukes. I know it to be true, and do not believe the contrary. And thus did the Biſhop and the Doctor depart in a great fume: and Chadſey ſaid unto me, as he was about to depart, It is pity that thou ſhouldeſt live, or any ſuch as thou art. I anſwered, In this caſe I deſire not to live, but rather to dye.

Note here diſcreetly the ſpirit of Chadſey.

Chad. Ye dye boldly, becauſe ye would glory in your death, as Joan Butcher did.

Haukes. What Joan Butcher did, I have nothing to do withal: but I would my part might be to Morrow. God make you in a better mind, ſaid they both, and ſo they departed, and I went to the Porters Lodge with my Keeper.

The next day Dr. Chadſey preached in the Biſhops Chappel, and did not begin his Sermon until all the Service was done: and then came the Porter for me, and ſaid, My Lord would have you come to the Sermon, and ſo I went to the Chappel Door, and ſtood without the Door.

Boner. Is not this Fellow come?

Haukes. Yes I am here.

Boner. Come in man.

T. Haukes Will not come in to Boners Chappel.

Haukes. No, that I will not. He called again, and I anſwered, I will come no nearer, and ſo I ſtood at the Door. Then ſaid the Biſhop go to your Sermon.

Then Dr. Chadſey put the ſtole about his Neck, and carried the holy Water-Sprincle unto the Biſhop, who bleſſed him and gave him holy Water, and ſo he went to his Sermon.

His Theme. Chadſeyes Sermon.

The Text that he treated on was the 16. of Matthew, Whom do men ſay that I the Son of man am? Peter ſaid, Some ſay that thou art Helias, ſome ſay that thou art John Baptiſt, ſome ſay thou art one of the Prophets. But whom ſay ye that I am? Then ſaid Peter, Thou art Chriſt the Son of the ever-living God. Then left he the Text there, and ſaid, Whoſe Sins ſoever ye bind, are bound: which Authority (ſaid he) is left to the Heads of the Church, as my Lord here is one, and ſo unto all the reſt that be underneath him. But the Church hath been much kicked at ſith the beginning: yet kick the Hereticks, ſpurn the Hereticks never ſo much, the Church doth ſtand and flouriſh. And then he went ſtraitway to the Sacrament, and ſaid his mind on it, exalting it above Heaven (as the moſt of them do) and ſo returned to his place again, ſaying, Whoſe Sins ye do remit, are remitted and forgiven: and ſo he applied it to the Biſhops and the Prieſts to forgive Sins, and ſaid, All that be of the Church will come and receive the ſame. And this he proved by S. John in the 11. Chap. ſaying, that Chriſt came to raiſe Lazarus, which when he was riſen, was bound in bands: then ſaid Chriſt to them that were in Authority (who were his Diſciples) go ye and looſe him, looſe him you. And this was the effect of his Sermon, applying all to them, that they have the ſame Authority that Chriſt ſpake of to his Apoſtles, and ſo ended his Sermon, and they to Dinner.

Chadſey exalteth the Sacrament.

Scripture clerkly applied.

Another Communication between Tho. Haukes and the Biſhop.

AND after Dinner I was called into the Chappel, whereas were certain of the Queens Servants, and other Strangers, whom I did not know.

Boner. Haukes, how like you the Sermon?

Haukes. As I like all the reſt of his Doctrine.

Boner. What? are ye not edified thereby?

Haukes. No ſurely.

Boner. It was made only becauſe of you.

Another talk between Tho. Haukes and Boner and the Queens men.

Haukes. Why? then am I ſorry that ye had no more Hereticks here, as ye call them: I am ſorry that ye have beſtowed ſo much labour on one, and ſo little regarded.

Boner. Well, I will leave you here, for I have buſineſs, I pray you talk with him: for if ye could do him good (ſaid he) I would be glad.

This the Biſhop ſpake to the Queens men, who ſaid unto me, Alas, what mean you to trouble your ſelf about ſuch matters againſt the Queens proceedings?

T. Haukes refuſeth to talk with the Queens men.

Haukes. Thoſe matters have I anſwered before them that be in Authority: and unleſs I ſee you have a farther Commiſſion, I will anſwer you nothing at all. Then ſaid the Biſhops Men, (which were many) my Lord hath commanded you to talk with them.

Haukes. If my Lord will talk with me himſelf, I will anſwer him. They cried, Fagots, burn him, hang him, to Priſon with him; it is pity that he liveth, lay Irons upon him, and with a great noiſe they ſpake theſe words. Then in the midſt of all their rage I departed from them, and went to the Porters Lodge again.

The next days Talk.

THE next day the Biſhop called me into his Chamber, and ſaid, Ye have been with me a great while, and ye are never the better, but worſe and worſe: and therefore I will delay the time no longer, but ſend you to Newgate.

Another days Talk between Haukes and Boner.

Haukes. My Lord, you can do me no better pleaſure.

Boner. Why? would you ſo fain go to Priſon?

Haukes. Truly I did look for none other, when I came to your hands.

Boner. Come on your ways, ye ſhall ſee what I have written. Then did he ſhew me certain Articles, and theſe are the Contents of them:

Boner ſheweth Haukes Articles in Writing.

Whether the Catholick Church do teach and believe, that Chriſts real Preſence doth remain in the Sacrament or no, after the words of Conſecration, according to the words of Saint Paul, which are theſe; Is not the Bread which we break the partaking of the Body of Chriſt, and the Cup which we bleſs, the partaking of the Blood of Chriſt? which if it were not ſo, Paul would never have ſaid it.

Haukes. What your Church doth, I cannot tell: but I am ſure that the holy Catholick Church doth never ſo take it, nor believe it.

Boner. Whether doth the Catholick Church teach and believe the Baptiſm that now is uſed in the Church, or no?

Anſwer of Haukes to the firſt Article. Anſwer to the ſecond Article.

Haukes. I anſwered to it, as I did to the other queſtion before. Then did the Biſhop with much flattery counſel me to be perſwaded, and to keep me out of Priſon, which I utterly refuſed, and ſo we departed. And I ſuppoſed that the next day I ſhould have gone to Priſon, and ſo I had, ſave for the Archdeacon of Canterbury, whoſe name is Harpsfield, whom the Biſhop had deſired to talk with me, and began to perſwade me concerning the Sacrament, and the Ceremonies: and after much talk he ſaid, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the ſame Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, which did hang upon the Croſs.

Talk between Haukes and D. Harpsfield, Archdeacon of Canterbury.

A queſtion put to Harpsfield.

Haukes. He was upon the Croſs both alive and dead: which of them was the Sacrament?

Harpſ. The Archdeacon anſwered, alive.

Haukes. How do you prove that?

Harpſ. You muſt believe. Doth not S. John ſay, He is condemned already that believeth not?

Haukes. St. John ſaith, He that believeth not in the Son of God is already condemned, but he ſaith not, He that believeth not in the Sacrament is already condemned.

Harpſ. There is no talk with you: for ye are both without Faith and Learning, and therefore I will talk no more with you in Scripture.

Another queſtion put to Harpsfield, why the Rood-loft is ſet between the Church and the Chancel Haukes. Then two that ſtood by bade me enter further in talk with him; and then ſaid I unto him, Why is the Rood-loft ſet betwixt the body of the Church and the Chancel?

Harpſ. I cannot tell: for ye have asked a queſtion which you cannot aſſoil your ſelf.

Haukes. Yes that I can: for this ſaith one of your own Doctors, That the body of the Church doth repreſent the Church Militant, and the Chancel the Church Triumphant: and ſo becauſe we cannot go from the Church Militant to the Church Triumphant, but that we muſt bear the Croſs of Chriſt; this is the cauſe of the Rood-loft, being between the body of the Church and the Chancel.

Harpſ. This is well and Clerkly concluded.

Haukes. As all the reſt of your Doctrine is; and ſo with many perſwaſions on his part we ended, and ſo departed: and I to the Porters Lodge again.

Another days Talk.

Haukes ſent to the Gate-Houſe at Weſtminſter with the Biſhops Warrant.

THE next day in the Morning, which was the firſt day of July, the Biſhop did call me himſelf from the Porters Lodge, commanding me to make me ready to go to Priſon, and to take ſuch things with me as I had of mine own. And I ſaid, I do neither intend to bribe, neither to ſteal, God willing. Then he did write my Warrant to the Keeper of the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter, and delivered it to Harpsfield, who with his own man and one of the Biſhops men brought me to Priſon, and delivered the Warrant and me both to the Keeper: and this was contained in the Warrant.

The Biſhops Warrant.

I will and command you, that you receive him who cometh named in this Warrant, and that he be kept as a ſafe Priſoner, and that no man ſpeak with him, and that ye deliver him to no man, except it be the Council, or to a Juſtice: for he is a Sacramentary, and one that ſpeaketh againſt Baptiſm, a ſeditious man, a perillous man to be abroad in theſe perillous days. And thus was I received, and they departed. And there I remained thirteen days, and then the Biſhop ſent two of his Men unto me, ſaying, My Lord would be glad to know how ye do. I anſwered them, I do like a poor Priſoner. They ſaid, My Lord would know, whether ye be the ſame man that ye were when ye departed. I ſaid, I am no Changling. They ſaid, My Lord would be glad that ye ſhould do well. I ſaid, if my Lord will me any good, I pray you deſire him to ſuffer my Friends to come to me. So they ſaid they would ſpeak for me, but I heard no more of them.

The Biſhops men ſent to Haukes in the Gate-Houſe.

Anno 1555.

This is the firſt Examination of me Thomas Haukes, being examined by Edmund Boner, then Biſhop of London, and by his Chaplains and Doctors at Fulham, four miles from London, where I lay, till I came to Priſon to Weſtminſter: and after his two Men had been with me, I heard no more of him till the third day of September.

Here followeth the ſecond time of mine Examination, the which was the third day of September, for the Biſhop did ſend his Men for me to come to his Palace of London; and ſo my Keeper and his Men brought me to his Palace the ſame day.

The ſecond time of Haukes his Examination.

THE Biſhop of Wincheſter, then being Chancellor, Preached that day at Pauls-Croſs, and the Biſhop of London ſaid to my Keeper, I think your Man will not go to the Sermon to day.

Haukes. Yes my Lord, I pray you let me go: and that that is good I will receive, and the reſt I will leave behind me, and ſo I went. And when the Sermon was done, I and my Keeper came to the Biſhops Houſe, and there we remained till Dinner was done: and after Dinner the Biſhop called for me, and asked me, if I were the ſame Man that I was before.

Haukes. I am no Changling, nor none will be.

Boner. Ye ſhall find me no Changling neither. And ſo he returned into his Chamber, and there he did write the ſide of a ſheet of Paper, and all that while I ſtood in the great Chamber, and as many with me as might well ſtand in the Chamber. And as I ſtood there, Dr. Smith came unto me, (who once recanted, as it appeared in Print) ſaying, That he would be glad to talk Brotherly with me. I asked him what he was. Then ſaid they that ſtood by, he is Dr. Smith. Then ſaid I, Are you he that did recant? And he ſaid, it was no recantation, but a declaration.

Dr. Smith cometh to Haukes. Dr. Smith's recantation.

Haukes. You were beſt to term it well for your own Honeſty.

Dr. Smith. Shall I term it as it pleaſeth you?

Haukes. To be ſhort with you, I will know whether ye will recant any more or no, before that I talk with you, credit you, or believe you: and ſo I departed from him to the other ſide of the Chamber. Then ſaid the Biſhops Men and his Chaplains, that my Lord commanded me to talk with him. Then they that ſtood by cried with a great noiſe, Hang him, burn him; it is pity that he liveth, that diſobeyeth my Lords commandment.

Miles Huggard's words to T. Haukes

Then ſaid one Miles Huggard, Where prove you that Infants were baptized?

Haukes. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son; and of the Holy Ghoſt. Sir, here is none excepted.

Mr. Huggard. What ſhall we go to teach Children?

Haukes. That word doth trouble you; it might be left out full well: it is too much for you to teach. Is not your name Miles Huggard?

Miles Huggard.

Mr. Hug. So am I called.

Haukes. Be you not a Hoſier, and dwell in Pudding-Lane?

Mr. Hug. Yes that I am, and there I do dwell.

Huggard more meet to eat a Pudding, than to diſpute of Scripture.

Haukes. It ſhould ſeem ſo, for ye can better skill to eat a Pudding, and make a Hoſe, than in Scripture either to anſwer or oppoſe. With that he was in great rage, and did chafe up and down. Then I deſired that ſome man would take ſome pain to walk the Gentleman, he did fret ſo for anger. Then one that ſtood by me (who was Parſon of Horn-Church and Rumford in Eſſex) ſaid, Alas, what do you mean? a young Man to be ſo ſtubborn? there ſeemeth too much Pride in you.

Haukes. Are ye not the Parſon of Horn-Church.

Parſon. Yes that I am.

Haukes. Did you not ſet ſuch a Prieſt in your Benefice?

Parſon. Yes for a ſhift.

Haukes.

Anno 1555.

Haukes. Like will to like; ſuch Maſter, ſuch Man. For I know the Prieſt to be a very vile man, as any could be. I asked the Parſon, what kin he was to the Weather-Cock of Pauls? and he fell into a great Laughter with the reſt of his Companions. He ſaid, that I did Rail.

Parſon of Horn-Church compared to the Weather-Cock of Pauls. Frivolous Queſtion. Eſay 53.

Then ſaid another that ſtood by unto me; what Book have you here? I anſwered, the New Teſtament. May I look in it, ſaid he? Yea, that ye may, ſaid I. And ſo he looked in my Book, and ſaid it was corrupt. I anſwered him, if the things contained in it be true, then are ye falſe Prophets. He ſaid that he would oppoſe me in the firſt word of the Teſtament, ſaying, Here is a generation of Chriſt: and Eſay ſaith, No man can tell his Generation.

Haukes. What meaneth Eſay by that?

I would learn of you, ſaid he.

Haukes. Ye would be angry if the Scholar ſhould teach the Maſter: but if ye will have me to teach you, I will tell you Eſays meaning.

Then ſaid he, No man can tell the Generation between the Father and the Son: but you (I dare ſay) did know it before.

Haukes. Why then Eſay denieth not the Generation.

Then ſaid he, Why is Chriſt called Chriſt?

Haukes. Becauſe he is a Meſſias.

Then ſaid he, Why is he called a Meſſias?

Haukes. Becauſe he was ſo prophecied by the Prophets.

Then ſaid he, Why is your Book called a Book?

Haukes. Theſe words do breed more ſtrife than godly edifying.

Beware, ſaid he, that ye do not decline from the Church, for if you do, you will prove your ſelf an Heretick.

Difference between the true Prophets and the falſe. The falſe Prophets ſay, Dicit Eccleſia, Thus ſaith the Church. The true Prophets ſay, Dicit Dominus, Thus ſaith the Lord.

Haukes. Even as ye do call us Hereticks, that do incline to Chriſt's Church from your Church: ſo are ye all falſe Prophets that do decline from Chriſts Church to your own Church. And by this ſhall all men know you to be falſe Prophets, if ye ſay, This ſaith the Church: and will not ſay, This ſaith our Lord. And ſo he went his way, as though he had a Flea in his Ear.

Then came another and ſaid unto me, He would talk with me; for he perceived (as he ſaid) that I was angry, and out of patience.

Haukes. I will ſee your Commiſſion, or ever I talk with you, or with any man more. For I wiſt not how to be rid of them, they came ſo thick about me. For I ſaid, that I came to talk with my Lord, and not with any of them.

The Biſhop writeth Hauke's Confeſſion.

With that came the Biſhop, bringing a Letter in his hand, the which he had written in my Name, and read it unto me after this manner: I Thomas Haukes do here confeſs and declare before my ſaid Ordinary Edmund Biſhop of London, that the Maſs is abominable and deteſtable, and full of all Superſtition; and alſo as concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt (commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar) that Chriſt is in no part thereof, but only in Heaven: this I have believed, and this I do believe, &c.

Haukes. Stop there my Lord: what I have believed, What have you to do withal? But what I do believe, to that ſtand I, and will. Then he took his Pen, and ſaid that he would ſcrape it out for my pleaſure, and ſo he did to my thinking.

Then he went further with his writing, and ſaid, I Tho. Haukes have talked with my ſaid Ordinary, and with certain good, godly and learned Men. Notwithſtanding I ſtand ſtill in mine Opinion.

Haukes. Shall I grant you to be good, godly and learned Men, and yet grant my ſelf to ſtand in a contrary Opinion? No, I will not grant you to be good, godly and learned Men.

Boner. Ye will grant that ye have talked with us: The other I will put out for your pleaſure. Then ſaid all his Doctors, If your Lordſhip be ruled by him, he will cauſe you to put out all together: and then he read more to me. Here unto this Bill have I ſet my hand; and then he offered me the Bill and his Pen, and bade me ſet my hand to it.

Haukes. Ye get not my hand to any thing of your making or deviſing.

Tho. Haukes denieth to ſet his hand to Boner's Writing.

Boner. Wilt not thou ſet to thy hand? It ſhall be to thy ſhame for the denying of it.

And then he called all his Doctors, and ſaid, he would have every mans hand to it that was in the Chamber; and ſo he had all their hands to it and ſaid: He that will not ſet his hand to it, I would he were hanged, and ſo ſaid all his Chaplains and Doctors with a great noiſe.

Boner in a fume with Haukes.

Then the Biſhop thruſt me on the Breaſt with great anger; and ſaid he would be even with me; and with all ſuch proud Knaves in Eſſex.

Haukes. Ye ſhall do no more than God ſhall give you leave.

Boner. This Jeer ſhall not be unpuniſhed, truſt to it.

Haukes. As for your Curſings, Railings and Blaſphemings, I care not for them: for I know the Moths and Worms ſhall eat you, as they eat Cloth or Wool.

Biſhop. I will be even with you, when time ſhall come.

Haukes. You may in your malice deſtroy a man: but when ye have done, ye cannot do ſo much as make a finger, and ye be meetly even with ſome of us already.

Boner. If I do thee any wrong, take the Law of me.

Haukes. Solomon ſaith, Go not to Law with a Judge; For he will judge according to his own honour.

Boner. Solomon ſaith, Give not a Fool an anſwer.

Haukes. What, do you count me a Fool?

Boner. Yea, by my Troth do I, and ſo doſt thou me too: but God forgive thee, * and ſo do I.

* And even now ye ſaid, you would be even with him.

Haukes. Thought is free, my Lord. Then took Boner the Bill and read it again; and when he ſaw that he could not have my hand to it, then he would have had me to take it into my hand, and to give it to him again.

Haukes. What needeth that Ceremony? Neither ſhall it come into my hand, heart or mind. Then he wrapt it up, and put it in his Boſom, and in a great anger went his way, and called for his Horſe and went to Horſe-back, for the ſame day he rode in Viſitation into Eſſex: and ſo went I to Priſon, from whence I came with my Keeper. And this was the ſecond time of my Examination.

Written by me Tho. Haukes, who deſireth all Faithful men and Brethren to pray unto God, to ſtrengthen me in his Truth unto the end. Pray, pray, pray, gentle Brethren pray.

The publick Examination of Tho. Haukes.

AFter all theſe private Conferences, Perſwaſions and long Debatings had with T. Haukes in the Biſhops Houſe, as hitherto hath been declared, the Biſhop ſeeing no hope to win him to his wicked ways, was fully ſet to proceed openly againſt him after the ordinary courſe of his Popiſh Law. Whereupon T. Haukes ſhortly after was cited with the reſt of his other Fellows above-ſpecified, to wit, T. Tomkins, S. Knight, W. Pygot, J. Lawrence, and W. Hunter, to appear in the Biſhops Conſiſtory, the 8. day of February, this preſent year, viz. 1555. Upon which appearance, was laid againſt him in like order as to the other, firſt the Bill of his Confeſſion, written with Boner's hand, to the which Bill ye heard before how the bleſſed Servant of God denied to ſubſcribe.

Tho. He cited, the Biſhop Conſiſt.

The Regiſtro. the firſt day's Seſſion againſt T. Haukes.

After which Bill of Confeſſion, being read, and he conſtantly ſtanding to the ſaid Confeſſion, the Biſhop then aſſigned him with the other five the next day following, which was the 9*th* of February, to appear before him again, to give a reſolute Anſwer what they would ſtick unto. Which day being come, and theſe foreſaid ſix Priſoners being ſeverally called before the Biſhop, at the coming of Thomas Haukes, the Biſhop willed him to remember what was ſaid to him yeſterday, and now while he had time and ſpace, to adviſe with himſelf what he would anſwer, for he ſtood upon Life and Death. Well quoth Mr. Haukes again, I will willingly receive whatſoever ſhall be put upon me. Then were certain other Interrogatories or Articles commenced againſt him by the ſaid Biſhop (in like manner as to the other) to the number of four, with another bill alſo which Boner brought out of his Boſom, containing private matters againſt the ſaid Thomas Haukes, which the Biſhop called Hereſies and Errors, but we may better call them Chriſtian Verities. To the which matter being read, the ſaid Haukes anſwered openly again, ſaying that it was true, and that he was glad it was ſo true as it was, with moe words to the like effect. And this was in the forenoon, the ix. day of February. In the afternoon again the ſaid Haukes appearing and hearing the foreſaid bill of his Confeſſion, with the Articles and Interrogatories read unto him, with like Conſtancie in anſwering again to the Biſhop; My Lord (ſaid he) as you being my Friend have cauſed theſe my ſayings to be written; ſo do you cauſe them to be read: and yet I will never go from them. And then being exhorted by the Biſhop, with many fair words, to return again to the Boſom of the Mother Church: No my Lord (ſaid he) that will I not: for if I had an Hundred Bodies, I would ſuffer them all to be torn in pieces, rather than I will abjure or recant. And ſo continuing ſtill in the ſame ſong, notwithſtanding that the Doctors and Lawyers were ever calling upon him to come again to the Unity of the Church, he ever kept them off with this Anſwer, that he would never go from the belief he was in, ſo long as he believed. Whereupon Boner at the laſt read the Sentence of Death upon him, and ſo was he condemned the ſame day with the reſidue of his fellowes, which was the ninth of February. Nevertheleſs his execution was prolonged, and he remained in priſon till the 10. day of June. Then was he committed to the hands and charge of the Lord Rich, who, being aſſiſted with power ſufficient of the Worſhipful of the Shire, had the foreſaid Thomas Haukes down into Eſſex, with Six other fellow priſoners whoſe Stories hereafter follow, there to ſuffer Martyrdom, Haukes at Cox-Hall, the other ſeverally in other ſeveral places. Anno 1555.

Thomas Haukes by the way uſe much exhortation to his Friends, and whenſoever opportunity ſerved to talk with them he would familiarly Admoniſh them.

A little before his Death, certain there were of his familiar Acquaintance and Friends, who frequented his company more familiarly, which ſeemed not a little to be confirmed both by the example of his conſtancy, and by this talk; yet notwithſtanding, the ſame again, being feared with the ſharpneſs of the puniſhment which he was going to privily, deſired that in the midſt of the Flame he would ſhew them ſome token, if he could, whereby they might be more certain, whether the pain of ſuch burning were ſo great that a man might not therein keep his mind quiet and patient. Which thing he promiſed them to do: and ſo ſecretly between them it was agreed, that if the rage of the pain were tolerable and might be ſuffered, then he ſhould lift up his hands above his head toward Heaven, before he gave up the Ghoſt.

Agreed between Tho. Haukes and Friends to give them a token in the fire, whether the pain of burning were ſo grievous as it ſeemeth or no?

Not long after, when the hour was come, T. Haukes was led away to the place appointed for the ſlaughter, by the L. Rich and his Aſſiſtants who being now come unto the ſtake, there mildly and patiently addreſſed himſelf to the fire, having a ſtrait chain caſt about his middle, with

At the ſight whereof there followed ſuch applauſe and out-cry of the People, and eſpecially of them which underſtood the matter, that the like hath not commonly been heard: and ſo the bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt, ſtraightway ſinking down into the fire, gave up his Spirit, An. 1555. June 10. An Epiſtle to the Congregation, by Thomas Haukes.

A letter of Th. Haukes to the congregation.

GRace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, be alway with you all (my dear Brethren and Siſters in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt) for ever; and his Holy Spirit conduct and lead

you

Anno 1555.

you all in all your doings, that you may always direct your deeds according to his Holy Word; that when he ſhall appear to reward every man according to their works, ye may as obedient Children, be found watching, ready to enter into his everlaſting Kingdom, with your lamps burning, and when the Bridegroom ſhall ſhew himſelf, ye need not to be aſhamed of this life which God hath lent you, which is but tranſitory, vain, and like unto a vapour, that for a ſeaſon appeareth and vaniſheth away: ſo ſoon paſſeth away all our terreſtriall honour, glory and felicity. For all Fleſh (ſaith the Prophet) is graſs, and all his glory as the flower of the field, which for a ſeaſon ſheweth her beauty, and as ſoon as the Lord bloweth upon it, it withereth away, and departeth. For in this tranſitory and dangerous wilderneſs, we are as Pilgrims and ſtrangers following the footſteps of Moſes, among many unſpeakable dangers, beholding nothing with our outward man, but all vain vanities and vexation of mind, ſubject to hunger, cold, nakedneſs, bonds, ſickneſs, loſs, labours, baniſhment, in danger of that dreadful Dragon, and his ſinful ſeed, to be devoured, tempted and tormented, who ceaſeth not behind every buſh to lay a bait, when we walk awry to have his pleaſure upon us, caſting abroad his apples in all places, times, and ſeaſons, to ſee if Adam will be allured and enticed to leave the living God and his moſt holy commandments, whereby he is aſſured of everlaſting life, promiſing the World at will, to all that will fall down in all ages, and for a meſs of pottage ſell and ſet at naught the Everlaſting Kingdom of Heaven. So frail is Fleſh and Blood; And in eſpecial Iſrael is moſt ready to walk awry, when he his filled with all manner of Riches, as ſaith the Prophet.

The manifold danger which a true Chriſtian hath to paſs through in this World.

Therefore I am bold in bonds (as entirely deſiring your everlaſting health and felicity) to warn you, and moſt heartily deſire you to watch and pray: For our eſtate is dangerous, and requireth continual prayer. For on the high Mountains, doth not grow moſt plenty of graſs, neither are the higheſt trees fartheſt from danger, but ſeldom ſure, and always ſhaken of every wind that bloweth. Such a deceitful thing (ſaith our Saviour) is Honour and Riches, that without grace it choketh up the good ſeed ſown on his creatures, and blindeth ſo their ſeeing, that they go groping at noon day in darkneſs: it maketh a man think himſelf ſomewhat, that is nothing at all. For though for our Honour we eſteem our ſelves and ſtand in our own light, yet when we ſhall ſtand before the living God, there ſhall be no reſpect of perſons. For riches helpeth not in the day of vengeance: neither can we make the Lord partial for money. But as ye have miniſtred unto the Saints, ſo ſhall ye receive the reward, which I am fully perſwaded and aſſured ſhall be plenteouſly poured upon you all, for the great goodneſs ſhewed unto the Servants of the Living God. And I moſt heartily beſeech Almighty God to pour forth a plenteous reward upon you for the ſame, and that he will aſſiſt you with his Holy Spirit in all your doings, that ye may grow, as ye have begun, unto ſuch a perfection as may be to Gods Honour, your own ſalvation, and the ſtrengthening of the weak members of Chriſt. For though the World rage, and blaſpheme the elect of God, ye know that it did ſo unto Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and to all that were in the Primitive Church, and ſhall be unto the Worlds End,

The higher in dignity the nearer to danger.

Prov. 11. Riches help not before God

Gods elect always bear the ſlander in this World.

Therefore believe in the light while ye have it, leſt it be taken away from you; if you ſhall ſeem to neglect the great Mercy of God that hath been opened unto you, and your hearts conſented unto it, that it is the very and only truth pronounced by Gods only Son Jeſus Chriſt, by the good will of our Heavenly Father. Therefore I ſay in the Bowels of my Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſtick faſt unto it; let it never depart out of your hearts and converſation, that you with us, and we with you at the great day, being one flock, as we have one Shephard, may riſe to the life immortall, through Jeſus Chriſt our only Saviour. Amen.

Yours in him that liveth for ever, Thomas Haukes.

Here followeth another letter of Thomas Haukes, ſent to his Wife after his condemnation, being priſoner in Newgate: the copie whereof is this.

The copie of Thomas Haukes Letter to his Wife.

A letter of Tho. Haukes unto his Wife.

GRace be with you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which gave himſelf for our ſins, to deliver us from this preſent Evil World, through the good will of God our Father, to whom be praiſe for ever and ever, Amen.

My dear yoke-fellow in the Lord, foraſmuch as the Lord hath not only called me to work in his vineyard, but hath alſo fulfilled his good work in me (I truſt to his glory, and to the comfort of all thoſe that look for his coming) I thought it my duty, dear yoke-fellow, to write unto you ſome leſſons out of Gods Book; and if you will direct your ſelf thereafter, doubt not of it but God, who refuſeth none that will come to him with their whole heart, will aſſiſt you with his Holy Spirit, and direct you in all his ways, to his Honour and Glory, who grant it for his mercy ſake, Amen.

Leſſons for inſtructions to his wife.

Firſt, I exhort you to fear God, to ſerve and honour his holy Name, to love him with all your heart, ſoul, and mind, to believe faithfully all his promiſes, to lay ſure hold upon them, that in all your troubles whatſoever they are, ye may run ſtraight to the great mercy of God, and he will bring you forth of them: Keep you within his wings; then ſhall ye be ſure that neither Divel, Fleſh, nor Hell ſhall be able to hurt you.

But take heed; If you will not keep his Holy Precepts and Laws, and to the uttermoſt of your power call for the help of God to walk in the ſame, but will leave them, and run to all abominations with the wicked World, and do as they do; then be ſure to have your part with the wicked World in the burning Lake that never ſhall be quenched. Therefore beware of Idolatry, which doth moſt of all ſtink before the face of Almighty God, and was of all good men moſt deteſted from the beginning of the World. For the which, what Kingdoms, Nations, and Realms God hath puniſhed with moſt terrible plagues, with fire, brimſton, hunger, ſword, and peſtilence, &c. to the utter ſubverſion of them, it is manifeſtly to be ſeen though the whole Bible. Yea, his own peculiar People, whom he had done ſo much for, when they fell from him, and went and ſerved other gods, contrary to his commandment, he utterly deſtroyed and rooted them out from off the Earth: and as many as died in that damnable ſtate, not repenting their abominable evil, he threw them into the Pit of Hell. Again, how he hath preſerved thoſe that abhor Superſtition and Idolatry, and that have only taken hold upon God with their whole heart, to ſerve him, and to love him, to fear him, &c. it is moſt manifeſtly to be ſeen even from the beginning, out of what great dangers he hath ever delivered them: yea when all hope of deliverance was paſt as touching their expectation, even then in the ſight of all his enemies would he work his godly will and purpoſe, to the utter amazing and deſtruction of all thoſe that were his manifeſt enemies.

He exhorteth her to beware of Idolatry.

Idolatry puniſhed of God.

Further, I exhort you in the bowels of Chriſt that you will exerciſe and be ſtedfaſt in prayer; for prayer is the onely mean to pierce the Heavens, to obtain at the hand of God whatſoever we deſire, ſo that it be asked in faith. Oh what notable things do we read in Scriptures that have been obtained through fervent prayer? We are commanded to call upon him for help, aid, and ſuccour in neceſſities and troubles, and he hath promiſed to help us. Again, they that will not call upon him with their whole heart, but upon other dead creatures, in whom there is no help (for there was none found worthy to open the book, but only the Lamb Chriſt which was killed for our ſins) I ſay, who that will refuſe his help, muſt even by the terrible Judgments of God come utterly to confuſion: as it hath, and is daily manifeſt to be ſeen. And whatſoever you deſire of God in your prayer ask it for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, for whom and in whom God, hath promiſed to give us all things neceſſary. And though that which we ask come not by and by at the firſt and ſecond calling, yet continue ſtill knocking, and he will at the length open his Treaſures of mercy, ſo that ye ſhall be ſure to obtain; for he hath ſo promiſed, if ye continue in faith, hoping ſurely in him. Theſe former leſſons, with all ſuch inſtructions as I have told you by mouth,

Exhortation to prayer.

Praying to God, and not to creatures.

To continue in prayer, and to pray only in the name of Chriſt.

I do wiſh that you would moſt earneſtly learn; and then I doubt not, but God who is the giver of all grace, will aſſiſt you in all your doings, that ye may be found worthy of his Kingdom, which is prepared through Chriſt.

Care for his Children.

Further, where it hath pleaſed God to ſend us Children: my deſire is that they may be brought up in the fear of God, and in his Laws. And this is to certifie you, that ye deliver in any wiſe my Eldeſt Son unto M. Throgmorton, who upon his good will hath promiſed me to bring him up according to my deſire; and (I truſt) as God hath put into his heart. See therefore that ye deliver him in any wiſe without delay: and as for the other, if ye ſhall ſeem to be burdened with him (which I think nature will not ſuffer) my deſire is, that it be brought up in the fear of God to the uttermoſt of your indeavour, with ſome honeſt man that hath the fear of God before his eyes, and let us give thanks unto God which hath given them us beſeeching him that they may be counted worthy to be of that flock that ſhall ſtand on the Right Hand of the Majeſty of God, when he ſhall judg the World, Amen.

He meaneth M. Clement Throgmorton, who deſired to have the bringing up of his Child.

Yet once again I warn you, that ye continue in fervent prayer, as I ſaid before; then ſhall ye be ſure, that God even of his own mercy, according as he hath promiſed, will be an Husband unto you, and provide better for you than ever I was able to do: yea, he will cauſe all men that fear him to pitie you, to help you, to ſuccour you in all your neceſſities, ſo that if any will do you wrong, he will be avenged on him. Moreover, I wiſh you to keep company with thoſe of whom ye may learn to come to a more perfect knowledge in God, and I doubt not but God will provide that ſuch will be glad to receive you, if you ſhall profeſs and go forward in his truth.

Keeping of good company.

Finally, and to make an end, I deſire you that ye take heed with whom ye couple your ſelf. See that he be a man that feareth God, loveth his Laws, and will walk in the ſame to the uttermoſt of his power: ſuch a one as can be content to love you, and to care for you. Take heed he be no brawler, no drunkard, no wicked perſon, not given to filthineſs, no worldling, no dicer nor carder. In fine, no filthy perſon, but chuſe you ſuch a one as God may be glorified in both your lives. And again on your part, love him, ſerve him, obey him in all godlineſs, as long as God ſhall give you life in this World. Then ſhall ye both be ſure to obtain that Kingdom which God the Father hath prepared, and Jeſus Chriſt obtained for you, that never ſhall have end, where I truſt to abide your coming, Amen.

Exhortation to take heed whom ſhe marrieth, and that ſhe marry in the Lord.

By your Husband, Thomas Haukes.

Ye heard before in the Letter of Tho. Haukes written to his Wife, mention made concerning his Eldeſt Son to be ſent to M. Throgmorton. Now what he writeth to the ſaid M. Throgmorton touching the ſame matter, by this his Letter to the ſaid party hereunder enſuing, may appear.

Another letter of Thomas Haukes written to M. Clement Throgmorton.

GRace, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, be with you, and aſſiſt you in all your thoughts, words, and works, that be in all things, as moſt worthy, may be glorified, and that the bleſſing of Abraham may be poured plenteouſly on you and all your poſterity.

Whereas the Love of God hath moved you to require my Son to be brought up before your eyes, and the ſelf ſame love hath alſo moved me in like caſe to leave him in your hands, as unto a Father in mine Abſence, I ſhall require you in Gods behalf according to your promiſes, that ye will ſee him brought up in the Fear of the Lord, and inſtructed in the knowledge of his Holy Word, that he may thereby learn to leave the evil, and know the good, and alwayes be pricked forward with Fatherly Inſtructions to follow my Footſteps, that as Almighty God hath made me worthy through his ſpecial grace to work his will in Obedience, he may learn to follow me his Father in the like, to Gods Honour and Praiſe: And this I require you in Gods behalf to fulfill, or cauſe to be fulfilled, as ye before the living God will make Anſwer for the ſame. I have left for the Child certain Books which ſhall be delivered unto you, wherein his Inſtruction and Salvation lieth, if he learn and practiſe the ſame. And thus moſt humbly beſeeching you once again, to be as good to him, as your promiſe was unto me, that is, to be a Father, and a wall of defence unto him in all troubles, I leave him in your hand through the Lord Jeſus, and deſire him to bleſs both him and you according to his good promiſe: and all that good which ye ſhall do unto him, I ſhall moſt heartily deſire the everlaſting God to recompence unto you in his Kingdom, where I hope to meet both him and you among all Gods Elect. To which God be all Praiſe, Honour, and Glory, Amen.

Yours and all mens in Chriſt Jeſus,
Thomas Haukes.

The Hiſtory of Thomas Wats, examined, tried, and burnt for the truth of the Goſpel.

THomas Wats of Billerica, within the Country of Eſſex, of the Doceſs of London, was by his occupation a Linnen Draper: who before he was apprehended, had ſold and made away his cloth in his ſhop, and diſpoſed his things being ſet in order to his Wife and Children, and gave away much of his cloth unto the poor. For he looked always to be taken by Gods Adverſaries and his, as ſhortly after came indeed to paſs: ſo that upon the 26. day of April, he was apprehended and brought before the Lord Rich, and other Commiſſioners at Chelmsford, and there being accuſed for not coming to the Church, was upon the ſame examined before the Lord Rich, Henry Tyrel, Sir Anthony Brown, Edmund Tyrel, Thomas Mildmay, John Wiſeman, Roger Appleton, Richard Weſton, Juſtice Gaudy, &c. The ſumme and principal effect of which examination, hereunder followeth briefly expreſſed.

June 10. The Story of Thomas Wats, Mar. 1555.

Tho. Wats diſpoſeth his goods before he ſhould be apprehended.

The Examination of Thoms Wats before the Lord Rich, and others.

WHen this Thomas Wats came before the Lord Rich and other the Juſtices, whoſe Names are ſpecified in the letter following (which they ſent unto the Biſhop of London againſt him) at the Seſſions at Chelmsford, the Lord Rich ſaid theſe Words or the like in effect unto him.

The examination of Tho. Wats before the Lord Rich, and other the Queens Commiſſioners.

Wats, ye be brought hither, as I underſtand, becauſe of diſobedience to the King and the Queens Laws. Ye will not come to the Church, ye will not hear Maſs, &c. but have your Conventicles a ſort of you in corners, contrary to the Kings and Queens proceedings. Unto which his words Wats anſwered and ſaid.

The words of the Lord Rich to Tho. Wats

My Lord, if I have offended a Law, I am ſubject here to the Law. Then Anthony Brown Juſtice ſaid unto him; Wats, I pray thee tell me who hath been thy Schoolmaſter to teach thee this geer, or where didſt thou firſt learn this Religion? Forſooth, quoth Wats, even of you, Sir: you taught it me, and none more than you. For in King Edwards days in open Seſſions you ſpake againſt this Religion now uſed, no Preacher more. You then ſaid the Maſs was abominable, and all their Trumpery beſides, wiſhing and earneſtly exhorting that none ſhould believe therein, and that our belief ſhould be only in Chriſt: and you ſaid then whoſoever ſhould bring in any ſtrange Nation to rule here, it were Treaſon, and not to be ſuffered. Then ſaid Brown to my Lord Rich, he belies me my Lord. What a knave is this? he will ſoon belie me behind my back, when he doth it before my face; and my Lord Rich ſaid again, I dare ſay he doth ſo.

Wats words to the Lord Rich. Sir Anthony Brown a Goſpeller in King Edwards days, and a perſecutor in Q. Maries days.

After theſe words, Wats took occaſion to ſpeak ſomwhat of King Philip and of his coming in, but what it was, I could not juſtly learn. But thus much was heard, that after thoſe words ſpoken, the Bench among themſelves ſtood up, and ſaid one to another, Treaſon, ſaving one good man called Juſtice Gawdy, who a little before was about to ſpeak: but when he heard them cry Treaſon, he held down his head as one grieved and troubled at their doings.

Juſtice Gaudy a good man

In concluſion, the Commiſſioners being weary of him, or elſe not willing to meddle further in ſuch matters, ſent him up to the Biſhop of London, with their letter withall, importing the cauſe of his ſending up, as the contents thereof hereunder follow to be ſeen.

A Letter

Anno 1555.

A Letter ſent by certain Juſtices in Eſſex to Boner Biſhop of London.

A letter of the Lord Rich, Henry Tyrel, and other Juſtices to Boner.

AFter our moſt hearty commendation to your good Lordſhip, theſe ſhall be to advertiſe you, that at our Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer holden at Chelmsford the 26. day of April laſt paſt, there came before us in open Court one Thomas Wats of Billerica within your Dioceſs, by ordinary proceſs, and then and there being examined why he refuſed co come to his Pariſh Church, and there to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, and hear Divine Service, according to the inſtitution of Holy Church, he openly there anſwered generally; that like as the Service of the Church ſet out in the days of late King. Edward 6. was ſaid by us now to be Abominable; Heretical, Schiſmaticall, and all naught, ſo he ſaid, that all that is now uſed and done in that Church, is Abominable, Heretical, Schilmatical, and naught, with divers other erroneous, and arrogant words: and therfore we have thought good to ſend him to your Lordſhip, to be further examined by you of his particular opinions, as to your Paſtoral Office ſhall ſeem convenient, certifying you further, that in our opinion he is one of the moſt arrogant Hereticks that hath been heard ſpeak, or ever came before you, and not meet to be kept here in any Goal, as well for fear of corrupting others, as for divers and ſundry other ſpecial cauſes hereafter to be more declared. Thus leaving to moleſt your good Lordſhip, we commit you to the Holy Ghoſt, Given at Chelmsford the 27. of April, Anno 1555.

Tho. Wats ſent up by the Juſtices of Eſſex to Biſhop Boner.

Your good Lordſhips moſt aſſured,

The names of the Juſtices.

R. Rich	Thomas Mildman.
Henry Tyrel	John Wiſeman.
Anthony Browne.	Roger Appleton.
Edmund Tyrel.	Richard Weſton.

Now when the Biſhop had received him, how he uſed him it is eaſie (by his comman practices with others) to judge. What his private conferences were, I know not, but what was publickly done in the Conſiſtory at Pauls (the common ſtage for theſe tragedies) you ſhall here ſee.

The firſt appearance of Thomas Wats in the Biſhops Conſiſtory.

The firſt appearance of Tho. Wats in the Biſhops Conſiſtory.

FIrſt upon Thurſday, being the ſecond day of May, Thomas Wats was brought thither before the Biſhop of London, and there being examined upon his words had before the Lord Rich, and others (as is contained in their Letters) he did earneſtly affirm the ſame to be true. Whereupon the Biſhop objected, and examined him upon theſe Articles following, to the which he anſwered, as under may appear.

Articles objected againſt Thomas Wats of Billerica in the County of Eſſex, within the Dioceſs of London, by Boner Biſhop there, as enſueth.

Articles againſt Tho. Wats.

1 FIrſt, that the ſaid Thomas Wats was of Billerica, and ſo of the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of London.

The Sacraments of the Church of Rome.

2 Item, that he believed not in the Sacraments of the Holy and Catholick Church, as the Catholick Church of Rome, and all other Churches members of the ſame, ever hither to have believed, and is taught of all good and faithful People, nor hath allowed the Sacraments, Rites, Uſages, or Ceremonies of the ſaid Church, but hath deſpiſed the ſame.

The ſubſtance of the Sacrament.

3 Item, that he believeth, and alſo hath taught others, that the ſubſtance of material Bread and Wine do remain in the Sacrament of the Altar after the conſecration, and that the ſaid material Bread and Wine are the ſigns and tokens of Chriſts Body hanged upon the Croſs, and of his Blood there ſhed, and that in the ſaid Sacrament there is only a memory or remembrance of Chriſts Body and Blood, and nothing elſe.

The preſence in the Sacrament.

4 Item, that he believeth, and doth preciſely affirm, that the very true preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood in ſubſtance, is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, but onely in Heaven, and no where elſe.

The Maſs abominable.

5 Item, that he believeth, affirmeth, and ſaith, that the Maſs now uſed in the Church of Rome, here in England, and others places, is full of Idolatry, abomination, and wickedneſs, and that Chriſt did never inſtitute it, nor ordain it, nor yet allow it is a good and laudable thing to be uſed in his Church.

Confeſſion to God.

6 Item, that he believeth and affirmeth, that Auricular Confeſſion to be made unto the Prieſt is not neceſſary, but ſuperfluous: and that it is enough for a man to believe only, and to confeſs himſelf unto God, without any Prieſt or Miniſter at any time, though he may have the Prieſt to confeſs him unto.

Defence of Martyrs.

7 Item, that he believeth that Luther, Wickliffe, Doctor Barnes, and all other that have holden againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and ſuffered death by fire or otherwiſe for the maintenance of the ſaid opinion, were good men and faithful Servants and Martyrs of Chriſt in ſo believing and dying.

Faſting, praying and almeſdeeds.

8 Item, that he hath and doth believe, that to faſt, pray, or to do alms-deeds, is a thing utterly unprofitable; for if a man ſhall be ſaved, he ſhall be ſaved without doing of them; and if he ſhall be damned, they ſhall not help him, or do him any good at all.

Q. Maries Service re. proved.

9 Item, that the ſaid Wats of late coming into open Court at the Seſſions before the Lord Rich, Sir Henry Tyrel Knight, Anthony Brown Eſquire, and others, and being then and there examined, did openly confeſs, that he had refuſed to come to the Church, and to hear there the Divine Service, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the Church: becauſe that like as the Service of the Church ſet out in the days of the late King Edward the ſixth, was ſaid and alledged to be Abominable, Heretical, Schiſmatical, and all naught; ſo he the ſaid Thomas Wats then and there ſaid openly before the ſaid Commiſſioners, that all that is now uſed and done in the Church, is Abominable, Heretical, Schiſmatical, and altogether naught: And that he did alſo then utter before the ſaid Commiſſioners other Erroneous and Arrogant words, to the hurt of his Soul, and to the evil example of the People there preſent.

Wats reputed by the laws for an Heretick.

10 Item, that he the ſaid Thomas by reaſon of the premiſſes, was and is to be taken, had, reputed, and judged as a manifeſt and open Heretick, and for the ſame, by the order of Eccleſiaſtical Laws is to be declared accurſed; and being obſtinate and incorrigible, is to be delivered to the Secular Power, there to be puniſhed as an Heretick.

The Church of Rome a Synagogue of Satan.

11 Item, that he over and beſides all theſe offences and Treſpaſſes aforeſaid, had alſo added this Treſpaſs, that is to wit, that he had believed and deliberately ſpoken that the Church of Rome in her Rites, Ceremonies, Sacraments, Conſtitutions, and Traditions, is the Synagogue of Satan; and therefore that he had conſented and agreed in opinion and belief with one John Tooly, of late hanged at Charing Croſs, who at the time of his executing, deſired the People to pray to be delivered from the Tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, with all his enormities; as who ſhould ſay, that his Authority and doings were Tyranny, and had all enormities and iniquities in them.

12 Item, that the premiſſes and every part thereof be true, notorious, manifeſt, and openly ſpoken and talked of amongſt the honeſt and credible perſons in great multitude, and that of all and ſingular the ſame within Billerica aforeſaid, and other places thereabout, being of the Dioceſs of London, there is a common voice and fame thereof.

The anſwer of the ſaid Thomas Wats to the aforeſaid Articles.

His anſwers to the Articles.

TO the firſt he ſaid and confeſſed the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the ſecond Article he anſwered, that he believeth in all the Sacraments according to Chriſts Inſtitution, and the Catholick Church; but not according to the Biſhop of Romes Church: and further ſaid, that he doth not not believe now as he had done in times past; for in time past he believed as the Church then believed, but now he doth not so believe; for the Church of Rome had deceived us, and therefore he said he did not believe as the Church of Rome believeth, but as Christ hath taught him, and further said that he was so taught to believe by preaching of one M. Alvey, and other whose names he remembred not; which Alvey he said did preach the Word of God truly and sincerely.

Tho. Wats reformed to the Gospel by M. Alvey.

To the third he answered, that he hath and doth believe, that Christs Body is in Heaven, and no where else: and further, that he will never believe that Christs Body is in the Sacrament.

To the fourth he answered, confessing and firmly believing the same to be true.

To the fifth, that he did believe, that the Mass is abominable, and that he will not go one jot from that his belief.

To the sixth, that he neither did, nor yet doth believe, that the Priest can absolve him of his sins: howbeit, he denieth not it is good to ask counsel at the Priests mouth.

To the seventh he said, that he knew not what the opinions of the said persons named in the said Article were; and in case the said persons did believe, that the Body and Blood of Christ were really and in very deed in the Sacrament of the Altar, then that they were not good men. But in case they did believe that the Body and Blood of Christ was not in the Sacrament of the Altar really and truly, then he believed that they were good Christian men.

To the eighth, that he had not spoken as is contained in this Article, but said, that he hath and doth believe, that fasting, prayers, and almsdeeds be works of a lively faith.

To the ninth he confessed, that he did utter and speak, as in this Article is contained, and further he desired God that he might die in that faith and belief, wherein he now is.

To the tenth he answered and said, that he will submit himself herein to the order of the law: and further said, that he trusteth that with God he shall be blessed, although with men he be accursed.

The Bishop of Rome an enemy to Christ.

To the eleventh he said, the he believed that the Bishop of Rome is a mortal enemy to Christ and his Church. And as for Tooly he said, he did never see or know him; but in case the said Tooly did wish and pray as is contained in the Article, than he did likewise with and consent with him therein.

To the twelfth he answered, that all which before he confessed to be true, is also true: and all that he hath denied to be true, he denieth again to be true, and believeth the same to be according to such things as he hath confessed

By me Thomas Wats.

Another appearance of Thomas Wats in the Consistory.

Tho. Wats again appeareth in the Consistory.

THese Articles thus propounded and answered, the Bishop commanded him to appear again in the same place at three of the Clock in the afternoon, upon the same day. At which hour being brought thither by his Keeper, the Bishop began with him in this wise;

The Bishops words to Tho. Wats.

Wats, you know what I said unto you to day, and what I appointed unto you at this time. The time is now come: weigh and consider with your self, that you are but a Man, and albeit that you will wilfully cast away your Body, yet cast not so away your Soul, but while ye have time, return and confess the truth.

The answer of Wats.

Whereunto Thomas Wats answered and said, I am weary to live in such Idolatry as ye would have me to live in. Upon which answer the Bishop caused his Articles again to be read. He thereto answered as before, and farther, subscribed the same with his own hand.

Another appearance before D. Harpsfield.

Another appearance before D. Harpsfield.

THe Bishop after many perswasions to cause him to recant, willed him to depart as then, and to come again on Saturday at eight of the clock in the morning. Where the Bishop being absent, D. Nicolas Harpsfield, as then being his Deputy, did sit, and earnestly exhorted him to deny his opinions, To whom in the end he answered.

Anno 1555.

Wats submitted him to the law, and not to the Popes law.

Well, ye have a law to condemn me, and I submit my self to the law; but not to the laws of the Church (as you call it:) And farther I doe affirm, and still stand to mine answers that I have made.

Tho. Wats privately appeareth again before the Bishop.

Whereupon Dr. Harpsfield willed him to appear there again upon Friday, being the 10 day of the same Month of May. Vpon which day the Bishop privatly sent for the said Thomas Wats into his Chamber, and there with many fair promises tempted and tried him, whether he would revoke his errors (as he then termed them.) But Wats answered him in this sort; I will not believe your Church, neither the Romish Church, and therefore you do but labour in vain thus to travail with me. He was hereupon again dismissed for that time until Friday the 17. day of May, and then commanded to appear in the Consistory; which commandment he obeyed, and having the accustomed former Articles ministred unto him, made then such Answers as before.

Wats answer to the Bishop

Thomas Wats brought again to the Consistory.

THus being tost to and fro from day to day, and hour to hour, he was at the last, the 18. day of the Month of May, brought into the Consistory, where first was made a brief recital of all the former process: and there the said Wats being (by the Bishop and others) willed to deny his profession, made this final Answer;

The final answer of Tho. Wats.

God keep me from the Doctrine that ye would have me to come unto, which ye have now declared. And I beseech God that I may persevere in that, that I have done; for I will stand to mine Answers.

Sentence of condemnation against Tho. Wats

The Bishop perceiving his fair flattering promises nothing to prevail (and having no great store of other reasons to perswade with) put forth his last and strongest argument of Condemnation. Which being ended, he was delivered to the Sheriffs of London, and by them was sent to Newgate, where he remained until the 9. day of June, or (as some record) to the 22. of May: at what time he was carried unto Chelmsford, and there was brought to Scots house, keeping then an Inne in Chelmsford, where, as they were eating meat with Haukes and the rest that came down to their burning; they prayed together both before and after their meat.

The farewel of Tho. Wats to his Wife and six Children.

Then Wats went and prayed privatly to himself, and afterward came to his wife and his six Children being there, and said these words in effect; Wife, and my good Children, I must now depart from you. Therefore henceforth know I you no more, but as the Lord hath given you unto me, so I give you again unto the Lord, whom I charge you see you do obey, and fear him: and beware ye turn not to this abominable Papistry, against the which I shall anon, by Gods grace, give my Blood. Let not the murthering of Gods Saints cause you to relent, but take occasion thereby to be the stronger in the Lords quarrel, and I doubt not but he will be a merciful Father unto you. All these and such like words spake he unto them, and they unto him: of whom two, as it is said, offered to be burnt with him. In the end he bade them farewell, and kissed them all and was carried to the fire.

The Martyrdom of Tho. Wats at Chelmsford, Anno 1555. June 10.

The Words of Tho. Wats to the Lord Rich.

At the stake, after he had kissed it, he spake to my Lord Rich these or the like words: My Lord, saith he, Beware, beware, for you do against your own Conscience herein, and without you repent, the Lord will revenge it: For you are the cause of this my Death.

Concerning the Childbed of Queen Mary as it was rumoured among the People.

The Childbirth of Q. Mary.

LOng perswasion had been in England with great expectation, for the space of half a year or more, that the Queen was conceived with Child. This report was made by the Queens Physitians, and other nigh about the Court: so that divers were punished for saying the contrary. And commandment was given, that in all Churches supplication and prayer should be made for the Queens good delivery: the certificat whereof ye may read before in the letter of the Councel sent to Bover.

And

Anno 1555.

Rockers and Nurſes provided for Queen Maries Child.

And alſo the ſame moreover may appear by proviſion made before in Act of Parliament for the Child.

And now forſomuch as in the beginning of this month of June, about Whitſontide, the time was thought to be nigh that this young Maſter ſhould come into the World, and that Midwives, Rockers, Nurſes, with the Cradle and all, were prepared and in a readineſs; ſuddenly, upon what cauſe or occaſion it is uncertain, a certain vain Rumor was blown in London of the proſperous Deliverance of the Queen, and the Birth of the Child. Inſomuch that the Bells were rung, Bonfires and Proceſſions made, not only in the City of London, and in moſt other parts of the Realm, but alſo in the Town of Antwerp Guns were ſhot off upon the River by the Engliſh Ships, and the Mariners thereof rewarded with an hundred Piſtolets or Italian Crowns by the Lady Regent, who was the Queen of Hungary. Such great rejoycing and triumph was for the Queens Delivery, and that there was a Prince born. Yea, divers Preachers, namely one the Parſon of S. Anne within Alderſgate, after Proceſſion and Te Deum ſung, took upon him to deſcribe the proportion of the Child, how fair, how beautiful, and great a Prince it was, as the like had not been ſeen.

Proceſſions and Bonfires in London for Joy of the young Prince. Triumph at Antwerp for the ſame.

In the midſt of this great ado, there was a ſimple man (this I ſpeak but upon Information) dwelling within four miles of Barwick, that never had been before half way to London, which ſaid concerning the Bonfires made for Queen Maries Child, Here is a joyful Triumph, but at length all will not prove worth a meſs of Pottage, as indeed it came to paſs: For in the end all proved clean contrary, and the joy and expectations of Men were much deceived. For the People were certified, that the Queen neither was as then delivered, nor after was in hope to have any Child.

Q. Maries Child would not come.

At this time many talked diverſly. Some ſaid this Rumor of the Queens Conception was ſpread for a Policy; ſome other affirmed, that ſhe was deceived by a Timpany or ſome other like diſeaſe, to think her ſelf with Child, and was not; ſome thought ſhe was with Child, and that it did by ſome chance miſcarry, or elſe that ſhe was bewitched; but what was the truth thereof the Lord knoweth, to whom nothing is ſecret. One thing of mine own hearing and ſeeing, I cannot paſs over unwitneſſed.

What became of Q. Maries Child, no man can tell.

There came to me, whom I did both hear and ſee, one Iſabel Malt, a Woman dwelling in Alderſgate-ſtreet in Horn-Alley, not far from the Houſe where this preſent Book was printed, who before witneſs made this declaration unto us, That ſhe being delivered of a Man-child upon Whitſunday in the Morning, which was the 11. day of June, Anno 1555. there came to her the Lord North, and another Lord to her unknown, dwelling then about Old Fiſh-ſtreet, demanding of her if ſhe would part with her Child, and would ſwear that ſhe never knew nor had any ſuch Child. Which, if ſhe would, her Son (they ſaid) ſhould be well provided for, ſhe ſhould take no care for it, with many fair offers if ſhe would part with the Child.

Ex teſtimonio cujuſdam puerperæ Londinenſis.

After that came other Women alſo, of whom one they ſaid ſhould have been the Rocker; but ſhe in no wiſe would let go her Son, who at the writing hereof being alive, and called Timothy Malt, was of the Age of 13. years, and upward.

Thus much, I ſay, I heard of the Woman her ſelf. What credit is to be given to her relation, I deal not withal, but leave it to the liberty of the Reader, to believe it they that liſt; to them that liſt not, I have no further warrant to aſſure them.

The young Princes Cradle.

Among many other great preparations made for the Queens deliverance of Child, there was a Cradle very ſumptuouſly and gorgeouſly trimmed, upon the which Cradle for the Child appointed, theſe Verſes were written, both in Latin and Engliſh.

Quam Maria ſobolem, Deus optime, ſumme dediſti,
Anglis incolumem redde, tuere, Rege.

Verſes upon the Cradle.

The Child which thou to Mary, O Lord of Might haſt ſend,
To England's Joy, in health preſerve, keep and defend.

About this time there came over into England a certain Engliſh Book, giving warning to Engliſh-men of the Spaniards, and diſcloſing certain cloſe practices for recovery of Abby-Lands, which Book was called A Warning for England. Whereof ye ſhall underſtand more, God willing, when we come to the Spaniſh Inquiſition. So that by the occaſion of this Book, upon the 13. day of this Month came out a certain Proclamation, ſet forth in the name of the King and Queen, repealing and diſannulling all manner of Books written or printed, whatſoever ſhould touch any thing the empairing of the Popes Dignity, whereby not only much godly Edification was hindred, but alſo great peril grew among the People. The Copy of which Proclamation here followeth.

What a do is here to keep down Chriſt in his Sepulchre? and yet will he riſe in ſpite of all his Enemies.

dinaries will and diſpoſition to be burnt, or otherwiſe to be uſed or ordered by the ſaid Ordinaries; as by the Canons or Spiritual Laws it is in that caſe limited and appointed, upon pain that every Offender contrary to this Proclamation, ſhall incur the danger and penalties contained in the ſaid Statute, and as they will avoid their Majeſties high indignation and diſpleaſure, and further anſwer at their uttermoſt perils.

The power of this World ſet againſt Chriſt.

And their Majeſties by this Proclamation give full power and authority to all Biſhops and Ordinaries, and all Juſtices of the Peace, Mayors, Sheriffs, Bayliffs of Cities and Towns Corporate, and other Head Officers within this Realm and the Dominions thereof, and expreſly commandeth and willeth the ſame and every of them, that they and every of them, within their ſeveral Limits and Juriſdictions, ſhall in the default and negligence of the ſaid Subjects, after the ſaid fifteen days expired, enquire and ſearch out the ſaid Books, Writings and Works; and for this purpoſe enter into the Houſe or Houſes, Cloſets and Secret places of every Perſon, of whatſoever degree, being negligent in this behalf, and ſuſpected to keep any ſuch Book, Writing or Works, contrary to this Proclamation: And that the ſaid Juſtices, Mayors, Sheriffs, Bayliffs, and other Head Officers above ſpecified, and every of them within their ſaid Limits and Juriſdictions finding any of the ſaid Subjects negligent and faulty in this behalf, ſhall commit every ſuch Offender to ward, there to remain without Bail or Mainprize, till the ſame Offender or Offenders have received ſuch puniſhment as the ſaid Statute doth limit and appoint in this behalf. Given under our Signs Manual, at our Honour of Hampton Court, the 13. day of June, the firſt and ſecond years of our Reigns.

Imprinted by John Cawood, Anno 1555.

Articles to be enquired upon by the Wardens of every Company, touching Seditious Books, eſpecially touching the Book called, A Warning for England.

This Book called, A Warning for England, look for hereafter, when we come (God willing) to the Spaniſh Inquiſition. Articles to be enquired upon.

1. WHether they have ſeen any of the foreſaid Books.

2. Whether they have heard of any of the ſaid Books.

3. Where they were, and in what place they have ſeen them.

4. Whom they know to have lately come from beyond the Sea, eſpecially from Zuricke, Strasbrough, Frankford, Wezel, Emden, and Disburge,

5. Whom they know or vehemently ſuſpect to be common Carriers of Letters, or Money, thither from hence.

6. That they bring to my Lord Mayor all ſuch Seditious Books as they have, or ſhall have found hereafter.

In this Proclamation thou haſt heard, Chriſtian Reader, the profound and learned Cenſure of the Catholick Church of England, what Books they miſlike and reject as Heretical, Schiſmatical, and pernicious. Againſt the which Catholick Cenſure of theſe learned Fathers, I have not at this time to infer: neither doth any leiſure now ſerve to write Apologies in defence of theſe Authors here condemned. Only ſo much leave it may pleaſe the Reader to grant me to ſet before him here a pair of Ballance, wherein to weigh the Books on the one ſide condemned, with the Books on the other ſide allowed, to the end that we weighing the one with the other, may diſcern the better between them, which part weigheth beſt with Gods holy Truth and true Catholick Church, againſt manifeſt Idolatry and palpable Abomination. And now therefore, as they have in this preſent Proclamation given their condemnation upon theſe Books above recited: ſo I deſire thee to give thy cenſure upon their Books by them allowed, and upon the matter in them contained, and mark well what good ſtuff it is.

The Books of the Proteſtants to be weighed with Books of the Papiſts.

The Primer ſet forth in Q. Maries time, printed by J. Wayland.

And firſt to begin with the Primer in Engliſh, for Children after the uſe of Salisbury, Imprinted with a Priviledge according to the King and Queens Majeſties Letters Patents in the Reign of Queen Mary. Let us repeat and ſurvey ſome part of the ſaid Primer (for to expreſs all it were too long) beginning with the firſt Leſſon of our Lady, in theſe words:

Holy Mary; Mother moſt pure of Virgins all;
Mother and Daughter of the King Celeſtial,
So comfort us in our deſolation,
That by thy Prayer and ſpecial Mediation.
We enjoy the reward of thy Heavenly Reign, &c.

Anno 1555.

Confer this with the Scriptures, good Reader, and judge uprightly whether this Doctrine be tolerable in the Church or not.

It followeth more in the ſecond Leſſon.

Holy Mary, of all godly the godlieſt,
Pray for us, of all holy the holieſt;
That he our Prayers accept may in good wiſe,
Which of thee was born, and reigneth above the Skies, &c.

In the third Leſſon.

Thy Son beſeech with humble Interceſſion,
To purge us clean of our Tranſgreſſion;
That ſo being redeemed we may the place aſcend,
Where thou dwelleſt with him World without end.

The Verſicle.

Pray for the People, intreat for the Clergy, make Interceſſion for the devout Woman-kind; let all feel thy help, that worthily ſolemnize thy memorial, &c.

One Mediator between God and men, the Man Jeſus Chriſt.

Another Verſicle.

Holy Mother of God, make thy Petition, that we may deſerve Chriſts Promiſſion, &c.

And in the Anthem after Benedictus, thus it followeth:

We beſeech thee of thy pity to have us in remembrance, and to make means for us unto Chriſt, that we being ſupported by thy help, may deſerve to attain the Kingdom of Heaven.

Falſe Merits.

Furthermore in the Collect after it followeth:

And grant, that through the gracious Interceſſion of the Virgin thy Mother, we may be delivered from this preſent heavineſs, and have the fruition of eternal gladneſs.

Wrong Mediation.

It followeth moreover in the ſaid Primer thus, concerning the material Croſs.

O God, which haſt aſcended thy moſt holy Croſs, and haſt given light to the darkneſs of the World, vouchſafe by the virtue of thy Croſs to illumine, viſit and comfort both our Hearts and Bodies, &c.

Idolatry to the material Croſs.

Moreover, in the name of St. John Baptiſt thus it prayeth:

O Lord, defend us alway through the continual ſuccours of St. John Baptiſt. For the more frail we be, the more need we have to be relieved with neceſſary Prayers, &c.

Let no man glory in any man; for all things are yours, &c. 1 Cor. 3.

In which words note (good Reader) not only the abſurdity of Doctrine, but alſo the ſtolidity of the Reaſon. For where their Doctrine pretendeth that S. John Baptiſt ſhould pray for us, here we pray to God for St. John Baptiſt, that he will hear his Prayer praying for us. It followeth furthermore in the name of Peter and Paul:

What is Paul, what is Apollo, but the ſervants of him on whom you believe? 1 Cor. 3.

Hear us mercifully, and grant that through the merits of them both, we may obtain the glory everlaſting, &c.

Of St. Andrew.

So let him, O Lord, be a continual Petitioner for us to thee, &c.

Of St. Lawrence thus:

Saint Lawrence the Deacon did work a great work. For by the virtue of the Holy Croſs he gave ſight to the blind, &c.

And how can this be true, when the Holy Croſs was not yet found in the time of St. Lawrence? For Helen which firſt found the Croſs, as they ſay, came after St. Lawrence more than forty years.

To Thomas Becket Archbiſhop of Canterbury.
By the Blood of Thomas, which he for thee did ſpend,
Make us, Chriſt, to climb, whither Thomas did aſcend.

Horrid Blaſphemy and derogation to Chriſts Blood.

Of

Anno 1555.

Of St. Nicholas.

False merits. O God, which haſt glorified bleſſed Nicholas, thy holy Biſhop, with innumerable Miracles, grant we beſeech thee, that by his Merits and Prayers we may be delivered from the fire of Hell.

Of Mary Magdalen.

Grant we beſeech thee, through thy mercy, to let her purchaſe for us the Bliſs everlaſting,&c.

Another Prayer to our Lady.

The dolorous compaſſion of Gods ſweet Mother,
Bring us to the Bliſs of Almighty God the Father,&c.

Another Prayer in the ſaid Primer to our Lady.

The Office of Chriſt given to our Lady. Eſtabliſh us in peace and tranquillity,
And change the name of ſinful Eva:
Looſe thy Priſoners from Captivity,
Unto the blind give ſight again.
Deliver us from malignity,
To the end we may ſome Grace attain:
Shew thy ſelf to be a Mother:
So that he accept our Petition.
Deliver us from bondage of Sin,&c.

Item,

Holy Mother ſuccour the miſerable, comfort the weak ſpirited, give courage to the deſperate, pray for the People, make Interceſſion for the Clergy, and be a mean for the devout Woman-kind,&c.

Another blaſphemous Prayer.

Blaſphemy. O thou meek Mother, have mercy therefore
On Wretches, for whom thou hadſt theſe pains all,
Seeing thy Son that Vine cluſter preſſed ſore:
And from the peſtilence of Death eternal,
Keep us by voiding the Fiend infernal,
And joyn us with them which rewarded be
With eternal Life, ſeeing the Deity.

Another blaſphemy in the ſaid Primer.

Idolatry. Hail Queen, Mother of Mercy, our life, our ſweetneſs, our hope. Unto thee do we cry and ſigh, weeping and wailing. Come off therefore our Patroneſs, caſt upon us thy pitiful eyes, and after this our baniſhment, ſhew to us the bleſſed fruit of thy Womb. O Gate of glory be for us a Reconciliation unto the Father and the Son. From the wretched their faults expel: wipe the ſpots of ſins unclean,&c.

Item, to our Lady.

The fruit of thy Womb everlaſting,
We may behold through thy deſerving,&c.

Item,

If Maries Merits might help us, then Chriſt died in vain. Grant we beſeech thee, that by her Merits and Prayers we may attain to that unſpeakable Joy, whereas ſhe being aſſumpt, doth now rejoyce with thee in Heaven for ever.

Like Primer like Pſalter. And thus much hitherto of this Catholick Primer, called our Ladies Mattens. Whereunto, if it were not tedious for the Reader, we would alſo adjoyn our Ladies Pſalter, to the intent that all indifferent Readers, as they have ſeen what Books theſe Catholick Fathers have condemned and do condemn for Heretical; ſo the ſame alſo may ſee and judge, what Books on the other ſide they approve as lawful and Catholick. And foraſmuch as it is not known peradventure to all men, what our Ladies Pſalter is, or what it meaneth; yea, and ſome peradventure will deny any ſuch Book of our Ladies Pſalter to be written or approved, here therefore we will firſt produce the name of the Author, who was Bonaventure, a Seraphical Doctor, Biſhop alſo and Cardinal, Canonized moreover by Pope Sixtus the Fourth, An. 1482. for a Saint in the Kalendar, who in his Book thus intitled in Latin, Incipit Pſalterium beatæ Virginis, compilatum per Seraphicum Doctorem Sanctum Bonaventuram Epiſcopum Albanenſem, necnon ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ Preſbyterum Cardinalem, in honorem genetricis,&c. Fol. 84. In the ſecond part of his whole works (which were imprinted at Argentine, *An.*1495.) to ſhew himſelf a devout Servant to his Lady, hath taken every Pſalm of Davids Pſalter (which be peculiarly made and referred to Almighty God) and hath in divers of the ſaid Pſalms and Verſes put out the name of the Lord, and hath placed in the name of our Lady. This being done through the whole Pſalms and every one of them, it is now called our Ladies Pſalter, uſed to be ſung and ſaid in the praiſe and ſervice of our Lady. A brief taſte whereof, for Examples ſake (for, to ſhew all, it were too long) we thought here to exhibit unto the Reader in order, as followeth.

Bonaventure compiler of our Ladies Pſalter.

This Bonaventure lived An. 1170. and was canonized, An. 1482.

The Title in Engliſh of the Pſalter.

The Title of the Book called our Ladies Pſalter. ¶ Here beginneth the Pſalter of the bleſſed Virgin, made by the Seraphical Doctor St. Bonaventure, the Biſhop of Alban, and Cardinal of the holy Church of Rome.

The Book called our Ladies Pſalter. Ex 2. parte operum S. Bonaventuræ

1. Beatus vir, qui intelligit nomen tuum, Maria Virgo; gratia tua animam ejus confortabit. Tanquam aquarum fontibus irrigatum uberrimum in eo fructum juſtitiæ propagabis,&c. Univerſas enim fœminas vincis pulchritudine carnis; ſuperas Angelos & Archangelos excellentia ſanctitatis. Miſericordia tua & gratia ubique prædicatur,&c. Gloria Patri.

That is to ſay,

Bleſſed is the man which underſtandeth thy Name, O Virgin Mary, thy Grace ſhall comfort his Soul. Thou ſhalt bring forth in him the moſt plentiful fruit of Juſtice, being watered as it were with fountains of water. All Women thou paſſeſt in the beauty of thy body; all Angels and Archangels in the excellency of thy Holineſs. Thy mercy and thy grace is magnified every where, &c. Glory be to the Father,&c.

Our Ladies beauty.

2. Quare fremuerunt inimici noſtri, & adverſum nos meditati ſunt inania? Protegat nos dextera tua, Mater Dei, ut acies terribiliter confundens & deſtruens eos. Venite ad eam, qui laboratis & tribulati eſtis, & dabit refrigerium animabus veſtris. Accedite ad eam in tentationibus veſtris, & ſtabiliet vos ſerenitas vultus ejus: Benedicite illam in toto corde veſtro, miſericordia enim illius plena eſt terra,&c. Gloria Patri.

Why do our Enemies fret and imagine vain things againſt us? Let thy right hand defend us, O Mother of God, terribly confounding and deſtroying them as a Sword. Come unto her all ye that labour and are troubled, and ſhe will give reſt unto your Souls. Come unto her in your temptations, and her loving Countenance ſhall ſtabliſh and comfort you. Bleſs her with all your heart; for the Earth is full of her mercy. Glory be to the Father,&c.

Treaſon againſt Chriſts Perſon and Dignity.

3. Domina quid multiplicati ſunt qui tribulant me? In tempeſtate tua perſequeris & diſſipabis eos. Diſſolve colligationes impietatis noſtræ; tolle faſciculos peccatorum noſtrorum. Miſerere mei Domina & ſana infirmitatem meam; tolle dolorem & angustiam cordis mei. Ne tradas me manibus inimicorum meorum, & in die mortis meæ conforta animam meam. Deduc me ad portum ſalutis, & ſpiritum meum redde factori meo.

Why are they ſo many, O Lady, that trouble me? In thy fury thou ſhalt perſecute and deſtroy them. Looſe the bonds of our impiety, and take away the burden of our Sins. Have mercy upon me, O Lady, and heal my infirmity. Take away my ſorrow and the anguiſh of my heart. Deliver me not into the hands of mine Enemies, and in the day of my death comfort my Soul. Bring me unto the haven of Salvation, and reſtore my Spirit unto my Maker and Creator. Glory be to the Father,&c.

Blaſphemous Idolatry.

4. Cum invocarem, exaudiſti me Domina, & è ſublimi ſolio tuo mei dignata es recordari. A rugientibus præparatis ad eſcam & de manibus quærentium me liberabit gratia tua. Quoniam benigna eſt miſericordia & pietas tua in omnes, qui invocant nomen ſanctum tuum. Benedicta ſis Domina in æternum, & majeſtas tua in ſeculum. Glorificate eam omnes gentes,&c.

Falſe Faith. When I called to thee, thou heardeſt me, O my Lady, and out of thy high Throne thou didſt vouchſafe to think upon me. From the roaring of them that prepare themſelves to devour me, and out of the hands of ſuch as ſeek after my life, thy grace ſhall deliver me: Becauſe thy mercy and thy pity are great towards all them that call upon thy holy Name. Bleſſed be thou, O Lady, for ever, and thy majeſty for ever and ever. Glorifie her all Nations of the Earth,&c.

5. Verba mea auribus percipe Domina, &c. Converte luctum noſtrum in gaudium, & tribulationem noſtram in jubilationem. Corruant ante pedes noſtros inimici noſtri; virtute tua eorum capita conterantur, &c.

Derogation of the Croſs of Chriſt.

Hear my words, O Lady, &c. turn our mourning into gladneſs, and our trouble into rejoycing. Let our Enemies fall before our feet, and with thy power daſh their heads in pieces.

6. Domina ne in furore Dei ſinas corripi me, neque in ira ejus judicari, &c. De porta inferi, & de ventre abyſſi tuis ſanctis precibus libera nos. Aperiantur nobis januæ ſempiternæ, ut enarremus in æternum mirabilia tua. Quia non mortui, neque qui in inferno ſunt, laudabunt te Domina, ſed qui tua gratia vitam æternam obtinebunt.

O Lady, ſuffer me not to be rebuked in Gods anger, nor to be chaſtned in his heavy diſpleaſure, &c. From the gate and deep pit of Hell, with thy holy Prayers deliver us. Let the everlaſting gates be opened, that we may ſhew forth thy marvellous works for ever. Becauſe the dead, nor they that be in Hell, ſhall not praiſe thee, O Lady, but they which ſhall obtain by thy grace life everlaſting.

7. Domina mea in te ſperavi, de inimicis meis libera me Domina. Conclude ora Leonis, & labia perſequentium conſtringe. Non moreris propter nomen tuum facere nobis miſericordiam tuam. Splendor vultus tui fulgeat ſuper nos, ut ſervetur conſcientia noſtra apud altiſſimum. Si perſequitur inimicus animam meam, Domina, adjutorio tuo conforter, ne vibret gladium ſuum contra me.

Vaine truſt. Wrong Invocation.

O my Lady, in thee will I put my truſt; deliver me from mine Enemies, O Lady. Stop the mouth of the Lion, and bind the lips of the Perſecutors. Make no tarrying for thy Names ſake, to ſhew thy mercy upon me. Let the brightneſs of thy Countenance ſhine upon us, that our Conſcience may be ſaved before the Moſt Higheſt. If the Enemy do perſecute my Soul, O Lady, help me that he deſtroy me not.

Manifeſt Idolatry.

9. Confitebor tibi Domina in toto corde meo, & narrabo in populis laudem & gloriam tuam, &c. Invenient gratiam per te inventricem gratiæ & ſalutis; reſpirant ad indulgentiam humiles pœnitentes; ſana contritiones cordis eorum, &c.

Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, with all thy ſtrength and power. &c. Deut. 6.

I will give thanks to thee, O Lady, with my whole heart, and will ſhew forth among the Nations thy praiſe and glory, &c. They ſhall find grace through thee, the finder out of grace and ſalvation, the humble and penitent groan for pardon and forgiveneſs; heal thou the ſores of their heart, &c.

15. In te Domina confido, &c. Exquirite illam à juventute veſtra, & glorificabit vos, &c. Miſericordia illius noſtrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum, & fœcunditatem nobis conferat meritorum, &c.

Derogation of Chriſts Paſſion.

In thee, O Lady, do I put my truſt, &c. Seek her even from your youth, and ſhe ſhall glorifie you, &c. Her mercy take from us the multitude of our ſins, and give unto us plenteouſneſs of merits, &c.

12. Salvum me fac mater pulchræ dilectionis, fons clementiæ, &c. Gyrum terræ ſola circuis, ut ſubvenias invocantibus te, &c.

Save me O Mother of Love, and Fountain of Mercy, &c. Thou thy ſelf alone haſt gone about the compaſs of the Earth, to help them that call upon thee.

13. Uſque quo Domina oblivi ſceris me, & non liberas me in die tribulationis? Uſque quo exaltabitur inimicus meus ſuper me? Potentia virtutis tuæ contere ipſum, &c. Magnificamus te gratiæ inventricem, per quam ſæcula reparantur, &c.

How long doſt thou forget me O Lady, and doſt not deliver me in the day of my trouble? How long ſhall mine Enemy triumph over me? With thy mighty power deſtroy him, &c. We magnifie thee the finder and the author of Grace, by whom the world is repaired, &c.

Milk making God.

16. Conſerva me Domina, quoniam ſperavi in te, &c. Benedicta ſint ubera tua, quibus lacte deifico Salvatorem enutriſti, &c.

Yea rather bleſſed be they which hear the Word of God and keep it.

Preſerve me O Lady, for in thee have I put my truſt, &c. Bleſſed be thy Breaſts, which with thy deifying Milk didſt nouriſh the Saviour, &c.

18. Diligam te Domina cœli & terræ; in gentibus nomen tuum invocabo. Confitemini illi tribulati corde, & roborabit vos contra inimicos veſtros, &c. Religioſi omnes honorate illam, quia ipſa eſt adjutrix veſtra & ſpecialis advocata. Eſto refrigerium noſtrum, glorioſa mater Chriſti, quia tu es totius religionis mirabile firmamentum.

Anno 1555.

I will love thee O Lady of Heaven and Earth; I will call upon thy name among the Nations. Confeſs your ſelves unto her, ye that are troubled in heart, and ſhe ſhall ſtrengthen you againſt your Enemies, &c. All ye Cloyſterers honour her, for ſhe is your helper and ſpecial Advocate. Be thou our refreſhing and reſt, for thou art the marvellous foundation of all Religion.

Idolatry of the Cloyſterers.

20. Exaudi nos Domina in die tribulationis, &c. Ne projicias nos in tempore mortis noſtræ, ſed ſuccurre animæ, cum deſeruerit corpus ſuum. Mitte Angelum in occurſum ejus per quem ab hoſtibus defendatur, &c. Sentiat in pœnis refrigerium tuum, & concede ei locum inter electos Dei.

Hear us O Lady in the day of trouble, &c. Caſt us not away in the time of our death, but ſuccour our Soul when it forſaketh the Body. Send an Angel to meet it, that it may be defended from the Enemies, &c. In torments and pain let it feel thy comfort, and grant to it a place among the elects of God.

25. Ad te Domina levavi animam, &c. Non prævaleant adverſum me laquei mortis, &c. Ductrix mea eſto ad patriam, & me cœtui Angelorum digneris aggregare.

To thee O Lady do I lift up my Soul, &c. Let not the ſnares of Death prevail againſt me, &c. Be thou my guide to the heavenly Reſt, and to the company of Angels aſſociate me.

26. Judica me Domina, quoniam ab innocentia mea digreſſus ſum: ſed quia ſperavi in te non infirmabor, &c.

All Judgment is given to Chriſt alone, and before him the Virgin alſo her ſelf ſhall be judged.

Judge thou me O Lady, for I am faln from mine Innocency: but becauſe I put my truſt in thee, therefore I ſhall not fall, &c.

27. Domina illuminatio mea ſit ſplendor faciei tuæ, &c. Serenitas gratiæ tuæ refulgeat menti meæ, &c.

O Lady, let the brightneſs of thy face be my ſight, and let the clearneſs of thy grace ſhine unto my mind, &c.

28. Ad te Domina clamabo, &c. Miſerere mei in die angustiæ meæ, & in luce veritatis tuæ libera me.

To thee O Lady, &c. Have mercy upon me in the day of my trouble, and in the light of thy Truth deliver me, &c.

31. In te Domina ſperavi, non confundar in æternum, in gloria tua ſuſcipe me. Tu es fortitudo mea & refugium meum, conſolatio mea & protectio mea, &c. Educas me laqueo quem abſconderunt mihi, quoniam tu es adjutrix mea. In manus tuas Domina commendo ſpiritum meum.

If our Lady be all in all then God, belike, ſitteth idle in Heaven.

In thee O Lady do I put my truſt, let me not be confounded for ever; in thy glory receive me. Thou art my ſtrength and my refuge, my conſolation and protection, &c. Deliver me from the ſnare that they have laid for me, becauſe thou art my helper. Into thy hands I commend my Spirit, &c.

34. Benedicam Dominam in omni tempore, &c. In periculis, in rebus dubiis invocate eam, & in neceſſitatibus inveniet is auxilium, &c. Sumite exemplum converſationis ejus & æmulemini ſtudia humilitatis ejus. Quia ergo Domina humilima fuiſti, Verbum increatum ex te carnem ſuſcipere coegiſti.

Horrible blaſphemy againſt the Lord.

I will always praiſe our Lady, &c. In perils, in adverſity call upon her, and in time of need ye ſhall find ſuccour. Let her converſation be an example unto you, and follow the virtue of her humility. Becauſe therefore O Lady thou waſt humble and lowly. Thou didſt compel the Word increate to take fleſh of thee.

36. Dixit injuſtus, &c. A malo propoſito diſcedat; Mater Dei, inclina vultum Dei ſuper nos: Coge illum peccatoribus miſereri, &c. Benedictum ſit imperium tuum ſuper cœlos, benedicta ſit magnificentia tua ſuper terram.

O impious blaſphemy!

The wicked man ſaid, &c. Let him depart from his evil purpoſe; O Mother of God, turn the countenance of God towards us: Compel him to be merciful unto Sinners. Bleſſed be thy Impery and Dominion in Heaven, and bleſſed be thy Magnificence upon the Earth.

45. Eructavit cor meum verbum bonum Domina, &c. Per tuam ſanctitatem peccata mea purgentur: per tuam integritatem mihi incorruptibilitas condonetur, &c.

If Mary forgive ſins though it our Faith in Chriſt in vain.

My heart is inditing a good matter, O Lady, &c. By thy Holineſs let my ſins be purged, by thy Integrity let me obtain Incorruption, &c.

47. Omnes

Anno 1555.

47. Omnes gentes plaudite manibus, &c. Quoniam ipsa est porta vitæ, janua salutis, & vitæ nostræ reconciliatrix; spes pœnitentium, solamen lugentium, pax beata cordium atque salus. Miserere mei Domina, miserere mei, quia tu es lux & spes omnium confidentium in te, &c.

These words stink of blasphemous Idolatry.

Clap your hands all ye People, &c. For she is the gate of Life, the door of Salvation, the reconciler of our Life; the hope of the Penitent, the comfort of the Sorrowful, the blessed peace of Hearts, and Salvation. Have mercy upon me, O Lady, have mercy upon me; for thou art the light and hope of all that put their trust in thee.

51. Miserere mei Domina, quæ mater misericordiæ nuncuparis. Et secundum viscera miserationum tuarum munda me ab omnibus iniquitatibus meis, &c.

Have mercy upon me, O Lady, which art called the Mother of Mercy, and in the bowels of thy great Compassion cleanse me from mine Iniquities.

54. Domina, in nomine tuo salvum me fac, & ab injustitiis meis libera me, &c.

The Cross of Christ evacuate.

O Lady, in thy name save me, and from mine unrighteousness deliver me, &c.

70. Domina in adjutorium meum intende, &c. Miserere servorum tuorum, super quos invocatum est nomen tuum, &c.

Make haste O Lady to help me, &c. Have mercy on thy Servants, upon whom thy name is invocated, &c.

71. In te Domina speravi, non confundar in æternum, in tua misericordia libera me, &c.

Blind trust.

In thee Lady have I put my trust: let me not be confounded for ever, in thy mercy deliver me, &c.

79. Domina, venerunt Gentes in hæreditatem Dei, quas tu meritis tuis Christo confœderasti, &c.

O Lady, the Gentiles are come into the inheritance of God, whom thou didst joyn unto Christ by thy merits, &c.

Gods honour devoured.

89. Qui regis Israel, &c. Odor vitæ de illa progreditur, & omnis salus de corde illius scaturit.

False trust.

Thou that rulest Israel, &c. The favour of life cometh from her, and all health floweth out of her heart, &c.

91. Qui habitat in adjutorio matris Dei, in protectione ipsius commorabitur, &c. Clamate ad illam in periculis vestris, et flagellum non appropinquabit Tabernaculo vestro. Fructus gratiæ inveniet qui speraverit in illa. Porta Paradisi reserabitur ei.

Whoso dwelleth in the help of the Mother of God, shall dwell in the shadow of her protection, &c. Cry unto her in your dangers, and the scourge shall not come near your Tabernacle. The fruit of grace shall be to him whoso trusteth in her, and the gate of Paradise shall be open unto him.

95. Venite exultemus Dominæ nostræ, &c. Suscipe in fine animas nostras, & introduc nos in requiem æternam, &c.

Come let us rejoyce to our Lady, &c Receive our Souls at our last end, and bring them into everlasting Rest, &c.

Abominable blasphemy.

104. Confitemini Dominæ nostræ, & invocate nomen ejus, &c. Salus sempiterna in manu tua, Domina, &c.

Praise our Lady, and call upon her name, &c. Everlasting salvation is in thy hand, O Lady, &c.

110. Dixit Dominus Dominæ nostræ; Sede mater mea à dextris meis, &c.

The Devil and the Pope say so, and not God.

The Lord said unto our Lady; Sit here my Mother on my right hand, &c.

114. In exitu animæ meæ ex hoc mundo occurre ei Domina, & suscipe eam, &c. Esto illi scala ad regnum cælorum, & iter rectum ad Paradisum Dei, &c.

In the passing of my Soul out of this World, come and meet it, O Lady, and receive it, &c. Be to it a Ladder to the Kingdom of Heaven, and a right way to the Paradise of God, &c.

119. Miserationibus tuis plena est terra, ideo viam justificationum tuarum exquisivi, &c. Concupiscam in æternum laudare te Domina cum docueris me Justificationes tuas, &c.

Blasphemy.

The whole Earth is full of thy Mercies, and therefore I will search out the way of thy Justifications, &c. I will covet for ever to praise thee O Lady, when thou shalt teach me thy Justifications, &c.

Blasphemy.

125. Qui confidunt in te, mater Dei, non timebunt à facie inimici, &c.

They that put their trust in thee, O Mother of God, shall not be afraid of the face of their Enemy, &c.

Blasphemy.

127. Nisi Domina ædificaverit domum cordis nostri, non permanebit ædificium ejus.

Except our Lady shall build the house of our Heart, the building thereof shall not continue.

128. Beati omnes qui timent Dominam nostram, & beati omnes qui sciunt facere voluntatem suam, &c.

Blessed is every one that feareth our Lady, and blessed be all they which know to do her will, &c.

Idolatrous invocation.

130. De profundis clamavi ad te Domina, Domina exaudi vocem meam: Fiant aures tuæ intendentes, &c.

Out of the deep I have called unto thee, O Lady, O Lady hear my voice, &c.

132. Memento Domina, David, & omnium invocantium nomen tuum, &c.

O Lady, remember David, and all them that call upon thy name, &c.

False trust.

134. Ecce nunc benedicite Dominam, omnes qui speratis in nomine sancto ejus, &c.

Behold and bless now our Lady, all ye that put your trust in her holy name.

Blasphemy.

136. Super flumina Babylonis, &c. Non invenietur propitiatio sine illa.

At the floods of Babylon, &c. There is no propitiation to be found without her, &c.

Gods office appointed to our Lady.

140. Eripe me Domina ab omni malo, & ab hoste infero defende me, &c.

Deliver me O Lady from all evil, and from the infernal Enemy defend me, &c.

145. Oculi nostri sperant in te Domina. Mitte nobis cibum & escam delectantem. Laudationem tuam loquetur lingua mea, et benedicam te in seculum seculi.

Our eyes look up and trust in thee. Do thou sendest us meat and food convenient, &c. My tongue shall speak thy praise, and shall bless thee for ever.

Idolatry.

148. Lauda, Jerusalem, Dominam, glorifica illam etiam O Sion. Ipsa enim construit muros tuos, & filios tuos benedicit. Gratia sua te impinguat, pacemque donat terminis tuis.

Praise thou our Lady, O Jerusalem, and glorifie her also O thou Sion: For she buildeth up thy Walls, and blesseth thy Children. Her grace maketh thee fat, and giveth peace unto thy coasts, &c.

I could recite also other things more of like Blasphemy, following immediately after this Psalter of our Lady, in the Seraphical Doctor aforesaid, as these:

Horrible blasphemy.

Ecce Domina Salvatrix mea, fiducialiter agam in te, & non timebo, &c. Quia fortitudo mea es tu. Et facta es mihi in salutem, i. Behold my Lady my Saviour, I will be bold in thee, and will not fear, &c. Because thou art my strength, &c. And art become my Salvation, &c.

Blasphemy.

Exulta totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit tibi Mediatricem Dominus Deus tuus, i. Rejoyce, O all Mankind, because the Lord thy God hath given unto thee such a Mediatrix, &c.

The Scripture abused.

Confitebor tibi Domina, quia abscondisti hæc à sapientibus, & revelasti ea parvulis, i. I will confess to thee, O Lady, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and hast revealed them to the little Ones.

Generatio prava atque perversa agnosce Dominam nostram Salvatricem tuam. Nunquid ipsa est mater tua quæ possedit te, & in fide generavit te? i. O thou wicked and peevish Generation, knowledge our Lady thy Saviour. Is not she the Mother that hath possessed thee, and in Faith hath begotten thee?

Cursed blasphemy.

O benedicta, in manibus tuis reposita est nostra salus, i. O thou blessed, in thy hands is laid up our Salvation, &c.

In nomine tuo omne genu flectatur, cœlestium, &c. In thy Name let every knee bend, in Heaven and Earth, and in Hell.

Quemadmodum Infans sine Nutrice non potest vivere; ita nec sine Domina nostra posses habere salutem, i. Like as an Infant cannot live without the Nurse, so neither canst thou have Salvation without our Lady.

Blasphemy.

Quicunque vult salvus esse, ante omnia opus est ut teneat de Maria firmam fidem. Quam nisi quisque integram inviolatamque servaverit, absq; dubio in æternum perivit, i. Whoso will be saved, before all things he must needs hold this Belief of our Lady: which Believe, unleſs every one ſhall hold perfect and ſound, he ſhall periſh without doubt for ever.

Moreover, after theſe ſo horrible things and intollerable to be heard, conſequently in the next tractation followeth the Roſary or Garland of our Lady, compiled by the ſaid Bonaventure; wherein theſe words are to be read as followeth: O Mediatrix between God and Man, the Lord hath worthily magnified thee, that thou only ſhouldeſt conceive his Son. Wherefore, O good Mary our Mediatrix, Mother of Grace, and Mother of Mercy, &c. And moreover, within few lines it followeth in theſe words, Therefore, O our Empreſs and Lady moſt bountiful, by the authority of a Mother command, command (I ſay) thy well-beloved Son, that he will ſtir up our minds from the love of worldly things, to heavenly deſires, &c.

The Roſary or Garland of our Lady called, Corona beatæ Mariæ.

Mary made a commander of Chriſt.

Item, O the Advocate of the miſerable, the eyes of thy Servants be directed to thee, &c.

To theſe premiſſes, I might alſo adjoyn the horrible and moſt blaſphemous words of the ſaid Bonaventure in the ſaid Book, Fol. 100. pag. 2. Col. 1. which I beſeech thee to read and note. Quæ major bonitas quam quod Chriſtus, i. What greater goodneſs can be, than that Chriſt is content to be captive upon the Altar?

Whereupon he ſpeaketh in the perſon of Jeremy, ſaying, Behold I am in your hands, do with me as you ſee good, &c. Where note (ſaith he) that when any Duke or Prince is taken Priſoner for his Subjects, he is not let go, before he pay ſome great ſum of Money for his ranſom. Even ſo neither we ought to let Chriſt go out of our hands being our Priſoner and Captive, except he grant to us remiſſion of our Sins and his heavenly Kingdom. The Prieſt therefore lifteth up the Body of Chriſt upon the Altar, as though he ſaid thus, Behold him whom the whole World is not able to comprehend, he is holden here our Captive, wherefore let us hold him faſt, and not let him go before we obtain of him our requeſts, &c.

Chriſt made a Captive and a Priſoner in the Popes Church.

Notes.

The Church of Rome examined.

Is not here good Catholick ſtuff (Chriſtian Reader) trow you? Confer I beſeech you this Doctrine with the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, which teach us that we are fully compleat in Chriſt, and I will refer me to no better Judge than to your own Conſcience. And now therefore, if any man have been in doubt in times paſt of the Doctrine and proceeding of the Church of Rome, whether it be rightly charged with blind Errors, with Blaſphemy intollerable, and Idolatry abominable or not, here now he may be fully certified and reſolved. For where was ever Idolatry or Blaſphemy to be found, if it be not here in this Mattins and Pſalter of our Lady? If Idolatry be to make an Idol to be worſhipped as God, which is no god, what do we here but make an Idol of our Lady (as we call her) to be worſhipped with no leſs dignity, glory, authority, reverence and ſervice, than is the Lord God himſelf? And as he is called our Lord, ſo ſhe is called our Lady. And if he be King, yet ſhe is the Queen of Heaven. And though he have the name of God, yet ſhe beareth ſo the title of the Mother of God; that as Mothers have authority over their Children, ſo ſhe is willed to ſhew her ſelf to be his Mother, to cauſe him to grant our Petitions. Finally, if he be our Patron, yet ſhe is our Patroneſs. The Commandment ſaith, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. And what worſhip or ſervice can we give to God, more than we do aſcribe unto her? And what benefit is to be asked at the hands of Chriſt our Saviour, which is not equally asked of her? To ſave our Souls, to give us peace, to grant grace, to comfort the deſperate, to looſe our captivity, to releaſe our ſins, to deliver from the Fiend, to bring to Heaven, &c. To her we pray, we cry, we weep, we ſigh, we groan, we knock and kneel, to her we truſt, and if we believe not alſo in our Lady, we be Hereticks ipſo facto.

The Church of Rome convict of manifeſt Idolatry.

Our Lady made equal with God in the Church of Rome.

The Doctrine of the Romiſh Church directly againſt the firſt Commandment of God.

To Truſt and believe in our Lady.

Furthermore, as Chriſt our only Lord and Saviour hath his Church and Congregation which profeſs his Name, of whom we are called Chriſtians; ſo neither is ſhe likewiſe without her Chappels, her Cloyſters, her Chapters, Fraternities and Brotherhoods, which profeſſing her name in like ſort, are called our Ladies Brethren, or white Friers, beſides an innumerable ſort of other Patrons of Churches, of whom every one hath his peculiar Church and Religion by himſelf, yet all theſe together be included under the general devotion of our Lady their ſupreme Patroneſs and Governneſs.

Ann. 1555.

Now to proceed further to the other part of the Commandment, which ſaith, Him only ſhalt thou ſerve. What ſervice hath the Lord in all the Church, but our Lady alſo joyntly with him hath the like? Her Maſs, her Mattins, her Evenſong, her Hours and Complin, her Roſaries, her Anthems, her Collects, her Primer, her Pſalter, her Holy-days likewiſe, yea five to one. Finally, as the Lord hath his Prayer called the Lords Prayer, ſo hath ſhe her Ave Maries, yea ten Aves to one Pater noſter; yea, and read further in the ſaid Bonaventure, and ye ſhall ſee her alſo to have her Te Deum, her Benedictus, her Magnificat, and alſo her Quicunque vult.

Our Lady hath her Church as well as Chriſt.

Ten Aves to one Pater noſter.

If the Lord our God had not expreſſed unto us his own will by plain words, limiting unto us by expreſs Injunction what to believe, what to follow, and how to worſhip and ſerve him, and how to receive from him our Salvation; but had left us to the imagination of our own Inventions, every man to ſhift for himſelf after his own policy, then peradventure this way taken by the Popes Church, to make friends and mediators between God and us, for reconciliation, remiſſion, and ſalvation, might have ſome rhime or reaſon; but now Gods Word doth bind us, doth preſcribe and limit us preciſely in every point touching Salvation, what to believe, and what to do, ſhewing us plainly that we cannot be ſaved, but by the Blood of his Son only, neither can be juſtified but by Faith only in the ſame Chriſt his Son: Wherefore not to believe that which he hath promiſed, is Infidelity, and to follow any other belief than he hath ſet us, is plain Idolatry. The which two ſpecial Errors moſt commonly do follow the Doctrine of the Romiſh Church, as not only in this Primer and Pſalter of our Lady aforeſaid, but alſo in all their proceedings, teachings and preachings, beſides may well appear. For where the Scripture doth perfectly promiſe and pronounce us to be juſtified through our Faith in Chriſt, and willeth us to ſeek our Salvation no where elſe, but only in the merits of Jeſus: the Inſtitution of the Church of Rome, neither will receive that God hath freely given, (wherein ſtandeth Infidelity) neither yet will ſeek the ſame there where as they ſhould, but in the merits and prayers of our Lady, of St. John Baptiſt, St. Peter and Paul, St. Andrew, St. Nicholas, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and by the worthineſs of the material Croſs, and ſuch other unlawful means, wherein ſtandeth plain Idolatry. And yet ſuch Books as theſe can be ſuffered among the Catholicks to be currant, as good, wholſom and lawful Books; whereas the other, which lead us the true way from Infidelity and blind Idolatry to true Chriſtianity, in no wiſe can be ſufferable. But of this to complain it is vain. Wherefore to paſs from this Proclamation, let us proceed (God willing) in the courſe of our Hiſtory.

Infidelity. Idolatry.

The Church of Rome charged with Infidelity and Idolatry.

The Church of Rome neither taketh that which God doth give, neither doth ſeek for that which they would have by lawful means.

The Story of Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Thomas Osborne, Martyrs.

MEntion was made before in the ſtory of Thomas Haukes, of ſix Priſoners beſides, which were ſent down with him to Eſſex the ſame time as he went to Execution. Of which ſix Priſoners, three were ſent to be burned, the other three to recant, and to do penance: Of whom it followeth next in the ſtory now to intreat. The names of which ſix were theſe, Thomas Oſmond Fuller, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, Thomas Osborne Fuller, Nicholas Chamberlain Weaver, Thomas Brodehill Weaver, Richard Web Weaver, being all of the Town of Coxhall. All which ſix Coxhall Men, next after the Examinations of Thomas Haukes, and Thomas Wats, were ſent up to Boner to be examined, by the Earl of Oxford and Sir Philip Paris Knight, with a Letter alſo with them ſent, the Copy whereof here followeth.

T. Oſmond, W. Bamford, T. Oſborne, Martyrs. Read before.

A Letter ſent from the Earl of Oxford to Boner Biſhop of London.

AFter our hearty Commendations unto your good Lordſhip, this ſhall be to advertize the ſame, that the Conſtables of Coxhall within your Dioceſs, have brought before us this day ſix Perſons dwelling in the Town of

A Letter from the Earl of Oxford to Biſhop Boner.

Anno 1555. of Coxhall aforeſaid, whoſe names hereafter do follow, videlicet, Nicholas Chamberlain Weaver, John Wallet Fuller, Thomas Brodehill Weaver, Richard Web Weaver, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, and Thomas Oſborne Fuller, for that they at the Feaſt of Eaſter now laſt, have not obeyed to the Order of the holy Catholick Church in receiving of the Sacraments; but obſtinately refuſing the ſame, beſides of holding divers other Opinions, contrary to the Faith of the ſaid Church. Wherefore we have thought it good to ſend the ſame Perſons unto your good Lordſhip further to be ordered, as in ſuch caſe ſhall appertain. Thus we commit your good Lordſhip to the keeping of Almighty God. From Hedingham the firſt of May, Anno 1555.

Priſoners ſent by the Earl of Oxford to Boner.

Your Lordſhips aſſuredly, Oxford,
Philip Paris.

Oſmond, Chamberlain, and their Fellows, brought before Biſhop Boner.

Thus the ſaid Priſoners being ſent up the firſt day of May, were brought before the ſaid Biſhop the 17. of the ſaid Month to be examined upon divers and ſundry Articles miniſtred and objected againſt them; wherunto they were compelled to anſwer, and to put their hands to the ſame: the Copie of which their Articles and Anſwers, being all one in form and effect (if the Regiſter ſay true) here followeth.

The Copy of the Articles objected againſt Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlain of Coxhall.

Articles miniſtred unto them by the Biſhop.

1 FIrſt, That thou Thomas Oſmond Fuller, waſt and art of the Pariſh of Coxhall, within the Dioceſs of London, and thou haſt not believed nor doſt believe, that there is here in the Earth one Catholick and Univerſal whole Church, which doth hold and believe all the Faith and Religion of Chriſt, and all the neceſſary Articles and Sacraments of the ſame.

The Popes Church falſly termed by the name of the Univerſal Church.

2. Item, That thou haſt not believed nor doſt believe, that thou art neceſſarily bounden under the pain of the damnation of thy Soul, to give full Faith and Credence unto the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church, and to the Faith and Religion of the ſame in all neceſſary points of the ſaid Faith and Religion, without doubting or wavering in the ſaid Faith and Religion, or in any part thereof.

The Faith of the Romiſh Church not to be believed.

3. Item, That thou haſt not believed that the Faith and Religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spain, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being true members and parts of the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church, do believe and teach, is both agreeing with the Faith and Religion of Chriſt, and alſo is the very true Faith and Religion which all Chriſtian People ought to believe, obſerve, follow and keep; but contrariwiſe, thou haſt believed and doſt believe, that that Faith and Religion, which the ſaid Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforeſaid, have heretofore believed, and do believe, is falſe erroneous and naught, and in no wiſe ought to be believed, obſerved, kept, and followed of any Chriſtian perſon.

Note how this Gear is penned to the worſt.

4. Item, That albeit it be true, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is in ſubſtance the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Chriſt undet the forms of Bread and Wine; and albeit that it be ſo believed, taught and preached undoubtedly in the ſaid Church of Rome, and all other Churches aforeſaid, yet thou haſt not ſo believed, nor doſt ſo believe, but contrariwiſe thou haſt believed, and doſt believe firmly and ſtedfaſtly, that there is not in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, under the ſaid forms of Bread and Wine, the very ſubſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood, but that there is only the ſubſtance of material and common Bread and Wine, with the forms thereof, and that the ſaid material and common Bread and Wine are only the ſigns and tokens of Chriſts Body and Blood, and are by Faith to be received only for a remembrance of Chriſts paſſion and death, without any ſuch ſubſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood at all.

This Article not ſo put down as they meant it.

5. Item, That thou haſt believed and taught, and haſt openly ſpoke and defended, and ſo doſt believe, think, maintain and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Chriſts Body and Blood, is only to take material and common Bread, and to break it and diſtribute it among the People, remembring thereby the paſſion and death of Chriſt only.

The Maſs not of Chriſts inſtitution.

6. Item, That thou haſt likewiſe believed, thought and ſpoken, that the Maſs, now uſed in the Realm of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid, is abominable and naught, and full af Idolatry, and is of the Ordinance of the Pope, and not of the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and hath no goodneſs in it, ſaving the Gloria in Excelſis; the Epiſtle and Goſpel, and therefore thou haſt not, nor will not come and be preſent at Maſs, nor receive the Sacrament of the Altar, nor any other Sacrament of the Church, as they are now uſed in the Realm of England, &c.

Againſt Auricular Confeſſion, and Church-Service.

7. Item, That thou haſt in times paſt believed, and yet doſt now believe, that Auricular Confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made unto the Prieſt, but is a thing ſuperfluous, void and naught, only to be made to God and to none other perſon. And likewiſe thou haſt condemned as ſuperfluous, vain and unprofitable, all the Ceremonies of the Church, and the Service of the ſame, and haſt ſaid that no Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh Tongue, and if it be otherwiſe, it is unlawful and naught.

The Earl of Oxford, Mr. Philip Paris.

8. Item, That thou being notoriouſly and openly ſuſpected for an Heretick, and a perſon culpable in the Premiſſes, waſt of late called and convented before the Earl of Oxford, and Maſter Philip Paris, and there waſt charged with the ſaid Hereſies, eſpecially againſt the Sacrament of the Altar. And becauſe thou didſt maintain and ſtand to thy ſaid Hereſies, and wouldſt not come to the Church and be confeſſed, and receive the ſaid Sacrament as other Chriſtian People did, but utterly didſt refuſe to do the ſame, thou waſt by the ſaid Earl of Oxford, and Mr. Philip Paris ſent up by a Conſtable unto me Biſhop of London, and waſt by them denounced, detected, and put up to me as an Heretick and misbelieving perſon.

9. Item, That thou haſt known and believed, thou doſt know and believe, or at leaſt thou haſt credibly heard reported, ſpoken and ſaid, that all and all manner of perſons, which do teach, preach, or hold any thing concerning the Sacraments of the Church, or any the Articles of the Faith, otherwiſe than is found already diſcuſſed and determined by our Mother the holy Church, or doth call into doubt or queſtion that thing which is already decided or determined by the Church, or that willingly and wittingly do utter, openly or privily, any ſlanderous or blaſphemous words concerning the ſaid Sacraments or any of them, or that do preach, teach or keep any Sect or kind of Hereſie againſt the wholeſom Doctrine of the Church, and do wittingly, willingly, or obſtinately defend the Sect or kind of Hereſie, are by the Canons of the whole and Univerſal Catholick Church, and alſo by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Church of England, by their ſo doing, accurſed with that Curſe, which doth ſeparate them from the entry into the Church, from the receiving of the Sacraments, and from the company of faithful People, and are (in continuing in this ſaid Sect and Hereſie) to be pronounced, declared, and taken for Hereticks, and to be delivered to the Secular Power, and by the Laws Temporal of this Realm of England, and the cuſtom of the ſame, to be by the ſaid Secular Power put to death and burnt for this ſaid Sect and Hereſie.

10. Item, That thou by reaſon of the Premiſſes waſt and art to be pronounced, taken, had, reputed, and judged for a manifeſt and open, wilful and obſtinate Heretick, for a wicked and curſed Perſon, and to be punished accordingly for the ſame, according to the ſaid Canon Laws, uſages and cuſtoms.

The Anſwers which the ſaid Thomas Oſmond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlain ſeverally made unto theſe Articles.

The anſwer of the Priſoners to the Articles, agreeing all in one.

TO the firſt they anſwered and confeſſed the ſame to be true, except that they do believe that there is here in the Earth one Catholick and whole Church, and that the ſame Church doth hold and believe, as is contained in this Article.

To the ſecond they anſwer, and believe the ſaid Article not to be true; for they ſay that they have and do believe that they are neceſſarily bounden, under pain of damnation of their Soul, to give full faith and credence unto the ſaid Catholick Church, and to the Faith and Religion of the ſame, in all neceſſary points of the ſame Faith and Religion, without wavering or doubting in any part hereof.

The Church of Rome not to be believed.

To the third they answer, that the Church of Rome, and other Churches mentioned in this Article, be not true Members and Parts (as they be used in Faith and Religion) of the Catholick Church of Christ, and that the Faith and Religion used in the said Churches, is not agreeable with the Church of Christ, but are false and erroneous.

To the fourth they answer and say, That howsoever the said Churches of Rome and others of Christendom have and do believe touching the Sacrament of the Altar, yet they do believe that in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very substance of Christs Body and Blood, but that there is only the substance of material Bread and Wine, and that the same material Bread and Wine be only the signs and tokens of Christs Body and Blood, and are to be received only for a remembrance of Christs passion and death, without any substance of Christs Body and Blood at all.

The true eating of Christs Body.

To the fifth Article they answer, That the true receiving and eating of Christs Body, according to Christs Institution, is to take, distribute, and eat material Bread, and thereby to remember the passion and death of Christ, and so receive by Faith (as they believe) Christs Body and Blood, and not otherwise.
